The Rock Island and Burlington Route cars pass between Ogden and Denver over the Rio Grande Western and Denver & Rio Grande railroads.

For folders and more complete information, go and see

T. H. GOODMAN Gen. Pass. Agt

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED

Occidental Hotel

SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, Manager.

BAJA CALIFORNIA

Damiana Bitters

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. Send for Circular.

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

TO CHICAGO

IN 3 DAYS

From San Francisco at 10 a. m.

Chicago Union Pacific
AND
Northwestern Line

Double Drawing-Room Sleeping Cars, Buffet, Smoking and Library Cars, with barber. Dining Cars—meals a la carte. Daily Tourist Car Service and Personally Conducted Excursions every week from San Francisco at 6 p. m. The best of everything.

R. R. RITCHIE,
General Agent Pacific Coast
617 Mark tStreet (Palace Hotel)
San Francisco, Cal.

Telephone Main 199.
Blake, Moffit & Towne
Dealers in PAPER
55, 57, 59, 61, First St., San Francisco.
Blake, Moffit & Towne, Los Angeles. Blake, McFall Co., Portland, Or.

ELECTRIC

SUPPLIES
CONSTRUCTION
REPAIRS

California Electrical Works
409 MARKET STREET

LIKE A MAGIC TOUCH
So quickly and easily is the brilliancy restored to tarnished Silver by Electro-Silicon
SILVER POLISH
If in doubt what's best, why not make the test. Simply send address on a postal.
At grocers and druggists everywhere, and postpaid 15 cents in stamps.
"SILICON,"
30 Cliff St., New York City.

Sturtevant House
Broadway and 29th Sts., New York.
WILLIAM T. BANG, PROP.
American and European Plan.

FINEST LARGEST
FLEETEST SAFEST
The Magnificent China Liner Steamship
VICTORIA
3,502
Direct for Cape Nome.
On or About
MAY 31,
Remember the ice was never known to break from the Nome coast before June 10th.
Secure Your Tickets Now.
Unsurpassed Passenger Accommodations.
For Further Information apply to
DODWELL & CO., Limited
General Agents
113 James St. SEATTLE, WASH.
Telephone Main 470

Don't Borrow a Home!
BUY IT Your rent payments for the borrowed home will do it through the aid of the
CONTINENTAL Building and Loan Ass'n of California
WM. CORBIN, Secretary and Gen. Manager.
Home Office, 222 Sansome St., San Francisco

Irving Institute Select Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies
2126 California Street, San Francisco
Next season will begin August 7th. Accredited to the Universities. Seminary and Full Conservatory of Music. Primary Department for Children. Carriage will call. For futher information, address the principal. REV. EDWARD B. CHURCH, A.M.

New Stories Re-Told.

x x x

ECONOMY.—Oneida, New York, claims to have the meanest man in the country. Recently, he drove into town and asked the price of cheese at a local grocery store. Full cream was quoted at fourteen cents a pound and twelve for a whole cheese, and skim milk at ten cents and eight cents for a whole cheese. The champion economist spent fifteen minutes persuading the clerk to sell him skim milk cheese at eight cents by the pound instead of "by bulk." This accomplished, the clerk asked: "And now, Mr. Hawkins, how many pounds shall I cut you off?" "Waal," said the mean man, as he produced a worn two-cent stamp and deposited it on the counter, "I reckon you can slice off a quarter of a pound and do it up for me. All I want is enough to bait a couple of rat traps, but if I should want any more, I'll call again."

x

THE GOOD SAMARITAN.—A little girl of five or six years came into Bellevue Hospital, New York, recently, with her eyes full of tears, and her arms full of cat. To the doctors in charge she explained that pussy's foot had been crushed by an electric car. The physicians were for refusing the case at first, but noting the distress of the little maid, they good-naturedly produced chloroform, instruments and bandages and performed a neat operation, the child bravely assisting. "Now you can take your kitty home with you," said the doctor, when all was over. "It ain't mine," said the girl. "I des found it. Now 'oo take care of it. Dood-bye," and she vanished.

x

THE ONLY WAY.—During Queen Victoria's recent visit to Dublin, rooms were at a premium. An English tourist, just arrived, accosted an Irish cabman on the eve of the important day: "Drive me to a good hotel, jarvey." "Well, sir, which d'ye want?" "Any will do so long as I can get a room." "Then, axin' yer' lave, sir, ye'd betther go across an' throw stones at a peeler." "Why?" "Ye'd get locked up thin, sir, an' 'tis the only way to get a room in Dublin this night, sir, heav'n be praised!"

x

NERVES.—An anxious, nervous-looking woman, followed by a bewhiskered farmer, stepped up to the station master at a little station in Massachusetts, and asked: "Has the three-fifteen gone yet?" "Yes, about ten minutes ago," he replied. "When will the four-twenty be along then?" "Not for quite a time." "Are there any expresses before then?" "No." "Any special?" "No." "Any freight trains?" "No." "Nothing at all?" "No." "Are you quite sure?" "Yes." "Then, Amos, let's cross the track."

x

APPERENT.—While the British army was resting, between advances, at the Modder river, an order was issued forbidding the rank and file to bathe in the stream and sentinels were posted with orders to arrest offenders. One of the sentinels spotted a naked swimmer who persistently ignored his summons to surrender. Finally, he emerged, dripping wet, from the water; the sentinel stepped up and ordered him under arrest. "Confound you!" was the reply, "can't you see that I'm an officer?"

x

THERE BY REQUEST.—The jealousies existing between musicians in general and vocalists in particular are too well known for comment. A well known French baritone saw several bills posted about the street announcing that a rival would make his fifthieth-odd appearance "by request." "By req-q-qest ees eet?" exclaimed the singer. "When he in zee warm countree he will say to ze devi e 'Monsieur, you air glad to see me. I am her, by req-q-qest.'"

x

GOOD AUTHORITY.—An English justice of the peace had before him a case involving the ownership of a horse; a hostler was up as a witness. The case turned upon the brute's age. "Upon what authority do you swear to the age of the mare?" asked the justice. "I'm sure of it!" was the reply. "But how do you know?" "Well, I had it from the mare's own mouth," answered the witness, meekly.

PALACE HOTEL
The high standard of excellence maintained by this hotel is recognized and appreciated by a fastidious and discriminating clientele who regularly ake it their headquarters when visiting San Francisco.
The GRAND HOTEL is operated in conjunction with the Palace to which it is joined by a covered passageway, placing under one management 1400 rooms, more than half of which have baths attached.
AMERICAN PLAN. EUROPEAN PLAN.

Famous FOR ITS Purity!

Seattle U. S. A.

WHEN LEAVING THE CITY PLACE YOUR VALUABLES IN THE Safe Deposit Vaults
OF THE
First National Bank
N. W. Corner Bush and Sansome Sts.
Office Hours: 8 a. m. to 6 p m.
EVERY POSSIBLE SAFEGUARD TO PROPERTY
REASONABLE RATES
PROMPT ATTENTION

REPSOLD
REGISTERED BRAND
SELECT VINTAGE
REPSOLD
Select Vintage Wines
For Your Home Dinner
This brand of wine is served at all first class clubs, hotels and restaurants
A. REPSOLD & CO. Office. 416 Pine Street

THE
White Pass and Yukon Route
The Pacific & Arctic Railway and Navigation Co.
British Columbia Yukon Railway Co., British Yukon M, T. & T. Co.
and Canadian Development Company, Ltd.
THROUGH LINE TO DAWSON.
Two first-class trains daily between Skaguay and Bennett, B. C. Ten first-class steamers operating between White Horse and Dawson. Through Telegraph Service Skaguay to Dawson and Intermediate Points.
SKAGUAY IS THE GATEWAY
—TO—
KLONDIKE AND CAPE NOME GOLD FIELDS.
FOR RATES AND PARTICULARS APPLY TO
S. M. IRWIN, Traffic Manager, Skaguay, Alaska, and Seattle, Wash.
Phone Main 574
S. P. BROWN General Agent 116 Yesler Way, Seattle Was

W. C. ACHI & CO.
Real Estate Brokers
We will buy or sell real estate in any part of the group. We will also buy or sell Stocks in any corporation in the Hawaiian Islands.
Office, 10 West King Street, Honolulu, H.

a Perfect Complexion
Strawberry Cold Cream
Mede from the pure fruit juice at
GREENBAUM'S
200 POST STREET Corner Grant Ave.
Sent anywhere on receipt of 25 cents,

From Admiral George Dewey:
Mr. George Mayerle, German Expert Optician, 1071½ Market street, San Francisco: Dear Sir—I am still using with much satisfaction the glasses you sent me at Manila; also, the new ones suit my eyes perfectly.
Very truly yours,
George Dewey.

A GRADUATE
George Mayerle
German Expert Optician
Consultation, Examination and advice free.

OPTICIAN HONORED
1071½ Market St.
near Seventh
Telephone Mint 257
German Eye Water 50 cents.

From General Wm. R. Shafter:
Mr. George Mayerle, San Francisco: Dear Sir—The glasses made by you received yesterday. I have never been better fitted than with this pair.
Very truly yours,
Wm. R. Shafter,
Major-General U. S. V.

The Wave

1900

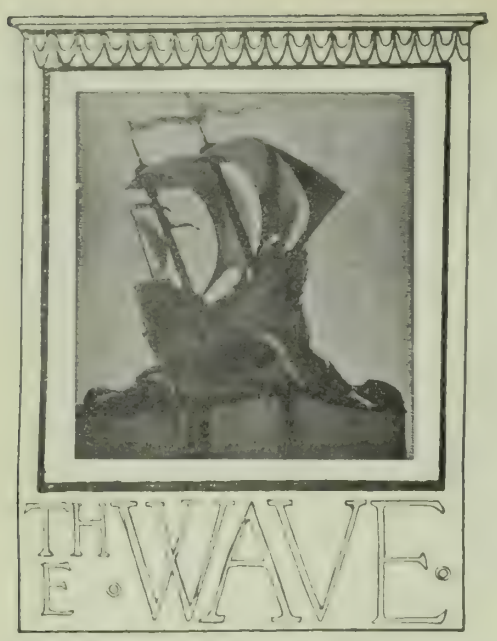
VOL. XXI. No. 19 SAN FRANCISCO—JUNE 2, 1900 SEATTLE PRICE 10 CENTS

STATE

This Paper not to be taken from the Library.

ALONG THE WATER FRONT, VANCOUVER.

ON THE INLET. THE C. P. R. DOCKS.



Is published every Saturday at The Wave Building, 24 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal., and Colman Building, Seattle, Wash.

Entered at the Post Office as second-class matter.

Subscription: Per year, $3.00; six months, $1.75; three months, $1.00. Foreign subscription (countries in postal union) $1 per year additional. Sample copies free.

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

PROPRIETORS

SAN FRANCISCO—June 2, 1900—SEATTLE

CONTENTS

Events Current 2
Editorial Comment 3
Views of Quaint Tangiers 4
The Mysteries of Marksmanship 5
World's Fairs to Date 5
Things and People, by Boswell Jr 6
Vancouver 7
Views of Vancouver 8–9
As Seen by Leila 10
In Bookdom 10
An Alumni Dinner 13
At the Theatres 14
New Stories Re-told 16

EVENTS CURRENT.

The Boer War Collapses.

"Pretoria is practically taken, the Boer war is over." This is the latest news which, coming in just as this department goes to press, has set all England wild. It is true that the message lacks official confirmation, but it is almost certainly correct. All the other important events of the war have been heralded by the newspapers from one to three days in advance of the War Office bulletins. The news, as it comes, announces that Roberts has reached a point within two hours' march of the Boer capital, and that, instead of preparing for resistance and a siege, Kruger and his deputies have fled from the city, leaving it open to the British. Startling and sudden as it is, this outcome was not wholly unexpected. Ev r since the main British army crossed the Vaal river into hostile territory a week ago, the world has been surprised at the failure of Boer resistance. Johannesburg, the gold metropolis and the second town in importance in Transvaal territory, opened its gates to the invader, and all through Roberts' swift and certain advance not so much as a skirmish has occurred to block his way. Report and rumor have continually asserted that Kruger was preparing to leave Pretoria as soon as the British should come within striking distance, and the Boer commissioners to the United States, who are in close communication with their people, have admitted that, without intervention, their cause was hopeless and helpless. Yet no one expected the end so soon. To Roberts' genius for strategy and swift movement of troops, England owes this consummation. From the Earl of Rosslyn, held a prisoner at Pretoria, the British newspapers have an account of the progress of events inside the capital. It appears that Kruger has gone to Watervalboven, over a hundred miles from his former capital, where he will set up his government again. This point is in the inaccessible mountains of North Transvaal and is an excellent base for the guerilla warfare which the Boers may continue to wage in hope of intervention. A committee of influential citizens was appointed to meet the British and deliver the town to them. When it was learned that Roberts' army was near and when the Transvaal forces began to retreat from the city, the town authorities and citizens feared violence from the great number of British prisoners confined there. United States Consul Hay solved this problem by securing the release on parole of a number of officers, who kept the men in check and preserved order. Whether this means the end of the war or whether it has only passed into a guerilla stage, no one can tell at this time. In the United States and the hope of intervention now lies Kruger's only chance. It is becoming evident that the Democratic party, at least the ruling Bryanite wing, will make it an issue in the coming campaign, possibly pledging itself to intervention in case of success. This is, of course, a play for popula ity; unofficial sympathy in the United States is greatly in favor of the Boers, and the party declaring for them stands to win votes. But, political dodge though it is, the Boers, being in a state to clutch at straws, have, like the Philippine insurgents, taken this remote chance very seriously.

The War in Luzon.

The uncertain and smouldering quality of the Phillipine insurrection was shown again this week, when the insurgents made a night attack upon San Miguel, within ten miles of Manila. This point was held by the three companies of the Thirty-fifth Infantry. On the night of May 29, the native forces surprised and over powered the sentries, rushed the town, and went through it, shooting Americans right and left. When our troops rallied and got together for resistance, the insurgents withdrew. Five Americans were killed, two, including a captain, are missing, seven were wounded. No insurgent dead were found. On the same date, part of the Forty-sixth Infantry was ambushed near Silang, twenty-one miles from Manila, and lost three killed and several wounded. In both these egagements, the Americans were victorious, as usual, but their occurence within territory supposed to be safely held by our troops proves the discouraging character of our task on the Philippines. Other minor engagements of the week were more encouraging. A scouting party in South Albany has broken up a large body of insurgents, killing seventeen and capturing many others. Large quantities of insurgent arms and munitions have been taken by scouts in Pangasanin province. Major March's division of the Thirty-third, which has been trying to run down Aguinaldo, has returned to Berquet utterly worn out and without finding so much as a trace of the slippery chief.

Tammany Sides with Bryan.

Richard Croker has spoken for Bryan and the last obstacle to the Nebraskan's nomination by the Democratic party has been swept away. It has been known, ever since the nomination for 1900 began to be discussed, that Tammany and the eastern democrats in general would prefer almost anyone who would let the silver question alone to Bryan and free silver. But Croker, the mouthpiece of his faction, has kept silence, waiting, presumably, to measure the strength of Bryan in the party and his chances in the Democratic Convention. Now, that the Dewey boom has failed and Bryan's endorsement has become a certainty, Crocker has "got in the wagond!" by declaring out and out for Bryan. He was seen in London by W. F. Stead, representing the noisome Examiner—Journal conbination, and made a statement, which, for scientific crawling out of holes and dodging of knotty points, is without an equal. He praises Bryan without stint, declares that he will be the next president without doubt, that he will carry Ohio and the doubtful states by a large majority, and that the country with support him on the issues of trusts and imperialism. When pressed to talk about the silver question, Croker was beautifully conciliatory. Silver, he declared, is a side issue, anyway. It is a thing of little importance. The issue had been made to seem more vital than it ever was in reality and the country could get along very well on a silver basis, providing that trusts were smashed and imperialism downed. He was equally clever in avoiding the expression of opionion on the question of intervention in the Boer war." The whole Democratic party sympathizes with the Boers in the fight that they have put up against imperialism and not the Democratic party alone but the American people. The only people who are of a different way of thinking are those tied hand and foot by the alliance with the English government the money power." Observe how deftly he has here suggested that there is a secret Anglo-Saxon alliance, and that the existence of this ghostly compact kept McKinley from extending the "glad hand" to the Boer legates. He gives no expression of personal opinion on the subject, since he is at present in England having business dealings with Englishmen, but prepares for a graceful crawl when he comes into action again in this country.

A Serious Disturbance in China.

The threatened disturbances in China have at last come to a head. Ever since the Empress made her coup and pl ced her puppet upon the Imperial throne, trouble has been feared from the "Boxers," a disorderly and reactionary secret society, whose avowed object is to expel the foreigners by violence. The father of the present boy-Emperor is at the head of that society, and it is known that the Empress favors its objects. The trouble began about the middle of May, when unattached bands of "Boxers" began attempts on the lives of missionaries and others in the central provinces. News from the interior of China is hard to obtain, and the exact course of events is not known; at any rate, last week found a body of "Boxers" of unknown strength marching on Pekin with the avowed object of murdering all whites and forcing the Imperial government to expel the foreigners. The missionaries and other foreigners seem to have fled before them to Pekin; how many were caught and killed is utterly unknown. Russia, the power which has kept most closely in touch with the present government, was the first to act; a strong body of troops was hurried toward Pekin, but was met at the borders of the Province by Chinese viceroys, who forbade entrance until permission was granted from Pekin. For some unexplained diplomatic reason the Russians accepted this pos tion and were, at last accounts, resting on the borders awaiting the Imperial sanction. Russia has been playing the friend to the present regime, and it is probable that the Czar hopes by this stand to strengthen his position with the Empress. The other powers were more decisive in their action. The warships which have been kept in Chinese waters in anticipation of trouble were hurried into the port of Taku, and prepared to land marines in order to protect the consulates at Pekin. The Chinese authorities attempted to throw obstacles in the way of bringing in the foreign guards. The ministers maintained a firm attitude but were informed by the Tsung-li Yamen that it would be impossible to bring up the guards until he had communicated with the Viceroy of Pechili. As this was regarded as an obvious subterfuge in the interest of delay, the ministers replied that if proper facilities were not granted now the fifteen foreign war ships at Taku would land a sufficient force to come to Pekin without the consent of the Chinese government and they called upon the Tsung-li Yamen to give a definite answer at or before 6 A. M. Thursday, May 31 This is expected to produce the desired effect, but the outcome is not yet known. It is reported that the Imperial troops have had a serious brush with the oncoming mob of "Boxers" at Li-Shin-Hi-Sien; no news as to results is at hand. Many experts on Chinese affairs believe that the Imperial troops are as much to be feared as the "Boxers," it being known that the majority of the rank and file hate foreigners and fear their advance. The United States' naval in Taku consists of the cruiser Newark and the battleship Oregon, a force of 110 marines with a machine gun and a field piece from these ships is held ready to advance as soon as the ultimatum is acceded to.

Editorial Comment.

Let Us Own a Bonded Indebtedness.

UP to the present time San Francisco alone of all of the great American cities has been fortunately free from enormous bonded indebtedness. This happy condition of affairs offers no argument in favor of plunging into a species of financial dissipation, but it does give plausibility to the argument, that the city can well afford to expend with judicious zeal a large sum of money to add to its attractiveness. True, it must use some discrimination in the ma ter, but an exercise of ordinary intelligence will do.

A comparison of the debts of several larger American municipalities will not come amiss here, for the absence of municipal debt is one of the arguments urged in favor of creating an indebtedness. The last comparative figures we have at hand are several years old, but so far as can be ascertained the relative positions of the several cities have not changed. On January 1st, 1894, New York's debt, for instance, amounted to nearly ninety-nine million dollars. Of course, today, with that of Brooklyn added, the sum climbs above a billion. Boston's debt amounts to thirty-five million; Philadelphia to twenty-eight million; Baltimore, sixteen million; Pittsburg, nine million, while the total San Francisco's bonded indebtedness amounted to only six hundred and fifty thousand dollars. A mere bagatelle by comparison.

In dealing with municipal ownership of public utilities the tax-payer must carefully consider the extent of the necessary bond issue, the interest, and the annual requirements of the sinking fund, payment of which is safely secured by a tax levy that ultimately evolves itself into a lien upon his property. Professor Henry C. Adams in his valuable work on Public Debts, says:

"The financial evils of municipal administration are so familiar that they cease to be the occasion of surprise; and it is important to learn whether such evils are traceable to a disregard of financial principles, to some radical defect in the organization of city government, or to the imperfect development of society itself."

The trouble is, we do not elect our public officers because of their financial ability. In private affairs the expenditure of twenty or thirty million of dollars is entrusted to men skilled in affairs, all under bonds, or so well known as respects integrity and ability that no one may question their possession of either. In public affairs we vote to spend the money and practically trust to luck.

A study of the increase of population, of assessed valuation together with the increase of municipal debts and taxation is interesting. The following table exhibits the increase in these four items, in the fifteen chief cities, in a period of nine years:

Increase in population, 70.5 per cent.

Increase in tax valuation, 156.9 per cent.

Increase in debt, 270.9 per cent.

Increase in taxation, 362.2 per cent.

The tax rate in San Francisco is not remarkably moderate as it stands today free of large indebtedness; and the prospective bond issue to construct or purchase a municipal water works is not calculated to reduce the already uncomfortable burden, or reassure the tax-payer.

In a thoughtful article published in the Merchants' Association Review, for the month of April, Mr. A. S. Baldwin considers at length the question of municipal ownership, and devotes intelligent attention to the subject from a tax-payer's stand-point. In casting about for the available sources of water supply that the city of San Francisco might acquire he first takes up and considers the value of the Spring Valley plant. A thing is very naturally worth what it will bring in open market, although a strict application of this rule would more often work a hardship on the seller, for the market is apt to under-estimate rather than over-estimate. However, he takes the market price and says: "The total market value of the stock and bonds fluctuates somewhat, but is approximated at $28,000,000." Considering the probable cost of the proposed new plant he says, "Colonel Wendell testified before the Board of Supervisors in 1880, that the most available source of supply next to the Spring Valley system, was the Blue Lakes scheme, and that the cost to deliver twenty-two million gallons daily from Blue Lakes to San Francisco would be about $18,399,-200, while in 1889 G. F. Allardt, an engineer of high standing and wide experience, estimated in detail the cost of the Blue Lakes system (thirty million gallons daily) at $33,529,-723, and placed a valuation on the Spring Valley plant of $25,000,000."

From these figures Mr. Baldwin deduces that one is justified today in placing the estimated cost of a new plant at $30,000,000 and the same valuation upon the Spring Valley plant, which has been largely increased in capacity since Mr. Allardt's figures were made. In a tabulated statement he demonstrates that after your plant is constructed and in full and successful operation these must be paid in the first year, for interest, sinking fund, expenses of new construction, operation, etc., an amount equal to $3,050,000. For the next year, $3,023,750. For the next eighteen years the sum to be paid would amount to over two and one-half million dollars per year, and for the next twenty years would exceed two million dollars. Allowing an income of one and one-half million dollars per annum from water rates (and that is the amount now collected from consumers at present rates) there is still left an enormous annual deficit which must be raised to maintain the sinking fund, and keep up payments of interest, operating expenses, etc. This deficit must be met by the tax-payer. There is no other way in which it can be paid, unless the present water rates are more than doubled. The first two years this deficit, which must be raised by taxation, amounts to over one and one-half million dollars. For each year of the twenty-one years following the deficit exceeds one million dollars per year, and at the end of forty years it is still in excess of a half a million. The tax-payer will not even find himself in the same fix that is described in the quotation from Mr. Conkling in an article of last week. The local tax-payer will not find that the rates "appear less on the water bills" while the deficit is made up in the tax levy. But according to Mr. Baldwin's figures he will not only find himself heavily in debt, but he will also find that his water rates have, for forty years at least, become firmly and immovably fixed at the same figure that is now being charged and collected by the private corporation. He will find that in addition to paying the same rates he paid before, the annual deficits, above noted, are incorporated in the tax levy, adding to his burdens instead of lessening them. He will find that in running away from an imaginary evil, he has stumbled up against the "real thing."

At the end of forty years when the annual deficit will have dwindled down to only a half million dollars, and the tax-payer begins to hope for the dawn of a new day, a fresh and equally disheartening complication will show its head. For as Mr. Baldwin wisely remarks: "At the end of forty years we would undoubtedly have to replace nearly the entire system, especially the hundreds of miles of pipes employed in bringing water from the mountains, if that is the source of supply, and also the distributing system throughout the city." "This," Mr. Baldwin adds, "would mean another bond issue, probably as large as the first."

In the end, what is the city to gain; what new privilege comes to it to justify the taking on of the strange burdens? "The city may then regulate water rates," you say? Under Mr. Baldwin's figures it could not reduce them for there would be a deficit even if the present rates were kept in force. It could only increase them, to make up the deficit. If the fixed expenses of your new plant are so high as to preclude your reducing the rates, what earthly use will you make of the empty "right" to reduce?

But suppose Mr. Baldwin's figures could be shaved down, and several millions of expense cut off the original cost, the condition would be improved, but not measurably so. You would still be hazarding twenty million of dollars and upwards, for what? For the privilege of exercising a privilege that is fully and completely yours, viz., that of regulating and establishing a fair water rate. You can do that much now. You cannot do any more than this with municipal ownership; you cannot do as much as this under Mr. Baldwin's figures unless the city steals a plant or has it built for next to nothing.

The Boer Commissioners and the Wily Democrat.

THE unnecessary "hub-bub" that is being kicked up by the Democratic press over the "treatment" accorded the Boer Commissioners by the President and the Senate has a suspicious ring to it. It is not genuine, but it may mislead some voter who insists on dragging foreign affairs into American politics. Just why an American citizen should desire this government to intermeddle in European controversies is beyond the understanding of a man who is wholly American in spirit. Without discussing this side of the question or criticising the citizen by adoption who brings his European hates and his affections over with him, let us examine the matter of the Boer Commissioners.

Everyone in California knows Ambrose Bierce. His relations with the Examiner extend over years of service. Bierce is now in Washington writing for Mr. Hearst's papers. Editorially the Examiner and the Journal are indignant over the "insults" heaped upon the Boer Commissioners. Mr. Hearst's editorial writers at their desks in New York and San Francisco discovered in Messrs. Fischer, Wossel and Wolmarans instruments for alienating votes from President McKinley, and they made the most of it. The President, Secretary Hay, and the Senate were in turn denounce for "lack of courtesy, insulting conduct," etc.

But here is what Mr. Bierce says from Washington: "If ever the prayer to be delivered from one's friends could be delivered with sincerity and reasonableness it might so be made by Messrs. Fischer, Wessels and Wolmarans, the Commissioners from the South African Republics. These well meaning and patriotic gentlemen might naturally have been supposed to know without experience that their mission to this country was hopeless from the beginning. Left the untrammeled exercise of the faculties they could hardly have failed to know that much, if they knew anything of the decent and orderly habit of nations, as it is to be presumed they did. But if, under stress of a desperate necessity and the suasion of bad advice, they really had a hope, however faint, of inducing this Government to reverse its traditional policy, to infract the laws of international good breeding and to imperiel its peace in a matter in which it had no concern, common prudence required them to walk exceeding circumspection among the adverse conditions besetting their errand. This they do not do. They suffered themselves to be taken into the camp of the enemies of the Administration to which they were credentialed, to be advised by them, and by them persuaded to try coercion."

It is well known that immediately these commissioners landed at New York they were taken in hand by Democratic leaders, not for the purpose of serving the Boer cause not with a view of accomplishing the sacred object which these men had traveled thousands of miles to attain, not for the purpose of enlisting the symphathy and helps of a brave nation, but solely for the purpose of bringing confession to the administration and creating a resentmen among Boer sympathizers that would make Democratic voters. Their political tricksters were donimated by no high or honorable spirit. They purposely misled and betrayed their confiding people and in cold blood induced them to adopt a cause that meant domination to their cause, even if there had been the slightest chance of success—which there never was and could be. It was a disgrievous selfish and unworthy act, and if Boer sympathizers can be brought to understand the brutality of the deceit practiced on these commissioners the act will recoil against the Democratic conspirators. Bierce says of the Boer course:

"The coercion consisted in an appeal to public opinion. Before taking a single step to obtain an audience of the President, before submitting their credentials at the State Department, they appeared at receptions, made speeches, talked to the press correspondents and reporters, and in Washington, within a stone's throw of the White House, held a public meeting to recite the wrongs of their countrymen in bitter and untruthful words. Not only so, but with incrediable fatuity they permitted one of the most reasonless of their false friends to introduce a resolution into the Senate giving them a destinction denied even to the Ambassadors of the great powers—admittance to the floor of of the chamber.

And if you are a voter who has been affected by the reception of these commissioners, you must concede that if Mr. Bierce speaks the truth you have been mislead.

In explaining why the Democratic managers led their guileless commissioners into such a tangled maze of political briars, Mr. Bierce says:

"That all this was done to force the hand of the Administration and compel official recognition was an open secret. That purpose was, in fact, openly avowed by some of the gentlemen engaged in 'steering' them. That it would not, and could not, succeed was obvious to any understanding not blind and deaf with Anglophobia, but to these poor gentlemen, carefully indoctrinated with foolish views of the power of American public opinion, it doubtless seemed a reasonable presumption that these antics would assist their purpose. They were turned down at the State Department; they were turned down by the President. They had to be in any case, but if they had been better advised their failure would not have left the sting of humiliation, for their action would have been seen by themselves to be, as it was characterized by the distinguished Chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, 'entirely irregular, entirely premature, entirely improper.' And they would have spared their gallant countrymen the discredit of having sent to the capital of a great and friendly civilized nation diplomatic representatives destitute of good manners."

Mr. Bierce's article appeared in a Democratic journal; it reflects the sentiment and judgment of a man skilled in journalism and public affairs, and as it is contrary to the express editorial policy of the journal publishing it we may take it for granted as being the true situation. The Examiner might lie to prop up its own theories, but it certainly would not blindly publish an untruth that if credited would knock the props from under one of its most discreditable campaign arguments.

COMMUNICATION.

Opulent Optimism.

By a Bryanite.

Editor of the Wave:—

There is good, broad, safe ground basing belief that the result of the national election next November will be the reverse of what was the result in the election of '96.

The writer, who is a Republican, that is, a believer in the political principles of Abraham Lincoln, and not the political schemes of Marcus A. Hanna, spokesman in the Government for Trusts—will here map out what, in his humble judgment, constitutes at least, a part of such ground.

In Ohio, the citadel of Hanna and McKinley, several factors must be figured against Mr. McKinley that do not enter into the solution of the problem in any other state so pronouncedly. These are:

First—Opposition to Hanna's dominancy of the party (Republican), state and national.

Second—The power and influence of Hon. Samuel M. Jones, Mayor of Toledo. He will carry to Mr. Bryan practically the entire vote he (Jones) received as independent candidate for Governor in the last state election. This vote (107,000) added to the vote which was polled for McLean (Democrat), would give Bryan 40,000 to 50,000 plurality, even should Mr. McKinley receive the full strength of the Nash (Republican) vote. In connection let it be remembered that McLean was persona non grata (because of his plutocratic proclivities) to many thousands of Democrats who did not vote at all in the state election, but who will vote for Mr. Bryan.

Third—The turning down of Hon. Frank Monett, State's Attorney-General, by Hanna manipulating the party machinery at the State Convention, because he (Monett) refused to dismiss a suit that was pending against the Standard Oil Company. It is in evidence that Mr. Monett has a large circle of friends and wields no inconsiderable influence within the ranks of the Republican party in Ohio. His treatment by Hanna, will, without doubt react against McKinley through resentment on the part of Monnett's friends, of Hanna's high handed political despotism. It was not without significance that Mr. Monett met Mr. Bryan face to face at a banquet given in the latter's honor in the city of Dayton, and in the presence of a thousand and more spectators cordially shook hands with him and exchanged a few smiling words of encouragement. This may, and doubtless does peresage the casting of not a few votes by Republicans for Bryan.

Fourth—Ex-Govenor Bushnell has never buried the hatchet with Hanna. This unquestionably will result in loss of many Republican votes to McKinley. Wherefore, seeing that Hanna is to be chief boss in the McKinley campaign, the chances in favor of Bryan carrying Ohio are decidedly many and good.

As to Illinois, the democracy in that state is perfectly harmonious. Not so with the Republicans. The Porto Rican tariff legislation, and other acts of the Administration and the Administration faction in Congress have aroused the Republicans of Illinois to a degree threatening if not assuring revolt. Senator Cullom is reported to have entreated the Committee which had in charge the framing of a Porto Rican tariff bill to desist from such purpose, or, at least, to release him from the necessity of supporting such a measure, because, as he put it, to do so, would to him mean political suicide. The Senator got his cue from the Republican papers of his State, and from his constituent correspondents. Senator Mason, his collegue, opposed the Porto Rican tariff upon the floor of the Senate. His course was upheld by the leading Republican papers of Illinois, notably the Chicago Times—Herald, H. H. Kohlsaat's paper, which has been a most ardent Administration organ.

The reader can draw from this array of facts safe conclusion as to what may be the result in Illinois when the ballots cast on November 6th next, shall have been honestly counted.

As to Indiana, Beveridge, the junior Senator for that State, plainly declared that his constituents were almost unanimously against the proposed Porto Rican tariff. President McKinley has declared against it in his message to Congress, and the people of Indiana believe with the President, that, "it is our plain duty" to admit the products of Porto Rico to our markets free from duty, said Beveridge.

If this was the preponderating sentiment among the "Hoosiers" before the enactment of the tariff bill, will they not be against ratifying by their votes the imposition of such tariff acquiesced in by the President, in contravention of the spirit and letter of the Constitution? The inference may be reasonably drawn that Indiana is by no means safe for McKinley, especially in view of what the Republicans did just over the border in Kentucky.

Mr. Bryan will carry Kentucky perhaps by 10,000 to 15,000 plurality. Goebel's assassination and the chain of sequential events unquestionably insure such result. Bryan will carry Maryland by a decisive majority; this is almost certain, Gorman and his followers will not oppose him this time.

Wisconsin may be reasonably regarded as probable for Bryan, because of the strength of the German and other naturalized voters who will not support McKinley, because of his pro-Briton leanings. This conclusion is warranted by the tone of the German press of Wisconsin.

Now, if the States enumerated be added to the States Mr. Bryan carried in '96, he has enough votes and to spare in the Electoral College. But, say he may lose the Northwest on account of opposition to retention of the Philippines, (the writer does not regard this as at all likely,) such loss would be offset by the gain of New York. Mr. Bryan is almost certain to carry the great empire State, because the Democracy is united and working harmonously. Supplementing this voting strength by the percentage of voters of Republicans that will go to Bryan on account of his unqualified stand for the principles of the Declaration of Independence and adherence to the spirit and the letter of the Constitution, and it is hazarding nothing to say, that he will carry New York by a pronounced plurality.

The writer holds this optimistic view of the situation and the outlook because he believes the spirit of Lincoln is abroad in the land and entering into the great common people as never before. That as result, manhood will reassert itself over Mammon; conscience will not be subjugated and stilled by commercialism; love of truth, honor, justice, will triumph over greed; the people will not ratify a policy which coins human blood into dollars for moneyed syndicates by preparing the way for exploiting liberty—against peoples in tropical lands, who want and who have the courage to fight to attain their independence from alien control.

Let us all have abiding faith that the conscience of this great nation will not suffer our national motto, "In God We Trust," inscribed upon our coin, to be displaced by, "In Gold We Trust," or, "In Trusts We Trust." Rather, on the contrary, as seemth wise, let us be joyously optimistic, believing that there is to be a new birth of liberty in the land; that government of the people, by the people and for the people, in its literal sense, shall not perish from the earth. That Bartholdi's statue, "Liberty Enligtening the World," will not have to be taken down from it's lofty pedestal on Bedlo's Island, or to be covered by the folds of a black pall in token of the death of Liberty; but that there upon its enduring base of granite it shall continue to stand, truthfully symbolical of our great and exalted mission as a nation among nations.

JOHN AUBREY JONES

1. A Lady of Tangiers. 2. Boatmen Waiting for Passengers in the Harbor. 3. The Door of the American Consulate. 4. A Doorway. 5. Cattle Waiting Shipment. 6. A Siesta. 7. A Typical Guide. 8. A Typical Dwelling. 9. The Old Fort. 10. A Caravan from Fez. 11. Loading Cattle for Shipment. Photos by Mrs. David Bixler.

IN QUAINT TANGIERS.

Snap-Shots in the Capitol of Morocco, Where Political Disturbances are Threatening the Peace of North Africa.

THE MYSTERIES OF EXPERT MARKSMANSHIP.

How Out-of-Door Shots are Trained, and Why Record Men at Targets Fail in Practice.

"THAT fellow thinks that he can shoot!" said the old scout—"Why, he hasn't learned the alphabet!"

He and I had been looking at one of those rifle competitions, encouraged by the government and praised by the press, which have been so common in England since the British learned that their crack regiments couldn't hit the broad of a barn. A red-cheeked English boy had just made what was, considering, a pretty fair score. But the old scout, an Americanized Englishman, who has followed big game and fortune in America and Africa and everywhere else where beasts are wild and and men are fierce, looked at the boy and laughed his achievement to scorn. And if anyone was ever competent to talk of shooting it is he, who has that God-gift, beyond all acquirement by practice, of putting a rifle-shot into a flying bird. Therefore, when he lifted his voice and scorned this butt-shooting, I listened.

"If we English expect to learn Boer shooting in this fashion, we are badly mistaken, that is all;" he said. "The colonists have been beating the best Boer shots in rifle-matches in South Africa, but I notice a difference when it comes to shooting out on the veldt. Much talk as we've heard about Boer marksmanship, no one seems to have come down to the heart of it. The difference between shooting at targets and shooting for business is the difference between fly-casting for distance and actual fishing. That fellow there shoots well at the target, I admit, but let him get out in the woods and have a try at a deer, running or standing, and it would be a different story. He has learned here at the butts how to handle the gun, how to bring it to his shoulder, and something about sighting. If he has been careful and cultivated 'form,' he knows enough about shooting position to take a correct poise instantly, just as a trained oarsman, in the hurry of a race, will row in form by instinct; that is all he knows. He cannot judge distance on new and unknown ground. He cannot shoot quickly—on the instant—and that, in nine cases out of ten, is the important thing in hunting or in war. He cannot make allowance for wind and light and a hundred other variants. Above all, he has never learned to keep his head in an emergency. That makes the difference between playing with targets and actual shooting, and I think that you'll agree that our friend there hasn't got past the alphabet.

"The case is mightily different with a Boer or an American plainsman. You know, I consider Americans the best practical shots in the world, even better than the Boers. The South African has the practical training, fast enough, but it takes brains—keen, practical intelligence—to shoot well, and the American excels the Boer in that particular. At the time of Majuba Hill, the Boers were probably the best practical shots alive, because they were still in the lion-killing stage and had constant practice. But now, after twenty years, they have degenerated quite a bit; they have beaten us the game not because they are so extra good, but because we are so poor. But the American plainsman leads now for practical work, as the Rough Riders showed at Santiago, when they took guns they were unfamiliar with and did some magnificent practical shooting against the Spanish trenches. They had been brought up on Winchesters and Marlins and other magazine repeaters with heavy balls, and just about a week before the fight they had to change to a style of gun which was different in nearly every respect, but I hear that they plugged every Spanish head which popped up. How much this means, only a trained shot knows.

"Where does intelligence come in? In a thousand small ways. Shooting is an art which is made up of many little things. A good outdoor shot must have, first of all, steady nerves and good, sharp eyes. Then he must be quick in the head, because, as I have said before, he has to think quickly and act like lightning or he is lost. After that, he must be able to see and appreciate a great many things. On one sort of country, five hundred yards look much shorter than on another, he must be able to calculate on that. For example, a man trained in shooting deer in heavily wooded mountains might go on an Arizona plain and swear that a thousand yards was only three or four hundred. He has to know his gun, and a gun is as frisky and variable as a woman. If you want to carry the comparison further, I'll add that there is only one gun for every man. Your real marksman would never try shooting with another man's weapon. He knows his own gun. He has accommodated its stock to his height of neck and length of arm, he has adjusted its sights to its range of vision and his peculiarities of eyesight—and every man is different in this respect—he knows just how it will be affected by moisture or drought or heat or cold, how much powder it takes to a charge, and how much lead. If he is a real, thoroughgoing expert, he will load his own cartridges to suit his gun. For this often makes a great difference, as does the age of the cartridges. Private Ortheris begs, somewhere in Kipling, for a charge that is 'just old enough to kiss up to the bullet.' There is sense in that, as every good shot knows.

"The fallacies circulated about Boer shooting make a man sick. One London paper's war expert says that we can never equal the Boers until we have rifles fitted with telescopic sights. That is bosh and nonsense. I will wager that there are not three guns fitted with telescopic sights or sliding sights or any other cumbrous patent arrangements in the whole Boer army. All these patent adjustments work beautifully at the butts, but they are useless when a man has to see clearly, act quickly and keep his head all at one and the same time. I happen to know that the Transvaal people use just plain flap sights, not too fine, as do all other rough-and-ready shots the wide world over. With any other arrangement, you use up your precious time fussing with machinery, and the other fellow either drops you or gets away. Myself, I use the same coarse, open sights in shooting flying birds—but I use very little sighting in doing that. In such work, one shoots more by instinct, as in pistol-shooting, and a man can't excel unless he has the instinct born in him. But anyone, with fair eyes and nerves, can acquire by practice the skill to drop a deer or man at three hundred yards, running or standing. That is good enough for ordinary military purposes. Because, if one is sure of his man at three hundred yards, he can make it pretty risky for anyone inside of a thousand.

"Another fallacy which I'd like to explode is the fool idea about the superiority of repeating rifles for military purposes. The advantage of a repeater is, of course, rapidity of fire. But this is nothing to accuracy. One shot well placed is better than twenty fired at random. And a repeater is never so accurate as a single-shot gun. It is a question of balance. A shot who knows his rifle has become accustomed to its balance, so that when he slings it to his shoulder it assumes instantly the position to which he has become accustomed. In a repeater, balance changes continually, according to the number of cartridges left in the magazine. This is a disturbing factor. I can conceive only two good reasons for using a repeater. One is in the case of scouts, who frequently get into a tight place and have to double up in reloading in a great hurry. The other case fits the British army pretty well. It is when a lot of worthless shots have to scatter bullets all over a ten-acre lot in the hope that some of them will hit the people they are after.

"The truth is, for work like that in South Africa, Englishmen living in England will never be of much use, no matter how we encourage rifle clubs. Shooting has to be learned in the open. Colonial troops, trained out-of-doors, were the men who ought to have been turned loose on the proposition from first to last. This would be a rather discouraging outlook for the British army if it weren't for one thing; the opponents in ordinary war are just as bad shots as we are. This Boer war is a peculiar one, and we aren't likely to encounter another one like it for centuries. Germans, Frenchmen, Russians, Austrians know as little as we do about real out-of-doors shooting. It's an even thing, and we are ordinarily at no disadvantage."

AMOS SHELDON.

WORLD'S FAIRS TO DATE.

History of the Expositions Preceeding the Paris Show.

THE first great world's fair was given by England in 1851; the largest was given by the United States in 1893, and the most tasteful and beautiful is now being carried through in France. For the Columbian Exposition, although large, and pretentious and beautiful in its way, was to the present Paris Fair as is the infant art-sense of America to the mature art-sense of France. At this juncture, some account of previous expositions of the sort may be of interest.

The first show of this kind was opened under the auspices of the Society of Arts at Hyde Park on May 1, 1851; it was looked upon as the most stupendous undertaking of the time. The building in which the exhibition took place was built entirely of glass and received the name Crystal Palace. It covered an area of 87,49 square yards, says the New York Tribune, and had 113,622 square yards of floor space. The exhibition remained open until October 11, and was visited by 6,039,195 people, the largest attendance in one day being 110,000. The list of exhibitors included merchants, manufacturers, artists, etc., to the number of 17,000, and 5,187 awards were distributed. The official reports show that the cost of the enterprise amounted to £240,000. The receipts amounted to £506,243, and the surplus was invested in the estate at South Kensington, where the Natural History Museum, the Imperial Institute and Albert Hall now stand.

Paris was not slow to follow London's lead and in 1855 a universal exhibition took place in the French capital. The buildings were erected in the Champs Elysees and were known as the Palais de l'Industrie. They covered 200,931 square yards, and accommodated 24,000 exhibitors. The awards numbered 11,033, and took the form of medals of various values, diplomas and certificates of merit. The visitors numbered 5,160,000, the greatest number for one day being 121,000. The management was good, the interest in the scheme was general, but the exhibition was not a financial success. The outlay was $2,300,000 and the receipts were only $640,000. The State assumed the debt which had been contracted, and the announced to the world that the next Paris exhibition would be a financial success.

England's second universal exhibition took place in the Horticultural Society buildings, at South Kensington, in 1862. The opening ceremonies took place on May 1, and the doors remainder open until November 1, in which time it was visited by 6,211,108 people. The undertaking was also a financial failure. The receipts were only about $2,300,000, and a large deficit remained. The promoters of the enterprise would have lost heavily if the contractors had not consented to take the buildings in payment for their claims, and, to further emphasize their good will, one member of the contracting firm, Sir John Kelk, donated about $55,000 toward making the books balance.

Two years later the French people made another bid for the world's patronage, and Paris again became a great show city. The Exposition of 1867 was opened in the Camp de Mars on April 1, and continued for six months. This was the most pretentious exhibition that had ever taken place, and the financial losses in connections with prior similar enterprises did not discourage the promoters. The main building covered an area of 198,539 square yards, a park of 57,409 square yards was one of the attractions, and a garden covering 9,568 square yards was considered at that time a masterpiece in floral decoration and landscape architecture. The expenditures amounted to about $5,000,000, and when the exhibition closed its doors the syndicate by whom the financial risk had been guaranteed divided a surplus of about $1,000,000.

The merchants and manufacturers of Vienna became envious of London and Paris, and made arrangements for a universal exhibition in their city, and on May 1, 1873, the Wiener Ausstellung was opened in the Prater Park. The exhibition occupied a space of 2,193,500 square yards. The number of exhibitors was small in comparison with the number of awards, there having been 25,552 awards and 42,000 exhibitors. When the final accounts were footed up it was found that against an expenditure of about $9,000,000 there was a receipt account of only $2,328,000. The enormous deficit was borne by the empire.

The next great exhibition took place in the United States, and from May 10, 1876, to November 1, Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, was the congregating place of people from all countries. The Centennial Exhibition extended over 1,375,423 square yards, of which 345,649 square yards were covered by buildings. The cost of preparing the grounds and erecting the buildings was about $8,000,000, and the various buildings contained 27,000 exhibits. The machinery was started by President Grant on the opening day, and Emperor Dom Pedro of Brazil pressed the electric button which brought the machinery to a standstill on November 10. The total number of admissions to the Exhibition grounds was 9,910,966. On May 1, 1878, another Universal Exhibition was opened in the Champ de Mars, Paris, the Trocadero and the Quai d'Orsai as far as the Alma Bridge, and that part of the Esplanade des Invalides between the quay and the Rue St. Dominique. As on former occasions, Paris made efforts to surpass anything in the way of exhibition buildings and decorations that had previously been done and succeeded in attracting 52,835 exhibitors, between whom the 29,810 awards were distributed. Upward of 16,000,000 people visited the grounds, the largest one day attendance showing 210,000. But the financial result was again disastrous, the net receipts being less than one-half of the $11,000,000 outlay.

The next world's fair took place at Sydney, N. S. W., in 1879, and this was followed by one at Melbourne in 1880. Amsterdam came next in 1885, and Brussels and Barcelona each had exhibitions which were advertised as world's fairs in 1888.

Then in 1889 came the great Universal Exposition in Paris. This was opened on May 6, and covered 551,365 square yards of space. Although the buildings and everything pertaining to this exhibition were made ready at great cost and with a view to the comfort of the visitors and artistic effect, the preparations were less expensive than on former occasions, and the total amount expended did not exceed $8,000,000. The receipts footed up about $10,000,000, the gate receipts alone netting $4,200,000.

The next world's fair was that at Chicago, which opened on May 1, 1893. It was the largest and the most magnificent of all the universal exhibitions, and when the promoters of the Paris Exposition said that their buildings would exceed in beauty those which stood in Jackson Park, and that the city on the Seine would eclipse the white city on the lake, they made a statement which the visitors to Paris will be called upon to verify.

Things & People.

The Plague.

DOES the gentle reader know the bubonic plague? Does he know that this dread scourge has taken off tens of thousands of humanity almost in the winking of an eye? Does he know that this most deadly, this most feared of all diseases that afflicts mankind sweeps with a force almost incredible, and silently strikes down its victims by the thousands with unerring certainty? You must have a clear idea of the deadly and unavoidable consequences of this plague to thoroughly appreciate San Francisco's plight. It is declared that within the past three months nine Chinese have died in San Francisco, all suspected of having plague. Think of it, nine in three months. This plague of ours must be a tired-out, worn-out sort of affair. But the wise men say we have it, and have therefore placed a quarantine on Chinatown in San Francisco, to avoid the threatened action of a super-serviceable State Board of Health that proposed to quarantine the entire city. Officially we have the plague. Actually there is not a single known case in the city. And then the quarantine—it is a quarantine against the most terrible scourge known. Yet street cars run through the infected quarter. No white man is permitted to enter the district, but white men may come out, and, to give variety to the situation, the rule is reversed as to Chinese. The Mongolian may enter the quarantine district, but he is not permitted to come out. An infected white man may come out of the district and spread the plague, while a healthy Chinaman is permitted to enter the district, but may not come out. You must bear in mind that this is the historic plague, the deadly overpowering scourge that has swept away half a city in a single visit. Query: Does our Board of Health or any Board of Health having a knowledge of the facts, believe the plague to exist in Chinatown? If so, then the quarantine of Chinatown is a broad farce.

* * *

Not the least peculiar thing about this peculiar "epidemic" is the fact that no one so much as pretends to have seen a living case. Every case so far reported by the Health Board have been discovered on a corpse. The corpses did not catch it after they were dead, or there would be no need of fumigation and quarantine and all that sort of thing. Why hasn't the lynx-eyed Health Board discovered a person in the agonies of the disease, whom they can show to the reputable physicians of the city in order to prove their case? I never before heard of a plague where there were ten deaths and no cases. The whole job smells of the City Hall. And the jobbers of the board go on, merrily spoiling the trade of the State and the reputation of the city for their own political purposes. Already, the summer tourist traffic is growing lighter just when it should be growing heavier, and already the staple commodities of the State are being refused in the Eastern markets. This is not a bald statement; it is a proved fact. Two or three of the largest fruit-growers in the State have had their Eastern buyers refuse contracts for this year "for fear of infection." Now that the scare continues to be noised abroad, these refusals may be expected to become more and more numerous. I am not protesting against the quarantine, remember. Under the circumstances, it was the only thing to do. The groundless fear of the disease is spreading all over the State and the country, and the only way to prove to the timid that they are safe from "infected" San Francisco is to show them that we have isolated the suspected district. As a quarantine, it is a failure; as a moral persuader, it is of some good. "But the bloomin' uselessness of it!"

***

W. R. Hearst for Vice-President.

OF COURSE, Mr. Hearst's suggestion, exploited in the twin monstrosities of modern journalism, that the Democratic clubs of this country meet on July 4th "to renew their pledge of fealty to the republic" has nothing to do with the fact that Mr. Hearst's name has been "mentioned" for vice-president. Who ever heard of the Examiner-Journal advocating anything at all which was not solely for the benefit of the republic? Mr. Hearst's senseless and sensational suggestion, all sound and emptiness like an Examiner editorial, comes at this time as a mere coincidence. Say, wouldn't this be a glorious republic, with W. J. Bryan and W. R. Hearst running it? Imagine the weird utterances which would emanate from the White House and the Senate Chamber! And imagine the hysterics of the Champions of the Cause of the Oppressed. Here would be one vice-president who would not fulfill the destiny of the office and sink into obscurity—no indeed, not while the Examiner Journal kept in commission. We would have Willie scare-headed in the act of saving the commonwealth three times a week. Government of the Examiner, for the Examiner, by the Examiner—"wouldn't she be a beaut?"

***

The Mott Haven Games.

PLAW'S feat at Philadelphia, last Monday, establishes the young hammer-thrower as the greatest amateur in the world and, potentially, as the greatest of them all, amateur or professional. His throw of 165 feet is within five feet of Flanagan's professional record. But Flanagan is an older man and has practiced at the event for many years, while Plaw is a youngster, only a Sophomore at the university, and has many years of training and improvement before him. He is a notable addition to the long list of great athletes sent out from California. Outside of the performances of this one single man, the Eastern trip of the University of California athletes has turned out as disastrously as I predicted in the beginning. It is true that the team has had bad luck in the disabling of Broughton and Hoffman, two of the stars, but even with these men in form, the record would have been almost equally poor. Defeated by a comfortable margin at Yale and walked over by Princeton and Pennsylvania, they would have shown for only one fourth place in the Intercollegiates, had it not been for Plaw, who took a first and a third. They are contesting in the Western games to-day, but stand little chance of winning against such opponents as Michigan and Chicago. Plaw may annex a world's record to-day, as he has been steadily improving on this trip.

* * *

The Mott Haven games emphasized again the ability of that wonderful athlete, Krantzlein of Pennsylvania, undoubtedly the greatest all-round track man who ever put on spikes. In this meet, which represented the pick of America's younger athletic material, he won three first places, tying a world's record in doing so, and took second place in his own event, the broad jump, not contesting in the finals because he was tired. Krantzlein is good not only in one event, but in all classes of events. To show his superiority, I need only mention that, were he to go against every athlete of the Pacific Coast, he could defeat each and every one in his own special event, with two exceptions; Plaw, the wonder, would beat him in the weights, and Henley of Ukiah could beat him in the high jump. Also, Boyd of Stanford might possibly vault higher. Everywhere else, he would have a romp. He holds world's records in the two hurdles, and until recently was world's champion in the broad jump; in practice, he has beaten the present record and will undoubtedly do so in competition before long. He can run the 100-yard dash in 10 seconds and the 220-yard dash under 22 seconds. He can do six feet in the high jump and vaults at about eleven feet. In the quarter-mile he has one superior in the country—Boardman of Yale—he runs the half-mile under two minutes, and, if pushed, could do 4.30 in the mile. He puts the shot 40 feet and throws the hammer over 120. The whole history of athletics shows nothing approaching this. "Lon" Myers, the Virginian who startled Europe some fifteen or twenty years ago, was invincible in the runs at any distance from fifty yards to three miles, but he was a "flat" runner pure and simple and could do nothing in the jumps, weights or hurdles. Krantzlein excels in everything. It will be a national calamity if this great athlete, now in his prime, is not sent to represent America in the Olympic games at Paris, this summer.

***

The G. A. R. and Confederate Monuments.

THE Southern Confederacy was reconstructed some twenty years ago; isn't it about time for the G. A. R. to forget that the war is over? Nowhere do we hear such eloquent protests against sectional feeling, such flowery language concerning the reconciliation of the blue and the gray as from the mouths of the orators at G. A. R. conventions, and yet nowhere, not even in the hottest confederate portions of the South, is there such a disposition to keep alive the dying hatreds of 1860 as in this same Grand Army of the republic. They are the people who prevented the return of the Confederate battle-flags, they are the people who are now preventing the reconciled Daughters of the Confederacy from putting monuments over their dead, buried in national cemeteries. The last gun of the Civil War was fired thirty-five years ago; the G. A. R. people have had all this time to do their hating. Now, in their old age, they might forgive their enemies and play the generous victor.

BOSWELL, JR.

Marion Gunning — Maude Courtney — Mary Marble

THREE MEMBERS OF THE NEW FARCE-COMEDY COMPANY AT THE CALIFORNIA.

VANCOUVER THE GLASGOW OF THE PACIFIC

IN the awakening of the Pacific Coast of North America as the result of the new conditions in the Far East, and especially of the American occupation of the Philippine Islands, three seaport cities have come forward as the great prospective ports of entry. The first is, of course, San Francisco, which possesses the natural advantage of a "flying start" and of grand railway communication; the city of the Golden Gate is the logical outlet for the Southwest and the middle section of the United States. The second is Seattle, which has distanced all rivals in the Pacific Northwest and is about to possess a railway and dockage system which will make the port the outlet for the great inland empire of the Northwest. The third is Vancouver, the port of entry for British Columbia. Youngest of all the three, hardly "old enough to vote," she has made such mighty strides in the past few years, that she has taken from all competitors the right to be classed as the Pacific port of entry for the Dominion of Canada. In time to come, there will be three great Pacific ports for the handling of the Oriental trade, and of these Vancouver, backed by the forests, fields and mines of the awakening Dominion and by "the bank of the open credit, the power-house of the line," will not be the least. Barring turbulent South Africa, the western portion of Canada is the part of the United Kingdom in which the mother country has done the least development work; not even barring South Africa, the Western Dominion is the part of British territory which presents the best field for development.

This is generalizing; let us get down to plain, hard facts. Four great factors, combined with many smaller ones, are making toward the commercial supremacy of Vancouver in the Canadian northwest. The first, and the one holding the greatest possibility for the future, is the spread of Oriental trade just referred to. It is not pretended that this is now the main item in the city's prosperity, but, unless prophecies fail, it is destined to be so at some time within the next two decades. Enthusiastic Vancouver people will tell you that the city is nearer the great ports of the Orient by several days than either San Francisco or Seattle. While this may or may not be rue, it is undoubtedly a fact that the city is more conveniently placed as regards the northern ports of Japan and China and of awakening Korea than any of her Pacific rivals. Moreover, the longest continuous railway line in the world, pending the completion of the trans-Siberian road, acts as a feeder for her ships. Already, the port of Vancouver receives most of the tea which finds its way into North America. Already, British bottoms, booked in that city, carry most of the lumber—they call it "timber" in Vancouver—which goes from North America to the Far East Two great lines of passenger steamers and dozens of freighters are steadily plying between the city and Oriental or South Pacific ports, and a great extension is close at dhan.

It is now pretty certain that the extension of the Great Northern railroad will cause Vancover to be the port of entry for several of the new freighters of that line. The city possesses the great advantage of a large, safe and land-locked harbor, deep enough to admit vessels of any draught at any time and large enough to hold the shipping of the world. Burrard Inlet extends inward from the sea about fourteen miles, with a branch nearly as large. No matter how great the growth of Oriental trade, this body of water can never be crowded to its limit.

Only second to the Oriental trade in the line of future possibilities is the natural advantage possessed by Vancouver in the trade of Alaska, Northern British Columbia and the Klondike country. The new Nome rush has benefitted Seattle principally, because Cape Nome is on American soil and "trade follows the flag." But Vancouver now takes the great bulk of trade with Dawson City and the other great mining camps lying upon British soil, and as time goes on she will come to be the natural depot of supplies for the region. The Northwest Territory trade, which was the original raison d'etre of the British Columbian cities, still continues and grows more and more certain and vigorous as time goes on and stable industries replace the arts of half-wild men. In spite of its Northern site, this territory will in time support a fairly large population; Vancouver is in the lead of all the cities striving to minister to the needs of that population.

The factor which is of the greatest present importance to Vancouver's prosperity lies in the resources of the province itself. Of these, mining for the precious metals and coal, lumbering and the salmon industry at present hold the main place. The district is still in the transition stage between the period when man takes what nature has given him, ready to his hand, and the period when man begins to encourage nature. Agriculture, therefore, is of much less importance than it will be in time to come, but it already cuts no small figure. After the woodman's axe comes the farmer's plow; when the forests shall have been thinned somewhat, the matchless virgin soil will begin to lend a golden harvest to the agriculturalist.

Finally, Vancouver has passed all her British Columbian rivals as the great railway terminus of Western Canada. The selection of the city to close the sea-to-sea connection of the Canadian Pacific system assured this. The great line feeds the coast steamers plying north and south to Alaska and the States, and is itself fed by numerous small lines now built or building along the transcontinental way. The Seattle and International Railway gives close connection with the different cities of Puget Sound and the Pacific Coast. This links it with the Great Northern and Northern Pacific systems, but the connection is destined to become even closer, for the enterprising Great Northern, which is doing so much to open up the Northwestern Empire, and a branch now resting at Brownsville, on the Fraser, and the next year may see it coming into Vancouver. The Canadian Pacific is also planning an extension to Stevetson and the great salmon regions of the Fraser River. The Crow's Nest line and the extension of the Columbia and Western, both to be in operation inside the year, will open great tracts of immense natural wealth in mines and agriculture. Besides this, a line up the valley of the Fraser, planned to open up that fertile region, is in contemplation.

In 1880, the spot where Vancouver now stands was occupied by a small saw-mill, a cluster of shanties, and a virgin forest. The mining excitement of the early days had passed and was only ashes in memory; the more stable mining development of the present day was as yet unbegun. The forest was almost untouched by the lumberman; the Pacific trade was an undreamed-of possibility. For the next few years, progress was slow. The exceptional advantages offered by the harbor, the approach of the Canadian Pacific and the general opening-up of the Province combined, however, to the beginnings of a city. In 1886, the town was incorporated, and in the same year it was swept out of existence by a fire. Like Chicago and many other growing towns, Vancouver found in this seeming calamity a great and substantial benefit. A new city began to rise upon the ashes of the old one, and Vancouver's real growth dates from that time. And what a growth it has been! In this short space of time—thirteen years—a city of 30,000 people and growing apace, stands on the shores of the inlet. This record for growth has been eclipsed, it is true, by many and many a "boom" city in the United States, but never by any town which has expanded through the quiet and steady advance of her industries. For continuous growth without any boom features, the record has never been touched.

The city is a modern one, albeit it stands on the western limit of the Anglo-Saxon advance. It is well laid out, well lighted, well paved. It owns its own water supply, which comes from sources capable of ministering to a much larger population. The sewers have lately been improved and extended, so that the sanitary condition is first class. Two hundred thousand dollars were expended in municipal improvement in 1899. The tax assessment for last year was $17,000,000 with a taxation of sixteen mills on an assessment of half value on all improvements. There is a complete educational system, one of the best in any British colonial city, with an enrollment of 2,750 and school property rated at $318,300. There are three daily newspapers, three clubs, three hospitals, several first-class hotels and more building, several bank buildings ranking with the best in the country, fifteen churches and a convent and two good theatres. An era of great building activity has just set in, and substantial business blocks are going up on every hand. And best of all—since we are enumerating the substantial achievements of the city—there is a progressive and enlightened public spirit, a disposition to grasp opportunity as it presents itsel which San Francisco and the other rival Pacific ports would do well to emulate.

To recapitulate. The advantages offered to settlers and investors by Vancouver and the surrounding part of British Columbia are as follows:—For the homeseeker, who comes with moderate capital or with no capital at all, there is an untouched and unbroken country of the greatest fertility and promise in a climate which is the mildest, for the latitude, of any in the world—thanks to the Japan current. There are great lumber mills, in operation or in building, throughout the great forests; there are great tracts heavy with coal and precious metals only partially explored and prospected. But, after all, to this class agriculture offers the greatest chance. For the business man or the capitalist, there are unlimited opportunities. The mines, especially the coal mines, will bear much exploitation, and smelters are badly needed and would return great profit, since most of the ore mined in the region goes into the states to be smelted. The lumber franchises are still open. The salmon industry is not worked to its limit. But the greatest chance of all, for the individual of moderate means who wishes to go into business for himself, lies in the city of Vancouver proper. Here, where the Oriental trade is growing day by day, he has the best possible opportunity of building up a business which holds possibilities for the future. If it is in commerce, he can be assured that the number of keels in Vancouver harbor will increase year by year; if in manufactures, he has the assurance that coal, the great necessity of all manufactures, lies in abundant supply close at hand and that he has, in the nearing Orient, a close and permanent market. In becoming a great city, Vancouver is bound to make great fortunes, and the ultimate possessors of those fortunes will be the ones who seize the present time for a beginning.

F. J. T.

A Sample Log from the Vancouver Region.

Fancy the great towering Park Row building, with its twenty-six stories, on stilts! Yet that must literally be the situation, not alone with this giant, but with its tall neighbor the St. Paul Building, if Contractor McDonald's plans are executed, says the New York Journal.

It is truly a problem to tax the brains of engineers, and if no solution be found the plans of radid transit must be materially changed.

As the route is laid out the lower loop of the tunnel with its four tracks will pass eighteen feet below the foundations of these architectural monsters.

The contractor of this section will be called upon to devise a plan by which the buildings may be shored up during the work, and for that matter afterward.

The digging will not be so difficult, for the ground is pure sand. The question is whether the work can be done without risk of destruction to the tallest and heaviest building in the world and its companion. The tunnel loop will pass within two feet of the Astor House, and will cut under the vaults of the Park Row Building in its circle.

Contractors and engineers did not appreciate the seriousness of this problem when they rushed to Mr. McDonald for contracts. It looked like an easy job to tunnel the streets around City Hall Park. It will prove tremendous work, requiring all the best engineering skill.

When the Broadway merchants protested against a tunnel through that thoroughfare on the ground that the foundations of buildings would be disturbed, their protests received the serious attention of the Commissioners. Yet the Syndicate building is vastly greater than any of the Broadway buildings above Warren street.

Another hard problem is found in the fifth section of the tunnel, from Fourth avenue to the Boulevard on Forty-second street, and thence up to Sixty fifth street. The contractor must bore his way through solid rock without disturbing the continuous traffic in the streets.

Contractor McDonald is confident that all problems will be satisfactorily solved as the work progresses. He met many unexpected conditions in his big tunnels in Baltimore, but completed that work with great success.

Calcutta is at last attacked by plague in real earnest. The epidemic has been developing since January. For the week ending March 3, 481 cases had been recorded. During the past few months a still further development has taken place and about one hundred cases a day have been returned. All the theories about subsoil water, malaria and the character of habitations are now cast to the winds. The disease is chiefly prevalent in the northern parts of the city, but the most recent reports show that it is beginning to spread to other districts. Compared with Bombay, however, the figures of plague and general mortality are comparatively small. Bombay with a population of 821,000 and 2,635 deaths last week has a death-rate of over 167 per 1,000 per annum: Calcutta with a population of 650,000 and 947 deaths last week has a death-rate of only 75 per 1,000 per annum.

Panoramic View from

The Cleeve Canning and Cold Storage Co.'s Plant at New Westminster

Along the River.

The Flaack B

VIEWS IN AND AROUND

ount Pleasant.

The Cleeve Canning and Cold Storage Co.'s Plant at New Westminster.

Housetop View from the C. P. R. Hotel.

Photos by S. J. Thompson.

As Seen by Leila.

THIS is my last letter, my dear Diary. I wonder if that is so delightful a fact to you as it is to me. Letters are always trying, but this regular society correspondence is simply unequalled by anything I have ever known. No one really writes a letter of any particular value nowadays. The notes one receives from girls are hardly readable. The writing in the first place is illegible, and the facts in the note, as a rule, commonplace. As for letters. I never receive any. Mamma does not approve of promiscuous letter writing. I have never known a girl I considered sufficiently interesting to have as a correspondent. Some girls write amusing letters, but as a rule they are overdrawn, and bore me exceedingly. Others go in for being critical and that is so tiresome. Others again gossip and that is dangerous, in letters—I enjoy it somewhat however, when I go calling. It helps to pass the time. I have been down in Menlo Park this last week and have been too much entertained. I think I should like to stay with English people. They, I have heard, let one pass part of the day unmolested. It is a dreadful thing to be continually and continuously amused. If one is of a lazy nature it is very tiring. My friends were very kind. We had breakfast early and then we drove, after driving we walked, then we had luncheon and did a little sewing. Then we drove again, and on our return a few girls came in, and we played tennis or croquet or billiards. Then dinner. There were young men in the family, so we walked and they smoked and played billiards. I stayed there three days and returned to mama exhausted. It is a dreadful ordeal to undergo —yet they, like most Californians, felt that their guest must be amused. How I longed for my afternoon sleep. In fact for a little rest in any part of the day. In England one breakfasts when one pleases, one sees the hostess at luncheon. If one wishes, a carriage is at one's disposal. One would never be criticized or wondered at for spending most of the day in one's room. It is at dinner that all the guests assemble and appear to their best advantage. There are always golf links in the vicinity, and any amount of amusement in which one can partake should one so desire. It is not the obvious fact, however, that one is being entertained.

The night I returned to town I again went to see "The Tyranny of Tears". It has been thoroughly appreciated in San Francisco. the company played to large and fashionable audiences every evening. Some women criticize Haddon Chambers very strongly for writing such a play. I do not. I cannot stand nonsense in women. In fact, I endeavor in every way possible to make my girl friends see life as I do. Trifling and nonsense have never yet given a woman any real place in a man's affection. To be worth something to a man one must—well I am not married yet, so I shall refrain from giving my opinion on the subject.

Monday evening I went to see "When We Were Twenty-one." Maxine Elliott looked lovely. She is more beautiful, I think, than when she was here before, and her acting has certainly improved. Nat Goodwin is inimitable. The play is full of incident and quite different from anything I have seen for some time. I saw any number of people whom I know in the audience. I am exceedingly satisfied now that we are to have so many good actors and actresses this summer. It makes it so agreeable should one feel inclined to come to town from the country for a few days or even to stay over night.

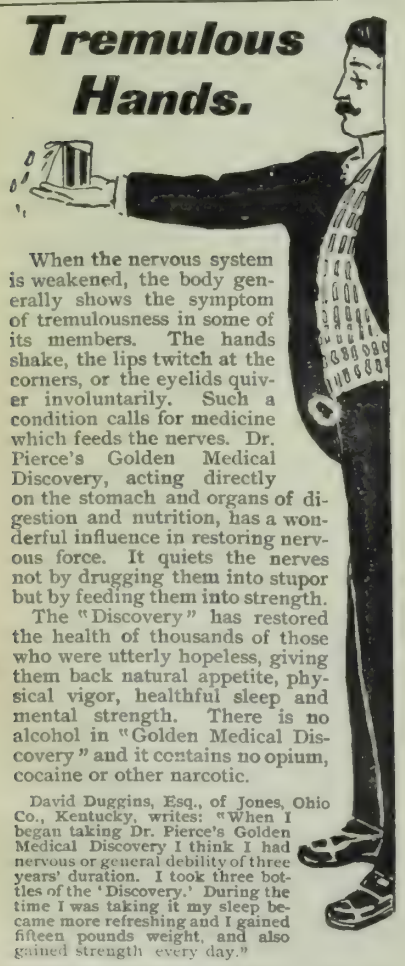
There are a good number of San Francisco people now in Paris. Aunt Sybil, who is there at present writes that the crowds are perfectly horrible. I should not mind that particularly, but Aunt Sybil is a sensitive person, who does not like to be put to any inconvenience whatever. She says that the hotels have not raised their rates particularly, and there are so many "busses and fiacres" that it is very easy to get about. It is a beautiful time of the year in Paris. It seems a great pity that the Exposition buildings are not entirely finished. Mama and I may go over there a little later, perhaps in September or October. The great crowds we hope will then have scattered.

The first of June means an absolute exodus from town. Most of the people I know are going to San Rafael, Burlingame, San Mateo and Menlo Park. It is exceedingly nice that San Francisco has so many agreeable resorts so close to it. As for springs in the vicinity—I really had no idea there was as much water in California as there are springs. Each has its own attractions too, and from each, one can derive a special benefit.

Next week you will have Cricket with you. She is, I believe to stay in San Francisco for a few weeks before she goes to the country. I saw Ethel Keeney in the street the other day. She has had a most glorious winter in the East. She is looking very well, and has some exceedingly nice clothes. Ethel is a girl who always has a good time. She is so bright and vivacious it is a pleasure to have her at any entertainment. LEILA.

The whisky that touches the right spot every time is Jesse Moore; to be had from all first-class dealers.

Tremulous Hands.



When the nervous system is weakened, the body generally shows the symptom of tremulousness in some of its members. The hands shake, the lips twitch at the corners, or the eyelids quiver involuntarily. Such a condition calls for medicine which feeds the nerves. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, acting directly on the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition, has a wonderful influence in restoring nervous force. It quiets the nerves not by drugging them into stupor but by feeding them into strength.

The "Discovery" has restored the health of thousands of those who were utterly hopeless, giving them back natural appetite, physical vigor, healthful sleep and mental strength. There is no alcohol in "Golden Medical Discovery" and it contains no opium, cocaine or other narcotic.

David Duggins, Esq., of Jones, Ohio Co., Kentucky, writes: "When I began taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery I think I had nervous or general debility of three years' duration. I took three bottles of the 'Discovery.' During the time I was taking it my sleep became more refreshing and I gained fifteen pounds weight, and also gained strength every day."

Free, on receipt of stamps to pay expense of mailing only, Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser, 1008 pages. Send 21 one-cent stamps for book in paper covers, or 31 stamps in cloth binding to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

IN BOOKDOM.

GERHART HAUPMANN has now been in the public eye for about ten years, during which period he has written ten plays. For almost as many years he has been known by name outside of Germany as the author of "Von Sonnenausgang" (Before Sunrise), "Einsame Menschen" (Lonely Lives), and one or two other plays of more han ordinary originality. It was not, however, until some five years ago that his work became generally known in America. At about that time the announcement was made that "Hannele"—now known as "Hannele's Himmelfahrt (The Assumption of Hannele), was to be performed at the Fifth Avenue Theatre in New York. Hauptmann was then on a visit to this country, and had been advertised in the sensational press as a very dangerous sort of man to listen to. Mr. Meltzer, who was associated with him in this production, thus describes the attack upon "Hannele":

"Frank bigots, sham philanthropists, hack writers and political quacks all of a sudden became filled with pious fears as to the supposed tendencies and teachings of this 'Hannele.' In the name of religion they banded themselves into a League of ignorance to prevent, by open action and secret tricks, the production of what they stupidly and ignorantly proclaimed a blasphemous play. Hauptmann, who had neither invited nor desired the performance of his dream poem, was dragged into the controversy. The newspapers took sides. At the solicitation of Commodore Elbridge T. Gerry, a Tammany mayor forbade the appearance of the young actress who had been engaged to impersonate Hannele; while the author, the lessees of the Fifth Avenue Theatre, and the writer of these lines, who had put the drama into English, were threatened with imprisonment. The warfare waged so bitterly against the Theatre-Libre in France and the Freie-Buehne in Germany had, by some miracle, spread to America. And the attack on the free stage was met here as it had been met abroad. Some hundreds of literary and critical people were bidden to a private representation of the much-talked-of play. Next morning the papers, with a few few impenitent exceptions, published eulogies of 'Hannele.' No one was arrested. And the public performance took place."

The play was not so bad as its advertisers had made out, and failed signally. Had it been really bad it would have succeeded, since then the author has been known in America, though chiefly through his published work. Charles Henry Meltzer, whose words I have already quoted with regard to "Hannele," has recently published a very good translation in English verse of a later play by Hauptmann, "Die Versunkene Glocke" (The Submerged Bell), under the title, The Sunken Bell. In point of time the play stands ninth in its author's list of ten; and it perhaps has attracted as much attention from the critics as any. Hauptmann himself describes it as "a German fairy play." It is a fairy play in the sense that about half the characters are supernatural beings drawn out of German folk-lore.

The tale is hung about Heinrich, a young bell-founder who has just completed his master-piece. An elf typifying some earthly influence wrecks the car on which the bell is being borne to its tower, and the masterpiece rolls down the mountain and into a lake. Its maker receives injuries, but is healed by the kiss of a beautiful fay, who loves him. He leaves his home to live with this fair being on the mountain, and she, in her turn, places all magic at his disposal towards the making of a more wonderful chime of bells than ever was. The deserted wife drowns herself. Her dead hand rings the old bell at the bottom of the mere, Heinrich hears, against his will is called back to earth, and thus loses his fairy bride forever, together with all hope of achieving his ideals, unless he drink the mystic draught of death. He chooses death.

The play obviously is more than a mere fairy-tale. It is very obviously an allegory surcharged with hidden meaning and spiritual significances. It is just as obviously a little obscure exactly what the allegory bears upon. Some may interpret the symbolism from an esthetic standpoint. Some undoubtedly will choose to give it a still wider significance —moral, religious or social. Look at it with the eye of an artist and it may be taken as a parable showing the eternal effort of all artists to attain their esthetic ideals. From the standpoint of the reformer it may be interpreted as the tale of a dreamer who strives to remodel human society. Mr. Meltzer thinks that it has still deeper meanings than those. I quote:

"I incline to regard Heinrich, the bell-founder, as a symbol of humanity struggling painfully towards the realization of its dream of the ideal truth and joy and light and justice. Rautendelein (the supernatural heroine) in this reading stands for Nature, or rather for the freedom and sincerity of Nature, missing a reunion with which Humanity can never hope to reach the supreme truth and the supreme bliss of which the sun is the emblem. In Magda, the poor faithful patient wife, whose dead hand, in the tragical fourth act, tolls the bell that arouses Heinrich from his dream, we have the symbol of the domestic loves, the earthly ties, from which no man, however noble and far-reaching be his aims, can be released. Old Wittikin embodies the eternal, passionless philosophy of life. The vicar, the barber, and the schoolmaster stand for the conventions—the half-dead, half-living creeds, theories and superstitions of society, which stand in the way of the idealist. Heinrich makes the attempt to break with them. Filled with despair at the failure of his old ideals (symbolized in the lost bell), and enlightened by communion with Rautendelein, he turns his back on all the shams, and alas, on some of the realities, which bind him to earth. The kiss of the fair elf who heals him when he lies upon his sick-bed broadens his vision, steels his hand, puts youth into his soul. Only by a mystical union with the Nature which society, as it is now constituted, has disowned, can he 'work wonders with the power on high' and fashion the grand peal of bells which is to ring out a new, glad and merciful gospel through the world."

Whatever its significance, the English translation will make the play available to thousands who could not read it in the German. The text is that used for dramatic representation in this country and England. Published by R. H. Russell, New York.

HOTEL VENDOME.

At San Jose is one of Central California's most beautiful holstries. In the midst of its own twelve-acre park; two blocks from the railroad station where almost hourly trains connect with the outside; the starting point for Lick Observatory; the center of a greater number and variety of attractions than any other place on the Coast; furnished finely, graded and watered roads for driving and cycling lead in every direction; with over 250 elegantly furnished rooms, and suites with bath and toilet; perfect in appointment, service and all the accessories of comfort, and one of the most attractive features of San Jose, the metropolis of the world renowned Santa Clara Valley.

GEO. P. SNELL,
Manager.

J. J. Pfister KNITTING CO.

103 Post St., S. F.
near Kearney.

Beautiful New Styles.

Men's, Women's and Children's

BATHING SUITS.

Alapaca and Knitted

At Prices to Suit Everybody.

Sweaters, Jerseys, Golf Vests and Jackets

Outing and Riding Leggings,

Sporting Goods.

Send for Illustrated Catalogues.

1900- 36th -1900

Annual Statement

—OF THE—

TRAVELERS

INSURANCE COMPANY.

Chartered 1863. (Stock.)

Life and Accident Insurance

JAMES G. BATTERSON, Pres.

Hartford, Conn., January 1, 1900.

Paid-up Capital, = $1,000,000.00

ASSETS.

Real Estate,	$2 049 212 72
Cash on hand and in Bank,	1,8.0 269 96
Loans on bond and mortgage, real estate	5.9 1,842.52
Interest accrued but not due,	245 983.39
Loans on collateral security,	1,497.175 51
Loans on this Company's Policies,	1,305 307 27
Deferred Life Premiums,	310.997 04
Prems. due and unreported on Life Pcl.	259 449 36
Government Bonds,	789,016 96
Coun'y and municipal bonds	3,114 997 64
Railroad stocks and bonds,	7,819 225.19
Bank s ocks	1,2.8 674 00
Other stocks and bonds'	1.288 350 00
Total Assets,	$27,760,511.56

LIABILITIES.

Reserve, 3½ per cent, Life Dep't.,	$20 406 734.00
Reserve for Re-insurance, Acc'dt. Dep't	1,500,369 22
Present value installment Life Policies,	783,193.00
Reserve for Claims against Employers,	586 520.26
Losses in process of adjustment,	219 833.02
Life Premiums paid in advance,	73,178 11
Special Reserve for unp'd taxes, rents,	110 000 00
Special Reserve, Liability Department,	100,000 00
Total Liabilities,	23,739,827.61
Excess Security to Policy-holders,	4,020,683.95
Surplus,	$3,020,683,95

STATISTICS TO DATE.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.

Life Insurance in force,	$100,334,554.00
New Life Insurance written in 1899,	17,165,686.00

Insurance on installment plan at commuted value.

Returned to Policy-holders in 1899,	1,522,417.06
Returned to Policy-holders since 1864,	16,039,380.95

ACCIDENT DEPARTMENT.

Number Accident Claims paid in 1899,	15.386
Whole number Accident Claims paid,	339.636
Returned to Policy-holders in 1899,	$1,227,977.34
Returned to Policy-holders since 1864,	23,695,539.94

Totals.

Returned to Policy-holders in 1899.	$ 2,750,394 40
Returned to Policy-holders since 1864	39,734,920 89

S. C. DUNHAM, Vice-President
JOHN E. MORRIS, Secretary
H. J. MESSENGER, Actuary
E. V. PRESTON, Sup't of Agencies
B. LEWIS, M.D., Surgeon and Adjuster.

The Alumnae of Irving Institute celebrated their Annual Reunion and Lunch on Friday, May 25. A musical and literary program of high merit was rendered, those taking part being Miss Jessie B. Lyon, '98, Miss Florence A. Smart, '94, Miss Estelle M. Davis, 95, Miss Edna F. Smart, '97. Seventy Alumnae sat down at the social round tables for lunch, all the classes but three being represented. Those present were: Mrs. Anita Boole McKee, President; Miss Florence Smart, Miss Louisa Lucas, Miss Hattie Jackson, Miss Miriam Hall, Rev. and Mrs. E. B. Church, Mme. Nis-Herrera, Miss Ella M. Pinkham, Mrs. Humphrey-Smith, Miss Estelle Guppy, Mrs. Isabel Stewart Bostwick, Mrs. Clara Boole Davis, Mrs. Marian Morrison Cornell, Miss Leila Boole, Mrs. Teen Goodall Keil, Mrs. Lottie Rundle Chapman, Miss Maud Turrell, Mrs. Ella Seaton Tuttle, Miss Dora Howe, Mrs. Ila Lane Allen, Miss Grace De Frest, Miss Laura Levensaler, Miss Bessie Prindle, Miss M ybelle Clary, Mrs. Emilia Johnson Wohlander, Miss Effie Burris, Miss Ethel Lieb, Mrs. Mary Spear Barnes, Miss Sarah Coward, Miss Edith Kennedy, Miss Mabel Southack, Miss Mary Watermann, Miss Estelle Davis, Miss Agnes Stewart, Mrs. Lena Atkins Dawly, Mrs. Agnes Marshall Spalding, Mrs. Ellie Panno Schranz, Mrs. Marie Taylor Bateman, Miss Edna Smart, Mrs. Ellison Vernon Stanford, Miss Myrtle Lieb, Miss Edna Farrow, Miss Maud Case, Miss Ethel Clary, Miss Aileen Day, Miss Gertrude Featherstone, Miss Mabel Gale, Miss Mabel Korts, Miss Mable Norris, Miss Blanch Southack, Miss Maybelle Stone, Miss Jessie Lyon, Miss Blanche Doane, Miss Ida Downing, Miss Jeannette Gillis, Miss Ethel Hendy, Miss Elvira Hobbs, Miss Gertrude Kennedy, Miss Maud McColl, Miss Leila McDermott, Miss Eleanor Soper, Miss Eleanor Averell, Miss Mabel Coxe, Miss Daisy Farrow, Miss Olive Fisher, Miss Lena Hartman, Miss Edna Hepburn Miss Ione Pennington, Miss Carolyn Pool, Miss Paula Zeile Wolff.

If you have never tasted Jesse Moore "AA" whisky, try it and be convinced that it is the best whisky in the world.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes Lane and Ninth. American or European plan Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

THE FLAACK BUILDING.

See Pages 8 and 9.

Probably the largest and most beautiful of the new buildings now going up in Vancouver is the Flaack Block, just built for Thomas Flaack at the junction of Cambia and Hastings streets. It is a modern business block in every respect, and for finish, stability and convenience equals any building of its size in the large cities of the continent. The structure, costing $115,000, stands four stories in height above a roomy basement, with a frontage of 92 feet on Cambia street and 104 feet on Hastings. There are five stores and fifteen vaults on the lower floor and sixty office rooms in the three upper stories. In the basement is space for a commodious barber shop and bath rooms and a large restaurant with ample kitchen and pantry room. Swift electric elevators installed by Fenson of Toronto make access to the upper floors rapid and easy. The building is heated by steam throughout and lighted by both gas and electricity. An improvement which adds greatly to the convenience and beauty of the block is the use of tile flooring, of which there is no less than 12,000 feet. The inside finish is of white oak and native cedar, and the front is lighted with plate-glass windows. The Flaack Block is the most modern business building in the city; indeed, it will probably be several years before it is approached, even given that Vancouver has the marvelous growth expected by her citizens.

Most everyone who has whisky for sale compares its virtues to Jesse Moore "AA" whisky.

FOR SWELL DRESSERS.

The "Knox" hat is absolutely correct. Eugene Korn, 726 Market St., sole agent.

Wherever there is a piano there should be a pianola. The pianola plays any piano. Any one can play it. Call and see it at Kohler & Chase, 26 and 30 O'Farrell St., sole agents.

E. G. PRIOR & CO.,

LIMITED LIABILITY

Photo by S. J. Thompson.

DEALERS IN HARDWARE

Tools, Iron, Wagons, Carriages, Farm Implements and Machinery. Miners' Tools and Camp Outfits a Specialty. Jessop's, Morton's and Crescent Drill Steel.

VANCOUVER AND VICTORIA, B. C.

Photo by S. J. Thompson.

Fit-Reform Wardrobe

For Gentlemen's High Art Tailor-Made Garments. Suits to Order or Ready-to-Wear at Half Best Tailors' Prices.

334 HASTINGS STREET, VANCOUVER, B. C.

THOS. FOSTER, Sole Controller for Vancouver.

JOHN PUGH

Naturalist and Taxerdermist

Fish Mounting A Specialty

Photo by S. J. Thompson.

315 Westminster St., Vancouver, B. C.

Vancouver Line.

Steamers to Puget Sound . . . Seattle and Tacoma.

NORSH PACIFIC

Leaves Vancouver Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays at 9 p. m.
Arrives in Seattle at 10:00 a. m. the following day.

Leaves Tacoma 1:00 p. m.—Seattle 9:00. m., Monday Wednesday and Friday.
Landings:—Evans, Coleman & Evans wharf, Vancouver; Yesler wharf, Sattle; and Northern Pacific wharf, Tacoma.

Screw Steamship "Mainlander" now building and will be on the run August 1st.

For full information apply to any of our offices or to

COOK & CO.,

General Agents, Tacoma, Washington.

PIONEER STEAM LAUNDRY.

AND TOILET AND TOWEL SUPPLY.

Photos by S. J. Thompson.

910=12=14 Richards Street, Vancouver, B. C.

D. M. STEWART, PROPRIETOR. Telephone 346.

Columbia Brewery

KEPPLER & CO. Proprietors.

Photo by S. J. Thompson.

PALACE LIVERY

J. J. Sparrow, Proprietor.

1003 Pender St., Vancouvor, B. C.

Photo by S. J. Thompson.

Oldest established barn in Vancouver and only fully equipped livery establishment in British Columbia.

THE BRACKMAN & KER MILLING CO.
Limited
36 Hastings St., Vancouver, B. C.
Manufacturers and Dealers in Flour, Feed, Meals, Hay, Etc.
BRANCHES:
Victoria, New West-minister, Nelson, Rossland and Edmonton.

VANCOUVER BOTTLING WORKS
Wholesale Dealers, Bottlers and Agents for Pabst Milwaukee Beer Seattle Rainier Beer
J. Brisson & Co., Bordeaux. A.C. Meukow & Co., Coguac. Ruinart and Foureaux Fils, Eperney.
J. A. GILKA, Berlin, Germany.

Commercial Headuarters
Commodious Sample Rooms
Hotel Metropole
VANCOUVER. B. C.
Wm. Hodson, Proprietor
George Parker, Manager

Established 1858.
HENDERSON BROS.
Wholesale Druggists
VICTORIA and VANCOUVER, B. C.
J. N. Henderson, T. M. Hepderson, W. Henderscn.

AN ALUMNI DINNER.

(This tale of San Francisco is from "Stanford Stories, tales of a Young University," by Chas. K. Field and W. H. Irwin, a book just issued by Doubleday, Page & Co., New York.)

Dr. Willirmson's landlady would not listen any further. She stood on the threshold of her lodger's conbination of bedroom and office and said, with an offensively clear enunciation:

"You haven't any patients, and no more have I any longer, and I want that money tomorrow or I rent the room."

The door closed.

Williamson listened to her footsteps, as hard and uncompromising as her voice, and when they had ceased he got up from his chair, a despairing soul. After all, this was the rope's end. He would have to own up to a failure.

If Williamson had been a man of more force he would not have acknowledged so much, perhaps; but he had been conscientious and faithful to the limit of his understanding, patient to the verge of philosophy, and the result discouraged him.

He drew out his last clean collar and put it on, with the vague idea of going somewhere and doing something—what, he could not have told. His eyes fell on a framed document hanging near his mirror, a small but ornate instrument, setting forth that the Faculty and Trustees of the Leland Stanford Juuior University, by virtue of the authority in them vested, etc., conferred the degree of Bachelor of Arts in Chemistry on Philip Howard Williamson.

His thoughts turned back toward a morning over four years gone, when he walked down the platform bearing that "last of his childhood's toys," and in imagination P. H. Williamsom, M. D., held conversation with Philip Howard Williamson, A. B.

Williamson, A. B., standing just the other side of the mirror, spoke and said:

"It looks as though you were up against it."

Williamson, M. D., arranging his tie so as to hide his soiled shirt, answered:

"I am up against it. And it's your fault."

Williamson, A. B., did not seem to see it. But he was a conceited creature, anyway.

"It's more than half your fault," went on the man on the real side of the mirror. "You dug and worked, and you thought that if you only kept ahead of your class in Physiology you had a clean sweep to success. How many fellows did you know in college?"

"Some. I never went in for being popular. There are Trueman, and Miller, and Rodney—"

"And how many of them were of the sort to help you? Trueman, without family or brains, and Miller, who lived in the East, and little Rod—"

"They were the best I could meet. They were the only ones who understood that I really wanted people. No one understood how I loved the college and wanted to be in things. I wasn't good at telling; and besides, I had my work to do. They knew the way I used to look across the campus on Spring nights—"

Williamson, M. D., checked him at this point. The impractical creature thought that they were talking of friendship, when it was only a question of Pull. He conveyed that point to the Bachelor.

"Wey didn't you find some friends who would be of use to Me?" he asked, savagely. "While you were following out sutres and involuntary reactions, what was Marshall doing? Running for class president and making the Mandolin Club and getting acquainted with people of some use to him. He isn't one-two-six with me for ability and never was; but he has patients to give away, and I—

Williamson, A. B., came to bat.

"You do mighty well to approach me with all this. How have you done in making friends? Did you work up any connections at Columbia these three years? Have you tried to find anyone here in town? What friends have you? What have you done for yourself, anyway?

The other weakly quoted what the Head Demonstrator had said in his surgery.

Williamson, A. B., held him to the point: "I also was called the keenest student of my time," said he: "but it isn't bringing you patients."

The M. D. broke sullenly away, leaving the A. B. frowning back in the mirror. These dead selves are so crude! He ended the interview by slamming out of the house.

For the twentieth time that week, he cast up accounts with himself, as the electric car sped toward civilization. Assets, one dollar and five cents, just reduced by the grinding monoply from a dollar-ten; liabilities, a laundry bill and six weeks' rent. Truly, a squalid failure. If he could only hold out a little longer! There was in sight a situation as consulting physician to a lodge in his father's Order, which would mean a living at least. He had the promise of it in a month's time. A loan of twenty-five dollars now would save him, but no good angel occurred to him, think as he might, and he had nothing he could afford to pawn.

Troubled in spirit, he sauntered listlessly up Post street from Kearny. The mid-day rain had not yet dried from the pavements, and the air was clear and fresh. Against the last of a Januury sunset, the tops of the city were growing indistinct. The personnel of the crowd on the streets had changed; the promenaders and the cocktail-route procession had dwindled to a few stragglers. There was less of a press now, and most of the people were of the class that work until six, belated bookkeepers and girls from shops and sewing rooms. He watched these toilers with a vague feeling of envy; he dragged the feeling to the light and found that he was coveting the day's work just passed. What would not he had given to be tired at the end of a day of profitable toil? It was the hour when comfortable people sit down to dinner.

In front of an art store he saw Lincoln, the Chronicle man, idly studying the pictures. Williamson had known him as well as he had known any man at Palo Alto, but he walked by without a word, feeling in no mood for companionship. A few steps further he turned and went back and stood behind his friend.

"Hello, Phil!" said Lincoln, in cherry surprise. "Well, you are a stranger! Been keeping pretty close to your office, haven't you?

"Yes," answered Williamson, without going into particulars.

"I haven't happened to get a detail out in your direction and my health is unfortunately good, so I haven't seen you for moons, not since the night at the Zink, last Thanksgiving."

"You newspaper men see more of the fellows than a man in my profession can hope to do," said the physician. "It isn't ethics for me to hunt them up, you know."

"How is practice, so far?"

"Well," answered Williamson, hiding the bitterness of it with a laugh; "the practice is about all I have got out it."

"Not so bad as that, I'll bet," protested Lincoln. "Are you coming down for Commencement, or the Ball, or anything?"

"No, I shan't be able to get down," answered the other, turning in his fingers the lonely dollar in his pocket. "That's the worst of the medical profession," he added, equivocally.

His thoughts came fast as they stood there in the fading daylight before the picture shop. It was entirely probable that Lincoln would lend him the money he needed, and would lend it gladly. Their college friendship had been sincere, and a few years do not change a thing like that. He knew that the man had a good position on the Chronicle and that he saved a large portion of his money—he had been economical at the University. Fortune could never smile on Lincoln sufficiently to work any material change in his dress; he had always looked like a pauper; today, poverty showed in the journalist rather than in the carefully-dressed physician.

Williamson's heart grew lighter. This man, rising before him in his hour of desperation, should tide him over his temporary trouble. He knew his man. Williamson felt himself filled with a faith in Divine Providence.

But it was not easy to ask the loan. To suggest such a thing is less difficult to some people than to others. To Williamson it was anything but a simple thing. He could never broach the subject there on the sidewalk. The matter must be led up in some way; to brace in cold blood was impossible. He moved his fingers in nervous irresolution, and the dollar touched them significantly.

"Say, Lew, let's not stand here all night; come to dinner with me, can't you? We'll have a good Alnmni chat; we don't bump into each other very often."

He felt horribly hypocritical, yet this was the only way.

"You haven't had dinner, have you?" he went on, when Lincoln hesitated a bit.

"No. I'll be glad to, thank you, Phil. Where do you go?"

"Let's try Sanguinetti's for the fun of the thing. We can talk down there, and it won't break us, either."

They found a corner table in the resturant. The room wore the quiet look of Monday evening, the calm that follows the storm of Sunday, when the place rocks with post-picnic revelry. A squat negro, perched on the edge of a serving table by the wall, sang vociferously to a resonant banjo. Now and then a party of swarthy Latins joined in mildly when the selections incurred their favor.

The two college men found it easy chatting. Williamson's dollar had brought a very good dinner, particularly the chicken and spaghetti; the claret was abundant and not half bad when jollied with seltzer. He was trusting to Lincoln for tobacco.

Still the physician could not bring himself to the point for which the dinner was intended to smooth the road. The "Dago Red" had mellowed them both and they talked merrily of the days at Palo Alto, bringing up one good memory after another, drifting gradually to an exchange of Alumni personals of which the newspaper man furnished the larger part. The thought of bringing the serious side of his own case into this chat gave Williamson a chill. It was a foolish bit of pride, but it was getting harder every minute to down it. He deftly turned the subject his way.

"It isn't all prosperty, though. I've noticed that some of them seem to be up against it lately—just hard luck stories, I suppose. There's Rawdon, for example."

Lincoln leaned back comfortably in his chair.

"Let me tell you a case that has come under my notice lately and see what you think of it," he said. "I won't mention names, but it's about a man we both knew at College. He had a place on the paper, and during the political season did very well; after that there came a slump and the city editor let him out; the other papers had no room for him, of course—they were dropping men—and he couldn't get a thing of any sort to do, though he rustled hard. You know Coles and Harrison, the boys call them at the Employment Bureau, they have found quite a number of places for the fellows; but this particular man was evidently up against it, and there wasn't the smallest symptom of a job. He managed to get something in the Sunday supps, but barely enough enough to keep him alive, and nothing certain Meanwhile he pawned his things gradually and grew pretty well discouraged. He got down to bedrock and finally reached the point where he had gone without three successive meals. Pretty rough, isn't it?"

"I should say so," answered Williamson. His own distress was trival besides a trouble like this.

Lincoln fed the alcohol flame burning around the omelet just brought them.

"It seems to me," he went on, "that there is a case in which a man is justified in asking help; he ought to ask it long before he gets to such a pass as that; if he lets his pride prevent him, it's his own fault. We certainly have carried away from the University something of the spirit we learned there. I know for my part that such a man has a claim on whatever help I can give him, and as a Stanford man he has a right to seek it. Don't you agree with me?'

Williamson had been waiting through the course of the dinner for a chance to advance an identical theory. He could not have hoped for a better opening.

"Indeed I do," he said. "You have the old Stanford spirit as strong as ever, haven't you, Lew? Now I want to tell you a story."

At a table near them a woman who looked as though she had a history, one that dated far back at that, began to sing—one of those ballads about home and the wandering boy. The two men tipped back in their chairs and listened to the song. Williamson was planning what he should say as soon as it was ended. It would be better to tell the whole thing.

During the applause that followed, Lincoln dropped his cigarette into his coffee cup and started to speak. Williamson, unwilling that another subject should follow the last words they had exchanged, interrupted him.

"I have a story, too, Lew, and it's about myself. I don't doubt this is rather a surprise to you," he went on, noticing the look on the other's face, "although you know the way of a young physician is hard. The fact is, I have got to the point where I must get a little temporary lift or give up the struggle for a while, and I can't bear the thought of that."

Then he went on swiftly, ignoring his friend's attempts at interruption, until he had told the whole story of his uphill work and his defeat.

"You asked me just now, Lew, if I didn't think one Stanford man should help another who really needed help, if he could. I put up my last coin for an opportunity to ask you the same question, but with a different purpose."

Lincoln's eyes were moist as he reached across the table and grasped Williamson's hand.

"I think you know me well enough, old man, to know my answer to that question. But you did not let me finish my story. You see, I—er—I'm the man I was telling you about."

Copyright, 1900, by Doubleday, Page & Co.

MOORE' POISON OAK REMEDY

Cures Poison Oak and All Skin Diseases. Sold by All Druggists.

Catarrh Cannot be Cured

with LOCAL APPLICATIONS as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials free.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Props., Toledo, O.

Sold by druggists, price 75c.

Hall's Family Pills are the best.

The Orignal Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to-lunch.

GERMEA

The Ideal Breakfast Dish

Seattle Business Directory.

ARTIFICIAL LIMBS.

A. LUNDBERG. Artificial Limb Co. Deformity Apparatus of Every Description. Trusses, Crutches, Elastic Stockings, Suspensories, Stockings for Artificial Limbs, Shoulder Braces, Rolling Chairs, etc. Rooms 13 and 14 Sullivan blk.

ARTISTS.

JOHN NOGLEBERG, Artist. Established 1870. Pictures copied and enlarged, Frames made to order New stock Moulding. Studio and Fine Art Store. 1327 2d avenue

ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW.

LAMBUTH, 204-5 Pacific Block. 157 Yesler Way.

DANCING ACADEMIES.

DANCING CLASSES—Stage and Ball-room dancing. Lessons daily. Prof. Wilson, Ranke Hall, 5th ave and Pike street.

DENTISTS.

S. R. WAGONER, 15 Haller Building.

DETECTIVE AGENCIES.

INFORMATION furnished regarding employes and others, capable operatives. Seattle Detective Agency. 311 Pioneer Block.

DRESSMAKERS

MME. SMITH, ladies' tailoring, room 7, Hinkley.

DYEING AND CLEANING.

ATLAS CLEANING and Dye Works. Ladies' and Gents' Cleaners and Repairers. 222 Union street bet 2d and 3d ave. Tel. Buff 1001

SEATTLE Clothes Pressing Co. Cloth-s cleaned, pressed and repaired. 1105 3d st. Tel. Buff 1004

MINES AND MINING.

O. R. DAHL Buys and Sells good Mining Properties, Companies organized. 528 N. Y. Block

MUSICAL.

MME. JULIA ARAMENTI, Vocal Culture. Voices examined daily. Studio, 33 Hinckley block; residence, Rainier-Grand Hotel

PLUMBING, HOT WATER HEATING.

SPELLMAN, Plumbing, 215 Columbia street. Tel. Black 1621.

PHOTOGRAPHS.

N. P. HALVERSEN. Specialty, Group Pictures. 1331½ Second avenue, up stairs.

PHYSICIANS & SURGEONS.

DR. G. V. CALHOUN, Starr-Boyd Building.

TAILORS.

F. DANEL, Merchant Tailor, 217 Columbia street. Telephone, Main 652.

TENTS & AWNINGS,

THE FELITZ TENT AND AWNING CO. Manufacturers of and dealers in Tents, Awnings Flags, Sails and Ore Bags. 117 Yesler Way.

BUYERS' GUIDE

SAN FRANCISCO.

RELIABLE BUSINESS HOUSES.

City or Country Orders promptly filled. Catalogues and Price Lists sent on application. Correspondence solicited.

Mention The Wave.

ATTORNEYS AT LAW.

MILTON J. GREEN, Attorney at Law. Referee in Bankruptcy in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Office room 94, Chronicle bldg.

A. K. DAGGETT, Drawing of deeds and all legal papers a specialty. Notary Public, 14 Montgomery St., S. F. Telephone, 3.5.

DENTIST.

DR C W. DECKER, Dentist, 806 Market Street, Phelan Building.

HOMŒOPATHIC REMEDIES

WESTERN HOMŒOPATHIC PHARMACY—130 Powell St. S. F. W.W. Stocker. Tel. Bush 23.

PHOTOGRAPHER

BROMIDE ENLARGEMENTS. Dekko and Vêlox Printing. E. L. Gifford, 330 Sutter Street

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.

ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU, Main Office 510 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Dealers in all kinds of Newspaper Information. Advance Reports on all Contract Work. Phone Main 1042.

RESTAURANT.

POODLE DOG RESTAURANT, northeast corner of Eddy and Mason streets. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone main 429. Blanco & Brun, Proprietors.

A Delicious Beverage for all Occasions

Ross's Royal Belfast Ginger Ale

Connoisseurs pronounce it "the best imported."

Sherwood & Sherwood,
AGENTS
212-214 Market St.,

AMUSEMENTS

Orpheum

Joe Hart's Vaudeville Company and Orpheum Stars. Joe Hart and Carrie De Mar; Fleurette; Frank Gardner; Mr. and Mrs. Jimmie Barry; Wellington and Napoleon; Lillian Burkhart and Co.; Vandy; Midgley and Carlisle; Mignani Family; Biograph.

Reserved Seats 25c.; Balcony 10c.; Opera Chairs and Box Seats 50c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.

Columbia Theatre

BEGINNING MONDAY NIGHT, JUNE 4th.
Second and last week. last performance Saturday evening, June 9th.
N. C. GOODWIN—MAXINE ELLIOTT in their greatest success

When We Were Twenty-One.

by H. V. Esmond.

Cast and production identical to that seen at the Knickerbocker Theatre, New York.

une 11—Kellar.

California THE POPULAR HOUSE

S. H. FRIEDLANDER & Co., Lessees and Managers.
[Tele. Main 1731

Week Commencing Sunday Night, Ju e 3rd.
Matinees Thursday and Saturday.
DUNNE & RYLEY'S COMEDY FESTIVAL
With their All Star Cast Presenting Chas. H. Hoyt's Play

A RAG BABY

A Superb Organization. The Original Pony Dance. Wiseman's Male Serenaders. Large and Efficient Chorus

Our Never Changing Popular Prices.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF MINERVA WASHER, DECEASED—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, P. Boland, Administrator of the estate of Minerva Washer, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at his place of business, No. 238 Montgomery street, City and County of San Francisco, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

P. BOLAND,
Administrator of the Estate of Minerva Washer, Deceased.
Dated at San Francisco, May 19th, 1900.
M. C. HASSETT, 308-10-12, Phelan building.
Atty for Administrator.

Your sideboard at home is complete if it is not stocked with Jesse Moore "AA" whiskey.

At the Theatres.

The theatrical clouds have broken in San Francisco; last week a great play and this week a great actor. Both of the plays were new, and both are within a year of their New York success. If "The Tyranny of Tears" is a better piece than "When We Are Twenty-One," the latter is at least the more human, and, therefore, more popular. And of Goodwin's superiority to Drew as a real, true actor, there can be no question. Drew is an actor, by the gift of God and a stage heredity, but it is, after all, his peculiar personality and method and his appearance of gentility which gives him his position and his popularity. In the art of the thing, Goodwin excels every other actor on the Ame ican stage, save only old Jefferson. His rise from vaudeville knockabout to the best of legitimate comedy is one of the wonder-stories of the theatre.

Time was when Maxine Elliot resented compliments for her undoubted beauty, because of her ambition to be famous as an actress alone. Miss Elliott—pardon me, Mrs. Goodwin—will never be a really great actress, that is a thing inborn, but study and practice have made her an intelligent and pleasing one, who can reach any height not requiring absolute genius; of only two American actresses—Nance O'Neill and Mrs. Fiske—can anyone say more. She is as beautiful as ever, and she has twice the art which she possessed when we saw her last.

With these two players, the one somewhere on the border of genius, the other one of the best in the country, is a play far above the average of this season's new pieces. The author has found a rather novel theme, and there are singularly few old, hackneyed situations. One only appeals strongly to the memory—the sacrifice of one friend for another in a love affair. That is about as old as the drama, and might have been spared us.

But take it all in all, it is the best, by far the best, that we have had this season, and one of the best in any season. It is a play and it is acted.

* *

"The Three Guardsmen" at the Tivoli, has, at least, given Ferris Hartman a short respite from his too arduous labors, and the people an opportunity to appreciate some of the others is the company. Hartman is every bit as good in the new opera as in former ones, and is enjoyed quite as thoroughly, only he is not all of the show.

The Three Guardsmen was not intended to be quite as light an opera as the Tivoli company makes it, and it is still a question whether or not the people would rather see a famous opera played as it was written than interposed with recent catchy songs and the latest s'ang. Helen Merrill's sernenade with the chorus in refrain, is a charming song,—indeed the most charming of the whole opera, but Helen Merill is written for the part of Anne of Austria, and just why Anne of Asutria should be out in the moonlight, with a body-guard, serenading a tavern by the sea-shore, it is hard to understand. The song is beautiful; it is the relevancy that is not good. The opera, however, is well worth hearing, and seeing, too. The music is of the stirring kind, strong and full, with a pulse beat, that carries you with it, and permits of no lagging behind, and the scenic work is effective throughtout.

* *

Dunne and Ryley's all-star cast, probably the strongest comedy company ever organized to produce Hoyt's most popular plays, will begin a ten week's season at the California theatre Sunday night, June 3d. "A Rag Baby" has been selected for the opening and the cast will include Mathews and Bulger, who have starred with their own companies during the past few seasons; Walter Jones of New York Casino fame; Mary Marble, the "Daughter of the Regiment" in "A Milk White Flag," Maude Courtney, "the girl who sings the old songs"; Phil. H. Ryley, Tony Hart, John W. Dunne, Bessie Traunchill, Marion Gunning, Ethel Kirwan, Gertrude Wood, the "Eight Mascots" English dancing girls in the famous "Pony Ballet" from the Casino production, "The Man in the Moon" and Wiseman's Serenaders, one of the best male quartets before the public. The regular matinees will be given on Thursdays and Saturdays.

* *

Nat Goodwin and Maxine Elliott in "When We Were Twenty-One," have another week at the Columbia. After that, comes Kellar the magician with new illusions and tricks, and following, the Miller Company. This aggregation opens with "Miss Hobbs," "Jerome K. Jerome's fanciful comedy.

For more than fifty years the famous Jesse Moore whisky has been the standard brand the world.

LADIES' KNOX DUDE

Straws now open. Korn, the hatter, 726 Market St., sole agent.

On next week's Orpheum bill, Joe Hart and Carrie de Mar are the bright particular stars. Hart will be remembered as the shining light of the old combination of Hallen and Hart. Carrie de Mar, his wife, is clever in her work and has a good voice. "A Close Call" is the name of their sketch. Fleurette and Frank Gardner present a turn called, "An Eventful Day." It is lightened by some clever dancing by Fleurette. Mr. and Mrs. Jimmie Barry have an original sketch. The biograph will present new views of the British and American wars and among the holdovers will be: Miss Lillian Burkhart, who will present a new sketch, "Her Soldier Boy"; Vandy, the juggler; Midgley and Carlisle, in a new sketch; Mignani Family.

Jesse Moore "AA" whisky is called for everywhere. It is the drink of the people.

FOR AN OUTING....

Visit one of the many Mineral Springs Resorts along the California Northwestern Railway Co.

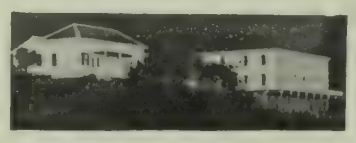
Leesee of San Francisco and North Pacific Railway Company. (The Picturesque Route of California.)

Where the Famous Mineral Waters of the World are Duplicated.

If you prefer the simple home life of the Ranch, free from fashion's restraints, there are many in our section from which to choose. But if you would rather the tent in some shady nook, near a lovely lake, or on the bank of some beautiful stream, remember such locations are numerous and free of charge.

Call for "VACATION," a little book just issued by the Company, giving Camping Locations, Hotels, Mineral Spring Resorts, and a list of one hundred and sixty-seven Farms and homes, where Board for the Summer can be secured at from $5 00 to $8.00 per week.

Ticket Office, 650 Market street (Chronicle building).
General Office, Mutual Life building, Sansome and California streets, San Francisco.
H. C. WHITING, General Manager,
R. X. RYAN, General Passenger Agent.



DUNCAN SPRINGS HOPLAND Mendocino Co.

Two miles from railroad station; 101 miles from San Francisco; enequalled soda and magnesia springs; hospitable management; first-class table; hard-finished hotel; picturesque site and surroundings; two trains daily; long-distance telephone; terms $10 to $12 per week; housekepping cottages $15 to $20 per month. Waters bottled by W. H. Bone, 605-607 Merchant street, S. F. Through fare $3 80 Send for circulars. Address O. HOWELL.

Tavern of Castle Crag

AND SODA SPRINGS

SEASON OPENS JUNE 15.

Located in the midst of grand and impressive mountain scenery. With Mt. Shasta and The Crags for a background.

Fine hunting and fishing.

Unsurpassed cuisine and service and reasonable rates.

RAILROAD FARE round trip, including sleeper both ways $14

For rates, terms and other information address E. B. PIXLEY, Manager.

Care Pacific Improvement Co., Crocker Building, San Francisco, Cal.

"The Superfluous Husband," as presented at the Alcazar this week is quite a good play, and draws very well. It is a translation from the German by Clyde Fitch, full of strong situations and clever dialogue. Ernest Hastings has dropped character work this week, taking the part of a bookworm of a husband mated to a society wife. Their troubles are finally cleared up through the keenness of the wife's father, played by Jeffrey Williams. Howard Scott is still holding down this job as stock villain, and is quite unusually good. The role of the wife is well enacted by Irene Everett. It is an even and interesting performance, and well worth the money.

* *

Monday evening, June 4, Florence Roberts opens her season at the Alcazar. Her first week has a double importance, in that "Sapho," of which so much has been heard this year, is to be the bill. The piece is to have a lavish mounting. Miss Roberts has secured for her season some of the most notable London and Paris productions of recent years.

Morning, noon or night you will find a glass of Ross's Royal Belfast Ginger Ale both cheering and refreshing.

THE BANK OF CALIFORNIA

SAN FRANCISCO

Capital, $2,000,000 Surplus, $1,000,000
Profit and Loss Account January 1st, 1900, $2,321,212
WILLIAM ALVORD.....President
CHARLES R. BISHOP.....Vice-President
THOMAS BROWN.....Cashier
S. PRENTISS SMITH.....Assistant Cashier
IRVING F. MOULTON.....Second Assistant Cashier
ALLEN M. CLAY.....Secretary

CORRESPONDENTS

New York.....Messrs. Laidlaw & Co. / The Bank of New York, N. B. A.
Baltimore.....The National Exchange Bank
Boston.....The Tremont National Bank
Chicago.....Illinois Trust and Savings Bank / Union National Bank
Philadelphia.....Philadelphia National Bank
St. Louis.....Boatmen's Bank
Virginia City, Nev...Agency of the Bank of California
London.....Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons
Paris.....Messrs. De Rothschild Freres
Berlin.....Direction der Disconto Gesellschaft
China, Japan and East Indies.....Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China
Australia and New Zealand.....The Union Bank of Australia, Ltd., and Bank of New Zealand

Letters of Credit issued available in all parts of the world.

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California Street

Guarantee Capital and Surplus.....$2,213,146 59
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash..... 1,000,000 00
Deposits Dec. 30, 1899..... 28,563,655 41

OFFICERS

President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Second Vice-President, H. HORSTMANN
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann
Ign. Steinhart, Emil Rohte, D. N. Walter,
H. B. Russ, N. Ohlandt, John Lloyd.
General Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow.

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST

Deposits Jan. 1, 1900.....$26,110,681
Paid Up Capital..... 1,000,000
Reserve Fund..... 210,067
Contingent Fund..... 407,391

E. B. POND, Pres. W. C. B. DE FREMERY, Vice-Pres
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier.
R. M. WELCH, Assistant Cashier.

DIRECTORS

George W. Beaver, Robert Watt, Thomas Magee, George C. Boardman, W. C. B. de Fremery, Daniel E. Martin, Albert Miller, George Tasheira, E. B. Pond.

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.

Receives deposits. Country remittances may be made in checks payable in San Francisco, Postoffice or Wells, Fargo & Co's Money Orders, or coin by Express, but the responsibility of this bank commences only with the receipt of the money.

No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

Office Hours: 9 a. m. to 3 p. m. and Saturday evenings. for receipt of deposits only, 6:30 to 8 o'clock.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 POST STREET

Below Kearny Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000
Paid Up Capital, $300,000

JAMES D. PHELAN, President
S. G. MURPHY, Vice-President
JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Presiden
GEORGE A. STORY, Cashier
C. B. HOBSON, Assistant Cashier

DIRECTORS:—James D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, Frank J. Sullivan, Robert McElroy, Joseph D. Grant, Chas. S. Neal and James M. McDonald.

Interest paid on deposits.

Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.

When opening accounts, send signature.

"Dr. Jordan at Bat," an Incident of the Faculty-Senior Baseball Game at Stanford. Photo by Warfield.

A GLOWING HIGHWAY TO HAPPINESS
.....IS THE ROAD THAT LEADS TO DEL MONTE

Added to the many pleasures afforded by its enchanting surroundings are FINE GOLF LINKS

✠ THIS SEASON'S ✠

HOMES OF PLEASURE

THE PEERLESS CALIFORNIA RESORT

BANKRUPT NOTICES.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES in and for the Northern District of California.
IN THE MATTER OF
JOSEPH STOREY, Bankrupt.

Take notice, that Joseph Storey, Bankrupt, above named, has been duly adjudicated a bankrupt under the Act of Congress of July 1, 1898, and that the first meeting of the creditors has been called to meet at the office of the undersigned at room 94, Chronicle Building, San Francisco, California on Saturday, the 9th day of June, 1900, at the hour of 11 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of proving their claims against the estate of said bankrupt; and that at the same time and place all creditors whose claims have been duly proven and allowed shall appoint one or three trustees of said estate.

Dated San Francisco, May 25th, 1900.
MILTON J. GREEN,
Referee in Bankruptcy,
In and for the City and County of San Francisco.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES in and for the Northern District of California
IN THE MATTER OF
J. L. ROBERTS, Bankrupt.

Take notice that, J. L. Roberts, Bankrupt, above named has been duly adjudicated bankrupt under the Act of Congress of July 1, 1898, and that the first mee ing of the creditors has been called to meet at the office of the undersigned at room 94, Chronicle building, San Francisco, California, on Saturday, the 9th day of June, 1900, at the hour of 11 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of proving their claims against the estate of said bankrupt; and that at the same time and place all creditors whose claims have been duly proven and allowed shall appoint one or three trustees of said estate.

Dated San Francisco, May 29th, 1900.
MILTON J. Green,
Referee in Bankruptcy,
In and for the City and County of San Francisco.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES in and for the Northern District of California.
IN THE MATTER OF
LEONARD C. CROSSLEY, Bankrupt.

Take notice, that Leonard G. Crossley, Bankrupt, above named, has been duly adjudicated bankrupt under the Act of Congress of June 1, 1898, and that the first meeting of creditors has been called to meet at the office of the undersigned at room 94, Chronicle Building, San Francisco, California, on Saturday the 9th day of June, 1900, at the hour of 11 a. m., for the purpose of proving their claims against the state of said bankrupt; and that at the same time and place all creditors whose claims have been duly proven and allowed shall appoint one or three trustees of said estate.

Dated San Francisco, May 28th, 1900.
MILTON J. GREEN,
Referee in Bankruptcy,
In and for the City and County of San Francisco.

Thuringia Insurance Co.

OF ERFURT, GERMANY

Capital, $2,250,000 Assets, $10,984,248

PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT

204-208 Sansome Street, San Francisco

VOSS, CONRAD & CO., General Managers

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. Maripcsa, for Aurtralia, Wednesday June 13, at 8 p.m.

S. S. Australia, for Honolulu only, Wednesday, June 27 at 2 p.m.

Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.
J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf San Francisco.

For Alaskan ports, 11 a. m. June 5, 10, 15, 20, 25 30, July 5, change to company's steamers at Seattle.

For B. C. and Puget Sound ports 11 a.m. June 5, 10, 15 20, 25 30, July 5, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, 2 p. m. June 2 7 12, 17, 22, 27, July 2, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Newport (Los Angeles) and Way Ports, 9 a. m. June 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28. July 2, and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Harford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, and Redondo (Los Angeles), 11 a.m. June 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 July 4, and every fourth day thereafter.

For Mexican ports, 10 a. m. seventh of each month.

For further information, obtain Company's folder.

The company reserves the right to change steamers sailing dates, and hours of sailing without previous notice.

Ticket Office: 4 New Montgomery St (Palace Hotel)
GOODALL, PERKINS & CO., Gen. Agts.
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

NOTICE OF ASSESSMENT — BULLION MINING COMPANY—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California; location of works, Virginia District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the sixteenth (16th) day of May, 1900, an assessment (No. 56) of fifteen (15) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 11, 331 Pine street San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 20th (20th) day of June, 1900, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before will be sold on Tuesday the tenth (10th) day of July, 1900, pay to the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses o sale. By order of the Board of Directors

R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.

Office: Room 11, No. 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

BETWEEN SAN FRANCISCO AND CHICAGO WITHOUT CHANGE

Through Trains and Cars via OGDEN ROUTE Daily

SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY
IN CONNECTION WITH

Chicago, Union Pacific and Northwestern Line

OVERLAND LIMITED—Solid Vestibuled Train of Double Drawing-room Sleeping Cars, Dining Cars and Composite Car

Leave San Francisco	8:30 A.M.
Leave Sacramento	11:25 A.M.
Arrive Chicago	9:30 A.M.

Westbound train leaves Chicago daily 6:30 P.M.

Rock Island Route

Vestibuled Drawing-room Sleeping Car and Dining Car, via Salt Lake City, Denver and Omaha.

Leave San Francisco	8:30 A.M.
Leave Sacramento	11:25 A.M.
Arrive Salt Lake City	2:10 P.M.
Leave Salt Lake City	8:05 P.M.
Arrive Denver	9:15 P.M.
Arrive Chicago	7:59 A.M.

Westbound car leaves Chicago daily 10:00 P.M.

Burlington Route

Vestibuled Drawing-room Sleeping Car, via Salt Lake City, Denver and Omaha.

Leave San Francisco	6:30 P.M.
Leave Sacramento	10:30 P.M.
Arrive Denver	9:00 A.M.
Arrive Chicago	2:15 P.M.

Westbound car leaves Chicago daily 11:00 P.M.

Connections are made at Sacramento from and to both Southern and Northern California for all three trains.

The Rock Island and Burlington Route cars pass between Ogden and Denver over the Rio Grande Western and Denver & Rio Grande railroads.

For folders and more complete information, go and see

T. H. GOODMAN Gen. Pass. Agt.

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention
A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED

Occidental Hotel

SAN FRANCISCO
WM. B. HOOPER, Manager.

BAJA CALIFORNIA

Damiana Bitters

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. Send for Circular.

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

IF YOU WANT THE
BEST COAL OIL.
BUY

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers Medium, Soft and Hard

ALSO

Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide

Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks

Manufactured by Mount Vernon Co. Baltimore.
MURPHY, GRANT & CO. Pacific Coast Sole Agents

Telephone Main 199.
Blake, Moffit & Towne
Dealers in PAPER
53, 57, 59, 61, First St., San Francisco.
Blake, Moffit & Towne, Los Angeles.
Blake, McFall Co., Portland, Or.

Sturtevant House

Broadway and 29th Sts., New York.

WILLIAM T. BANG, PROP.

American and European Plan.

FINEST LARGEST
FLEETEST SAFEST

The Magnificent China Liner Steamship

VICTORIA

3,502

Direct for Cape Nome.

On or About

MAY 31,

Remember the ice was never known to break from the Nome coast before June 10th.

Secure Your Tickets Now.

Unsurpassed Passenger Accommodations.

For Further Information apply to

DODWELL & CO., Limited
General Agents
113 James St. SEATTLE, WASH.
Telephone Main 470

Don't Borrow a Home!

BUY IT Your rent payments for the borrowed home will do it through the aid of the

CONTINENTAL Building and Loan Ass'n of California

WM. CORBIN, Secretary and Gen. Manager.

Home Office, 222 Sansome St., San Francisco

New Stories Re-Told.

x x x

ABSENT-MINDED.—A young woman got on a Jackson street car the other afternoon, dreamily opened her pocketbook when the conductor came around for her fare, stuck a gloved finger and thumb into one of the compartments of the same, extracted a couple of foulard samples, and, with that far-away expression still in her eyes, handed them to the conductor. The conductor was a middle-aged man. He smiled and waited for the young woman to come out of her trance. But she held the foulard samples until the conductor, still grinning, had to fetch her back to earth. "Yes, they're pretty, miss," he said, "and I'd like to get my wife a dress off that piece on top, but she's——" The young woman blushed like a red-hot stovelid, dug into another compartment of her pocketbook for a car ticket, and she looked intensely embarrassed when the brutal male persons across the car aisle grinned.

x

A WESTERN SOLOMON.—Texas has a Solomon in the person of Justice I. P. Franklin of Brownville, known to the inhabitants as "Josey." Recently, two women, next-door neighbors, came before the court, each claiming ownership to a hen worth about twenty-five cents. "Josey" heard the evidence, and reserved decision. That evening at sunset, he appeared with the duly accredited officers of the court and with the subject of debate shut in a box, in the road before the houses of the claimants. Just at roosting-time, he turned Biddy loose; she shook her feathers, and made straight for her own perch. "You get the hen," said "Josey" to the successful claimant, "and I assess you five dollars costs, judgment suspended until you come into court again."

x

A WORD IN TIME.—During Cleveland's second term, he was going through the ceremony of handshaking with a party of schoolteachers. Some functionary or other was calling the name of each guest as he approached. "Dr. Lucky of Pittsburg," said the announcer. As Dr. Lucky shook hands and passed on, a seedy, delapidated tramp slipped into the line just behind him and extended his hand to the President. The introducer, not knowing the tramp's name and being generally taken aback, was silent; there was an awkward pause, and everyone looked uncomfortable. The ice was broken by Mr. Cleveland. "And this," he said, "Is Mr. Unlucky, I suppose!"

x

KEEN PREJUDICE.—Mark Twain's prejudice against the practice of vivisection, even as an aid to science, has become so well known as to attract the attention of many physiologists who consider the cutting of live animals as a necessity to the healing art. The humorist was not long ago introduced to a physician who seemed inclined to argue on the topic of vivisection. "As a vivisectionist," began the scientist, "I have been told that your prejudice against the practice is severe." "So severe," remarked Mr. Clemens "as to amount almost to fanaticism. Why, even the thought of practicing vivisection upon a vivisectionist is disagreeable to me."

x

TO PUT IT MILDLY.—At the conclusion of a sermon by a well-known San Francisco divine, a reporter, there in pursuit of duty, came forward and asked for the text. The minister quoted the book, chapter and verse from which it was taken. "But can't you give me the wording?" asked the scribe. "You can look it up in the Bible." "But I'm afraid we haven't any Bible at the Examiner office." "Are you heathens at the Examiner?" thundered the good man. "Well," said the reporter, "we ain't the Topeka Capital by a darned sight!"

x

REASON ENOUGH.—Charles Mathews, the actor, was once very much disturbed by the actions of a number of young bloods who occupied a stage-box and made fun of the performance all through. At last, in the middle of a scene, they arose noisily to go. Mathews came forward and said, sarcastically: "Don't go, gentlemen, there is another act." "That is why we are going," said one of them.

PALACE HOTEL

The GRAND HOTEL is operated in conjunction with the Palace to which it is joined by a covered passageway, placing under one management 1400 rooms, more than half of which have baths attached.

AMERICAN PLAN. EUROPEAN PLAN.

The high standard of excellence maintained by this hotel is recognized and appreciated by a fastidious and discriminating clientele who regularly make it their headquarters when visiting San Francisco.

WHEN LEAVING THE CITY PLACE YOUR VALUABLES IN THE

Safe Deposit Vaults

OF THE
First National Brnk
N. W. Corner Bush and Sansome Sts.
Office Hours: 8 a. m. to 6 p m.

EVERY POSSIBLE SAFEGUARD TO PROPERTY

REASONABLE RATES
PROMPT ATTENTION

THE

White Pass and Yukon Route

The Pacific & Arctic Railway and Navigation Co.
British Columbia Yukon Railway Co., British Yukon M, T. & T. Co.
and Canadian Development Company, Ltd.

THROUGH LINE TO DAWSON.

Two first-class trains daily between Skaguay and Bennett, B. C. Ten first-class steamers operating between White Horse and Dawson. Through Telegraph Service Skaguay to Dawson and Intermediate Points.

SKAGUAY IS THE GATEWAY
—TO—
KLONDILE AND CAPE NOME GOLD FIELDS.

FOR RATES AND PARTICULARS APPLY TO

S. M. IRWIN, Traffic Manager, Skaguay, Alaska, and Seattle, Wash.
Phone Main 574
S. P. BROWN, General Agent, 116 Yesler Way, Seattle Wash

Famous FOR ITS Purity!

Seattle U. S. A.

HAVE YOU EVER THOUGHT

WHAT A GAS RANGE WILL DO?

It will do everything any other cooking apparatus will do, but it will do it BETTER, QUICKER, EASIER and CHEAPER!

IT WILL DO AWAY WITH
Dirt, Worry and Ashes
Your Kitchen will be Clean,
Your working hours shorter.
Your Food will be better Cooked,
Your Life Prolonged, and
Your Happiness assured.

STOVE DEPARTMENT,
415 POST ST., SAN FRANCISCO

Eighty-five Fine Sunny Rooms. Elevator Service

THE BRADBURY,

J. A. FERSON, Proprietor.

FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL

N. W. Cor. Polk and California Sts.,
San Francisco, Cal.

Excellent Cuisine References required.
Transient trade solicited. Rates $2.00 and upwards.
Reasonable by the month.

W. C. ACHI & CO.

Real Estate Brokers

We will buy or sell real estate in any part of the group. We will also buy or sell Stocks in any corporation in the Hawaiian Islands.

Office, 10 West King Street, Honolulu, H.

From Admiral George Dewey:

Mr. George Mayerle, German Expert Optician, 1071½ Market street, San Francisco: Dear Sir—I am still using with much satisfaction the glasses you sent me at Manila; also, the new ones suit my eyes perfectly.
Very truly yours,
George Dewey.

A GRADUATE

George Mayerle

German Expert Optician

Consultation, Examination and advice free.

OPTICIAN HONORED

1007½ Market St.

near Seventh

Telephone Mint 257

German Eye Water 50 cents.

From General Wm. R. Shafter:

Mr. George Mayerle, San Francisco: Dear Sir—The glasses made by you received yesterday. I have never been better fitted than with this pair.
Very truly yours,
Wm. R. Shafter,
Major-General U. S. V.

The Wave

1900

VOL. XXI. No. 21 SAN FRANCISCO—JUNE 16, 1900 SEATTLE PRICE 10 CENTS

ON THE EDGE OF THE QUARANTINE, SAN FRANCISCO.

How Supplies are Passed Under the Ropes, Down Deserted Dupont Street.

Photo by W. F. Street.

is published every Saturday at The Wave Building, 24 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal., and Colman Building, Seattle, Wash.

Entered at the Post Office as second-class matter.

Subscription: Per year, $3.00; six months, $1.75; three months, $1.00. Foreign subscription (countries in postal union) $1 per year additional. Sample copies free.

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

PROPRIETORS

SAN FRANCISCO—June 16, 1900—SEATTLE

CONTENTS

Events Current 2
Editorial Comment 3
Views of an Execution in Uruguay 4
Before the Great White Wall 5
Things and People, by Boswell Jr 6
Views of the Chinatown Quarantine 7
The Camarines Campaign 8
Scenes in Central Mexico, Photo by Oscar Maurer 9
Correspondence—New York-London 10
Meditations of a Matron 11
In Bookdom 12
A Bowery Cinderella 13
At the Theatres 14
New Stories Re-told 16

EVENTS CURRENT.

A Grave Crisis in Chinese Affairs.

The Boxer disturbance in China has grown and spread, until it is an insurrection rather than a riot. What was only a possibility last week has now become a certainty; the Powers are virtually holding Pekin, the open breach has occurred between the Dowager Empress and the deposed Kwang Su. The continued forces, landed from the ships at Taku, are plainly only just sufficient to guard the legations at the capital and are doing even that with difficulty, as the Chinese mob in the city is in danger of rising in sympathy with the anti-foreign rioters. The country around the capital is overrun with Boxers, Tientsin is practically in their hands, the missionaries who have escaped death are in the capital, under the protection of the troops. This being the case, the governments interested decided to send in more marines at once, whether the Chinese court allowed it or not. Accordingly, 1,500 marines, of which about 1,000 were English and 100 American were sent from the Taku fleet to Tientsin and thence to Pekin. But the rioters had torn up the railroad track and burned the stations, so that they were forced to set laborers at work building track in front of them. While engaged in this work, sixteen British marines had an encounter with a mob of about 2,000 Boxers and drove them off inflicting heavy loss. This was the first blood spilled by white troops in this conflict. The attitude of the Chinese government is the alarming feature. It is now certain that the Empress' party, now in power, is favoring and assisting the mob in its anti-foreign rioting. The report that governors of provinces have orders not to oppose the rioters is confirmed. Only once have the Imperial troops made a bold stand; then, a serious battle with a loss of 200 men was fought outside the walls of Pekin, but without decisive result. On the other hand, high officers and whole battalions of soldiers have gone over to the rioters. An attache of the Belgian legation was assaulted and a high Japanese official was killed by the Empress' own bodyguard. This is the most startling crime of the week, but there have been plenty of others. Native Christians have been slaughtered wholesale. The missionaries are just beginning to be heard from, and it is known that several of the American lot alone are dead, and several more missing. Inside the town, there are three hundred European marines against the city's millions. The civil males will go into service to resist them. The attitude of the powers is uncertain at this juncture. Russia has taken the most aggressive attitude, and is being watched closely by the others. She has announced an intention of taking action whether or no the others do so. The Powers are passing notes regarding concerted action, and the United States is already falling into her natural place beside Great Britain. That this means the end of the old regime in China, no one doubts. The only question is whether the Powers will divide the country or whether they will establish a protectorate over a progressionist Chinese government. A sensational newspaper account has it that Kwang Su, the deposed Emperor, has sent an appeal to the people of the world and the Powers, asking them to overthrow the Empress Dowager, and set him upon the throne as the head of a progressive government. As this comes from Creelman and through the Examiner Journal, it must be regarded with very grave doubts.

The St. Louis Strike.

The St. Louis strike has resulted in a tragedy which has set class strife raging in that city, and has had the effect of rendering the unnecessary struggle more bitter. It will be remembered that the sheriff, finding the police insufficient and the militia unwilling, decided to swear in a posse comitatus from among the solid, influential citizens of St. Louis. About 1,000 of these were secured, armed, and quartered in barracks near the center of disturbance. Last Sunday, the police were withdrawn at noon and the deputies took their places on guard. A disturbance arose through the actions of strikers returning in a body from a picnic given for them, the trouble culminating in an attack upon a car standing just in front of the barracks, a pitched battle and a fusillade of buckshot from the shotguns of the deputies. Three killed and nine wounded is the record of that bloody day. This has led to a boycott among the laboring classes, the supporters of the strikers, who are advocating the refusal of food and drink to the deputies, among whom are some of the most influential citizens of St. Louis. This unfortunate incident had one good effect; it called the attention of the authorities to the gravity of the situation. Immediately, stricter rules regarding meetings and the bearing of firearms were passed by the city fathers and the police; consequently, there has been no bloodshed since, but the situation is strained, and trouble may be renewed at any time. The sensational papers of the city, which encourage the strikers, have had much to do with the prolongation of the disturbance. So, indeed, has the City Council, which contains many demagogues dependent for votes upon the laboring class. This body came near to passing an ordinance revoking all street railway franchises last week. Almost all the lines run regular cars, but under strong private or police guards. The cars are otherwise nearly empty. The strikers claim that the only passengers are people hired by the companies to ride for the moral effect. The paralysis of traffic, the moral effect, and the public fear of this troublesome strike have lost many millions of dollars for the City of St. Louis.

The Third Stage of the Boer War.

Those who believe that the occupation of Pretoria would mean the end of the South African war have seen their belief shattered by the events of the week. Roberts is in Pretoria and his army is resting on Transvaal soil, but the fighting is going on, and Boer resistance is apparently stiffer than ever since the taking of Ladysmith. The war has entered upon its third period. In the first, everything went the way of the Boers and the British poured in money and treasure against their hidden foes in vain. This ended with Roberts' brilliant campaign toward Kimberly and the capture of General Cronje and army. The second period begins there and ends with the occupation of Pretoria. It was a comparatively bloodless campaign, and went invariably against the Boers. The third stage, now beginning, will be marked by long guerrilla warfare. How severe this is to be depends on the sincerity of Paul Kruger's declaration that he will fight it out on guerilla lines until the end. If this is the true Boer intention, then the struggle will be a long one, because the country and the tactics of the Boers are all suited to guerilla warfare. But if Kruger is only putting on a bold front to delay the British while his foreign agents work for intervention, then the game is nearly played to a finish, as Roberts is pressing on, determined to push the war to its outcome while he holds the advantage. Even now, fighting is going on in two directions. Almost simultaneously with Roberts' entry into Pretoria, the Boers made a determined attempt to cut his line of communications. The railway near the border was cut in a determined raid and twenty-four miles destroyed. Had the numbers engaged been anywhere nearly equal, it might have gone hard with Roberts. But his force is great enough to hold the line against the Boers, even though broken. In this affray, the Boers again made a big capture, no one knows exactly how. The whole Derbyshire Regiment, except five or six men, was either killed, captured, or taken prisoners. Desultory fighting went on at that point until June 11, when Kitchener and Methuen inflicted a decisive defeat on the Boer forces on the neighborhood. On the same day, Roberts met Botha in his forward advance and drove him back, and Buller, on the other border, fought an indecisive battle near Laing's Nek. This point has, indeed, absorbed the main attention of the week. This is a strongly-fortified point, the one chosen by the Boers for the opening battle in the war of 1879–80. It has always been regarded as the point where the British would meet the first and greatest shock of resistance in the present Transvaal war. By the fortune of war, it happened that the Pretoria-bound British came in by a sort of side-entrance; the place, therefore, lost its greatest strategic value, but kept enough to make it advisable for Buller to have a trial at its defenses. In his first day's fighting, the English general forced the Boers into suing for conditional surrender. Buller's terms were unconditional, however, and the fighting was renewed. He has now forced the enemy's line of defences back three miles, although without gaining any material advantage, and is hammering away as he did before Ladysmith. The War Office casualty returns up to June 9 aggregate 23,644, besides 792 officers and 12,355 men sent home as invalids, but not including the sick in South African hospitals.

Vice-Presidential Possibilities.

As the national conventions of the two great parties approach, the vice-presidential contest grows in interest. Never before was leading place on either ticket such an absolute "cinch" as it is on both tickets this year. The Dewey boom on the Democratic side is dead, and Bryan's position is as strong in his own party as ever. McKinley is even more firmly fixed at the head of the the Republican procession. Roosevelt is his only possible opponent, and no one believes that the Rough Rider stands any chance. In spite of the representations of the Democrats yellow journals, it is almost certain that his name will not come up. But the second place on both tickets is anybody's. Towne, the vice-presidential nominee on the Populist ticket and Admiral Dewey are the most widely-advertised candidates on the Democratic side. Towne is strong in the West, but there are many things against him. Bryan being a Westerner, his mate should come from the East. Towne hails from Michigan. Moreover, since the silver and gold branches of Democracy have been somewhat fused again through the rise of new issues, the old Democracy should have the courtesy of a place. Towne's position in the party is exactly the same as that of Bryan. As for Dewey, he is more or less of a mystery. His nomination would add strength to the ticket without a doubt, but it is a question if he would accept and if having consented to the use of his name his backers are as shrewd at the game as the experts behind Towne and others. The boom of Wm. R. Hearst, proprietor of the Examiner-Journal, is not taken very seriously; it probably has its main use in the advertising which it gives him and his papers. The very fact that Hearst is a Western man in that his interests are identified with the West is alone enough to defeat him. On the Republican side, there are a host of candidates. McKinley is said to favor Secretary of the Navy Long. Roosevelt is the choice of the party's rank and file, but he has given it out positively that he will not be a candidate, and is probably sincere in this position. Roosevelt wants another term as Governor of New York, and doubtless has his eye on the Presidency in 1904. Timothy R. Woodruff, not an especially brilliant man but the possessor of a long "pull," is mentioned, as is Senator Allison. Rumor has it that Senator Wolcott of Colorado, chairman of the National Committee, will try to stampede the convention for himself. He is strong in the West and would add votes in that direction. Finally, Irving M. Scott is gaining ground daily in the East as well as the West, and his is now considered one of the likeliest names.

Bryan's New Attitude on Silver.

It being known that the Eastern Democrats will support the Bryanite wing of the party, if they will let the silver question slide, the Popocratic party is preparing a graceful crawling movement. The indication of their probable policy came not from their own side but from the other, the utterances of Richard Croker, in his new famous interview—"silver counts very little, anyway. It is a matter on which there is a difference of opinion, but other greater issues have overshadowed it, and there is no need of letting it stand as an obstacle." Bryan has cordially accepted this pose, doubtless arranged long beforehand, and with each day is saying less about silver and more about imperialism. Now comes the time of Democratic platform making, and it is understood that Bryan is for modifying the platform so as to give the two "live" issues the preference and put silver into a position of just enough prominence to hold the Western Populistic element in line, and not prominent enough to scare off any Eastern Gold Democrat. It is easy to see why Bryan wishes the revision; it places the responsibility for shelving silver upon the party, not upon himself. Should he be nominated on the platform of 1896 with an additional anti-imperialistic plank, he would have to give much time and attention in the coming campaign to dodging around and explaining away the main issue. On the other hand, Senator Jones and other Western committeemen are for leaving the 1896 platform practically untouched, and letting Bryan do the explaining. There is a grim justice in this position; it is as though the Democracy said to Bryan: "You got me into the Free Silver mess—now get me out."

Japan and Russia in Korea.

The Boxer disturbance in China has temporarily turned the attention of students of the Far East away from the inevitable conflict between Russia and Japan over Corea. In the May number of the North American Review is an able and scolarly article by James Murdock, formerly a professor in the Imperial University at Tokio, in which the reasons for believing such a war unavoidable are set forth at length. Japan needs Korea, and Russia wants it. The Japanese people have been increasing with alarming rapidity since the country became Europeanized; even state discouragement of marriage has failed to check the tendency. The latest estimate shows 44,000,000, a gain of 33 per cent in twenty-eight years. Of the 112,000 square miles, only 16,000 are capable of cultivation. Up to the last decade, Japan managed, homehow, to raise most of her foodstuffs, and even to export a little rice, but this is past; last year, she imported $23,000,000 of foodstuffs. This ominous state of affairs is growing worse every year; it is only a question of time until a failure in crops will cause horrible suffering. The wise Japanese statesmen began, a few years ago, to emulate England's policy of economizing productive space by making manufacturing the leading industry. But this was a partial failure, through lack of capital. There is much less loose money in Japan than in either the Dutch Netherlands or Scotland, which are at the bottom of the list for civilized countries. But if Japan does succeed in this purpose, she needs a market, and there is none more convenient and profitable to her than Manchuria and the Middle Kingdom of China. In these sections, as well as in Korea, Japan can have a free territory and market only so long as the Czar wills. This brings her most vital interests into conflict with Russia. The other nations are opposing Russia because of their desire for trade extension; to Japan alone is it a vital matter. Again, it being extremely doubtful whether Japan will succeed in her attempts at establishing manufactures, some over-sea territory must be found for the overflow. Korea is just across the straits of Tsushima from Japan. The population of about ten millions could easily be doubled without taxing the recources of the country, so much of the land lies fallow owing to the laziness of the degenerate Koreans. This makes the securing of a foothold in Korea a cardinal point in Japanese policy. Unfortunately for Japan, Russia is also heavily interested in the possession of the peninsula. Should Japan hold it, she would have full command of the sea communications between Port Arthur and Vlaeivostock. With the whole of Korea in Japanese hands, the overland connections between the two Russian bases would never be safe. It follows that an ultimate conflict between Russia and Japan for the mastery of Korea is inevitable, though, for the present, an outbreak of hostilities is deferred by the Nissi-Rosen Protocol, signed on April 25, 1898. This document embodies an agreement that the Imperial Governments of Japan and Russia will refrain from all direct interference in the internal affairs of Korea, and that, "in view of the large development of Japanese commercial and industrial enterprise in Korea, as well as the considerable number of Japanese subjects resident in that country, the Imperial Russian Government will not impede the development of the commercial and industrial relations between Japan and Korea." As things stand at present, the Japanese force is much the stronger in the far East than that of Russia, owing to the Czar's army and navy being so far from their base of supplies and communications. This fact, in the opinion of competent observers, will cause the cautious Russians to stave off the conflict until their position on the Asiatic coast is stronger. Yet the diplomatic shuffling caused by the Boxer disturbance may have the effect of hastening a clash.

Editorial Comment.

The Vice-Presidency.

THE name of Irving M. Scott is today most prominently before the people of the United States as a candidate for Vice-President. Where the movemen started no one seems to know. It is as strong in Utah as it is in Oregon. He has as many advocates in the State of Washington as he has at the National capital. Idaho and far-off Montana echo the sentiment. The interior press of California is not more enthusiastic than are the other western states. In the East the New York dailies have taken up the name of Scott with a vim, in Chicago he is editorially endorsed. It is in the air. Since the refusal of Governor Roosevelt to accept the nomination, Mr. Scott's candidacy has been the only one of national importance before the people. Take Oregon, for instance, the Evening Republican of Baker City says, "Oregon has done much for the republican party. * * * We deserve recognition. Irving M. Scott of San Francisco is the choice of this paper, and the coast delegates should make an effort to keep the name continually before the people." The Salem Journal endorses this, and adds more. The Portland Telegram says "If the nomination could be secured for a Pacific Coast man, no one would be more acceptable to the business men of Oregon than Mr. Scott." The Oregon Statesman of Salem says, "Irving M. Scott would do exceedingly well as a candidate for Vice-President in case a man from Oregon may not be named." The Forest Grove Times says, "Every man in the United States is familiar with his name. Mr. Scott is eligible and popular." There are a full dozen more Oregon papers tha have taken a similar tune. In Utah that well known journal, the Salt Lake Tribune says:

"There is not a more typical American alive; not one with a higher sense of honor; not one who has been mentioned who so nearly represents the great mass of working Americans. He graduated from the university of an American machine shop, and when he left it with brain broadened and hands and eyes trained, he, from year to year, took new degrees until he made the platforms for heroes to immortalize themselves from, and so deft was his art that that while the heroes give glory to the platforms, the platforms added to the glory of the heroes. He built the 'Olympia,' and her guns sounded the opening notes of the great chorus out of which Admiral Dewey emerged immortal. He built the 'Oregon,' which took on more glory than ever attached to a ship before, and which, in storm and calm, in peace and war, made for herself a higher name than any ship ever won before, which, indeed, in its reflection gave to the United States a prestige never won by a ship before. Mr. Scott is a working man; his executive ability is of the highest order; he believes in expansion until American ships can do all that is needed in America's work."

The Ogden Standard of Utah under the capable management of Wm. Glassman, Esq., said—"His nomination would secure to McKinley the entire Pacific Coast electoral vote and would be a most merited recognition of the West.

Among the many lesser Utah jonrnals of the interior we will quote only from the Bichfield Reaper which said—"If it is possible to secure recognition of the West, Mr. Scott would be a popular choice. His nomination would unquestionably strengthen the ticket in the western states."

In Idaho the Boise City Statesman speaks as follows—"Mr. Scott grew up under influences that made honesty a cardinal feature of his character, and in anything he undertakes this character shines forth like a beacon light. He is a man of great ability, and the Coast would honor itself in presenting his name for the vice-presidency."

The Moscow (Idaho) Mirror says—"Mr. Scott has gained a national reputation on account of his being the builder of the famous battleships 'Oregon' and 'Olympia,' and as it is quite probable that the candidate for the vice-presidency will come from the West if the Coast States stand together, Mr. Scott can be nominated. As he is a clean man there could be no objections to him and strength could be gained for the ticket by his nomination."

The Blackfoot (Idaho) Mail endorses the Californian in these words—"Scott is the man for the West, and if we present ourselves in a united and unbroken phalanx we may command his nomination, for 'United we stand, divided we fall.'"

The Wood River Times of Hailey (Idaho) emphatically says of Mr. Scott—"No man possesses to a more eminent degree all the qualifications desirable in either a vice-president or a president of the United States."

We quote from two of Montana's best journals. The Great Falls (Montana) Leader says—"The West should have this position. The nomination of a man from this section will add to the strength of the ticket, and do much toward bringing back into the Republican ranks those states which four years ago drifted from their moorings. There are other Western men who have been mentioned for this place and who would be acceptable. Senator Wolcott is one of them and Senator Carter is another. The nomination of the latter would particularly please Montana, but with a practical assurance of another term in the Senate it is questionable whether the Senate would care for the nomination for vice-president. Anyhow, if all that is said by his friends about Mr. Scott is true, the Republican party will make no mistake in placing him upon its ticket."

The Missoulian of Missoula, Montana, says—"Mr. Scott has a national reputation, yet his name is not a household word; but mention the fact that he built the mighty 'Oregon,' the pride of the American navy, and no further introduction is necessary. Not a schoolboy or girl in the United States who hasn't heard of the 'Oregon.' To most public men and men of affairs in the United States Mr. Scott is known. He is a man of brains, a thorough business man, at the head of the Union Iron Works of San Francisco, a self-made man who has a right to feel as proud of his own design as his friends do. Should Mr. Scott receive the nomination he would be acceptable to all Republicans."

Up in the State of Washington where men do not do things by halves, Mr. Scott's endorsers are enthusiastic and earnest.

The Washingtonian, of Hoquiam, Wash., says—"Judge Bartlett Tripp, of South Dakota, is being boomed by Western politicians for the nomination of vice-president, but Pacific Coast people should see if the honor cannot come to them. Irving M. Scott, the great shipbuilder of San Francisco, is a probable candidate, and he would be worthy in every way."

The Chehalis Bee-Nugget Chehalis, Wash., says—'The Washington delegation is understood to favor Judge Tripp for the vice-presidency, but at the same time the nomination of so excellent a man as Irving M. Scott would cause hearty satisfaction on the Coast if it could be secured."

The Centralia News of Centralia, Wash., says—"This is an excellent selection. Mr. Scott is owner of the Union Iron Works and is a wealthy, respected citizen, besides being a man of splendid executive ability. Mr. Scott is a gentleman and would fill the high and responsible position with the utmost credit."

Other journals in Washington were equally favorable, and in the town of Moro his name was adopted for vice-president at the town Republican club. We cannot refrain from quoting from one more Washington journal, the Aberdeen Bulletin. It says—

"Under the new order of things we are entitled to the vice-presidential nomination and, in asking this, it is our policy to put forth a man with a national reputation. This man is Irving M. Scott, of California."

From Arizona, the Daily Citizen, of Tucson, says—"Irving M. Scott should be united upon by Western Republicans, and his nomination for vice-president will surely follow. The West should have a representative on the national ticket, and Irving M. Scott is the man."

The Press of Benson, Arizona, says—"No better man for a running mate for President McKinley could be found anywhere in the United States."

The Oasis of Nogales, Arizona, says among other things—"Mr. Scott would make an ideal candidate. * * * He is one of the great men of the country, and his nomination would be a credit to the party and add great strength to the ticket."

In California the Oakland Enquirer and Tribune, the Stockton Independent, Monterey Cypress, Placerville Republican, Santa Paula Chronicle, Chino Valley Champion, Auburn Republican Argus, the San Luis Obispo Reascner, the Rio Vista News, the Vacaville Reporter, the Red Bluff People's Cause, the Red Bluff News, the Alameda Encinal, the Morgan Hill Sun, the Paso Robles Leader, the Santa Clara Journal, the San Pedro News, the Los Gatos Mail, the Pomona Times, the Colton News, the Lakeport Press, the Santa Ana Blade, the Bridgeport Chronicle-Un on, the Ontario Observer, the Healdsburg Tribune, the Point Arena Record, and a long list of other journals have endorsed Mr. Scott in terms most flattering.

If you, as a Californian, have any interest in bringing this great honor to our state and fellow citizen, Irving M. Scott, it is your duty to urge our own delegation and those of our neighboring states to stand by the only western candidate who can in any sense be deemed a national candidate.

The Political Calamity Howler.

IT is a little sickening to rub up against the whining and doubting republican who has been taking his inspiration from the Democratic Press, and who pulls you to one side and whispers in the ear of secrecy his fears of the result next November, his fears of the "harm that Hanna may bring to the party," and his other contemptible, stupid, and profitless forebodings of "danger." He will vote the republican ticket at the next election—he knows it, you know it, and he knows you know it. He does not for a moment believe the slanders that have been heaped upon the administration by a reckless and despairing democracy. He does not believe that Mark Hanna is an ogre, or a rascal, or man who walks upon the neck of labor. In his own suspicious mentality he confesses that Hanna is a typical American, keen, aggressive, active and brimful of the kind of energy that has made America famous the world over. There is among mankind, however, a type of doubting Thomases who can not resist whining their pessimistic fears and auguries into your ears. The republican party is not free of them. These are the fellows who believe every yellow journal comet is going to strike the earth, and borrow trouble from the Sunday supplement that says "the sun's heat is gradually being exhausted."

Republicans may as well come to understand that the Democratic Press will never be satisfied with any candidate for president that the party may name, nor will they accept without criticism any chairman that may be selected to manage the republican campaign. Besides this republicans might just as well come to know that the Democratic Press will lie—and lie like Ananias about every party leader whose ability threatens the lurid and fantastic hope of Bryanism.

Mark Hanna is not the type of man the cartoonist and Democratic editor would have you believe, and the republican who takes opinions of his party leaders, at second hand, from a hostile press, and upon that opinion builds elaborate apprehensions of calamity is in need of state aid at the home for the feeble minded.

The coupling of Senator Hanna's name with trusts seems most to bother the man who looks at politics through blue spectacles. Dig down into the belly of any great American trust and you will find "leading Democrats" hiding away in the dark and sucking industriously at the nipple that draws sustenance from the masses. Recently, in New York the ice trust combined to cinch the people during the hot summer months. Mr. Hearst—who hopes to run on the ticket with Bryan—made up his mind that Hanna and some republicans were at the bottom of the threatened wrong. He bought stock in the Ice Trust and as a stockholder forced open the books of the concern to the public gaze, and uncovered Tammany and a dozen leading New York democrats who were all "opposed to trusts." Investigate the whiskey trust and the tobacco trust and you will find fattening upon their profits, the very democrats who are the loudest against their existence. The attention of the pessimistic republican is respectfully referred to the republican majority that the party rolled up in Oregon. It is an answer to every calamity howl.

Whatever else may be said of Governor Gage no one will charge him with having anything akin to fear in his makeup. He dares to do whatever may suggest itself to him as being the thing to do. Perhaps it is fortunate that he has been called upon to report the facts concerning the bubonic plague quarantine now on in Chinatown. If it be found that what is known as the Phelan Board of Health originated this scare without proper foundation, the Governor may, as befits the case, be expected to indulge in some strictures that will not be altogether pleasant to the gentleman who may be standing in proper perspective thereto.

One curious feature of this very curious bubonic plague that is charged up against us, is that so far as appears, no health board has yet discovered a live case of the plague. In every instance the supposed victim was dead when he or she came under the eye of the Board. Thereupon these gentlemen sharpened their knives, whittled off some gland tissue, and presently appeared with a "culture" declared to be the bubonic germ.

Governor Gage will be disappointing if he does not puncture some of the shams surrounding our plague.

COMMUNICATION.

Who Pays Bryan's Expenses?

"Editor Wave:—I have noted with some pleasure your criticisms of Mr. Bryan, though four years ago I would have resented them. Will you tell me who has been supporting Mr. Bryan for the past four years? Who has been paying his living and traveling expenses which must amount to more than five hundred dollars per month at a low estimate? This in the past three years would aggregate eighteen thousand dollars. If this man Bryan was the "peerless patriot" his hypnotized followers declare him to be, he would have withdrawn, for he is still young—and permitted Admiral Dewey to take the presidential nomination and be content with the second place himself. Four years from now he could try for first place. This is opinion of a Democrat.

Who is paying Mr. Bryan's expenses? Perhaps the silver mine owners are paying him an annual retainer—ostensibly for legal services but really for something else. Perhaps the Democratic whisky trust or tobacco trust have him upon their pay rools. He is not a chameleon—he cannot live on air, he cannot travel for nothing, his family must live meanwhile. The question is pertinent of Mr. Bryan as a public man who is claiming to be the apostle and exclusive representation of the great masses. It would be impertinent to ask the same question of any private citizen.

As to Mr. Bryan's retirement in favor of Mr. Dewey—no one who understands Mr. Bryan could for a moment imagine that the apostle of free silver would do any such thing. He is for Bryan. He has no second claim, no compromise candidate can sway him from his determined purpose of naming himself for President. Unselfish patriot that he is, he knows what "the people" want, and he is going to give it to them if parties, heroes, and the state itself topples and falls into a heap. He had rather be nominated a second time and drag the party to defeat than see another lead it to victory. He is made of the kind of stuff that leads the procession when the "good things" are being handed out. He is for Bryan and that square chin of his says he will "stay put."

F. L. S.

AN EXECUTION IN URUGUAY

The Prison Court.

The Condemned Appears.

The Death March.

The Firing Squad.

Making Ready.

The End.

THE BOXER DISTURBANCE.

The Present Crisis in China, and the Remarkable Woman who has Caused it.

THE Chines Empire has greater interest for the Pacific Coast of the United States than any other foreign country in the world. This statement is made without reservation and a little thought should convince anyone that is is true. We are nearer to that great, bursting, unopened land than any other Caucasian country on the globe. The route thither is reached by an uninterrupted waterway which gives a straight passage, without twists or turns, all the distance, and over an ocean which carries out its name—Pacific—by being the most safely navigable of all. This would matter little if China were a barren, uninhabited or savage country. But it is not. Everyone knows from his geography that it is the most thickly settled region on the earth. The inhabitants have enough civilization of their own sort to have need for European-made or European-cultivated products of all sorts. Moreover, their grade of civilization is just such as to require the goods manufactured or raised in America. Did they need Duchesse lace or kid gloves or paintings or carved ivories, the bulk of their trade would swing to the countries of skilful artisans—France, Germany, Italy. But they do not. They have advanced to the stage where they need staples and nothing more. Flour, sugar, cotton goods, above all, machinery, cover the list of their present wants. And these are the very things which the United States can give them. As matters are running at present, pending the Construction of the Nicaragua Canal, the goods must pass by way of Pacific Coast ports—San Francisco, Seattle, Portland, Vancouver. By the same line of reasoning, it is apparent that products raised or manufactured on the Pacific Coast can be shipped much more easily, since the railway tolls will be correspondingly less. But from whatever section the goods come, whether from the Pacific Slope, from the Middle West, from the Atlantic States, the transfer from railroad to ship, involving a good part of the cost of shipping, must be made at some Pacific Coast port. No matter how affairs eventuate, the Pacific Coast is the principal beneficiary of any extension of the China trade. All this has been stated so often that it is almost axiomatic. It must be repeated again and again until Pacific Coast merchants and exporters realize the opportunity that is before them.

Figures prove that this is no dream. The awakening of China is most evidently at hand; the awakening of the United States, so far as Oriental trade is concerned, began May 1, 1898, with the first gun fired at Manila Bay. On paper, we now control ten per cent of the Chinese import trade, as against five per cent five years ago. In reality, counting the trade which goes through Hongkong and is not included in the official totals and the American goods resold through France, England, Germany and Japan, the figures come to fifteen per cent. In figures, we are ahead of Germany, France, Russia and Italy, and yield only to Japan and England, but if Formosa, a Japanese dependency since the Eastern war, is left out of the question, then we lead them all except England. Five or six years ago, we were the last of the bunch.

This is only another way of saying that the present Boxer disturbance, which evidently precludes the division of China among the European Medes and Persians, affects the Pacific Coast almost as intimately and vitally as would a domestic war. Under those circumstances a summary of the Chinese situation, so far as it is known, is of surpassing interest at the present time. It is not a complete story, at its best. No court in the world is better at keeping its business to itself than that of Pekin. There is the natural Chinese deceit to take into account, and the "public be damned" policy traditional with the Tartan dynasty. There are no newspapers in China to pry into the affairs of government and no access of the private citizen to the court; moreover, there is a strict and effectual remedy, which affects the neck, for over-curious persons. On top of this, there are the continual intrigues of the various European nations, waiting, like coyotes around a wounded buffalo, to divide the carcass when it falls. Part of their campaign lies in the circulation of false reports. Finally, the newspaper correspondents in the yellow kingdom are so far from home that sensational reports cannot be denied and run to earth, and they have undoubtedly taken advantage of this to stretch the truth in their own direction. We must sift some things from a mass of conflicting testimony, we must make reasonable guesses at other things, and where both of these tests fail, we must make the most reasonable guess.

It is a story which goes a long way back, if you begin at the beginning—back to the early Chinese civilization which was flourishing when our ancestors were gibbering in the trees. It involves the long war against the Tartars, which ended by a victory for that race and in the occupation of the Chinese throne by an alien race without interest in the governed class. Corresponding to this feeling in the rulers, came a wasting away of patriotism in the masses. Chinese civilization began to petrify some ten centuries ago, and the only perceptible change in the period which has since elapsed lay in this slowly growing indifference of the two classes. It cannot be called antagonism; it is too weak a feeling for that. The conservatism which comes with national petrifaction is the sole cause for the continued existence of the Tartar dynasty. The Chinese obeyed them and their deputies because they had always obeyed; that was reason enough. The rulers aided and abetted this feeling by lopping off every head which could think for itself. Let a Chinaman but rise above the masses to display individuality, and his life paid the forfeit.

European interference, beginning with the suppression of the pirates along the coast, some half-century ago, was the beginning of China's awakening. From that time to this, the European powers have been steadily working for footholds, and "spheres of influence" in China. Yet so slow was their progress, that it is only within the last decade tha they have produced any impression at all. In these ten years, a perceptible change has taken place. Railroads have been accepted in some of the more easily accessible portions; mines have been opened to modern methods, even the telegraph lines and tram cars have pushed their way in. The demand for European-made goods has been phenomenal, considering previous conditions. In provinces and sections where no white man had ever been before them, recent explorers have found the manufactured articles on display in the shop windows. In the ten years from 1889 to 1899, China made greater advancement, as we measure advancement, than in the ten centuries between 889 and 1889. In the year 1899, she made greater progress than in any other year of that decade of light.

The chief agent in this progress was Kwang Su, the Emperor. He was placed on the throne as a boy about ten years ago. The former Emperor died without issue; Kwang Su was the nephew. The Dowager Empress, wife of the old ruler, administered affairs during his minority. In the early years of her reign, a good part of her advisers became touched with Europeanism, and their influence furthered the ear of enlightenment which then seemed about to dawn. This remarkable woman, powerful, designing and unscrupulous as she is, seemed at first to pay little attention to this new departure, seemed, in fact, to be mildly in favor of it. Yet the reformers knew that her natural affiliation lay with the conservatives, therefore, they directed their attention to the young Emperor, in whom, they felt, lay the chance for fulfillment of their hopes. First, they managed to break the court system of the Empire sufficiently to get him under the influence of European tutors and of progressive Chinese advisers. This accomplished, they threw in their power with his party as opposed to that of the Empress. One year ago, a diplomatic coup was executed, whereby the Emperor was given control of things and the Dowager was relegated to private life. Had Kwang Su been a man of force and initiatative, he might have saved China then and there. But he is a logical product of centuries of inbreeding. The degenerate blood of kings is thin in his veins. Diseased, inefficient and less than mediocre he was guided and moulded by his advisers. For six month, European progress went ahead at a racing pace. Railroad franchises and mining grants were given in bunches; throughout the world the impression grew that the awakening of China was close at hand.

Then, all of a sudden, the situation changed. How the old Empress regained her control, no one knows. But in one week, she had seized the reins of government, deposed Kwang Su and made him a prisioner in her palace, and set another child from a remote branch of her family, upon the throne. This was followed by an edict against the reform party which sent its leaders flying for their lives, by the annulment of franchises and by the return to strict conservatism. The very orders for modern arms, by which the progressive party had hoped to make China a first-class power, were annulled, and the army returned to bamboo cannon and halberds. That the Empress is not really intensely non-progressive is the belief of many who have studied thia remarkable woman and her policy. Unscrupulous, ambitious, caring only for her own aggrandizement, she has taken her stand because her own tenure of power lies in a support of the non-progressive element. It is the ambition of one woman which has caused all this trouble. For her, the warships of the Powers have been hurried into Taku harbor for her the lawless element is murdering and pillaging in the middle kingdom.

When the edict against reformers was published, six persons were specially mark for execution. Four fled, and two were caught. One of the four, Tom Tse Tong, returned to die under circumstances particularly dramatic. He was a Christian and a devoted reformer. He heard a boast from the other party that none of the Emperor's party was patriot enough to die for the cause of reform. He went back to Pekin, saying; "Let my head go for China. My blood shall be shed for progress." And he submitted to the axe. Others in lesser places were executed or driven out, and every official suspected of progressive leanings paid for his opinions with his office. By the end of March, China, so far as the government was concerned, was as she was in the year 1000.

Securely settled in power, the Empress began to scheme to rid herself of the hated foreigners who had done their best to favor her nephew and his part. A crusade against the whites under the support of the government, she saw to be impossible. Even she knew that halberds and bamboo cannon stood no chance against rifles and rifled cannon. The Japanese war, if nothing else, taught her that. On all sides were the European powers and their "spheres of influence," working against her party, striving for progress. With direct means impossible, she chose the indirect method characteristic of the Oriental. The father of her latest puppet-emperor is head of a great Chinese secret society, known to Europeans as the "Boxers," or in Chinese, the Ye-Ho-Chuan Tong. It is an organization founded about two hundred years ago with the highest moral and patriotic purposes, but, like the highbinder tongs of San Francisco, it fell from grace and its high estate and degenerated into an aggregation of thugs and murderers. They called this power into play. The regulations which had bound the Boxers were loosened, and emissaries and leaders were sent among them to stir their lawless spirit against the Europeans and the missionaries. At the same time, the government officials and the heads of provinces were warned that the mobs must be only nominally opposed. The organization arose almost at once. With their ranks swelled by the lawless and turbulent, they swept on Pekin, robbing, burning, tearing up the improvements of the "foreign devils" and murdering Christians. The possible outcome is a matter of the history now being made in the Middle Kingdom of China.

Through all this tangle, one catches little glimpses and suggestions of this remarkable character. What are the means by which she holds her power? All the others of those influential and unscrupulous women running down the course of history have held power through the appeal of woman's beauty to man's passion. Even Catherine de Medici, with no beauty of her own, held and corrupted the court of France by the beauties with whom she surrounded herself. But the Dowager Empress, sixty-six years of age and never beautiful even in youth, must rule by something beyond sex-attraction. If she has not brains, she must have behind her someone with that commodity in plenty. That she is not a far-reaching, far-seeing mistress of affairs, is proved by her short-sighted policy in turning her fanatics loose on the Europeans when that action means concerted pressure by the Powers and the downfall of her empire. That she, or the person who does her thinking, is supreme in the narrow range of Chinese internal diplomacy is proved by the clever manner in which she has twice worked things into her own hands. So closely guarded are China's state secrets, that we may never know the true story of her double coup, but we know enough to say that her character and her place in the century's history are entirely unique.

J. V. STETSON.

Before the Great White Wall.

How the Little South American Republic of Uruguay Deals With Red Handed Crime.

THE Republics of South America do not possess the highest reputation for the conviction of their criminals, but there is certainly one of them which seeks to bring to justice the perpetrators of all classes of deeds of darkness. This is Uruguay.

Of course, in a sparsely settled country, such as of Uruguay, the arrest of a criminal is really a hard matter, but once within the toils his case is handled as an example. This is specially noticed in the case where murderers have been brought to justice during the present administration of affairs in the Republic.

There was a special instance of swift-winged justice but a few months ago which will serve to show the manner in which the passing of a murderer is used to impress upon others what their fate will be should they dare to duplicate the crime.

In one of the provinces, not far from Montevideo, a Uruguayan named Chauces had committed a particularly brutal murder. There was a long chase after him owing to his protection by the people of the interior, who harbored him and as far as possible threw the officers off the scent. By almost an accident he was captured and his punishment came swiftly. There was no long drawn trial, there was no stay of proceedings while experts passed on Chauces' sanity. He was tried before one court, declared guilty, and sentenced to the great white wall. Now, this in itself does not mean much, but the white wall is as much a feature of the Latin Republics as are their churches. Before it the prisoner stands or sits, in front of him a file of infantry lines up, there is a command to fire, a quick report, a puff of smoke and all is over. Scientists say that it is more merciful than hanging. At any rate, it is more impressive than the modern methods, at least in the manner of its handling in Uruguay, and the officials there maintain that this very impressiveness is useful as an object lesson.

It was a bright, beautiful morning which was to see the passing of Chauces. His taking off was to occur in the court yard of the penitentiary at Montevideo. Early, indeed, was the hour set for the execution but not too early for the people who had received the privilege of witnessing it. Outside the gates they were already waiting. Inside the courtyard all was silence and sunshine. The walls about had received a fresh coat of white, but for all that the spot where the tragedy was to occur could be easily distinguished by the many indentations made by bullets which had missed their mark on former occasions of the kind.

The time was up and the spectators were admitted, many of them to the upper gallery, while a favored few came to the ground floor of the prison. It was a quiet assembly, over which floated the cloud of tobacco smoke which marks any South American gathering. There were conversations but they were quietly held as the crowd divided into groups. Some examined the white wall and had a tale to tell of previous executions; others crowded about the chair of death—for Urugauyan criminals are executed while seated. Physicians told of slowly dying criminals who had lingered in their hands so long that another volley became necessary. Other executions were discussed, and even the possibility of Chauces dying hard became a topic. At last there was a movement at the end of the court. It was the guard coming to clear the way for the walk to death. Slowly they filed in forming two lines along the narrow court. The clink of their guns as they brought them to an order echoed and re-echoed through the hollow space. Then from the farther end there came through the silence the hum of a man's voice. Nearer and nearer it approached until its words

Continued on page 6.

Things & People.

Oriental Trade Again.

SO far as I know, I am the only person mixed with the newspaper business in California, who has continually and consistently tried to impress upon his fellows the importance of using the advantages now opened up for us in the Oriental trade. I have said, in this connection, that the Californians are strangely sleepy-apathetic in the matter, that their neglect is something little less than criminal, and I have got myself rather severely criticized therefore. Now listen to what an absolutely impartial outsider has to say. I quote from George F. Becker's article, "Are the Philippines Worth Having?" in the June Scribner's—an article worth reading, every line of it, by the way— "The Philippines cannot prosper without having a strong effect on the States of the Union which front upon the Pacific Ocean. In spite of a fine climate and great natural wealth, those States have languished as compared with those on the Atlantic coast, and it is manifest that the great obstacle to their prosperity has been a lack of commerce. Even five and twenty years ago the relation between the Pacific States and the Philippine Islands was so evident to that clear-minded traveller, F. Jagor, that he predicted the ultimate annexation of the Philippines to this country." Rather a plain statement, but a just one. Any Californian who looks matters squarely in the face has to agree that the state has never prospered in proportion to its resourc s. And now that the one thing necessary is added, there is only one, lone journalist to point the way to sectional prosperity!

***

That is not the only notable utterance in the article, however. There is another which should be blazoned on every Republican campaign banner, printed in every Republican tract, in the coming election season. For the author has found the truest and best reason for national expansion, and he has expressed it at its lowest terms—"For my own part I look to the influence of our new dependencies for benefits far transcending mere commercial prosperity. As human beings fail to develop their best qualities until the inarticulate appeals of children touch their hearts, so it would appear to me that nothing so improves the character of a nation as responsibility for the weal or woe of dependent peoples, who, in large measure at least, are at the mercy of the suzerain.

***

"It appears to me one of the clearest inductions from history that British politics have been purified by colonial responsibilities; that the ablest men and the cleanest men in Britain have been drawn into unselfish service of the state by the interest attaching to the development of the Empire, and the dangers attending it; that a realization of the contemptible meanness of dealing unjustly with inferiors has quickened the national sense of public honor and raised it to a standard unknown elsewhere; that in dealing unselfishly with plagues and famines, in bringing peace and prosperity to millions of human beings, the character of the whole race has been improved, until over vast areas of civilization (on the word of an Englishman) is equivalent to an affirmation. I am not eulogizing the British; I am well aware of their many faults, but I defy anyone to show that the vast improvement which has taken place in the English character, public and private, during the last hundred years, is not, in very great measure, due to the efforts made to deal honorably with the dependencies of the Empire." Is this not the last word to be said on expansion?

***

An American Engineer in China.

THE Boxer agitation in China and the danger surrounding all Europeans within the zone of disturbance will cause some anxiety regarding the fate of Bert Hoover, a young and rising mining engineer well known in California. His headquarters are near Tien-Tsin, the center of trouble, and it is known that a party of eleven mining men with headquarters there are missing and cannot be located. Hoover is a Stanford University man who graduated from that institution with the class of '95. Since then, he has risen so rapidly in his profession of mining engineer that he is pointed out by the Stanford faculty as the highest-salaried man on its list of alumni. After leaving college, Hoover worked for awhile as a mine laborer, learning the practical details of the business. His chance came when an English syndicate sent to him for a report on some California properties. Hoover's work was so eminently satisfactory that he was given a position in the company's mines at Coolgardie, Australia. There he rose almost at once to the position of resident superintendent, and proved a valuable man. A little over a year ago, the company secured some valuable tracts in China, and Hoover was commissioned to open them. He made a flying trip to this country to marry Miss Louise Henry, whom he had known in college, and took her with him to his new charge. If he is, as feared, among the lost party, it is a short ending to a most brilliant career.

***

Pruning the Berkeley Faculty.

IF the newspaper accounts are to be believed, President Wheeler of the University of California is proceeding to carry out his avowed intention of clearing out the superannuated stock in the Berkeley faculty. It is not a pleasant task for the head of a great college to dispense with men who have faithfully served the institution for years and decades, but it is a task which must be performed if the University of California is to be ranked as a modern institution. All too many of the educators in high places belong to a cult of teaching now out of date, no matter how efficient they may have been in their day and generation. When Mrs. Hearst and others set out to put new life into the University, this was the first task they staked out for the new president. I have no doubt that Wheeler is about to act, and act in the direction indicated by the daily newspaper reports. There will doubtless be some trouble. It is a weakness in the administration of a state supported college that the legislators and the public believe it their right to interfere. But change is inevitable, and I believe that Wheeler will have the backbone to steer a straight course and carry out his intentions.

***

As for Professor Joseph LeConte, he is in a class by himself. No man has ever done so much to give the University standing for scholarship at home and abroad as the venerable philosopher of Berkeley. By long odds, he has been the greatest, in work and service, of California's older group of educators. It would be ungrateful of the University to turn him out now, in his old age. Yet LeConte's days of active service as a teacher or director of a department are over. Plainly, he is too old for such work. His influence as a power in college life and in independent work is not yet done, however, and if it were, his past services should insure him a living from the institution. I am sure that some way can be arranged to give the venerable "Joe" a permanent living and an honorary professorship. I am sure that this, rather than absolute dismissal, is the intention of President Wheeler. Some of the best work of Agassiz was done after he retired from active teaching, and occupied just such a position at Harvard; nor are Agassiz and Harvard alone in this experience.

***

San Francisco and the Boxers.

THERE is no doubt that China is in for a period of disturbance more or less severe, whether or no this latest crash means the overthrow of the existing state of things in China. San Francisco is likely to have a part in making Chinese history. It is reported that two of the three reform leaders who fled from China before the wrath of the Empress are in hiding in Chinatown, making it their headquarters while they spread their doctrines. It seems reasonable enough. Of all the countries where the Chinese have emigrated and founded colonies of their own, this is the one which grants the greatest liberty and opportunity for free action. Besides, it is the largest Chinese city outside of China proper, the place where an exiled Chinaman desiring to keep the greatest possible amount of influence among his people would naturally settle. If the reformers are here, languishing in quarantine, they are likely to take advantage of the present crisis to begin an agitation among their brethren, and we may have a little Boxer disturbance of our own among the highbinder element in Chinatown.

***

The World's Gold Output.

ONE result of the favorable outcome of the British Boer war will be the corralling of the world's gold supply by the Anglo-Saxon peoples. When South Africa and the Rand mines pass absolutely into the hands of the British, England and America will hold all the large gold-bearing tracts of the world. South Africa and Australasia as well as the Klondike region of Alaska will be in the hands of the English. The Americans control the great output of the West, Colorado in especial, and the Cape Nome goldfields, which give the greatest promise of any on earth. Outside of these rich tracts, there are no heavy gold-producing lands to speak of. The Rand region was ahead of all the others by many millions last year, with Colorado second, Klondike third, and Australasia and American Alaska a poor fourth and fifth. This year the war has slightly changed matters. The Boers have been working the Rand mines for their own purposes. To what extent this has been done is not certain, but that this year's output will go many millions below the average is an assured fact. The output from the Rand in 1899 was $68,000,000, it can hardly reach half that sum in 1900. On the other hand, estimates of the Klondike clean-up, based on the "dirt" carried over the winter, put the total at $25,000,000, or within a million of Colorado's figures last year. As for Nome, its output is still problematical, and the estimate of $10,000,000 is a palpable guess.

***

A Juvenile Crime.

THE youngest bank-robber in the world has just shown himself. He made a deposit in a bank in order that he might acquaint himself with its methods, studied the problem out with fiendish deliberation, went that night, broke open the vault, and ran away to spend the results in dissipation. His act, becoming public, caused a run on the bank which shook its financial stability and came near to bringing about its ruin. The young criminal was afterwards arrested in New York, where all this happened, and brought to justice. He was only eight years old! This is no newspaper "Sunday Story." It is a fact. The facts are as follows: Joey Smith is, was, a newsboy, brought up on the streets, a waif without home and without much family. Some time ago, he fell within the sphere of the University settlement, lured thither by tales of Christmas trees and summer picnics. He had a bad reputation as a thief, and the ladies of the settlement started in to correct the tendency. He was encouraged to earn his money by legitimate means and to save it. The good ladies felt that their work had not been in vain when he appeared, one day, with three cents which he asked to be allowed to deposit in the Penny Provident Bank, an institution run for the benefit of the settlement children. The deposit was taken, entered and deposited in the cash drawer which serves as a vault, but there was no joy among the angels that night, for Joey was watching to see how the drawer was operated! He then concealed himself in the cellar and, as soon as banking hours were over and the coast was clear, he made a sortie and took out a five-dollar bill, representing the receipts for one day, all but a few cents. When the lady cashier opened shop next morning, she discovered and reported the theft. The news traveled through the corps of depositors in the Penny Provident like chain lightning. Immediately, there ensued a run which would have shaken the institution off its foundations had not the cashier come forward and offered to make good the loss pending the thief's capture. This was accomplished later by the police, but small good it did her, because Joey had left only thirty-eight cents of the original sum. The rest had gone for peanuts, stick-candy, soda-water, theatre-tickets, a small pistol, and a pack of gold-tipped cigarettes. So hardened was the young criminal that he expressed no remorse, only a fierce joy that he had spent all but thirty-eight cents before he was caught. The chief of police tried to awaken his conscience. "Joey," he said before committing him, "Aren't you ashamed to steal money from these ladies, were so good to you?" "A-a-h, gwan!" answered the bank-robber, "Whatcher givin' us? I could a staid at deir house till I croaked an' never had dat much fun!"

BOSWELL, JR.

BEFORE THE GREAT WHITE WALL.

Con. from page 6.

could be shaped into the prayers for the dead. Everyone knew that the end was near. There are no painful waits in this fatal ceremony.

Up at the end of the court appeared two black-robed priests preceded and followed by a guard. Between them marched the murderer. There was no hesitation nor was there bravado in his actions. He was simply going for his last walk and seemed to take it as a matter of course.

No special change came over the spectators beyond a peering on the part of some to catch a closer glimpse of the condemned. For the most part they watched the soldiers more closely than they did Chauces. Between the lines of infantry the procession slowly moved through the entire length of the sunny court-yard. One of the group was passing through the sunshine for the last time, yet he seemed not to be mindful of the fact. At the further end the chair was reached and back of it the light glared on the scarred white wall. Once as he caught sight of this chair for the first time did Chauces seem to hesitate, but with arms linked into that of the faithful priest he was borne on. The padre's voice had dropped to a murmur, and the end of the walk had come. Two officials quickly seated Chauces, binding him deftly against the high-backed chair. One priest had stepped aside, but the other had remained steadfast at his post holding a crucifix before the eyes of the doomed man, until his sight was cut off by the placing of a black bandage over them, the priest meanwhile uttering prayers for his salvation.

A sharp voice rang out calling the names of five of the assembled soldiers. The men so summoned stepped to the front, formed in a squad and quickly marched to their position. Not a hesitation, not a moment's delay. So easily was it all done that one might have judged that the scene had been rehearsed. One last instant did the priest remain by the murderer's side, then quickly stepped back. Hardly had this man of the church passed beyond the line of fire, when the command rang out to prepare. A moment of suspense, and the order to fire followed. There was the "ping" of five Remingtons, the spatter of one stray bullet against the great white wall, a gush of blood from the neck of the figure in the death chair, a relaxation of the figure's muscles as the head dropped to one side, and the end had come. The quick examination by the prison physician showed that Chauces' death was instantaneous. The firing squad had done its work well and was already moving back to its place in the ranks.

About the horrid figure in the chair the crowd thronged while near at hand the two padres with bowed heads still continued their intercession for the salvation of the departed soul. Their supplication ended, the priests slowly retraced their steps between the long lines of soldiers, following the same rout by which they had come, when instead of two there had walked three abreast. One of them had passed into the great beyond. One of them had passed into the great beyond, his life a forfeit to avenging justice.

From a scarcely perceptible murmur the voices of the spectators rose to ordinary tones, fresh cigarettes were lighted, and one by one they passed out of the court, leaving the prison attendants to perform the final work of unloosening the body and preparing it for burial.

Such is the end which is meted out to murderers in Uruguay. The great white wall at the end of Montevideo's prison court reflects back the glittering sunshine as it awaits the next to be condemned.

DOUGLAS WHITE.

1. A Small Offender. 2. Express Packages. 3. The Milkman. 4. A Conversation Across the Ropes. 5. No Admittance. 6. A Deserted Street. 7. The Barb-Wire Barricade. 8. Work for the Force. 9. They Refuse to be Photographed.

Photos by W. F. Street.

Scenes Outside the Chinatown Quarantine Lines, San Francisco.

THE CAMARINES CAMPAIGN.

Vivid Description of Bates' Trip to Southern Luzon.

IN a recent issue of the New York Sun, one of their special correspondents in the Philippines sends an interesting account of the taking of the two Camarines provinces, North and South, by General Bates and 2300 troops of the volunteer army. The Camarines were the last provinces to hold out against American occupation. The men were, it will be remembered, quietly conveyed down the coast by transports and gunboats, and took the province and the town of Nueva Carceres with little trouble. A landing was made on San Miguel Bay, the men being rowed ashore in small boats. The narrative continues:

When the first boats were cast off by the Baltimore they rowed inshore to a strip of black, damp-looking earth about twenty yards wide which ran into firm, green turf. This strip the men took to be the beach. They had no idea what it was. The boats went through the slight surf and ran into this black strip. The fact that the boats, heavily laden as they were, went to the very edge of this strip, where it met the water, did not warn anybody of the character of this "beach."

"Now, men, jump out," sang out an officer, and the men jumped. The first jump produced an exclamation and a sensation, neither of which is reproducible in print. The man who jumped was a long, tall, strong man. He had on his belt with 150 rounds, his haversack with three days' rations and forty rounds more, his blanket rolls and his canteen. He had his rifle in his hands. When he struck the black shiny "beach" there was a splash of this slimy mud and down he went over his knees in the nasty stuff. No feeble "Hully gee" or "Gee whiz" or even a seemingly forceful "Damn it," conveys any impression whatever of what he said. No telegraph or cable company could transmit it with safety to the wires. When it has been in cold storage a great many years it may have cooled down enough to be reproduced in silhouette. It is conjectured that the shot which was fired from his boat was set off by the friction of his remark passing near the rifle which went off. But the shot was a good thing. The most noticeable fact about our men out here is their irrepressible tendency to go toward the fire which happens to be directed at them.

Just as soon as that shot was fired some fellow let out a yell that the "gugus" were firing at them. The effect was instantaneous. The men who had been looking at the mud but a moment before with anything but desire to get into it, hopped out of the boats on all sides and began splashing toward the turfy shore line. Some of them fired as they went, the order having been given not to fire unless fired at. That is always interpreted to mean, "shoot back as quickly as you can." So in two minutes the men were out of the boats, that is nearly all of them. There were a few, and some officers, who had not been excited by the firing, and they deliberately pulled off their clothes and waded ashore with their bundles in their arms.

On the whole it was a great landing. No one on the part of the army out here remembers anything like it. It isn't at all likely to be repeated here. Why the insurgents didn't attack when our men were so helpless in the mud nobody knows. It is simply another to be added to the great number of excellent chances to stop us which they have let slip.

Nueva Carceres is twenty-five miles from the bay, up a shallow river. This, while it was practicable for the gunboats, would not admit the cruisers or transports of deeper draught. The gunboats accordingly slid up the stream, while the troops made a forced march in two columns, hoping to take the town unawares. In this, they were unsuccessful; they entered without resistance and found that the birds had flown.

By Tuesday afternoon, when the news came that the Americans were advancing from Calabanga and Barceloneta, on each side, Nueva Carceres was pretty well deserted by all who intended to get out. There were left the few who meant to risk themselves to the mercies of the despoilers, mostly Chinese, with a very few Spaniards, the Paulist fathers in their seminary, the Sisters of Charity in their convent, the one Englishman, who was having more fun than he had since the row began, and two or three Germans. Besides these, there were the fighting men. Antonio Guevara was in command. He is a braggart coward, who was one of the most active insurgent whips in the early days of organization in '98. He traveled pretty much all over the southern provinces urging the people to rise and defend themselves and their homes against the unrighteous invaders. He stimulated local valor with tales of the wonderful prowess of the Filipino and the craven-heartedness of the American. But when he heard the other day that the dastards had actually struck at both sides of his town at once, he threw himself face down in the dust in the street in front of the Englishman's house and wept aloud. This man was a Colonel, or had been. But when we went to Albay he promoted himself to General and belched forth fire and slaughter and divers dreadful things. His crown was withered leaves now, however, and he didn't choose it any longer. He had between 300 and 400 men armed with rifles and about 1500 others armed with bolos, bows and arrows, and lances made of bamboo with iron heads. Guevera is a Tagal, and his riflemen were of his own tribe. The other poor devils were Bicols. Some of them had been impressed into the army and served against their will, but many of them were willing enough, and such was their faith in their leaders that they actually believed they could withstand the Krag rifle with their foolish weapons of long-gone centuries.

Next in command to Guevara was Pena, an intransigeant scoundrel who has committed too many atrocities to dare to submit himself to the Americans, though he would like very much to be out of his present fix. He, like his chief, had promoted himself after the remnants of the once effective insurgent government had been shattered in the north last fall. Once he was a Major, but now he calls himself Colonel. The whole South Camarines province is full of the tales of the bloody things he has done. He has killed Spaniards and Chinese apparently for the mere sport of the killing with the savage joy of an Apache or a Piute. I have seen scores of letters from him to different Chinese demanding money in sums ranging all the way to $5,000. He is a Tagal, and associated with him is young Eduardo Robles, another Tagal, and as smooth-faced a scoundrel as ever seduced a woman or cheated a hangman.

Well, Guevara was out of it as soon as our men were on solid ground twenty miles and more away. The very minute that his paralyzing fright left him so that he recovered the use of his legs, he got them a-straddle of a pony, and ran the beast for forty miles. The other coward, Robles, ran with him, and the Mindora mestizo, Adolfo Sans, who rejoiced in the title of lieutenant-colonel and was military secretary for Guevara, as oleaginous and vile-faced a ruffian as any frey who ever violated his vows, went also. That left Pena in command. In spite of Gen. Wheaton's contemptuous classification of the Tagals as hounds, because "they wont stand up to be shot," there are some of them who have some courage. Pena seems to have thought himself to be one of these. At any rate, he stayed in Nueva Carceres that night when all the rest of the high officers ran away. He had a thousand bolomen and flecheros—men armed with bows and arrows—drawn up in the street in front of the house where flew the huge flag of the one Englishman in the place, and at intervals all night long he harangued them on their traditional valor and their ancestral fighting ability and how they would rid the fertile earth of its American incumbrance, and a few other choice sentiments of similar purport. He spent some time rocketting about the town and visiting his forces of riflemen. To one not used to them it would have looked very warlike, but the Englishman knew them and how fast and easily they can run. Also he knew that they have no outpost of their own to look out for. The unarmed amigo, the peaceful whelp who hangs out in the field and greets you with a grin, then looks for a chance to bolo you in the back, looks out for that sort of thing. He gives the alarm when the time comes and then trundles out to meet the Americans and saves his skin by being an amigo.

The force swept inland, trying to find and cut off the main insurgent body. At the town of Libmanon, they sent forward their native guide to interview the President and ask if there were any insurgents in the village.

Suddenly the column was halted. The guide had come running back. They were within a thousand yards of the town. He ran up to the Colonel and exclaimed: "Quiere combate, quiere combate." (He wants to fight.) He was badly frightened, and as soon as he had delivered his message he got to the rear and under cover.

Before the men had time to guess what it was all about they were deploying through the rice at the sides of the road. Deliberately but not slowly, B company, ninety men strong, swung off to the right and spread out in a thin line through the grain that rose almost to the arms of the men. A company went to the left of the road. The advance guard was strengthened and deployed across the broad road, the rear guard was called in a little and then they went forward. It was like a spectacle on the stage done with the precision of a play-actor's drill. Nobody knew where the insurgents were. Half a mile down the fields towards town some heads could be seen occasionally bobbin gut of the tall rice. That was all.

The men had advanced perhaps fifty yards when a line of heads rose from the rice well in advance and there came a volley, Mausers and Remington mixed. That was our order to begin firing. We have lost good men out here by waiting for the other fellows to open the fight, but we are conducting war on the humanitarian basis, whatever that is, and we must never shoot except in self-defence. The men fired at will. The ground over which they were advancing was so soggy and uneven and the tall rice so impeded their movements that it was not possible to advance and fire volleys at the same time, and it was better to go ahead than to fire volleys.

The intensity of the fire of our men is a never ending marvel to me, and the great wonder of it is that when they fire at will there is so little of it that is random. Almost every man has a good notion of the general location of the enemy and puts his bullets pretty close to the mark. Now, because they could see that their enemies were in the rice ahead of them, but could not tell how far away they might be, our men shot low and very fast, and the bullets cut through the rice with a terrifying swish. It was fifteen minues past 5 o'clock when the fight began. As our men went forward they saw that their line was not long enough on the right, the insurgents were outflanking us. There was no help for it. We had all the men on the line that could be put there and so our extreme right simply dropped behind ever so little and gave it to the men who were running around that end. After all it wasn't so much an effort to turn our flank as it was to escape from our terrific fire.

Orders to the rear guard were to look out for the wounded, and almost at the start they had work to do. Lieut. Galleher, the battalion adjutant, who was with the point, was hit in the groin very early, and other men were soon brought back to the road for the care of the surgeons. The bullets whistled down the road very unpleasantly, but the work was done as if there were no such thing as bullets. The steady advance of the line never let up. Wherever a head appeared above the rice half a hundred men shot at it on the instant. It got so that the men held their fire looking for the insurgents to show themselves. They realized that they had their enemy in a trap. It was very hard for a man to get out of the rice without rising up, and very few who showed themselves got away. The first volley from the insurgents had been pretty well delivered, but after they had tried their old tactics of holding their guns above their heads and blazing away in the general direction of our line, their Remington smoke was a deadly telltale for many of them. Wherever it rose a hail of Krag bullets followed. On our left the advance of the men was extremely difficult because the ground was so soft. In thick, sticky mud and tall grain a man with fifty pounds slung on him and trying to work a rifle cannot get along very fast. So Capt. Kelly—Yellowstone Kelly, Jed Crook's old scout—ordered his men to cease firing and try to get along faster. But the rifles only tangled in the rice, and not much of an improvement was made, not enough to pay for letting the insurrectos shoot at the men without return, so he set the guns going again.

By this time more than half of the field had been covered and we were getting close enough to town to see that they were firing from the church towers and from some of the larger buildings. There was also a stone wall to go over before we got in and behind that some of the more courageous were still staying and trying to keep up a show of fire. Now, however, we struck our first real business with bolo men. These fellows and a lot of flecheros were lying in the rice wating for our men to come in range. Fanaticism, foolishness or just plain ignorance, whatever it was that actuated them, many a man of them went to his death as steadily as the flower of the trained armies of civilization. Some of the bolo men feigned death and as our men came close to them, paying little attention, they rose and rushed them with their murderous knives. Bayonets had not been fixed and if the bullets did not end the attack it was the clubbed rifle many times. The flecheros did not wait so long and, strange to say, they did more damage than the bolos. They wounded three Americans with their arrows and only one man was cut with a bolo.

American Artillery Entering Nueva Carceres.

Fodder from Outside the Town.

Scenes in Central Mexico, Photographed by Oscar Maurer.

Copyright.

NEW YORK.

The Revival of the Chaperon.

LONDON.

Dramatic Gossip from the British Metropolis.

NEW YORK.

THE East has prevailed against the West; the pendulum has swung again. Chaperons have come back into favor. If you are a chaperon yourself, you will probably call it disfavor, because it means much work and watching for the lady who has passed her frivol-time and is lending the balance of respectability to society. Last year, it was different. 'Twas the fashion to give girls their liberty, and they golfed, rode, and walked with men pretty much as they pleased. But the young girls have hardly shown themselves worthy of the trust in them reposed, therefore the fashion has changed and the lines of chaperonage are being more and more closely drawn with the passage of the days.

In the East the chaperon has always been a more important figure than in any other part of the country, but now her sway is making itself felt more and more throughout the West, and is becoming more insistent even on its native heath. The fact is probably the result of a revulsion of feeling, a protest against the rather startling unconventionality of the new girl, and as such is a tribute to the underlying common sense of modern mothers. A young girl is still a young girl, even though she rides a wheel and plays golf and goes in for slum work and has a deep-rooted conviction that she knows more about life than her mother even dreamed. From time immemorial, the young girl has been an uncertain quantity in matters of discretion, and modern educational methods, while extending the problems, do not seem to have increased the discretion in due proportion.

To the conscientious chaperon, the bicycle used to be a great bother; she breathed a sigh of relief when it wheeled itself into disfavor. Unless she were very young and very spry, no well-conducted chaperon cared to tag a bicycling expedition. The most that she could do was to sit on the porch and hope that her charge would return in the allotted time. I am not so sure but that this terror to chaperons had something to do with the long-continued popularity of the wheel in the highest social circles. It is a war to the knife, when you think of it—the young people against the chaperon, the former trying to go as far as possible, the latter holding them back. The bicycle was a long-range gun for the young people.

Now that strict chaperonage is very much the thing, a new problem presents itself. What shall be the relation of the dragoness to the royal and ancient game of golf? Must she martyr herself to duty and range the links with her frivolous charges? Or is it enough to sit on the steps of the club-house, drink iced tea, and insist upon their return within the allotted space of time? There are slaves to duty who either play the game or trail over the links with the girls, putting a damper upon all the delights of golf flirtation Up at Bar Harbor last summer one incorruptible dragon shadowed her charming daughter so closely even on the links that knowing caddies gathered in a harvest of surreptitious coins by elaborate schemes for circumventing the old lady and engrossing her attention. The story goes that a proposal was actually put with the ball at the eighth hole, while Bob, the caddy, rescued the dragon from a big milk snake that he had turned loose from the caddy bag pocket at a critical moment. The girl was going on to Lenox the next day, and the man was a good-looking detrimental.

"He was a mighty good sort," so Bob told the tale afterward, "and we are great friends, and he says: 'Bob, I'm playing a handicap,' says he. 'You've helped me out of bunkers before. Now, if I begin whistling a "Hot Time," you fix that old lady if you have to take a niblick to her.' I'd been associating with her a good deal off'n on, and I knew how she felt about snakes, so I just loaded up. Gee whiz, what a drive that snake made—lofted her over a creek and a stone wall. He wanted to give me a fiver, but I says: "Nope, I got my pay out of the old lady,' and he holds out his hand and says: "You're all right, Bobby.'"

But chaperoning is a hard graft, anyway you look at it. Each comfortable and complete outfit for a lively American girl ought, it seems to me, to contain at least two chaperons—one regular, who knows and understands the ways of the girl, and an extra to act as relief when the first is knocked out or exhausted. I advocate this reform after watching a May chaperon come trailing in, wilted and exhausted, with a fresh young couple just warmed up by the exercise. May, you see, is the chaperon's worst month. It is a logical time for a halt and a vacation, between the summer and winter season, but there is no vacation for her. If it is not a springtime walk, then it is a college promenade, which is really the worst thing she has to face. To begin with, one duenna has to take six or seven girls to those functions, and she has the wits of several hundred ingenious young men pitted against her wits in devising ways and means.

Oh, those teas in college rooms! and those walks, and those drives, and dances, and those verandas, and those baujo concerts, and those junketings in the wee sma' hours! Argus himself couldn't effectually fill the chaperon's roll. She must put her conscience to sleep or she'll have no sleep herself. One New York woman who chaperoned eight boarding school girls on a promenade trip this season came home, at th end of the five days, and promptly had a case of nervous prostration. She had cause, for the college man, being young and still full of tricks, is especially clever with chaperons and frightfully impudent in his dealings with them.

"If any one of the crowd has a real young married sister bring her along for a chaperon," wrote a Yale junior to his partner for the promenade. "If not, engage a blind deaf mute, and if she's paralyzed so much the better."

There is a class of girls to-day in which the lines of chaperonage are exceedingly vague and adjustable. The independent and self-supporting young woman who is working in New York, is away from her family, and has little or no social position, has grown to be a law unto herself in such matters. If she followed the ordinary social rules she would be practically barred from social recreation and live like the Egyptian hermit, in crowded solitude. Often she carries her liberty of action beyond the bounds of discretion; and by doing it, gives the cause of the other women in the same situation a distinct push backward. The over-resumptuous advocates of woman's independence do more to make the independent woman's position difficult than all the bitter critics of the bachelor girl. Even the most emancipated and self reliant of bachelor girls owes the proprieties the concession of an occasional chaperon; and the young girl with any pretentions to social position in New York must, to-day, resign herself to strict chaperonage, or expect severe and unpleasant criticism.

RAYMOND RUSH.

His Wife Insisted

And he thought he'd humor her, no doubt. The result shows that a man rarely loses by following his wife's advice. Those who suffer from obstinate cough, bronchitis, weak lungs and ailments in general which tend to consumption, will find speedy relief and perfect cure in the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures ninety-eight per cent. of those who give it a fair and faithful trial. It purifies the blood, heals the lungs and builds up the body with firm flesh instead of flabby fat. The "Discovery" contains no alcohol, neither opium, cocaine, nor other narcotics.

"Only for Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery I think I would be in my grave to-day," writes Mr. Moses Miles, of Hilliard, Uinta Co., Wyoming. "I had asthma so bad I could not sleep at night and was compelled to give up work. It affected my lungs so that I coughed all the time, both day and night. My friends all thought I had consumption. My wife had taken Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, and it had helped her so much she insisted on my trying his 'Golden Medical Discovery'—which I did. I have taken four bottles and am now a well man, weighing 185 pounds, thanks to Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I would like you to print this testimony as it may help some other poor sufferer."

Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser, in paper binding, free on receipt of 21 one-cent stamps to pay expense of mailing only. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

LONDON.

DOES anyone on my home side of the pond know that London has an official censor of plays, whose duty and privilege it is to sit down on such dramatic performances as he deems improper or immoral? I did not, until his office was mentioned in connection with the mild scandal over "Zaza." Strangest of all is the name and history of the office with which he is connected. "The Master o the Revels," of whom we hear so much in the accounts of the Elizabethan plays, the functionary who, as court stage-manager, stirred up spiced amusement to tickle the jaded palates of the Virgin Queen's court, is the wight who is now intrusted with dictating as to the morals of the English stage. The honors of the office sit now upon the shoulders of George Alexander Redford, who was appointed about a dozen years ago. He passed "The Degenerates", "The Gay Lord Queux", "Nurse", and other plays of the class; therefore, it was hardly to be expected that he would not let "Zaza" go past him.

Yet Mr. Belasco's version of "Zaza" has excited controversy here and agitation in the Lord Chamberlain's office, and this will probably be helpful to the box office. The staid critic of "The Athenæum" remarks that "license upon our stage spreads, and the time seems not too distant when our maids and matrons will find it convenient, as in the days of Wycherley and Dryden, to wear a mask when they visit the theatre." Only one journal has described the play as dull, and that would be the most effective method of emptying the Garrick Theatre. One critic went so far as to refer to Mrs. Carter's acting as a tour de force that would draw the town, and the power of her performance is generally admitted. She had a great personal success on the opening night, when she carried the house with her by the sheer strength of her acting and it now seems probable that the piece, since it was not ordered off by the censor of plays and the Lord Chamberlain, will have a prosperous run. The English critics lay stress upon the fact that she is not Rejane, but this is not a convincing argument against the vigor and intelligence of the impersonation. One of the accepted maxims of London theatrical management is that charm is more important than power in an actress's equipment. Mrs. Carter refutes this stock saying. She has power without charm, and holds her London audiences throughout the play by virtue of this old-fashioned endowment.

Mr. Wyndham's Cyrano is praised in a perfunctory way by the critics, but it does not bear comparison with Coquelin's superb performances at the Lyceum Theatre a year ago. The famous play of M. Rostand cannot be adequately ttranslated into English prose, and the adapters have sacrificed it by cutting out passages which illuminate the part. The performance of the French company at the Lyceum Theatre was so spirited and sympathetic that the English version at Wyndham's Theatre hardly seemed to preserve the essential motives of the original drama, and certainly impairs the force of the scheme of self-sacrifice which imparts dignity and nobility to M. Rostand's work. Neither Mr. Wyndham nor his company is in good form in this play, which seems unsuited to their talent.

The popularity of American stage-folk still continues. Edna May, who took the town in "The Bell of New York," is back again with "An American Beauty"—not so good or successful a play, by half as the "Pelle", but as good a vehicle for Edna's peculiar charm which set the Johnnies agape last year. She is not spoiled be her success, now that she has recovered a little from that slight case of swelled head which afflicted her just after the "Belle" was taken off; she is still the hardest-working actress in all London. When they were preparing the "Beauty," she was on the move in all her waking houas. She was rehearsing, or studying, or having a dress fitted, or being photographed, or coaching the cast the whole day and night long. When there was a lull from these, the charity Bazaar fiend and the autograph demon were hard after her. Her signature is more in demand than any in England, and she could make money by selling it, did she so desire. All these things considered, it is small wonder that she somettmes faints from fatigue.

The reigning small fad of the hour, the American bar of the charity bazaar, was the doings of Mrs. James Brown Potter, who has had the institution under her care ever since. Just now, she is organizing one for the National Bazaar, a great benefit to be given for Tommy Atkins at the Royal Palace Hotel. All the prettiest American actresses in London will serve as barmaids; they will be assisted by a throng of volunteer bartenders, of whom the Duke of Manchester is to be chief.

KATERINA.

Don't drink the first thing the bartender offers. Call for Jesse Moore "AA" whiskey and insist on getting it.

Wherever there is a piano there should be a pianola. The pianola plays any piano. Any one can play it. Call and see it at Kohler & Chase, 26 and 30 O'Farrell St., sole agents.

J. J. Pfister KNITTING CO.

103 Post St., S. F.
near Kearney.

Beautiful New Styles.

Men's, Women's and Children's

BATHING SUITS.

Alapaca and Knitted

At Prices to Suit Everybody.

Sweaters, Jerseys, Golf Vests and Jackets

Outing and Riding Leggings,

Sporting Goods.

Send for Illustrated Catalogues.

A Delicious Beverage for all Occasions

Ross's Royal Belfast Ginger Ale

Connoisseurs pronounce it "the best imported."

Sherwood & Sherwood,
AGENTS
212-214 Market St.

HOTEL VENDOME.

At San Jose is one of Central California's most beautiful hostelries. In the midst of its own twelve-acre park; two blocks from the railroad station where almost hourly trains connect with the outside; the starting point for Lick Observatory; the center of a greater number and variety of attractions than any other place on the Coast; furnished finely, graded and watered roads for driving and cycling lead in every direction; with over 250 elegantly furnished rooms, and suites with bath and toilet; perfect in appointment, service and all the accessories of comfort, and one of the most attractive features of San Jose, the metropolis of the world renowned Santa Clara Valley.

GEO. P. SNELL,
Manager.

Meditations of a Matron.

THIS has been a great week for me, my Dear Diary. Every night in a different resort. I do not, in fact, cannot inquire what the Ideal and I are to do this summer. We are seriously considering now, of taking a house in San Rafael this year, in order to have it for next summer. One cannot get a really nice place there at this time for love or money. It is such a nice place, too, in which to rent a house. The life there is so free, in fact, as the people spend all their time on the golf links, or driving, there is no particular occasion for much dress. Another place we spent a day house hunting was at Belvedere. Anyone there now, who has a house to rent, expects the "summer outer" to take it for six months. Both the Ideal and I hold Belvedere in great esteem, but just fancy our living there for six months! It would be almost as bad as living with mama all the rest of my life. Mama and I are not quite so happy as we were previous to my marriage, I am sure I am almost as amenable to reason as before, still mama is exigeant as John Drew so often said of his wife in the "Tyranny of Tears." We saw it in San Jose last week, I quite lost my heart over again to Drew. "He can have me" I said to Robert—that is the Ideal's name. I do not think I ever told you before. I don't call him Bob either. Speaking of San Jose, it is an exceedingly pretty place. We drove for miles into the country, and I was just wild to own a uit ranch. We investigated the matter and ound that the only sure kind of ranch to ave its one of pears. The frost hurts vines, runes, apples and apricots are not supposed be particularly remunerative. I do not want ranch unless it could pay for itself. Mama as a pear orchard and considers it the best of l her investments. I hope to get an interest it someday, unless she should happen to eed it to either Leila or Arthur, I know if eila becomes the owner I shall get some of e pears—but Arthur—well Arthur is a cluban and is extravagant. Club life, even Robert ys, is an expensive luxury.

MISS LEILA VOORHIES,
Who was Married to Lieutenant Guy Scott on June 14.

Robert and I both wonder how it is that year and year out no matter how the stock marset or anything else is, Del Monte always eeps up its standard of cooking, and serving. hat place is really a wonder. We realize it the property of a rich company, but how few g institutions retain their magnificence all e year.

My girl friends and I have been interested the accounts of Mary Crocker's wedding. e read every day in the papers of the exense of the gown, veil and laces. The truth of the matter is that the lace on Mary's gown belonged to her mother. Mrs. Easton has quantities of lace for the girls, for Mrs. Fred Crocker was very fond of it. In fact, I believe she cared more for really fine lace than she did for jewelry. Caroline Taylor, who was the bridesmaid, is cousin to our Carrie, one of the Taylors of Baltimore. Edith McBean was at the wedding, but neither Caro Crockett nor Genevieve Carolan. Caro is at present in San Francisco. She is one of the girls I particularly like. The wedding must have been a very fine affair, for Mrs. Alexander is an adept at superb entertaining. Johnny Merril and Miss Snider are being quite extensively entertained. Olive Holbrook gave them a dinner at her home last Friday evening, and afterwards Harry took a party of twenty-two to see "When we were Twenty-One." I have now seen it twice. Maxine Elliott is beautiful on the stage, but I never quite realized how stunning looking a woman she is until she joined us at the Bohemian Club afterwards. We had a jolly supper there. All jolly, bright people—the Wheelers, Mamie McNutt, Ella Goodall, Ella Morgan, Mabel Craft, the Buckbees, Ed Greenway, Gus Costigan, and I've forgotten who else. Miss Snider is quite able to keep her end up in bright company. She is quick and very attractive. I have always known Johnny, and as he is a particular friend of mine, it is not necessary to tell you more of him. I have always been noted for the judgment I have displayed in selecting friends.

Leila Voorhies and Guy Scott were married amidst a profusion of beautiful flowers Tuesday evening at her mother's house on California street. Leila made a charming bride. How happy Guy looked. Leila did too, but I suppose she felt a little sad at leaving home and friends. It was a pretty wedding. I know Leila will be happy—that is, if she is anything like me. Of course I was out two years and as mama would say, "a most worldly young person," but I think Leila is a good deal of a girl of the world, even though she is young and has not seen so very much of this life after all.

All the girls of the season were represented. I do not think I ever saw Elizabeth Huntington look nicer. I like her so much. She has not been in the least spoiled by her season's success and she was a decided success, too. Bernie Drown, looked nice; so did Katherine Dillon and Bessie Center.

Now I think Diary dear, I have told you all the news of this week. Even at the Summer resorts things have not yet commenced to brighten up particularly, but I expect they will in the near future.

MRS. CRICKET.

There is not an ounce of headache in a barrel of it—Jesse Moore "AA" whtskey.

Realizing how large a number of our readers at the present time, are interested in and desirous of obtaining the very best of tonsorial wo k, it is a pleasure to write of an establishment that is perfect.

The certainty of absolute cleanliness and comfort at the Sanitary shaving, shampooing, hair-cutting, and bathing Parlors in the California Hotel, Bush Street, near Kearny, since Louis Frick became Manager is worth a more than passing notice.

All tools and articles used upon and by customers are thoroughly sterilized daily by the use of a Lilly Patent, Formaldehyde Sterilizer, rendering di ease by contagion impossible. The per fumes ard p wders used are the finest that are imported, and a trial will cause you to send your cup and outfit there.

Most everyone who has whisky for sale compares its virtues to Jesse Moore "AA" whisky.

DEGREES IN INSULT.—An English country schoolmaster, of the old "spare not the rod" kind, had a boy complain to him that another boy had called him a grasshopper. The offender was called up and punished in the usual way. As he resumed his seat, the culprit was heard to whisper: "By George, I'm glad I didn't call him a hippopotamus!"

MARK TWAIN AGAIN.—In giving evidence before the Royal Commission on Copyright, Mark Twain complained that his manuscript was once taxed as "gasworks." "And," said he plaintively, "that hurt me—that did!"

Moet & Chandon

(The Largest and Oldest Champagne House in the World).

White Seal (Grand Cuvée), of exceptional bouquet and dryness.—Court Journal.

573-579 Market Street, San Francisco | R. H. PEASE, President and Manager. | 73 and 75 First Street, Portland, Ore.

Have You a Piano that You do not Use?

Is the piano in your home a musical instrument, and do you enjoy it as such, or does it remain unused for months at a time and become practically nothing more than an article of furniture.

The Pianola

Is ringing into use thousands of pianos that have been silent for many years.

It is bringing music into homes where it has long been a stranger.

It is making players of people who, lacking musical training, had never expected to experience the pleasure of producing music for themselves.

It is increasing the repertoire of amateur and professional pianists by making the entire literature of the piano instantly available without study and without practice.

The Pianola looks like a small cabinet. It has small felt-covered fingers that rest on the keys of the piano and, operated by pneumatic power, strike the keys with a pliant, yielding and remarkably sympathetic touch that is almost identical with that of the human fingers.

When not in use the Pianola may be easily detached from the piano and moved to another part of the room.

The Pianola can be used in connection with any Grand or Upright piano, and does not in any way mar or disfigure the instrument. It can be easily and quickly adjusted by any one.

The action of the Pianola is so simple that even a child can readily learn to play it; at the same time it is capable of so much expression that its greatest admirers are those who best understand and appreciate good music.

Price $250 Upward.

The Pianola can be bought by monthly payments. Our instruments are gladly shown to the merely curious as well as to intending purchasers.

Kohler & Chase, Sole Agents.

26, 28 and 30 O'FARRELL STREET.

IN BOOKDOM

THE magazines this month with two respectable exceptions have the Boer war in common. Scribner's had experts on both sides. Harper's sympathies are plainly with the Dutchmen, and their man describes the combat purely from the biltong standpoint. McClure's expert who, like other contributors to that dashing magazine, had extraordinary opportunities, gives what reads like a very fair estimate of President Kruger's character. In fact, one gathers the impression that the highly vaunted Oom Paul is a specious domineering old robber who justifies his dishonesty out of the Bible,and might, as a ruler of Legislatures and a controller of Judges, give points to Boss Croker at his worst. It is, however, an intelligent study of a contradictory character of great power and determination whom the author declares is wrongly surnamed the Lincoln of South Africa. It is rather Bismark, the man of blood and iron, whom Kruger resembles, though it is a Bismark without nobility or personal charm.

The most important article of the month is unquestionably Nicola Tesla's contribution to the Century—"The Problem of Increasing Human Energy." It is an extraordinary document covering not only a variety of research in new domains of science, but it embodies the personal opinions of the writer as to diet, conduct, morality, war and temperance—as conducing to the development of energy. I have not space here to detail half the remarkable discoveries and suggestions contained in this lengthy article, but therein Tesla wanders from an advocacy of vegetarianism to describing a system of oxydizing the nitrogen of the atmosphere for the creation of fertilizers with which the capacity of the earth to support its inhabitants can be indefinitely increased. In another interesting chapter he tells how armaments and armies are to be dimininished and predicts that in the distant future war will be waged by means of machines. Such a machine he devised and called a telautomaton. What is curiously notable about this essay is the simplicity of the verbiage, explaining problems and theories of extreme complexity. Tesla yet does so in such a way that the average man may follow understandingly. One of the highest literary achievements of this remarkable article is a comprehensive statement of the principles of wireless telegraphy.

The Atlantic, which grows rather academic under the new regime, has for a start Grover Cleveland, on the "Freedom of the Executive"—his Princeton lecture. Rather a card to have an ex-president for a contributor, and it must be said the article is more notable for its weight than its interest and one cannot help contrasting it with that historic paper in which Olney, Cleveland's Secretary of State, preached originally the doctrine of expansion, and that but two months before Dewey sailed into Manila Bay. Apropos of politics in McClure's, there is in the Century an article by Theodore Roosevelt on "Reform and Reformers" (characteristically vigorous) in which the errors of the amateur statesman are sagaciously pointed out. McClure's supplies, anent this same Roosevelt a glimpse of secret history, in which the passage of the much debated corporation franchise bill is explained. It serves to depict the struggle the Governor had to persuade the members of the Legislature and the representatives of organized capital of his courage and earnestness. He finally did so, and with a vengeance, as Mr. Stephens narrates. It may be history, but it is also a pretty good story.

A fruitful topic at this season is the Presidential contention commencing with the national conventions and ending with the election. Scribner's, McClure's and Ainslee's have all articles describing just how a Chief Executive is created. The Century supplies a column skit in "The Stained Glass Political Platform" a type of document that I imagine will find many imitations in the forthcoming contest.

The Philippines are represented in both Lippincott's and Scribner's. The former has one of General Charles King's genial tales of army life,the scene of which is set in Manila. The hero is a gallant, wealthy, thoroughly well set up volunteer officer, but the heroine whom, after many pages of hardship and misfortune he wins, is the daughter of a regular army officer, so both sides of the service are taken care of. One cannot help thinking what a fortunate happening the Filipino embroglio was for the soldier author, for the old background of the desert post and the Indian raid had been worked nigh to the bone. Scribner's has the clearest and most authorative account of our new possessions yet published. It is written by Geo. F Becker. who was detailed in July, 1898, to accompany the army to Manila as geologist and was afforded admirable opportunities to investigate the physical characteristics of the islands and the mental development of their peoples. His conclusions are of great interest. To commence with. He negatives the impression of great gold deposits—the precious metal is found in every stream but investigattion has developed no large quartz veins. Copper and iron are found in Luzon—the former in quantity, the iron far removed from the coal deposits of the islands. These latter are the most valuable mineral asset of the Phillippines. It is a lignite with about two-thirds to three-quarters the heating effect of Cardiff coal. The chief resources of the territory are agricultural. The soil is of extraordinary fertility, the climate is much superior to what it has been represented. No American accustomed to the climate of the Southern States need fear the exactions of Luzon. As for the people, they are mutually immature and as Mr. Becker puts it "their characters are more comparable with those of Anglo-Saxon boys than with those of men of our race." The Chinese Mestizos are really the dangerous element, being ciafty, bold and unscrupulous and the author gives it as his opinion that they constitute the inspiration and backbone of the insurrection.

In the matter of fiction the magazines are well supplied. There's an extraordinary piece of cynicism called "Copy" by Edith Wharton in Scribner's; a pretty sketch "The Mouse" in the Century's; E. W. Lounshind's "Deput of Jack" in Harper's is capital; the Whilomville story by the late Stephen Crane, in which the Johnie Hedge, like his tormentors, is extremely well done. The author has seldom done anything better than the description of the sensation of a boy making his first appearance at a new school. It is exquisitely vivid, real and humorous. The light chaff is delightful. Tommy seems to be losing favor with the readers of Scribner's serial. He is really not behaving ideally. I have too much respect for Mrs. Humphrey's ward to read Eleanor in installments—the tale is supplying Harper's with expensive frontispieces however. Zangwill's drama has got into his prose for the entertaining people in "the Mantle of Elijah" now mere dramatis personae and will eventually appear at our leading theatres. There are two pretty good railroad journeys,the better in McClures,which has an extremely vivid description of a first run by Elimore Elliott Peake. In the same number is the tale of "The Little Boy and Pa," a charming and touching bit of sentiment.

C.

The Orignal Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to-lunch.

Morning, noon or night you will find a glass of Ross's Royal Belfast Ginger Ale both cheering and refreshing.

For more than fifty years the famous Jesse Moore whisky has been the standard brand the world.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF MINERVA WASHER, DECEASED—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, P Boland, Administrator of the estate of Minerva Washer, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at his place of business, No. 238 Montgomery street, City and County of San Francisco, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

P. BOLAND,
Administrator of the Estate of Minerva Washer, Deceased.

Dated at San Francisco, May 19th, 1900.
M. C. HASSETT, 308-10-12, Phelan building.
Atty for Administrator.

MOORE' POISON OAK REMEDY
Cures Poison Oak and All Skin Diseases. Sold by All Druggists.

FOR AN OUTING....

Visit one of the many Mineral Springs Resorts along the California Northwestern Railway Co.

Leesee of San Francisco and North Pacific Railway Company. (The Picturesque Route of California.)

Where the Famous Mineral Waters of the World are Duplicated.

If you prefer the simple home life of the Ranch, free from fashion's restraints, there are many in our section from which to choose. But if you would rather the tent in some shady nook, near a lovely lake, or on the bank of some beautiful stream, remember such locaions are numerous and free of charge.

Call for "VACATION," a little book just issued by the Company, giving Camping Locations, Hotels, Mineral Spring Resorts, and a list of one hundred and sixty-seven Farms and homes, where Board for the Summer can be secured at from $5 00 to $8.00 per week.

Ticket Office, 650 Market street (Chronicle building).
General Office, Mutual Life building, Sansome and California streets, San Francisco.
H. C. WHITING, General Manager,
R. X. RYAN, General Passenger Agent.

DUNCAN SPRINGS HOPLAND Mendocino Co.
Two miles from railroad station; 101 miles from San Francisco; enequalled soda and magnesia springs; hospitable management; first-class table; hard-finished hotel; picturesque site and surroundings; two trains daily; long-distance telephone; terms $10 to $12 per week; housekepping cottages $15 to $20 per month. Waters bottled by W. H. Bone, 605-607 Merchant street, S. F. Through fare $3 80 Send for circulars. Address O. HOWELL.

IF YOU WANT THE BEST COAL OIL.
BUY

A Toilet Necessity.

WAKELEE'S COLD CREAM of Roses.

Made with pure Almond Oil and Distilled Water of Roses.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS
22-inch, in all numbers Medium, Soft and Hard
ALSO
Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide
Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks
Manufactured by Mount Vernon Co. Baltimore.
MURPHY, GRANT & CO. Pacific Coast Sole Agents

Brushes for barbers, bakers, bootblacks bath-houses, billiard tables, brewers bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.
BUCHANAN BROS., Brush Mfrs.
TEL. 6610 608 SACRAMENTO STREET

MONTROSE BICYCLE SENT FREE
on approval to your address WITHOUT A CENT IN ADVANCE. SEND US YOUR ORDER, state whether you wish lady's or man's wheel; give color, height of frame and gear wanted and WE WILL SHIP THE WHEEL C. O. D. on approval, allowing you to uncrate and examine it fully before you accept it. If it is not all and more than we claim for it, and a better wheel than you can get for any where near the price from any one else, refuse it and we will pay all express charges ourselves. The "MONTROSE" Bicycle at our Special Agent's sample price of $16.50 is the greatest bargain in a bicycle ever offered. We guarantee it equal to any $40 wheel on the market, and you need not accept it nor pay a cent if you do not find it as we represent. We are EXCLUSIVE BICYCLE MANUFACTURERS and take this method of quickly introducing our 1900 MODELS. This offer of a sample wheel at this low price is made to secure a RIDER AGENT in each town to represent us and take orders. Our agents make money fast.
SPECIFICATIONS. Frame, 22, 24 or 26 inch; ladies, 22 inch. Best Shelby seamless tubing with forged connections, flush joints, improved expander device to fasten seat post and handle bar; Royal Arch crown; the celebrated Mavis hubs and hanger—the easiest running known; Record "A" tires, the best and one of the most expensive tires on the market. The genuine $4 Mesinger Hygienic saddle; pedals, tools and accessories the best obtainable. Enameled in black, maroon or coach green, highly finished and ornamented; special finished nickelling on all bright parts. We thoroughly test every piece of material that goes into this machine. Our binding year's guarantee bond with each bicycle.
FREE to any one sending the $16.50 cash in full with order we will send free a genuine Burdick 10,000 mile barrel pattern cyclometer; or a high grade floor pump. Your money all back if you are not perfectly satisfied.
CHEAP WHEELS. We do not manufacture the cheap department store kind of wheels, such as many new concerns and big supply houses advertise and sell as high grade. We can furnish them, however, at $5 to $7 stripped; or $9 75 to $12.50 complete. We do not guarantee nor recommend them. BEFORE ORDERING a bicycle of any one else, no matter who or how cheap, write us and let us tell you how much we can save you on the same machine.
If you are UNABLE to BUY a wheel we can assist you to EARN A BICYCLE by distributing catalogues for us a few days. We need one person in each town for this purpose. We have several hundred SECOND HAND WHEELS taken in trade which we will close out at $3 to $10 each; also some shopworn samples and '99 models very cheap. Send for Bargain List. OUR RELIABILITY is unquestioned. We refer to any bank or business house in Chicago, or any express or railroad company. We will send you letters of reference direct from the largest banks in Chicago if you wish it.
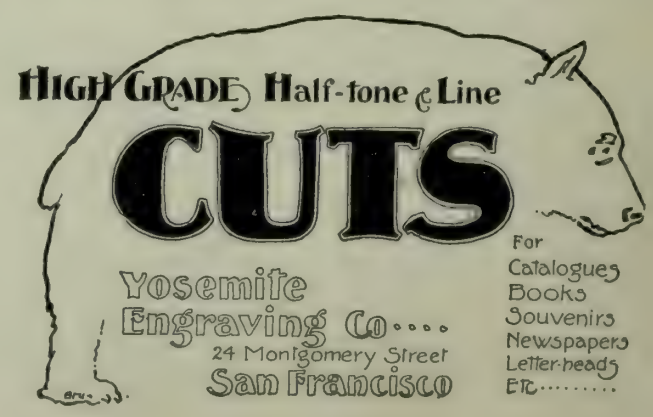
SEND YOUR ORDER today. This low price and these special terms of shipment without deposit will be withdrawn very soon. ☞ Give name of this paper.
J. L. MEAD CYCLE COMPANY, Chicago, Ill.

We Make the Cuts in this Paper.



A Bowery Cinderella.

TERESA MARY McCABE had an absolutely eventless career until the happening which crowned her with an unusual social glory in the eyes of the upper East Side. It was at a ball given by the Harlem Cuckoos that Miss McCabe made her debut. Teresa had never been to a real affair until the evening of the Harlem Cuckoos' "swarry," for that is what the Cuckoos called their annual merry making at Acropolis Hall.

She had dim dreams, however, of a time when she, too, would have acquired a "steady" who would take her to affairs, for all important functions are affairs in the right lexicon of East Side youth. So she practiced dancing all by herself, evenings, on the roof and was an expert in all the fancy steps, although she had never had a lesson in her life. Dancing came naturally to Teresa. She had danced as a two-year old baby, lifting the hem of her petticoat over her chubby legs and making uncertain movements with them which won such encomiums from her auditors that it became a feature to the entertainment offered by the McCabes of an evening.

Then when she grew to be a little girl she danced to the tune of the organs in the street and Tomaso Fornaro, the leading grinder of the section, and reputed to be a Count in hard luck, offered her the sum of five cents if she would accompany him for eight blocks on his evening tour, the monetary arrangement to be a secret between him and Teresa. This lucrative field was abandoned under pressure from the agents of a children's aid society, just as Teresa was beginning to amass money.

After that Teresa took to the roof and danced. She danced mornings before she went to work, sometimes through sheer joy of living. She danced during the lunch hour in the factory and she danced evenings in the twilight and again in the moonlight. Naturally she grew lissome, graceful, easy in her movements, with limbs that swayed like a flower's stalk when she walked. In fact Teresa was not unlike a flower. Her head possessed with chestnut curls that had a reddish glint in them and her skin was transparent white with a few golden freckles on the cheeks. Her eyes were like the opal with strange flames in them of green and red deepening to brown that glittered. But all this did not dawn upon Teresa's friends until after the night of her triumph. The general impression was that she was a tall, thin girl with red hair and freckles and without that designated by the young ladies of the shop as a shape.

At the factory there was much anticipatory talk of the Harlem Cuckoos' swarry. Nearly all the girls were going for they all had gentlemen friends but Teresa. She wondered why she hadn't and put it all to her looks and then puzzled over the fact that Mame Hastings who was cross-eyed and limped, had a lady. Secretly Teresa brooded over the problem as she stitched at her machine. It was beginning to worry her now when the girls talked of what they were going to wear. There was to be a cake walk and the Cuckoos had obtained the promise of the presence of Holleran, now champion lightweight of the world since his noted battle with the Hoboken Wonder, this event preceding the Cuckoo's swarry by only a week. Holleran was a great man now, although he was only 24. He owned a saloon and played a star part in a melodrama that had been written for him, and had diamonds and a furred overcoat but he was not proud and remembered that he had once been a Cuckoo himself.

It was the night before the swarry that Teresa's annoyance reached such a point that she shed tears. The foreman noticed it. It was his duty to walk among the buzzing machines and see that none of the young ladies wasted time, and he was therefore not a favorite, for it was through his misdirected enthusiasm in the cause of earning his salary that the girls often found a shortage in their weekly envelopes on pay day. So their jibes pursued him as he trod the aisles between the machines. Teresa alone desisted from any outward expression of her dislike for the man and he revelled her by passing over all her lapses. It was an undoubted mash, the girls said, but some girls were too slow to know a mash when they had one.

But the night before the swarry Teresa's heart was heavy. Never before had she so longed to go anywhere as to this affair, where she might see Brick Holleran, whose picture had been in the newspapers and who was to wear the champion belt, while he umpired the cake walk. Teresa purposely lingered in the room where the girls hung their hats, until the merry, laughing crowd had disappeared. Then she went out alone and the foreman was waiting for her.

"Going to the affair to-morrow night?" he asked, although he knew quite well that she wasn't. She was the only girl in the room that hadn't talked about it for the last month.

"No," said Teresa crossly.

"Will you give me the pleasure to escort you?" he said, in accordance with the rules of the "Society Guide," which he had even then in his pocket.

"I guess so," said Teresa, and turned and fled up the street.

That night she toiled long over a washtub and later over a hot stove doing up her white swiss confirmation gown, which she had not worn for three years. What to wear on her feet perplexed her until she remembered that she had worn white slippers with her dress, and that her mother put them away with the veil and the wreath that made part of the costume. When they were brought out from the bureau drawer they fitted perfectly.

When the foreman called for her next evening he positively gasped. She looked like a fairy with her red mane aureoled about her face and the thin, girlish gown showing her neck and arms. He realized then that Teresa's debut would be a sensation, how much of a one he never guessed. He desperately resolved that he would impress her with his importance and the ways of good society. So, still with the "Guide" precepts in mind, he said, as he stepped off the car: "It is only half-past 9 and the affair don' begin till 11. Allow me to offer you some refreshments."

Then he steered the way into a brilliantly lit restaurant, where most of the tables were empty, and inquiring of Teresa what she would like and being informed that she desired a soda lemonade, promptly waved the idea away and called for champagne. He did not know if this was in accordance with the "Guide," but it seemed to him a proper and "sporty" thing to do.

Teresa knew it was not good form to drink beer at balls, but she knew nothing about this strange, bubbling stuff the taste of which she approved of. And with an inherited capacity which she was entirely unaware of, for the McCabes had been hard drinkers for generations, she finished her glass as the waiter filled it, while her escort's eyes grew apprehensive. And Teresa felt a strange bubbling of life within her, and everything looked rose-colored and she told the foreman so. Going out she caught a glimpse of herself in the mirrored wall. She was smiling, radiant, her cheeks delicately pink; her hair loosened a bit, glittered in the electric light. Her neck and arms gleamed under their thin covering. The waiters eyed her admiringly as she passed out and the cashier at whose desk they stopped on their way out tendered her the quill tooth-picks—his private stock.

Acropolis Hall was full of Cuckoos and Cuckooesses. The band was playing a waltz and as Teresa and her partner came upon the scene and started to circle over the glassy surface of the floor, a certain hush fell; few recognized in the graceful beauty with whom he undulated Teresa McCabe, the dead slow. As she danced, the enthusiasm an artist feels in his achievements crept into her movements. She fairly floated in the arms of the foreman, her white draperies swerving about her slender limbs; her hair floating in crinkled strands, escaped from the pins. She was a sprite, a wood nymph, and the Cuckoos to a man realized her charm as she danced. Afterward she received the intoxicating homage of sudden belleship. Partners sought her in a school and she laughed and talked with the ease of a fashionable debutante. She seemed to have just awakened.

The general topic was the coming of Brick Holleran. Would he come? Then another question—would he really wear the "champeen" belt? Some said it was kept in a safe somewhere and never worn, like the crown of a king. Others declared that all "champeens" wore diamond belts as other men wear suspenders.

It was past midnight when the floor manager gave up the arrival of the Brick and put on the cake walk. The band began its most rollicking coon melody. The couples pranced down the center of the room, but on the raised dais hung with flags, where Holleran was to award the cake, was only emptiness. And then he came. There was a commotion at the door The band began to hail the conquering hero, the walk stopped, and across the room swung Holleran bowing and smiling right and left, while a cheer went up with many soprano notes in its music. He looked a worthy hero—tall, broad shouldered, handsome as a prince in his evening clothes.

Miss McCabe's performance in the cake walk was a triumph that will never be forgotten by those who witnessed it. Gradually other couples were counted out until she alone with her partner walked the length of the hall together. The grace of her posturing, the poise of her head and the adjustment of her arms were so exquisite that Acropolis Hall rung with plaudits. Her eyes were beautiful with sudden consciousness of her power. A rich music hall manager and two of his company, drifting about town in search of types, kept the air stirring with their inquiries as to who the girl was, as she carried the people by storm with her grace. Then, as she stood panting before the throne, blushing rosily under the gaze of the pugilist, something happened which nearly got into the next day's papers.

A man came up to Holleran carrying a black leather case, which the Brick opened. After bestowing the white, flag-decked cake upon her partner, he took from the case the glittering belt and clasped it about the slim waist of Miss Teresa Mary McCabe, the slow. After that the foreman drifted into the background and Miss McCabe was surrounded, standing like a queen, while the belt was admired.

"I'd give her a thousand a week and put her on just in that dress," said the manager. 'She'd make the town talk."

Brick Holleran said nothing. For the first time the knockerout of men was getting his own knockout blow in the heart—like all chance blows, fatal. And Cupid was his opponent. His defeat was most evident.

They danced together and talked together as though they had known each other for years. A group of men in swallowtails surrounded them. It was when the dance was breaking up and "Home, Sweet Home" was echoing from the orchestra that a memorable incident occurred. The music hall manager, who had waited in vain for a chance to speak to Miss McCabe, finally took a card from his pocket and wrote: "Will the young lady see Mr. Blank, manager of the Star Music Hall, for a moment on important business?"

Holleran took the card and wrote on it: "The young lady is too busy just now."

Back came a sheet of note paper, this time to Holleran. "We will give her a thousand a week to dance for us and star her in every way."

And Holleran sent back this endorsement: "Have decided to star her myself."

The foreman declares that only for him Mrs. Brick Holleran never would have happened. He claims to have discovered her.—N. Y. Sun.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and, therefore, requires constitutional treatment Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address,

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Props., Toledo, O.

Sold by Druggists, 75c.
Hall's Family Pills are the best.

When taken at the proper time a little Jesse Moore "AA" whiskey will prevent a cold.

Champagne Record Smashed.

109,303 cases imported in 1899 of G. H. Mumm's Extra Dry was never before approached. Carrying an enormous stock of choicest wines, its fine quality can not be excelled, regardless of price. Its remarkable 1895 vintage now imported equals its best predecessors.

A. O. LINDSTROM AL. JOHNSON
Phone Main 5178

Sutter Street Hammam

TURKISH AND RUSSIAN BATHS

415 Sutter Street, between Stockton and Powell

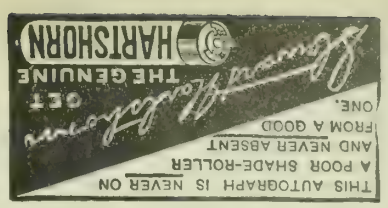
Open Day and Night for Gentlemen
For Ladies, from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.—Gould and Curry Silver Mining Company.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, Cal. Location of works, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 7th day of June, 1900, an assessment (No. 90) of Fifteen (15) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room No 69, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street San Francisco, Cal.

Any stock upon which this assessment shal, remain unpaid on the 10th day of July, 1900, wil be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on TUESDAY, the 31st day of July, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the cost of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of theBoard of Directors.
ALFRED K. DURBROW, Secretary
Office: Room No. 69, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.



HAVE YOU EVER THOUGHT

WHAT A GAS RANGE WILL DO?

It will do everything any other cooking apparatus will do, but it will do it BETTER QUICKER, EASIER and CHEAPER!

IT WILL DO AWAY WITH

Dirt, Worry and Ashes
Your Kitchen will be Clean,
Your working hours shorter.
Your Food will be better Cooked,
Your Life Prolonged, and
Your Happiness assured.

STOVE DEPARTMENT,
415 POST ST., SAN FRANCISCO

Eighty-five Fine Sunny Rooms. Elevator Service
THE BRADBURY,
J. A. FERSON, Proprietor.
FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL
N. W. Cor. Polk and California Sts.,
San Francisco, Cal.
Excellent Cuisine References required.
Transient trade solicited. Rates $2.00 and upwards.
Reasonable by the month.
TEL. HYDE 2771

SAN FRANCISCO BANKS

THE BANK OF CALIFORNIA
SAN FRANCISCO
Capital, $2,000,000 Surplus, $1,000,000
Profit and Loss Account January 1st, 1900, $2,321,212
WILLIAM ALVORD.....President
CHARLES R. BISHOP.....Vice-President
THOMAS BROWN.....Cashier
S. PRENTISS SMITH.....Assistant Cashier
IRVING F. MOULTON.....Second Assistant Cashier
ALLEN M. CLAY.....Secretary
CORRESPONDENTS
New York.....Messrs. Laidlaw & Co. / The Bank of New York, N. B. A.
Baltimore.....The National Exchange Bank
Boston.....The Tremont National Bank
Chicago.....Illinois Trust and Savings Bank / Union National Bank
Philadelphia.....Philadelphia National Bank
St. Louis.....Boatmen's Bank
Virginia City, Nev...Agency of the Bank of California
London.....Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons
Paris.....Messrs. De Rothschild Freres
Berlin.....Direction der Disconto Gesellschaft
China, Japan and East Indies.....Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China
Australia and New Zealand.....The Union Bank of Australia, Ltd., and Bank of New Zealand
Letters of Credit issued available in all parts of the world.

The German Savings and Loan Society
526 California Street
Guarantee Capital and Surplus.....$2,213,146 59
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash.....1,000,000 00
Deposits Dec. 30, 1899.....28,563,655 41
OFFICERS
President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Second Vice-President, H. HORSTMANN
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER
DIRECTORS
B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann
Ign. Steinhart, Emil Rohte, D. N. Walter,
H. B. Russ, N. Ohlandt, John Lloyd.
General Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow.

San Francisco Savings Union
532 CALIFORNIA ST
Deposits Jan. 1, 1900.....$26,110,681
Paid Up Capital.....1,000,000
Reserve Fund.....210,067
Contingent Fund.....407,391
E. B. POND, Pres. W. C. B. DE FREMERY, Vice-Pres
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier.
R. M. WELCH, Assistant Cashier.
DIRECTORS
George W. Beaver, Robert Watt, Thomas Magee,
George C. Boardman, W. C. B. de Fremery,
Daniel E. Martin, Albert Miller, George Tasheira,
E. B. Pond.
Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
Receives deposits. Country remittances may be made in checks payable in San Francisco, Postoffice or Wells, Fargo & Co's Money Orders, or coin by Express, but the responsibility of this bank commences only with the receipt of the money.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.
Office Hours: 9 a. m. to 3 p. m. and Saturday evenings, for receipt of deposits only, 6:30 to 8 o'clock.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco
33 POST STREET
Below Kearny Mechanics' Institute Building
Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000
Paid Up Capital, $300,000
JAMES D. PHELAN, President
S. G. MURPHY, Vice-President
JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Presiden
GEORGE A. STORY, Cashier
C. B. HOBSON, Assistant Cashier
DIRECTORS:—James D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, Frank J. Sullivan, Robert McElroy, Chas. S. Neal and James M. McDonald.
Interest paid on deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER
TRADE MARK
A Positive Relief for PRICKLY HEAT, CHAFING, and SUNBURN, and all afflictions of the skin.
"A little higher in price, perhaps, than worthless substitutes, but a reason for it." Removes all odor of perspiration. Delightful after Shaving. everywhere, or mailed on receipt of 25c. Get Mennen's original.) Sample free. Gerhard Mennen Co., Newark, N. J.

The Theatres

THE Tivoli, with "Madeline, or the Magic Kiss" on its boards, has had a well-filled house all week, but it is all too plainly Stevens who is the drawing factor, and not the potency of the opera's kisses. It would have been all the same, had the management put on "The Mandarin" or "The Geisha" or "Ship Ahoy!" It is all Stevens—the man who has been away in the big east and has come back to show us what he has learned. On an equal with him in interest is Anna Lichter, the other old favorite. Her pure soprano voice is just as clear and sweet as it ever was, and her encores quite as numerous.

"The Magic Kiss" affords many unique stage opportunities, and not a few humorous dilemmas. The old centenarian, Baron de Grimm, in his search for and attainment of youth through the first three kisses of the maiden Madeline, and his rapid rejuvenation, displays the highest art that Stevens has yet given us. And when it comes to the crisis where the Baron is bound with the horror that a fourth kiss may strike from him his remaining twenty-five years and leave him "yet unborn," the situation becomes ludicrous in the extreme.

Still there is something gone from Stevens, or something changed. He does not stamp about the stage as he once did, nor bellow out his stentorian monologues and boisterous jokes. He is subdued; he officiates less and acts more. We are not displeased—we are puzzled.

Hartman affords a pleasing surprise. In the last few months we have become so used to his jigs and tricks that we have forgotten he could be an actor, too. He has been little more than a funny man heretofore—in this he is a comedian of rank.

In short, the Tivoli was never before so good as it is now. There are three stars in the cast, with Harry Cashman and Miss Grace Orr as satellites of especial brilliancy. "The Geisha" follows with the same people in the cast.

* *

"The Girl from Chili," running during the week at the Grand Opera House, is a queer farce made up of unintelligible and absolutely irrelevant complications. For results it is much after the style of "A Hot Old Time." While feeling that it is entirely beneath your dignity, you are compelled to laugh at its ridiculous features. You are sure that the self-inflicted kick will come afterwards, but you forget the pain to come and enjoy yourself. The company is deserving of little attention.

* *

Charles E. Grapewin, whose specialty is the New York Bowery boy, will head the Orpheum bill next week. His turn is a sketch, "Above the Limit," and he is assisted by Anna Chance and a clever company. "Musical" Dale brings some new bell-ringing tricks. Joseph Hart and Carrie DeMar will present Mr. Hart's famous vaudeville sketch, "The Quiet Mr. Gay," and Van and Nobriga Company will repeat the success of last week in an entire change of repertoire. The holdovers will be: The marvelous Merrills, Sydney Doane and the biograph. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.

* *

The one great topic among local theatregoers at present is the approach of the Henry Miller season at the Columbia Theatre. This welcome event begins on Monday evening, the 25th inst., and from all accounts the theatre will prove too small for the thousands who will desire to be on hand to welcome back Mr. Miller, Margaret Anglin, Frank Worthing, Margaret Dale, Mrs. Whiffin and others who will be cast in the comedy "Miss Hobbs." The piece will be beautifully staged, and as concerns the acting there is no room for doubt when such celebrities appear in the cast. The advance sale of seats begins Thursday morning and the prices are to be $1.50, $1, 50 cts., 35 cts. and 25 cts. "Miss Hobbs" will be followed by "The Tree of Knowledge," "Heartsease," "The Only Way," "His Excellency, the Governor," etc.

* *

The third week of Dunne and Ryley's comedy at the California will be ushered in tomorrow night with Hoyt's military satire, "A Milk White Flag." The cast will include Harry Bulger as the Undertaker, J. Sherrie Matthews as the Corpse, John W. Dunne as the Colonel who looks like Napoleon, Mary Marble as the Captain and Bessie Tannehill as the Widow. Thirty other people will be in the production, which will be loaded with specialties.

Mary Marble and John Dunne, in "A Milk White Flag," at the California.

* *

"A Tin Soldier" at the California showed Dunne and Ryley's clever comedians to even better advantage than the initial performance. There are new specialties, and new hits. The play itself is one of the funniest of the Hoyt series; the music is improved and the audiences remain large. Mary Marble is the best card among the women, and Matthews and Bulger, of course, carry off the masculine honors. "A Milk White Flag," that clever hit at the national militia, is the next bill.

* *

"Sapho's" great hit at the Alcazar continues. The play is on for another week, making three altogether. "Carmen" follows. Last Wednesday evening, White Whittlesey, who always plays leading man during the Florence Roberts season, succeeded Ernest Hastings.

* *

Kellar will have another week at the Columbia. His great levitation act is proving a drawing card. There will be a regular performance on Sunday night and on Monday the last week begins. The 25 cent to $1 scale of prices prevail during Kellar's stay.

Lilian Burkhart is a "holdover" in this week's Orpheum bill, but she manages to be the main attraction on the program just the same, owing to her own personality and to her new sketch, "Fifty Years Ago," the work of a local author. Miss Burkhart, who is, by the way, the handsomest homely woman on the stage to-day, bids fair to occupy the place in vaudeville left vacant by Felix Morris. Like his, her talent seems exactly fitted to the thumbnail play. Whether she can do anything with the longer class, remains to be seen. Outside of this star are the Merrills, trick bicyclists, who perform an Orpheum impossibility by taking the last turn and keeping the audience seated to the end. Sydney Dean, the Australian baritone, is tuneful but affected. The bill is a fair one, and above the average in refinement.

* *

For those who appreciate that sort of entertainment, Kellar, the magician, now playing at the Columbia, is about as good as they make them. He has a set of new illusions which are all a vast improvement on those which he brought on his last visit.

* *

Miss Lorena Attwood will join the Alcazar stock in "Carmen," which follows "Sapho."

* *

"Frou-Frou" will follow "Carmen" at the Alcazar.

* *

Fred Belaso and wife who are now in Europe return to America next month.

The reason physicians always recommend Jesse Moore "AA" whiskey is because they know of its absolute purity.

The Pianola is bringing into use thousands of pianos that have been silent for years. Call and see it at Kohler & Chase, 26 and 30 O'Farrell street. Sole agents.

Seattle Business Directory.

ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW.

LAMBUTH, 204-5 Pacific Block. 157 Yesler Way.

DANCING ACADEMIES.

DANCING CLASSES—Stage and Ball-room dancing. Lessons daily. Prof. Wilson, Ranke Hall, 5th ave and Pike street.

DENTISTS.

S. R. WAGONER, 15 Haller Building.

DRESSMAKERS

MME. SMITH, ladies' tailoring, room 7, Hinkley.

DYEING AND CLEANING.

ATLAS CLEANING and Dye Works. Ladies' and Gents' Cleaners and Repairers. 222 Union street bet. 2d and 3d ave. Tel. Buff 1001

SEATTLE Clothes Pressing Co. Clothes cleaned, pressed and repaired. 1105 3d st. Tel. Buff 1004

MINES AND MINING.

O. R. DAHL Buys and Sells good Mining Properties, Companies organized. 528 N. Y. Block.

PLUMBING, HOT WATER HEATING.

SPELLMAN, Plumbing, 215 Columbia street. Tel. Black 1621.

PHYSICIANS & SURGEONS.

DR. G. V. CALHOUN, Starr-Boyd Building.

TENTS & AWNINGS.

THE FELITZ TENT AND AWNING CO. Manufacturers of and dealers in Tents, Awnings Flags, Sails and Ore Bags. 117 Yesler Way.

GERMEA

The Ideal Breakfast Dish

BUYERS' GUIDE

SAN FRANCISCO.

RELIABLE BUSINESS HOUSES.

City or Country Orders promptly filled. Catalogues and Price Lists sent on application. Correspondence solicited.

Mention The Wave.

ATTORNEYS AT LAW.

MILTON J. GREEN, Attorney at Law. Referee in Bankruptcy in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Office room 94, Chronicle bldg.

A. K. DAGGETT, Drawing of deeds and all legal papers a specialty. Notary Public, 14 Montgomery St., S. F. Telephone, 3 5.

DENTIST.

DR. C. W. DECKER, Dentist, 806 Market Street, Phelan Building.

HOMŒOPATHIC REMEDIES

WESTERN HOMŒOPATHIC PHARMACY—139 Powell St. S. F. W.W. Stocker. Tel. Bush 23.

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.

ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU, Main Office 510 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Dealers in all kinds of Newspaper Information. Advance Reports on all Contract Work. Phone Main 1042.

RESTAURANT.

POODLE DOG RESTAURANT, northeast corner of Eddy and Mason streets. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone main 429. Blanco & Brun, Proprietors.

THE NICKEL PLATE ROAD, (N. Y. C. & St. L. R. R.) offers Eastern passengers three elegantly appointed vestibuled express trains daily between Chicago and New York and Chicago and Boston. For sleeping car reservations and full information address

JAY W. ADAMS, Pac. Coast Pass. Agt.
37 Crocker Bldg., San Francisco, Cal.

When that tired feeling comes over you, drink Jesse Moore "AA" whiskey.

Perfection in Champagne.

The celebrated vintage of 1893 of Moet & Chandon White Seal, now being imported into the United States, is perfection, being the product of the choicest grapes. Its selection by connoisseurs is proof of its high quality.

AMUSEMENTS

Orpheum

Grapewin and Chance; Musical Dale; Van Nobriga and Co.; Joe Hart and Carrie De Mar; The Marvelous Merrils; Sidney Dean; Morrisey and Orndorff; American Biograph.

Reserved Seats 25c.; Balcony 10c.; Opera Chairs and Box Seats 50c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.

Columbia Theatre

BEGINNING MONDAY NIGHT, JUNE 18th.
Second and last week of KELLAR.

The Great Magician. Displaying his own original discoveries in the realms of the marvelous.

Prices 25 cents to $1.00.

June 25—Henry Miller and a special company in "Miss Hobbs."

California THE POPULAR HOUSE

H. FRIEDLANDER & Co., Lessees and Managers. [Tele. Main 1731

Week Commencing Sunday Night, June 17th. Only Matinees Saturday.

DUNNE & RYLEY'S ALL STAR CAST.

In a Magnificent Revival of Hoyt's Military Satire,

"A Milk White Flag."

Matthews & Bulger, John W. Dunne, Mary Marble, Walter Jones, Bessie Tannehill, and 30 others.

Our Never Changing Popular Prices.

Alcazar Theatre.

BELASCO & THALL, Managers. Phone 254

Week of June 18th.
Third and last week of
The hit of the year, every night at 8:15.

FLORENCE ROBERTS

Assisted by White Whittlesey
In the Fascinating Play

SAPHO.

Matinees Saturday only.
Alcazar Prices, 15c, 25c, 35c, 50c.

In Preparation—Carman.

PRETTY WORK

NICE PRESS COPIES

Use Smith Premier Type-Writer

The telegraph department of the Southern Pacific Co. dispensed with all other makes and now use the SMITH PREMIER EXCLUSIVELY.

Also more than 200 banks use the

SMITH PREMIER Type-Writer

We Rent New Typewriters
Art Catalogue

L. & M. ALEXANDER & CO.
110 Montgomery St., S. F.
Branches: Portland, Seattle, Los Angeles.

A GLOWING HIGHWAY TO HAPPINESS
.....IS THE ROAD THAT LEADS TO DEL MONTE

Added to the many pleasures afforded by its enchanting surroundings are FINE GOLF LINKS

✻ THIS SEASON'S ✻

HOMES OF PLEASURE

THE PEERLESS CALIFORNIA RESORT

SantaFeRoute

VERLAND EXPRESS

Every day in the year. Pullman Palace and Upholstered Tourist Cars leave for Denver, Kansas City, Chicago and the East. Take Market Street Ferry at 5:30 p. m.

Personally Conducted Tourist Excursions leave three times each week in Pullman Vestibuled Tourist Cars and are exceedingly popular with the traveling public. The principal cities of the East are reached by them and the service in all that counts for comfort and convenience is almost equal to the Palace cars. The cars are finished in mahogany, lightened with Pintsch gas and a Porter is in charge to attend to the wants of passengers. Plenty of bed linen is provided and the beds are very comfortable. A handsome folder, describing this service in detail, may be had for the asking at the Company's Office. 641 Market St.

VALLEY ROAD

Between Stockton, Fresno, Hanford, Visalia Tulare and Bakersfield, furnishes a good local train service.

SAN FRANCISCO TICKET OFFICE,
Market Street. Telephone Main 1531

The O. R. & N. Co.

DISPATCH FAST STEAMERS

TO PORTLAND

From Spear-St. Wharf at 10 a.m.

$12 First Class
$8 Second Class
Including Berth and Meals

State of California sails June 2, 12, 22; July 2.
Columbia sails June 7, 17, 27; July 7.

Short Line to Walla Walla, Spokane, Butte, Helena and all points in the Northwest.
Through tickets to all points East.

C. WARD, General Agent, 630 Market St.
GOODALL, PERKINS & CO., Superintendents.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. Australia, for Honolulu only, Wednesday, June 27 at 2 p.m.

S. S. Moana, for Aurtralia, Wednesday July 11 at 8 p.m.

Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.
J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf San Francisco.

For Alaskan ports, 11 a. m. June 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, July 5, change to company's steamers at Seattle.

For B. C. and Puget Sound ports 11 a.m. June 5, 10, 15 20, 25 30, July 5, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, 2 p. m. June 2 7 12, 17, 22, 27, July 2, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Newport (Los Angeles) and Way Ports, 9 a. m. June 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28, July 2, and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Harford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, and Redondo (Los Angeles), 11 a.m. June 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 July 4, and every fourth day thereafter.

For Mexican ports, 10 a. m seventh of each month.

For further information, obtain Company's folder.

The company reserves the right to change steamers sailing dates, and hours of sailing without previous notice.

Ticket Office: 4 New Montgomery St (Palace Hotel)
GOODALL, PERKINS & CO., Gen. Agts.
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

NOTICE OF ASSESSMENT — BULLION MINING COMPANY—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California; location of works, Virginia District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the sixteenth (16th) day of May, 1900, an assessment (No. 56) of fifteen (15) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 11, 331 Pine street San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 20th (20th) day of June, 1900, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Tuesday the tenth (10th) day of July, 1900, pay to the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors

R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.

Office: Room 11, No. 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

4th OF JULY

Excursion Rates

WILL BE MADE BY THE

Southern Pacific Company

FOR ROUND TRIP TICKETS BETWEEN ALL STATIONS ON ITS LINES, AS FOLLOWS.....

Fare and a Third
FOR STATIONS WITHIN 125 MILES DISTANCE

Fare and a Fifth
TO STATIONS DISTANT 126 TO 200 MILES

One Fare
TO STATIONS DISTANT 201 TO 300 MILES

TICKETS WILL BE ON SALE ABOUT JULY 1ST TO 4TH INCLUSIVE, AND GOOD FOR RETURN TILL ABOUT JULY 5TH. FOR EXACT DATES AND RATES, GO AND SEE

T. H. GOODMAN, Gen. Pass. Agt.

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention
A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED

Occidental Hotel

SAN FRANCISCO
WM. B. HOOPER, Manager.

BROWN'S Bronchial Troches
(Made only by John I. Brown & Son, Boston.) give instant relief in Hoarseness

BAJA CALIFORNIA

Damiana Bitters

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. Send for Circular.

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

TO CHICAGO

IN 3 DAYS

From San Francisco at 10 a. m.

Chicago Union Pacific
AND
Northwestern Line

Double Drawing-Room Sleeping Cars, Buffet, Smoking and Library Cars, with barber. Dining Cars—meals a la carte. Daily Tourist Car Service and Personally Conducted Excursions every week from San Francisco at 6 p. m. The best of everything.

R. R. RITCHIE,
General Agent Pacific Coast
617 Mark Street (Palace Hotel)
San Francisco, Cal.

Telephone Main 199.
Blake, Moffit & Towne
Dealers in PAPER
55, 57, 59, 61, First St., San Francisco.
Blake, Moffit & Towne, Los Angeles.
Blake, McFall Co., Portland, Or.

ELECTRIC

SUPPLIES
CONSTRUCTION
REPAIRS

California Electrical Works
409 MARKET STREET

Always keep on hand
Pain-Killer
There is no kind of pain or ache internal or external, that Pain-Killer will not relieve.
Look out for imitations and substitutes, the genuine bottle bears the name.
PERRY, DAVIS & SON.

Sturtevant House
Broadway and 29th Sts., New York.
WILLIAM T. BANG, PROP.
American and European Plan.

Don't Borrow a Home!
BUY IT Your rent payments for the borrowed home will do it through the aid of the
CONTINENTAL Building and Loan Ass'n of California
WM. CORBIN, Secretary and Gen. Manager.
Home Office, 222 Sansome St., San Francisco

Irving Institute Select Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies
2126 California Street, San Francisco.
Next season will begin August 6th. Accredited to the Universities. Seminary and Full Conservatory of Music. Primary Department for Children. Carriage will call. For futher information, address he principal. REV. EDWARD B. CHURCH, A.M.

Alfred Cane, Luther A. Teague
Frederick Teague.
Teague, Cane & Teague
DENTISTS.
Claus Spreckels Bldg. Third and Market Sts
hone Main 1459. Sixth Floor, S.F., Cal

Thuringia Insurance Co.
OF ERFURT, GERMANY
Capital, $2,250,000 Assets, $10,984,248
PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT
204-208 Sansome Street, San Francisco
VOSS, CONRAD & CO., General Managers

New Stories Re-Told.

x x x

OUT OF ORDER.—In a hotel at Bennington, Vermont, there is the usual list of "rings" posted over the electric button—"one for ice-water, two for hot water," etc. A country couple registered and were shown a room. Five minutes later, the bell in the office began to explode with furious double rings. A bell-boy siezed a pitcher, filled it with hot water, and sped up with the elevator, but the bell in the office never stopped its "pink-pink, pink-pink!" The boy tore into the room. The new arrivals, man and wife, were standing before the electric button. Their eyes were on the card. The man held a bowl carefully under the button, with his head turned away, so that the hot water wouldn't squirt in his eyes, and the woman was pressing the button with regular stroke. They were doing their best to get hot water strictly according to directions. "Here, stop that!" yelled the boy to the woman. "Here's your hot water." The man with the bowl lowered that article and looked at the boy. "What!" says he—the man from the rural districts—"D'ye have to bring it in a pitcher in the old-fashioned way? Wal, I swum! What's the trouble with your water-works here? I've been pres in' this button accordin' to the rewles here on the card, and there hain't a darned drop of hot water come out yit. When things ain't workin' ye ought to hang up a sign sayin' 'Out of Order.'"

x

WORLDLY FAME—Sir Arthur Sullivan, the composer, visited California some twenty years ago and extended his trip through the mining camps of the Sierras. This is his account of one of his experiences: "As we drove up, the driver said, 'They are expecting you here, Mr. Sullivan.' I was much pleased, and, when I reached the place, I came across a knot of prominent citizens. The foremost of them came up to a big burly man by my side, and said, 'Are you Mr. Sullivan?' The man said 'No!' and pointed to me. The citizen looked at me rather contemptuously, and, after a while, said, 'Why, how much do you weigh?' I thought this was a curious method of testing the power of a composer, but I at once answered, 'About one hundred and sixty-two pounds.' 'Well,' said the man, 'that's odd to me, anyhow! Do you mean to say that you gave fits to John S. Blackmore, down in Kansas City?" I said, 'No—I did not give him fits.' He then said, 'Well, who are you?' I replied, 'My name is Sullivan.' 'Ain't you John L. Sullivan, the pug?' I disclaimed all title to that, and told him that I was Arthur Sullivan. 'Oh—Arthur Sullivan! he said. 'Are you the man as put Pinafore together?' I said, 'Yes.' 'Well,' returned the citizen, 'I'm sorry you ain't John Sullivan. But, still, I am glad to see you, any way. Let's have a drink.'"

x

THE REAL DANGER.—A Scotchman, who had for thirty-seven years brought home his full wages every week, gave to his wife on one occasion sixpence less than the full amount. This so distressed the thrifty woman that she went to consult the "meenister" on the subject. He tried to comfort her by saying that sixpence in thirty-seven years was not a large amount. "It's no the money A'm thinking of," she replied, "but A'm fearing that Mac has been taking to drink and betting maybe, and other worldly pleasures."

x

POLITE.—An Omaha man, noted for his gallantry, was standing in a crowded street-car, hanging to a strap. As the car swung around a corner, the strap broke, dumping him into the lap of a well-dressed young woman. The polite man arose and bowed: "Madam," he said, "this is the first time the street-car company ever conferred a favor on me!"

x

NOT GUILTY.—A soft-spoken old negro was brought into a Georgia court charged with petty laceny. "Are you the defendant?" thundered the judge. "No sah, I has a lawyer hired fer ter do de defendin.' I's de pusson what done stole de articles."

x

IRISH.—Just after the surrender of Conje's army, an Irish corporal reported to his captain that he had captured five of the enemy, "all alone?" "And how did you manage to capture five?" "Plaze yer honor, I surrounded thim."

PALACE HOTEL
The high standard of excellence maintained by this hotel is recognized and appreciated by a fastidious and discriminating clientele who regularly make it their headquarters when visiting San Francisco.
The GRAND HOTEL is operated in conjunction with the Palace to which it is joined by a covered passageway, placing under one management 1400 rooms, more than half of which have baths attached.
AMERICAN PLAN. EUROPEAN PLAN.

Famous FOR ITS Purity!

Seattle U. S. A.

WHEN LEAVING THE CITY PLACE YOUR VALUABLES IN THE Safe Deposit Vaults
OF THE
First National Bank
N. W. Corner Bush and Sansome Sts.
Office Hours: 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.
EVERY POSSIBLE SAFEGUARD TO PROPERTY
REASONABLE RATES
PROMPT ATTENTION.

REPSOLD SELECT VINTAGE REGISTERED BRAND
REPSOLD
Select Vintage Wines
For Your Home Dinner
This brand of wine is served at all first class clubs, hotels and restaurants
A. REPSOLD & CO. Office. 416 Pine Street

THE
White Pass and Yukon Route
The Pacific & Arctic Railway and Navigation Co.
British Columbia Yukon Railway Co., British Yukon M. T. & T. Co.
and Canadian Development Company, Ltd.
THROUGH LINE TO DAWSON.
Two first-class trains daily between Skaguay and Bennett, B. C. Ten first-class steamers operating between White Horse and Dawson. Through Telegraph Service Skaguay to Dawson and Intermediate Points.
SKAGUAY IS THE GATEWAY
—TO—
KLONDIKE AND CAPE NOME GOLD FIELDS.
FOR RATES AND PARTICULARS APPLY TO
S. M. IRWIN, Traffic Manager, Skaguay, Alaska, and Seattle, Wash
Phone Main 574
S. P. BROWN General Agent 116 Yesler Way, Seattle Was

W. C. ACHI & CO.
Real Estate Brokers
We will buy or sell real estate in any part of the group. We will also buy or sell Stocks in any corporation in the Hawaiian Islands.
Office, 10 West King Street, Honolulu, H.

a Perfect Complexion
Strawberry Cold Cream
Made from the pure fruit juice at
GREENBAUM'S
200 POST STREET Corner Grant Ave.
Sent anywhere on receipt of 25 cents.

From Admiral George Dewey:
Mr. George Mayerle, German Expert Optician, 1071½ Market street, San Francisco: Dear Sir—I am still using with much satisfaction the glasses you sent me at Manila; also, the new ones suit my eyes perfectly.
Very truly yours,
George Dewey.

A GRADUATE
George Mayerle
German Expert Optician
Consultation, Examination and advice free.

OPTICIAN HONORED
1071½ Market St.
near Seventh
Telephone Mint 257
German Eye Water 50 cents.

From General Wm. R. Shafter:
Mr. George Mayerle, San Francisco: Dear Sir—The glasses made by you received yesterday. I have never been better fitted than with this pair.
Very truly yours,
Wm. R. Shafter,
Major-General U. S. V.

New Views of Pekin. Views of the Republican Convention.

The Wave

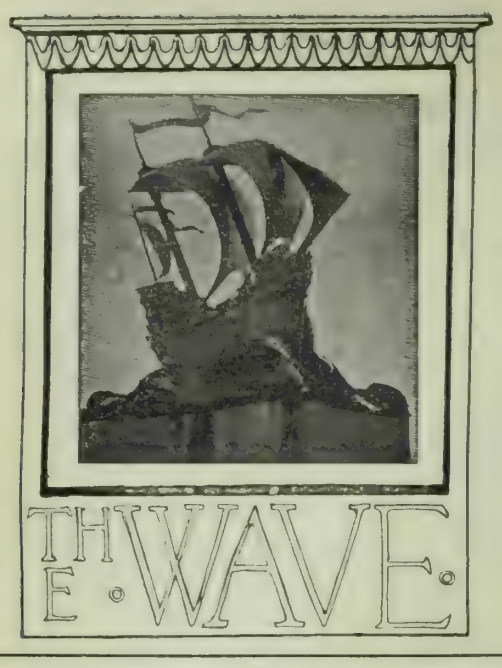
1900

VOL. XXI. No. 23 SAN FRANCISCO—JUNE 30, 1900 - SEATTLE PRICE 10 CENTS

A STREET SCENE IN PEKIN.

View in the Business Section of the World's Center of Disturbance.

Photo by Courtesy of H. E. Bostwick.



is published every Saturday at The Wave Building, 24 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal., and Colman Building, Seattle, Wash.

Entered at the Post Office as second-class matter.

Subscription: Per year, $3.00; six months, $1.75; three months, $1.00. Foreign subscription (countries in postal union) $1 per year additional. Sample copies free.

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

PROPRIETORS

SAN FRANCISCO—June 30, 1900—SEATTLE

CONTENTS

Events Current 2
Editorial Comment 3
The Capital of Uruguay 4
Things and People, by Boswell Jr 5
The Republican National Convention—Illustrations 6
The Crisis in China 7
Views of the Disturbed Section in China 8–9
The Republicans in Session—Illustrations 10
Meditations of a Matron 11
In Bookdom 12
A Flat Failure 13
At the Theatres 13
New Stories Re-told 16

EVENTS CURRENT.

The Chinese Crisis. This has been an anxious week for the nations interested in the Chinese crisis. Up to June 26th when Tien-Tsin was relieved by a composite force, three considerable bodies of Americans and Europeans were known to be cut off from all communication with their countrymen and in great danger of overwhelming attack. In Pekin, the foreign legations and the three hundred marines who had been rushed in to guard them during the early days of the disturbance were surrounded by a whole army and a turbulent population of many millions. Communications were cut June 12th, so that the world was ignorant of their fate for nearly a fortnight. On the very day when the last news came out of Pekin, Admiral Seymour with a composite force of some four thousand men started from Tien-Tsin to relieve Pekin. The enemy closed in behind him, and he, too, sent back no word. Directly afterwards the city of Tien-Tsin itself was cut off by regular soldiers of the Chinese army. As soon as the communications from the besieged cities ceased, another composite force of something over one thousand men was sent to relieve Tien-Tsin. The corps was ridiculously inadequate to the work in hand, but the situation was desperate and the European admirals in command deemed it their duty to strain every nerve in behalf of the whites surrounded in the two cities. This relieving force met the Chinese on June 20th, and found them well intrenched outside the city and equipped with modern artillery. The whites attacked, and are believed to have inflic ed severe losses on the Chinese, but were forced to retire owing to the superior arms, artillery and numbers of the enemy. This show of Chinese strength made the outlook appear most gloomy. The depression of Europe was enhanced by alarming reports from the besieged points, stating, among other things, that the foreign quarter of Tien-Tsin had been burned, that the town was being bombarded from its own walls, that Admiral Seymour and his men were prisoners, and that the foreign legations had been destroyed. What happened next is mainly guess work, owing to the Creelman school of war correspondents with which China is now cursed; at any rate, the relieving column suddenly made its way to Tien-Tsin, opened communicacions and located Admiral Seymour's party. It was found that the bombardment of Tien-Tsin was not so heavy as reported, and that the foreign party, while they had seen some little fighting, has come off with few losses. What is interpreted as good news came from Pekin also; the relieving force learned that the Ministers and other whites had been sent out of Pekin with a guard, and were presumably of Seymour's party. The situation of Seymour's Pekin relief force was the most remarkable feature. In nearly two weeks he had moved only nine miles beyond Tien-Tsin, and was stalled there, nursing his sick and wounded, and beleaguered on every side by Mongolian hordes armed with Mausers and Maxims. His losses are reported as slight, but he is effectually stalled. This constitutes the military situation. On the political side, the very isolation of Pekin prevents us from learning how the Chinese Government stands, although the presence of trained regiments in the mobs fighting the combined forces would indicate that the government is in the foreign movement, or that there is a remarkably large and well-organized mutiny on behalf of the Boxers. The Chinese Ministers to the various Powers have submitted a demand that the foreign troops be withdrawn, pending the arrival of Li Hung Chang, who is on his way from Canton. This has been unanimously refused, the Powers reminding the petitioners that they must protect their subjects abroad. Every nation concerned is hurrying troops forward. It is now determined that our own force in China will number about 8,000 soldiers and six war-ships of various pattern. The Ninth Infantry embarked at Manila Wednesday and the Sixth Cavalry is at San Francisco en route. Part of the troops will go from the Philippines and part from this country. General Chaffee will be in command. Although a state of war does not yet exist between this country and China, the spilling of American blood in the relief of Tien-Tsin was a casus belli and may lead to the formal declaration of war. The President is hesitating waiting to see whether or no the trouble will increase. It is almost certain that it will, as the rebellion seems to be spreading all over the empire. New cases of the murder of missionaries and converts come to light every day. Even at Canton, in the far south, an outbreak may occur at any time. In the hurry and confusion of the common danger, the Russian plots and the conflict between the Czar's people and the Japanese are temporarily forgotten by the correspondents.

McKinley and Roosevelt the Republican Leaders. William McKinley of Ohio and Theodore Roosevelt of New York were nominated for President and Vice-President on the Republican ticket Thursday, June 21, at Philadelphia. The choice for both places was unanimous; never has there been less difference of opinion regarding candidates at any American party convention. It has been a foregone conclusion for a year that McKinley would be the Repnblican nominee for President, and Roosevelt has been the general choice for second place on the ticket. The greatest barrier to his candidacy was, however, his own attitude. Roosevelt persisted in requesting that his name be not offered, as he wished to run for a second term as governor of New York. It was apparent from the first day of the convention that sentiment was wholly in his favor. The administration, as represented by Mark Hanna and his immediate followers, was understood to be against him, but otherwise the feeling was so strong that the administration hedged on the eve of the day of voting. As a result, there was a complete landslide, every vote except his own going to the Rough Rider on the first ballot. Roosevelt was consistent to the last, protesting against the move as contrary to his wishes, but yielding to the wish of the party. To have refused would have been political suicide, and would have ruined his chances for the nomination in 1904, at which he is understood to be aiming. Senator Foraker made the speech nominating McKinley, and Roosevelt seconded it. The selection was made unanimous at once. After the excitement died down, the roll of states was called for vote on Vice-President. Alabama was first on the list but yielded to Iowa, and Delegate Young of that state withdrew the name of Dolliver to place Roosevelt in nomination. Butler Murray of Massachusetts made the seconding speech. The scenes marking the unanimous nomination of Roosevelt were even wilder than those that followed the McKinley vote. In fact, although the whole program was a prophetic certainty before the convention came to order on the final day, the meeting was a most enthusiastic one. The platform differed in no particular from that which the Republicans were expected to adopt. A declaration in favor of gold standard, support of the President's policy regarding our new possessions and re-affirmation of the protective tariff are the main features. The party campaign, as outlined by the managers, will involve an invasion of "the enemies territory"—the West. Roosevelt will probably resign his governorship and make a western speaking tour in opposition to Bryan.

A New Canal Route. Letters and semi-official reports received from members of the Nicaragua Canal surveying party, now at work determining the most practicable route across the isthmus, indicate that the future inter-oceanic waterway may be by neither the Panama nor the Nicaragua routes, but by a course as yet unconsidered. According to these letters, the explorers have found a route thirty-five miles long, or about the length of the Panama line, provided with harbors at either end, and practicable for a side water canal without locks or dams. The one objection to the find is that there is a steep ridge, nearly eight hundred feet high, in the very middle. This is serious, but it is not beyond the power of modern engineering. The rise, moreover, is an abrupt one, the rest of the way travelling along easily-sloping valleys. The advantages are: First, the shortness of the route. Second, the fact that it may be a tidewater channel, the dream of all canal-builders, and without the elaborate lock and dam system of the Nicaragua route. Third, it has none of the intercepting rivers and quicksands which make the Panama scheme so difficult of construction and doubtful of permanence. Fourth, there are natural harbors, requiring almost no dredging or excavating. Fifth, the site is more healthful than that of the other routes. It is suggested that this may be the route discovered by Selfridge in the seventies and subsequently lost by carelessness in recording. It is said to lie about one hundred and thirty miles eastward of the Panama survey, extending from Caledonia Bay to the Gulf of San Miguel.

Prospect of Peace in the Philippines. The enlightened and broad policy which General MacArthur has inaugurated in the Philippine Islands since General Otis turned control of affairs over into his hands has borne its first fruit in an action which may mean the end of the Philippine revolt. On June 21, the two hundred leading native revolutionists in the city of Manila met at the request of MacArthur, and agreed upon the terms on which they would accept peace. None were admitted except those who had all along been openly in favor of the revolt. Fifty Filipino leaders were temporarily released from prison to be present. They included such open, out-and-out rebel leaders as Senors Flores, Paterno and Buencamino, the leader of the movement, General Pio del Pilar, General Garcia and General Macabulas. No coercion of any sort was employed. After four hours' argument the delegates agreed on the following terms which, according to the leaders, would probably be acceptable to Aguinaldo First—Amnesty. Second—the return by the Americans to the Filipinos of confiscated property. Third—Employment for the revolutionary Generals in the navy and militia when established. Fourth—The application of the Filipino revenues to succor needy Filipino soldiers. Fifth—A guarantee to the Filipinos of the exercise of personal rights accorded to Americans by their Constitution. Sixth—Establishment of civil government at Manila and in the provinces. Seventh—Expulsion of the friars. The statement of the seventh condition was vociferously acclaimed, the entire assembly shouting, "Expel, expel!" General MacArthur followed this at once by a declaration of general amnesty to all native rebels who would accept the authority of the United States within ninety days. Although no Filipino will say whether Aguinaldo is living or dead, the natives in the assemblage offered to take news of the proposals and the amnesty to the central Filipino government, wherever and whatever that is. With one exception, the terms of the agreement are such as the United States can readily accept without change of policy. The troublesome clause is the one relating to the expulsion of the friars. It cannot be done without antagonizing the Roman Catholic church and reviving the religious question, which is likely to be the knotty point in the final settlement. The military movements of the week have been unimportant, including only the surrender of a few native bands in Luzon and the ambushing of an American force in Mindanao, which resulted in a victory for our troops with some loss. Otherwise, the wet weather has left both sides inactive.

The Arid Region of Western America. In a somewhat overstrained and extravagant book called "The Conquest of Arid America," Professor William E. Smythe predicts a great future for the one region of the United States which has not yet come under cultivation. While the deductions which the author draws and the future which he predicts are a bit unreal and fanciful, his data and conclusions from fact are based on sound scientific investigation and have attracted some attention in both West and East. What may generally be designated as the arid region of the United States is mapped by Mr. Smythe as embracing all the territory west of the ninety-seventh meridian. The line passes through the Dakotas, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, and Texas. It divides the area where assured rainfall ends and the arid regions begins. East of it an annual rainfall is expected, adequate to the tillage of the earth, although subject to alternate disaster of drought and flood. Aridity is the distinguishing characteristic of the vast region west of it, or a lack of rainfall sufficient to insure the successful growth of agricultural products without the aid of artificial irrigation. The general healthfulness of the region is one of its main characteristics. The dry atmosphere is the enemy of most disease germs, and already patients afflicted with consumption, chronic malaria, lingering typhoid and other bacterial diseases are sent there to get rid of them. Also, the extremes of climate are much more easily borne. Further, it is immune against dangerous natural phenomena, such as thunderstorms, tornadoes, and cyclones. Outside of the mineral resources, the water-power the coal and oil, all more or less hidden and matters of conjecture, this land is capable of sustaining an immense agricultural population if only water is added. Professor Smythe presents figures to show that by far the greater part of the region can be reached by irrigation without undue expense. Moreover, chemical test proves that the soil is as rich as any on earth. This, startling as the hypothesis may seem, is held to be due to the very dryness of the climate. The same is true of the fertile Nile Valley. In countries where there is a plentiful rainfall, the inundations wash away the rich elements in the soil, while in the arid regions these elements have been accumulating. The chemical process which produced this fertility seems to keep on repeating itself without loss. At least, this has been true in the Nile Valley where, even in places where the river deposits no sediment, the soil has been prolific for four thousand years and shows no sign of exhaustion. The author concludes with the somewhat startling theory that the so-called "American desert" will be the future seat of American greatness.

The South African Situation. While the alarming situation in China has drawn attention away from the South African war, the campaign itself has brought forth little that is new. Lord Roberts, who is good at keeping his plans to himself, gives no intimation of his intentions regarding the main body of the Transvaal Boers, now still further withdrawn into their own country. On the other border the purpose of recent movements is more clear. General Buller has advanced through Laing's Nek, where the British once expected such bloody resistance, joined Robert's force, and is forming part of a cordon drawn about President Steyn of the Orange River State, his forces and his officials. The Free Staters may break through the cordon, but if they stay to fight their capture is assured. In the main body of the Transvaal troops, there is a surprising development. Recently Roberts sent a message containing peace proposals to President Kruger. The messenger was halted in the Boer lines, and informed that Botha had assumed general control "for the good of the Republic?" It was requested that the news be conveyed to Mrs. Kruger and the Boer leaders in Pretoria. No one seems to know the whereabouts of Kruger, and one explanation of Botha's message is that the Boer chief has left South Africa. Roberts has passed stringent rules for the punishment of all persons who aid or abet the Boer forces. A league to maintain the independence of the Transvaal Republic has been formed in France, probably at the instigation of Dr. Leyds, and has issued a call to other Boer sympathizers throughout the world for a union of forces in the common object. The Transvaal, or at least that section held by the British, is settling down to quiet, and the citizens are returning to their farms.

Women are beginning to make their way into the drug business. Colleges of pharmacy held out against them long after law and medical colleges had opened to them. Recently they have been allowed to learn the art of filling prescriptions and have proved to be well fitted for the work. They cannot, of course, take up the drug business unless they have had a good education with some knowledge of Latin, and are willing to put in more hours a day for every day in the week than in almost any other occupation.

Editorial Comment.

The Suicide of a Nation.

THE Empress Dowager of China has gone mad, or the press despatches are wofully unture. The Boxers, a revolutionary force, waging warfare on foreigners, and therefore against the government for their protection, are reported to be aided, if not instigated by the Empress. Under this anomalous condition China is put at swords' points with every civilized nation on the globe. The Empress, it appears, is not enamored of foreigners, resents their intrusion and their religious teachings. While unable, in her sovereign capacity, to drive the white devils out of the Empire, she is reported to be turning to account this Association, whose creed is to kill or rid the country of Christians. It is scarcely conceivable that that wise old man Li Hung Chang has had any hand in this movement. The Empress is either in the hands of ignorance or cunning. One can well imagine that a fellow who has lived in a cave and drawn wisdom from the books of Confucius might so advise the Empress, but no man of prrts like Li, no Chinese who has traveled abroad or kept abreast of the world, would suggest such a hazardous and suicidal course. Perhaps the cunning hand of European diplomacy lies under it all. The partitioning of China has long been lying on the table at the council of nations, waiting to be taken up for discussion. A moving cause has been lacking. It would have been a cold-blooded arrangement deliberately to carve the empire into fractions and divided it without any further excuse than its national weakness. If, however, China is unable to protect, in their lives and property, the missionaries and subjects of other lands, or if, being able she refuses so to, and aids and abets the Boxers in their murderous raids, then under the modern international code she "has proved her unfitness" and offers an excuse for radical action on the part of land-hungry nations of the globe. It is possible, then, that some crafty diplomat has by indirection instigated the Empress to just this course, so making China the author of her own destruction.

Be that as it may, there was but one course open to the United States. It must protect its citizens, wherever they may be. In years gone by Americans have frequently found it to their interest while abroad to claim England as their home. The world has long understood that no Englishman, no matter how obscure he might be, was too small to demand the protection of his government. An injury to an English subject in a foreign land was promptly followed by the appearance of a British man-of-war. Reparation was promptly demanded and quite as promptly made. Such has not been the case with Americans. In some of the South American countries particularly, citizens of the United States have frequently been subjected to indignities that made life unbearable and the boast of American citizenship not only idle and useless but a dangerous thing. In such countries Americans, for their own safety, have been frequently compelled to deny the land of their birth. There are Americans now in China. They have a right to be there. They are entitled to the protection of the Chinese government, and this failing, are entitled to the protection of their own government. Their lives and their property are now in danger. Even the lives of the nation's consular representatives are threatened; the government of China is either unable or unwilling to give to these people proper protection. There is but one duty before the administration—it is plain and simple, viz.: to protect those who have the right to demand our protection at whatever cost.

The Prohibitionists.

THE National Prohibition Party, so say the press dispatches, expect to go before the Democratic National Convention with a list of one million voters pledged to Bryan, if the Democratic party will adopt a prohibition plank in its platform. Very sagely the Prohibitionists declare that they do not expect the Democrats to favor such a plank, but they do believe their tender will prove an entering wedge that will finally split one of the two great parties and build upon the ruins the foundation of a new party. This is a dream. The Prohibition Party is not made up of "deliverable goods." Politically speaking, they are "program" on the liquor question but that they can be picked up and delivered as the political bosses deliver the votes of the corrupt and ignorant is scarcely thinkable. The trouble with the ordinary Prohibitionist is his stiffness of purpose. He is uncompromising, and therein lies his weakness. So long as the Democratic Whiskey Trust has such an enemy it may go to sleep in security. Some years ago the Wave pointed out to the California Prohibitionist the mistake of nominating an independent ticket and suggested the solidifying of the prohibition vote to the party that would make the most concessions. If it was proved they could "deliver the goods," in a close state like California they might wield some influence. There are any number of good men—sensible men—and some of them are in the whiskey business, who would join hands in a movement to close out the dead falls and put the traffic on a higher plane. But it is no part of the Prohibitionist's plan to render more respectable a traffic they are sworn to destroy. They proceed upon the theory that the more disreputable it becomes the sooner its complete extermination will follow. But sound judgment does not sanction this plan, nor has time or experience approved it.

Give to one man the swinging of a million votes in a national election, and you will have equipped that man with the powers of a dictator so long as his demands are reasonable, and are not calculated to alienate a large body of voters from the party with which he allies himself. We are probably coming to the time when voting trusts will govern us. An item going the rounds of the dailies states that it has been proposed that Catholic societies band together politically for the purpose of "protecting and asserting their rights." Labor has its flock of voters, the Prohibitionists theirs, and in these days of large combinations, why not divide all the voters into blocks, each with a spokesman who shall meet with party leaders, make their demands upon them and close their trades with the one offering the most advantageous concessions. Then the result of election could be definitely determined before the ballots were cast. The boodler who attends a convention wants money for his vote. That is bribery. The prohibitionist makes no demand for himself, but wants some one else punished, and boldly offers the votes of a million Americans to the party that will serve him. What is that? Is it not morally a case of bribery? It will not be long probably before Aguinaldo and other foreign rulers or pretenders who are anxious to secure the support of America, will throw into our national campaigns large sums of money to aid the party committed to their pretensions. Certainly it would be entirely feasible for some foreign nation having a secret understanding with Aguinaldo to spend several millions of dollars to secure an abandonment of the Philippines by the United States. And there may be more truth than speculation to this suggestion.

THAT the Republican party will win a complete and glorious victory at the polls next Fall seems to be conceded even by the enemy. No feeling of self-confidence, however, should be permitted to suspend or to deaden party zeal. The voters of the country who stand opposed to the heresies of Bryanism, even though their political faith has heretofore been pinned to the Democracy of former days, owe it to the country, owe it to themselves, owe it to the party that once engaged their fealty, to poll such a tremendons protest against Bryanism, as forever to crush it out of existence. The fear of Bryanism is of itself an industrial deterrent. There is but one way to eliminate that fear and dread from national politics and that is for intelligent Democrats to support the other ticket. There is but one way for intelligent Democrats to snatch their party from out of the incompetent hands into which it has fallen, and that is to make the victory of McKinley and Roosevelt so complete and decisive as not to leave a shred of hope among the bunglers and demagogues who have present possession.

It is a little hard for a life long Democrat to swallow the national ticket of his lifelong opponent; but it is the only way to purify his own party. It is hard for a man to part with an arm that must be amputated, but to save his life he must acquiesce. It is not pleasant to submit to the surgeon's knife for relief, but the old line that runs "desperate diseases require desperate remedies" applies to politics as well as to the human body. The Democrat who clings to the Bryan ticket because it is falsely labelled with the old party name, does not give evidence of abundant intelligence. He may compromise with his conscience. He may protest against the course of his own party by refusing to vote, and so by the same act escape giving his endorsement of the enemy. But if he follows this course he performs only half of his duty. The fellow who does not vote is not counted. At the last presidential election, intelligent Democracy might have effectually wiped out Bryanism if it had supported Mr. McKinley and in the coming campaign the name of Bryan would scarcely be heard. The democratic press has repeatedly told the story that a change of twenty-five thousand votes in the close states would have elected Mr. Bryan, and they have been feeding on this hope for three years. Doubtless there were enough stay-at-home Democrats who would not vote for Bryan and who would not support the Republican ticket to have put these states out of the field of speculative figures. Their policy of "not voting at all" has operated to sustain the very thing they wish to destroy, has prolonged the disgrace of their party and rendered it possible for the same element to control during the interim. At the next election, let them kill Bryanism, not scotch it.

Henry Irving has contributed $50 to the fund for the new convention hall to be built in Kansas City. Will the democratic party stultify itself now by any more talk about foreign alliances?

Lord Roseberry is said to be the most elusive of all English politicians, because, after twenty years of public life, his real opinions are unknown even to his intimates, and only one of his friends, a young Jew, is said to be completely in his confidence.

COMMUNICATION.

State School Books.

THE attitude of the Call on the school book question is somewhat surprising. That journal, which is beyond suspicion of unholy relations with the "school book ring" is openly advocating a return to the old system and an abandonment of the publication of the state series. Certainly, Mr. Spreckels will not be charged with combinations with the Eastern publishers who are anxious to break down our present system, and repeat the scandalous proceedings of years gone by. Mr. Spreckels understands if the text-books of to-day are not all they should be, that the officers charged with the duty of revising them are competent, able, and willing to place them upon a standard as high if not higher than similar books published by Eastern concerns. Some time ago it was whispered about that the school-book ring was preparing for an attack upon the state series. This was several years ago. To be prepared for emergencies the Wave wrote every superintendent of schools in the State and asked the following questions concerning the state system: Is it a convenience to teachers, scholars and parents? Does it result in a saving to parents? Do you believe that the State should or should not continue to publish its school books? The answers to these inquiries were almost unanimously in the affirmative. One superintendent says: "I am unqualifiedly in favor of the system. In my opinion it secures uniformity of books throughout the State School Department, thus obviating the necessity of extra expense on the part of the pupils who may change from one country to another, and secures a uniform standard of requirement in the various schools. The series costs less than corresponding books furnished by publishing houses."

Another very intelligent review of the school book question came from a superintendent from one of the interior counties. At the time of making their inquiries, the Wave, knowing the power of the book ring politically, promised not to publish names without express permission, hence we omit the name of the writer. Here is what this superintendent says: "At the time the people voted upon the State text-book question, I was a teacher in this county, and opposed the measure, knowing something of Minnesota's experiment in the same line. But since that time, during my incumbency of this office, I have found that parents appreciate the reduction in prices and that teachers can do excellent work with the State Series, especially by the use, with them, of the numerous supplementary books, which by law may be purchased with the Library Fund of each district. It seems to me that the burden is lightened where it rested most heavily, viz., upon the needy parents of large families. The heavy tax payers must bear the expenses not met by the sale of the text-books, and this to me seems right. The exclusion of all competition is a bad thing, of course, but look backward and investigate the workings of free competition by all dealers in text-books; see if the best books were always adopted. I know San Francisco teachers used to say, You have fine readers in your county, while we have and must use the ante diluvian McGuffey's Readers." Under the old system, each county could adopt books entirely different from those of other counties, then the poorer classes, who are generally nomadic from necessity, found upon entering a different county that the dearly bought books were practically valueless. Public criticisms by teachers, superintendents and others tend to keep State books up to the standard. Our last Legislature passed an act to provide for the revision of certain books of the State Series, those most severely criticised, viz., the First, Second, and Third Readers, the English Grammar, and the Advanced Arithmetic. At the same time, a new book, a primary History of the United States, was added to the list.

Now, in view of the fact that the State owns its presses, types, bindery, electrotyping apparatus and all material required in the manufacture of text-books, and for reasons given in another part of this communication, it seems to me that it would be most ill-advised to return to the old method.

Pardon me for writing at so great length; it seemed impossible to say less, and well nigh impossible to refrain from saying more.

I am not ashamed of my convictions, but sincerely hope you will not use my expression of them, except in a general way. Please view this as a request.

We have numberless letters of this character. Many speak of the defects of the books, but declare that such defects may be easily remedied. Nearly every superintendent acknowledges that the burden falls upon the poor, and that the theory is a good one, though its practice might be improved.

J. T. Y.

Divers in the British navy before being passed as proficient in their craft have to be able to work in twelve fathoms of water for an hour, and twenty fathoms for a quarter of an hour.

It is said that a grandson of Major General Robert Ross, who captured and sacked Washington in 1814, will command the new regiment of Irish Guards forming by order of the Queen.

THE CAPITAL OF URUAGUAY.

Some Glimpses at Montevideo, the Fairest of South American Cities.

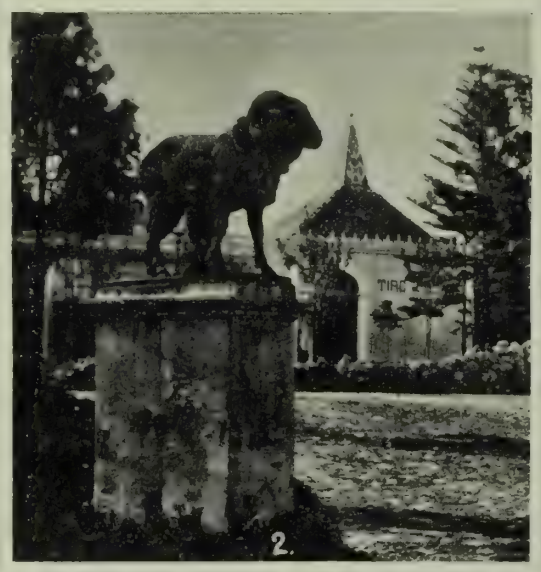
DOWN where the broad stretch of the Rio de la Plata makes a mingling with the sea, on the outermost edge of the little Republic of which it is the Capital, lies the city of Montevideo. Practically hemmed in between sea and river, the city proper is located on a gently sloping peninsula backed up by the rolling lands which form the greater part of Uruguay's country districts.

Time was when this city by the sea held the great commercial supremacy over all the lower section of South America. Then all ocean roads led to the mouth of the yellow Plata. Thence to the interior, communication was had by means of steamers plying on the Plata, Parana, and Paraguay rivers. Now all this is changed, for the people of the Argentine, knowing that Montevideo's weakness, lies in the exposed condition of her harbor, have brought the terminals of all these lines of transportation, both foreign and interior, to the doors of their principal city, Buenos Ayres.

For the Argentinas this was a colossal work, as Buenos Ayres lacked the proper depth of water to give approach to ships of heavy draught. But with money, dredging could be done and piers built and the Argentine Confederation was bound to lead in the question of ports upon the Plata. Consequently Montevideo ceased to be the principal point of distribution for the broad valleys of the Southern Continent.

All of this loss to Montevideo could have been offset by a series of improvements in her own harbor, but as each proposition for breakwaters and other harbor safeguards came up it was talked over and dropped at its very inception. It is said that in several instances where there seemed a possibility of direct action being taken in Montevideo's harbor improvements, Argentine influence had much to do with the abandonment of the idea. Unfortunately, Uruguay has not always been ruled by officials who gave a thought to the people's good. Now, however, there is a chance of something better, for in the person of President Cuestas the Republican has an Executive who has taken upon himself the work of seeing that Montevideo's port shall be transformed into a safe one. He has rendered the beginning of the work a certainty by causing the National Congress to pass an irrevocable law setting aside a good percentage of the customs of the Republic as a fund for this very work. Already, this fund has run into the millions of pesos, not the pesos of most South American Republics which carry a value equal to about one third of the golden dollar, but the peso of Uruguay, which oddly enough possesses to-day and has for years possessed a value at least three per cent higher than that of British or American gold. Cuestas has determined that his term of office shall see the great work begun and with coin at hand his plans will undoubtedly be transferred from possibilities to certainties.

Even with her loss of trade, Montevideo has gone ahead. In spite of revolutions and every other kind and class of political chaos, the city's advance has been steady and the development of the vast resources which lie behind her in the Republic's fertile plains has gone forward with but little obstruction.



One of the very first impressians created by a visit to Montevideo is its cleanliness, which stands in brilliant contrast with the conditions in most South American cities. Besides, there are beautiful business streets filled with well-stocked stores, broken at short intervals by attractive and excellently kept plazas. It seems that as the city grew an artistic unity was maintained. It is impossible to travel any great distance in moving from the landing back to the suburbs without coming upon one of these breathing places well supplied with shade, and with benches in plenty for those who desire to rest within its borders. Then, as a suitable finale to this system of parks, comes the "Prado," situated on the extreme city limits. Here is a pleasure ground several hundred acres in extent, full of pretty nooks and traversed by shaded walks and drives. At its center is a well-kept casino and a refreshment place with an accompanying bandstand, from which one of Uruguay's military bands sends forth a daily concert of those weird airs for which the Southern Republics are noted. These band concerts are a feature of Montevidean life; every evening each principal plaza has its concert by one of the army organizations. Scores are seldom seen on the stands before the musicians and they are at their best when performing the airs which have been developed under the romantic skies of the far southland. Under these conditions their performances are not only pleasing but exceedingly interesting, but when they attempt Strauss or Sousa, the performance loses its charm, and it becomes clearly evident that in handling music of other nations they are far adrift.

Every home of Montevideo, no matter what the class, possesses some touch of desire for beautiful surroundings. It matters not how humble the domicile, in its center is the "patio" embowered in some kind of flowers and greens. And from these humble little touches of floriculture up through the many classes of magnificent "patios" in the dwellings of the wealthy Uruguays to the elaborately laid out and carefully kept grounds of the enormous "quintas," there is seen the same love of nature, the same desire for artistic harmony.

The "quintas" or suburban residences of the better class form one of the prettiest features of this really lovely city. There are hundreds of them, stretching along the streets which lead into the open country, the Paseo del Molino being the most aristocratic quarter. In their construction, the Uruguayan has departed from the conventional Spanish custom of exhibiting no part of his dwelling to the public eye save its facade, and has placed his house in the center of pretty tracts screened from observation only by a fence of iron wicker.

In spite of all the drawbacks under which she has labored, Montevideo has developed into one of South America's most attractive cities and if spared from the designs of ambitions rivals or the destruction of the present administration through some ill-advised resolution, she is destined to regain a good bit of the prestige which might have been held, had her political powers in the past thought less of self and more of their country's advancement.

DOUGLAS WHITE.

1. Plaza de la Constitution, Government Buildings on the Left. 2. A Corner in the Prado, Montevideo's Principal Park. 3. A Fountain in the Prado. 4. Plaza de la Independencia

Things & People.

The Boxers and Certain of Us.

THERE is everything in the point of view. For those missionary sympathizers who scorn the humble Chinaman for his Boxer tendencies, a glance at the history of San Francisco should be instructive. In the years preceding 1880, there was an influx of Chinese immigrants to California. They arrived so fast and so thickly that a great number of our citizens, particularly of the working class, with whom the strangers were most keenly in competition, became alarmed. They had reasons which seemed to them sufficient for opposing the placid heathen. The Chinese were an alien people. Their manners and habits made it impossible for them to live in close relations with the whites unless one side or the other gave up their own ways,and the Chinese showed no disposition to make a change. A spark of resentment was kindled, and agitators fanned it to the flame. Tremendous public feeling was roused. Chinamen were stoned and insulted whenever they ventured out of their own quarter, so that for many years the rowdies among the city's small boys persecuted Chinamen instead of dogs and cats. Chinese were killed publicly by mobs. The laws practically refused them protection, letting whites who had murdered Chinese go free or escape with a nominal punishment. Finally, the government of this country being strong enough to dare to do as it pleased, there being no Chinese warships at its doors to enforce prevention, made a law forbidding further immigration of Chinese.

* * *

I review this well-known passage in San Francisco's history for the deadly parallel. In the years preceding 1900, the Caucasians became very numerous and aggressive in China. Their ways were not Chinese ways, their opinions and ideas were mostly pernicious and hateful to those who held Chinese opinions and ideas. It became apparent that the two could not exist side by side without one giving in to the other. The Caucasians showed no signs of a disposition to give in; on the contrary, they sent people to teach their ways to the Chinese, and troops and ships to force these ways down Chinese throats. Presently, the educated class, with whom the hated foreigners come most keenly into competition, began to grow uneasy. They sent out agitators who stirred up public feeling, and the people, being convinced that the foreigner was bad and that their government was not strong enough to enforce expulsion, rioted with nearly as much noise and bluster as that made by the Dennis Kearney riots twenty years ago, and killed many Caucasians, jvst as the Dennis Kearney rioters would have done to the Chinese had the police and military of the United States been as weak as it is in China. Therefore,the Caucasian powers of the earth, in the year of their Lord 1900, went out and smote the Empire of China, rent it apart, and divided it among the Medes and the Persians of Europe. There you are in the parallel columns. Let us go out and punish the Boxer and the Chinese government if necessary, because it is for us to prove that we protect our citizens abroad as at home, but in the name of justice let us not be self-righteous about it, lest some wise Chinese look up the history of the Pacific Coast.

* * *

Outside of the political aspect of the case, any person of taste and sense must regret the break-up and Europeanization of China. No one with Caucasian ideals believes for a moment that the essentials of Chinese civilization can be matched with those of our own. There is gold amidst all this dross, nevertheless. In some respects, the Chinese are far ahead of us. A year ago, San Francisco saw an example in comparing the Chinese section of the Fourth of July parade with the rest of the pageant. Their part was to ours as a Corot landscape to a chromo. This is only one example, but it serves to illustrate the rest. Encouraged to develop in their own way, to develop their virtues and correct their vices after their own fashion, the Chinese might rise to a civilization of their own, as high as ours, but different and distinctive. As it is, they are doomed to European assimilation. The Chinese articles of daily use, every one of which is beautiful and distinctive, must be replaced by those European wares of plain ugliness, struck off at lightning speed because they are cheap. Their customs, their sciences, their arts must be moulded into our forms. One more thing of beauty is gone out of the world.

***

Father Yorke and Stanford University.

IT was undoubtedly a slip of policy for Dr. David Starr Jordan of Stanford University to stir up the wrath of Rev. Peter Yorke just at this time, when the college is about to ask for tax-exemption. The controversy set Father Yorke crusading. I notice that in all of his commencement addresses delivered during the late graduating season, the champion of Catholicism in this region has thrown in a few remarks against the proposed constitutional amendment. To the unprejudiced outsider, Father Yorke's action seems a little foolish. No enlightened person believes that school property, public or private, should be taxed; the great majority of enlightened persons believe that church property should enjoy the same immunity. Only two states in the Union—California and polygamous Utah—tax their institutions of higher learning. That California does so is due to an unfortunate flaw in her constitution. Not only Stanford University; but Santa Clara College and Saint Mary's and the other universities controlled by the church of which Father Yorke is the champion ought to be exempt. Under these circumstances, the wise course for Father Yorke would be to help and favor the exemption of Stanford University in the hope that when the time should come for the legislators to lift the burden from Saint Mary's and Santa Clara, the large and growing body of Stanford alumni would reciprocate and assist. That is the way in which it would have been done in any other section of the country; the way in which Father Yorke has gone about it to lose the game for both sides is characteristic of the Pacific Coast system of "knocking."

***

The Colleges and the Negro Problem.

THE educated negroes of the South have been holding a conference at Atlanta, Georgia,over their own race and its future. As in any other conference, there was a great deal of talk to the square inch of practical result to the delegates, but it served for advertising purposes. The statistics presented show, on paper, a good rate of progress so far as education alone is concerned. The race has been graduating men and women from the colleges and universities of the country ever since the civil war. Nearly fifteen thousand of them, located permanently in the South, were heard from. Of these the great majority are teaching the members of their own race. A few are in the professions of law and medicine, and many more are clergymen. It is said that no conviction for crime or misdemeanor was ever recorded against a colored college graduate. This is a record which cannot be duplicated among an equal number of white University men, and is in striking contrast with the conduct of the educated Indian. These people seem to be doing the practical work in solving the negro problem, while the Bostonians theorize and the Southerners lynch.

* * *

The uncertainty of criticism of one's neighbors was illustrated by a large Western State,recently,in connection with this same negro problem. There is a large commonwealth not a thousand leagues from California, which prides itself upon enlightened views on politics. There is partial woman suffrage, at least, and a rage for municipal and political improvement. It is a stronghold of education and woman's clubs and churches. Correspondingly, this commonwealth has always been the first to extend noisy sympathy to those whom its citizens imagined to be "oppressed." The Siberian exile system, the Dreyfus case, the Boer war, and especially the lynchings in the South have been public hobbies. But a few months ago, a negro settler perpetrated one of those crimes which the Southerners punish by death without trial. Thereupon, a committee of citizens from this enlightened state went out and lynched him with neatness and dispatch. It makes a great deal of difference whose toes the other fellow treads on.

***

The Grumblers and the Fish.

THERE has been a general complaint, this year, that the trout fishing through the State is poor. Correspondingly, the cranks are crying that the streams of the State are poorly-stocked and fished out, that the government has been lax in replenishing streams and the State lax in protecting the supply, that the sport is going to the devil. The older and wiser fishermen declare, on the contrary, that the supply of brook and river fish has never been better than it has this year. The conditions regulating good or bad fishing are independent of the number of the finny tribe in the streams. This year, the seeming scarcity is a matter of food supply. When there is abundant provender in the river-bottoms, trout will not rise to a fly, because they are too well fed in their comfortable gravel beds to have need of coming to the surface to hustle this year. The late rains have kept the streams swollen and the supply of worms and other fish-food is very plentiful. Therefore, large catches have been the exception, but the fish are there, just the same.

***

A Practical Automobile Test.

TWO Los Angeles automobiles have been taken on trips which prove the possibilities of the horseless carriage in America. The first, owned and operated by Oliver Lippencott and E. Russell, made a run to Yosemite last week. The journey was finished without accident and practically without incident, and in faster time than would have been possible to the best horses. In the climb of the Sierra, the horseless carriage,run below its best speed, averaged eight miles an hour, where the stages make but three. This proves the ability of the "auto" to negotiate any grades possible to ordinary vehicles, and vindicates its reputation. The feat so impressed the Yosemite stage-line people that they have about decided to replace their old-time coaches with horseless carriages. The route between Los Angeles and Yosemite is mostly over toll roads, so that this trip throws little light on the ability of the automobile to deal with heavy going, but Mr. Harry Turner of Los Angeles, who came last week over the route between his own city and San Francisco, discovered that the "auto" is no better than the bicycle in sand. Down in the Tehachipi country he ran onto a sandy stretch which came very near ending the trip. Every now and then the machine would strike a belt of soft sand and stop, the wheels revolving in the hard grains without taking hold. He would meet this emergency by getting out and lifting the hind wheels loose, when the machine would jump forward about twenty feet and stop again. Otherwise, he, like the Yosemite travellers, found that the automobile could go on any roads possible for the bicycle and on grades which would be heavy for even the lightest horse-drawn carriage.

BOSWELL, JR.

The yellow fever antitoxic serum prepared from the bacillus icteroides, after being tried on a dozen cases, has proved a failure, says Dr. Charles Fitzpatrick. Another physician using the Sanarelli serum at New Orleans proclaims that it has produced no cure. The prophylactic fluid prepared by Haffkine's method has given good results in the case of animals, but has not been used yet on man.

A Day's Fishing on the Sacramento River.

1. Roosevelt Searches the Galleries. 2. Senator Mason of Illinois. (The man in the straw hat). 3. Lieutenant-Governor Woodruff of New York and his Wife. 4. The Enquirer Building. 5. Secretary Long and Mark Hanna. 6. The Chinese Minister Smiles. 7. Senator Lodge. (The second man in the front group). 8. Senator Mason Brings his Female Relatives. 9. The Veteran Delegates, who Attended the First National Convention, are Introduced. Further Views on page 10.

SNAP-SHOTS AT THE NATIONAL REPUBLICAN CONVENTION.

The CRISIS In CHINA.

A PUZZLING SITUATION.

Many Opinions on the Inner History of the Boxer Rising.

THERE are as many opinions on the true character of the Chinese Boxers as there are minds and eyes observing them. The Western world began mixing in the imbroglio with the idea that these people are a disorganized and lawless society having for their object the expulsion of all foreigners. The Empress Dowager was,according to this view,silently assisting them, while pretending to use her Imperial army to put down the insurrection. Nine-tenths of the newspapers the world over took this view of the situation at the outset of the trouble.

But time passed,the situation grew more complicated and the position of the contending parties less clearly marked; persons and forces supposed to do certain things signally failed, and the cock-sure journalists of New York, London and Paris began to hedge a little. At the present time there are about four views, widely differing, on the existing condition of affairs.

The first of these,the one put forward by the missionaries, is the one still popularly accepted. It holds the Boxers to be an unrighteous horde which despises Christianity, hates the foreigners,and is taking violent measures against them. This view, curiously enough, is supported by the fact that most of the Boxers whose names reach us are known to be men of education, as Chinese education goes. The leaders of the anti-missionary movements of the past ten years have come from this very educated class. Steeped as they are in Conservation and Confucianism, the Western religion, ethics and customs are particularly distasteful to them. They have not been accustomed to get out and slaughter foreigners along with the mob, but they have worked and planned and plotted,nevertheless. An instance of their attitude is afforded by the remark of a mandarin during the riots of 1895. Being ordered from Pekin to suppress the disturbance, he did it promptly, saying, "Not because they have killed the foreign devils, but because they take any notice of such cattle." If the educated, Confucian class are with the Boxers, say the missionaries, then it must be an anti-foreign, anti-Christian movement. The Roman Catholic missionaries, on the other hand, take still another view. The missions of their faith lie mostly along the borders of the Empire, in a country infested by robbers. Wherever they go, the propagandists of this faith make it a point to elevate the social and material condition of their converts and to organize them against attack. In pursuance of this line of action, they have had countless skirmishes with the bandits. It is but natural, therefore, that they should believe the Boxers to be only a group of these bandits, joined for further plunder. No secret society,no anti-foreign organization, say the priests who know China, only murderers and robbers. In passing, the human tendency to look at things with partisan eyes may be noticed. The Confucians oppose the Protestants; therefore,the Protestants hold the Boxers are Confucians. The bandits plague the Roman Catholics; therefore, the latter call the Boxers bandits.

The explanation given by most of the intelligent Chinese in this country throws the whole situa ion into new and unusual light. It is significant that Celestials of this class in all parts of the United States agree in speaking of the Boxers with respect and deference. The papers of New York, Chicago, Denver and San Francisco contain interviews with Chinese citizens who express independently the same views. The Boxer rebellion is the French Revolution of China,they say. The leaven of foreign progress,set working by Li Hung Chang, by his lieutenants and by certain Europeanized Chinese, has brought about this outburst against the powers that be, the Ming dynasty, and the non-progressive force in China. The Boxers have nothing against foreigners as foreigners,although they would resist any attempt to seize and partition China; on the contrary, most of them are favorable to European ideas and not a few are Christians. It is the awakening of China. For over three hundred years the common people have loathed the Manchu dynasty with a placid loathing which came of quiet submission to the inevitable. The Tartar dynasty came into China by a side door. The true Chinese had fought the Manchu Tartars for centuries and had built the famous Chinese wall against them, but once, after a long and exhausting civil war, a viceroy of the Empire hired Tartar mercenaries to come down and assist his side. Entering the kingdom thus in the guise of allies to one party, the trained Manchu hordes turned against both sides, put their own ruler on the throne,forced their own customs—including the wearing of pig-tails—on their subjects, and have since ruled China by lopping off every head which appeared above the crowd. When the sleeping Chinese nation began to stir and waken, the first emotion which awoke was hatred of the Manchu dynasty. This Boxer revolution has been fermenting for many years, but in a quiet way. In characteristic Chinese fashion, the reformers began their work through a secret society. China is honeycomed with orders of this sort. The Tai-Ping rebellion of fifty years ago, a movement not unlike the Boxer disturbance, owed its origin and conduct to such an organization. Any old resident of San Francisco knows how the continual highbinder disturbances in Chinatown are kept up and fostered by secret societies. Without these associations, no public movement can advance in China. The Triad, which fostered the Tai-Ping rebellion,is so like Freemasonry that it is regarded by many Masons as an offshoot of their own order. The Boxers may, for all we know,be as ancient and as strong. They have chosen this as the accepted time to strike for national freedom because the Empress Dowager is especially hated by the ordinary Chinese, making the reigning dynasty particularly vulnerable just now.

It will be objected that this view takes no stock in the massacre of missionaries and native converts. The explanation of this feature is just where the beauty of Oriental diplomatic method comes in. The Empress, say the Amer-icanized Chinese, getting wind of the proposed revolution, and realizing that her fighting forces would be too weak to oppose the Boxer hordes together with the forces which would rally to their aid on account of their loyalty to her deposed nephew, Kwang Su, worked through her agents upon the turbulent and lawless among the common people, causing them to rise and slaughter the Christians in order that she might lay their deeds to the Boxers and call in the foreign powers to assist her in repressing them. On this very basis a Chicago Chinaman has lately explained the difference between her public appeals to the powers and her intercepted private correspondence with her provincial governors. "She calls them "Boxers' when she communicates with the foreign governments. When she writes to her governors, she calls it disturbances among the common people, and never mentions the Boxers." Far-fetched as thsi explanation may seem to the Occidental mind, to one acquainted with the Chinese character it does not appear either strained or unnatural. It would be a Chinese way of doing business. It is weakened, however, by the events of the past week. The repulse of the relief column before Tien-Tsin was accomplished by Imperial troops using Imperial arms and artillery. This, certainly, gives the lie to any assertion that the crafty Dowager is actively against the Boxers.

Bronze Instrument, Pekin Observatory.

Old members of the American diplomatic Corps differ from this view, while at the same time regarding the disturbance as the work of a secret society. According to their idea, the Triad and the other societies have changed in both object and purpose. It used to be hatred of the Manchu dynasty, but it has grown into a great, unfaltering grievance against the foreigner. "China for the Chinese" is now the cry of the native patriotic leagues. They believe that the Boxers are backing the Empress and that behind them both is the whole of China save only the little band of enlightened souls who believe in Congress and back Kwang Su. The basis of the Chinese popular hatred of the Manchu dynasty is their aversion to all foreigners, all unaccustomed ways. People stronger than the Manchus, more hostile to their own ways, are overrunning China and controlling the industries of the country, and the Chinese have forgotten the lesser in the greater hatred. And a minority of the diplomats see in the Empress, combination with the lowest and most turbulent of her subjects, the guiding hand of crafty Russia,who has been waiting the opportunity to sweep down and gobble Northern China.

It cannot be denied, says "Ex-Attache" in the New York Tribune, that for more than half a century China has been subjected to a degree of indignity, insult, extortion and bullying on the part of foreign Powers which no Christian Power would have tolerated. Treaties have been imposed upon her by force, her finest harbors seized, and vast stretches of her litoral successively placed under foreign rule. She has been compelled to consent to agreements providing for the transfer of her immense river trade to foreign flags and for the gridironing of the entire land by foreign-built and foreign-controlled railroads, while for every concession made by her a dozen new ones have been presented by the foreign Powers. At length, exasperated beyond endurance and driven to the wall, the Empress issued in December last an address to the Viceroys of the various provinces. "The foreign Powers cast upon us looks of tigerlike voracity, hustling each other in their endeavors to be the first to seize upon our innermost territories," she declared. "They fail to understand that there are certain things which this Empire can never consent to do, and that, if hard pressed, we have no alternative but to rely upon the justice of our cause." Four weeks later another edict was dispatched to the same officials by the Dowager Empress who, according to widespread belief in the Orient, has English blood in her veins, her mother having been a Eurasian, or a child of a white father and a Manchu mother. In this second edict the Viceroys were warned to exercise a prudent discrimination toward the disturbers of public peace. "The reckless fellows" who band together and create riot on the pretext of securing reforms were to be punished, while those "loyal subjects who learn gymnastic drill for the protection of their families and their country," that is to say, the members of the "Righteous Harmony Fists Association," were to be favored.

CHINA'S MILITARY RESOURCE.

Why the Yellow People May Surprise Europe in the Coming War.

NINE-TENTHS of the Americans and Europeans who think of the Chinese crisis at all, assume without hesitation that the victory of the combined Powers over China will be comparatively easy and safe. That the yellow people have any chance of ultimate victory or that they can draw out the struggle to any length, few persons believe. And yet, the surprising truth is that the Chinese have a much greater chance than anyone unaquainted with the nation and the country has ever supposed. The basis of the general belief in China's weakness is the comparatively slight resistance which she offered in the war with Japan. The Japanese struggle, however,was fought under circumstances very far different. With Japan, the fight was over a matter of territory, and neither interested nor concerned the average Chinaman. The Emperor's army went out and were whipped and died in an impersonal fashion, because they were ordered and knew no better. In this war, they will be fighting for something which is near and intimate with every Chinaman—for hatred of the foreign devil and his ways. The Japanese war concerned only a small section of the Empire; outside the very center of the Middle Kingdom it was as though the war were not. In this war there will be none of China's three hundred millions who will not be vitally and closely interested. Japan won her war because she overwhelmed the Emperor's few loyalists and took possession of the fruits of victory while the rest of China stood stolidly by. In this war, the Powers will have to subjugate the whole area of a country reaching from the latitude of Mount Shasta to the latitude of Yucatan, and packed with inhabitants as is no other territory on earth. There is every reason to believe that on this occasion the Dowager Empress has at her back not merely her Manchu retainers but all China, and China contains a teeming and seething population of more than four hundred million,who are almost insensible to pain, have no fear of death,and are imbued with fierce hatred of the foreigner. It is true that both Canton and Peking were occupied some forty years ago by an allied Franco-English army of fifteen thousand or twenty thousand men. But Canton and Peking were such immense cities that the Anglo-French forces occupied only a small quarter thereof, and the remainder of the two cities were so little under their control that each morning the heads of those European soldiers who had strayed beyond the cordon of sentinels during the night would be hurled from neighboring houses into the Anglo-French lines. Indeed, the so-called seizure of these immense capitals was so ineffective that not one in a thousand Chinamen will admit that it really took place, and Chinese who were living in Peking at the time of its occupation have declared by all they hold sacred that the story must be untrue, seeing that they never set eyes on a French or English soldier at the time alleged. Moreover, Chinese history ascribes the desaruction of the celebrated Summer Palace not to the French and English troops, as was really the case, but to Divine agencies, as punishment of sacrilege on the part of one of the members of the Imperial family. This merely serves to illustrate the general size of the proposition of which the powers have taken hold.

The difference in spirit, then, is one reason why the Chinese defence will be different in this war. Correspondingly, there has been a great change in the material preparations for war. In 1894, the arms of the Chinese military were antique affairs, palmed off on them by the Germans and in no sense the equal of those borne by the Japanese. Except in the navy, which covered itself with glory in the heroic defeat of the Yalu river, the men hardly knew how to use their weapons. These six years which have witnessed China's greatest period of wakening, have seen as great a change in this particular as in any other. A considerable section of the army now carry Lee rifles, the equal of our United States Naval small arm, and most of the men have been thoroughly trained by European officers. Government factories have been turning out first-class artillery from native ores and can doubtless continue to do so as long as the war lasts. Indeed, the Chinese are manufacturing even their own small arms, and will need to be dependent on no European source of supply when they arm their hordes.

The central force of the Chinese army,the one used by the Emperor on state occasions, is not the body of troops upon which China will rely in case of this or any other foreign war. The backbone of her national defence will be the foreign-drilled troops of Li Hung Chang. The imperial army is taken from a hereditary military caste, descended from the Manchu conquerors. Long interbreeding, conservatism and appointment by the system of classical examination has made this body degenerate, worthless. Their arms and their military customs are those which prevailed five hundred years or so back, when the Manchus were struggling for a foothold, but the military valor of those times has cooled. The burlesque army defeated by the Japanese was taken wholly from this force. This is another reason why the Japanese war has no value as a basis of comparison. The nominal strength of this force is three hundred thousand and it is recruited to that point in war time, but only about eighty thousand are kept under arms in time of peace.

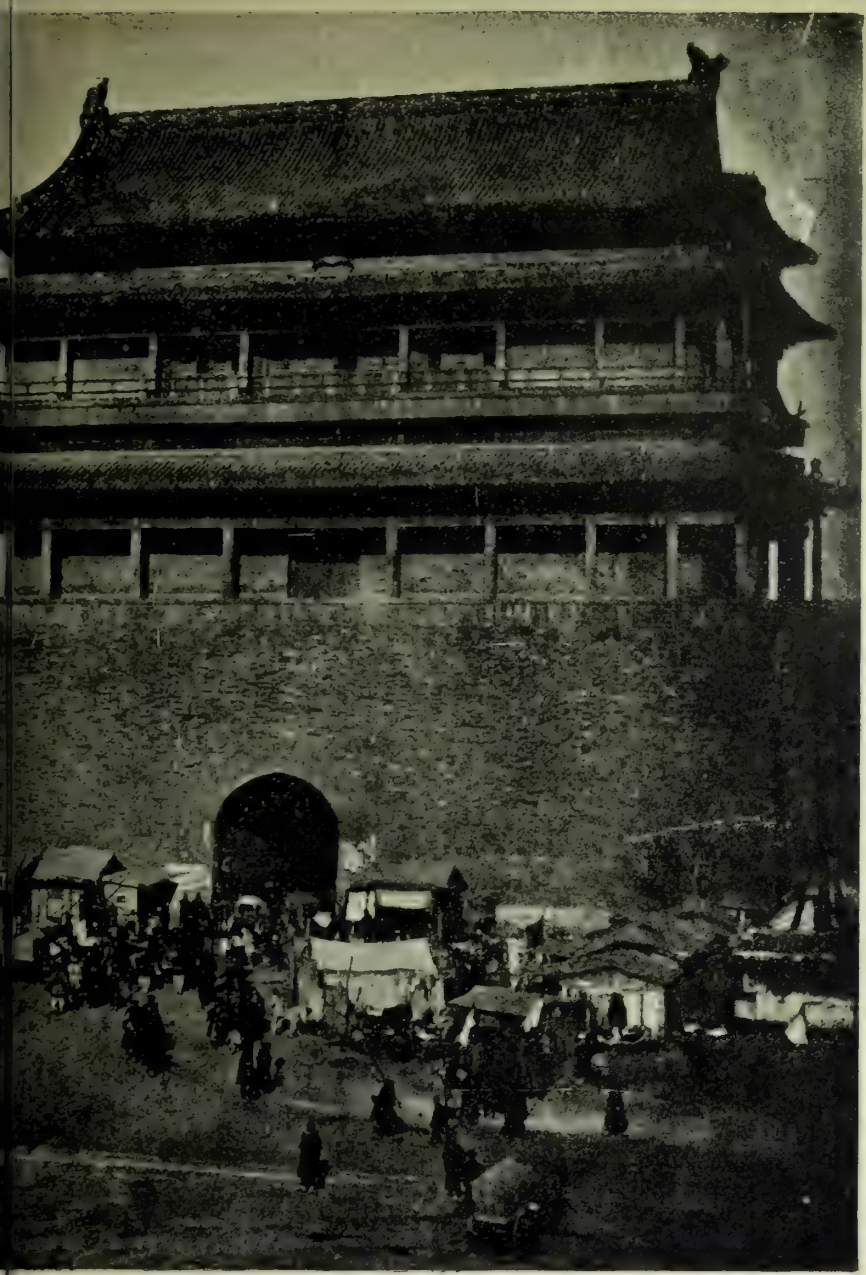
But the real army as it stands now, the one which turned modern rifles and artillery against the Tien Tsin relief force, is composed of Li Hung Chang's thirty-five thousand troops, armed with modern weapons and drilled by Europeans. They are, man for man, the equals of European troops for skill, probably their superior in endurance and contempt of death. Their regular station is at Tien-Tsin, Taku, and the surrounding country, and they will be the first apponents of the European troops. An army of this size,operating on its own base of supplies, is a formidable one, but it is not

Continued on page 10.

The Great Bell Temple, Pekin.
House-top View of Pekin from the Imperial Observatory.

The "Strangers' Gate
The Astor House in the Anglo-Americ
Photos Loaned by Mr. I

VIEWS IN THE DISTURBED SE

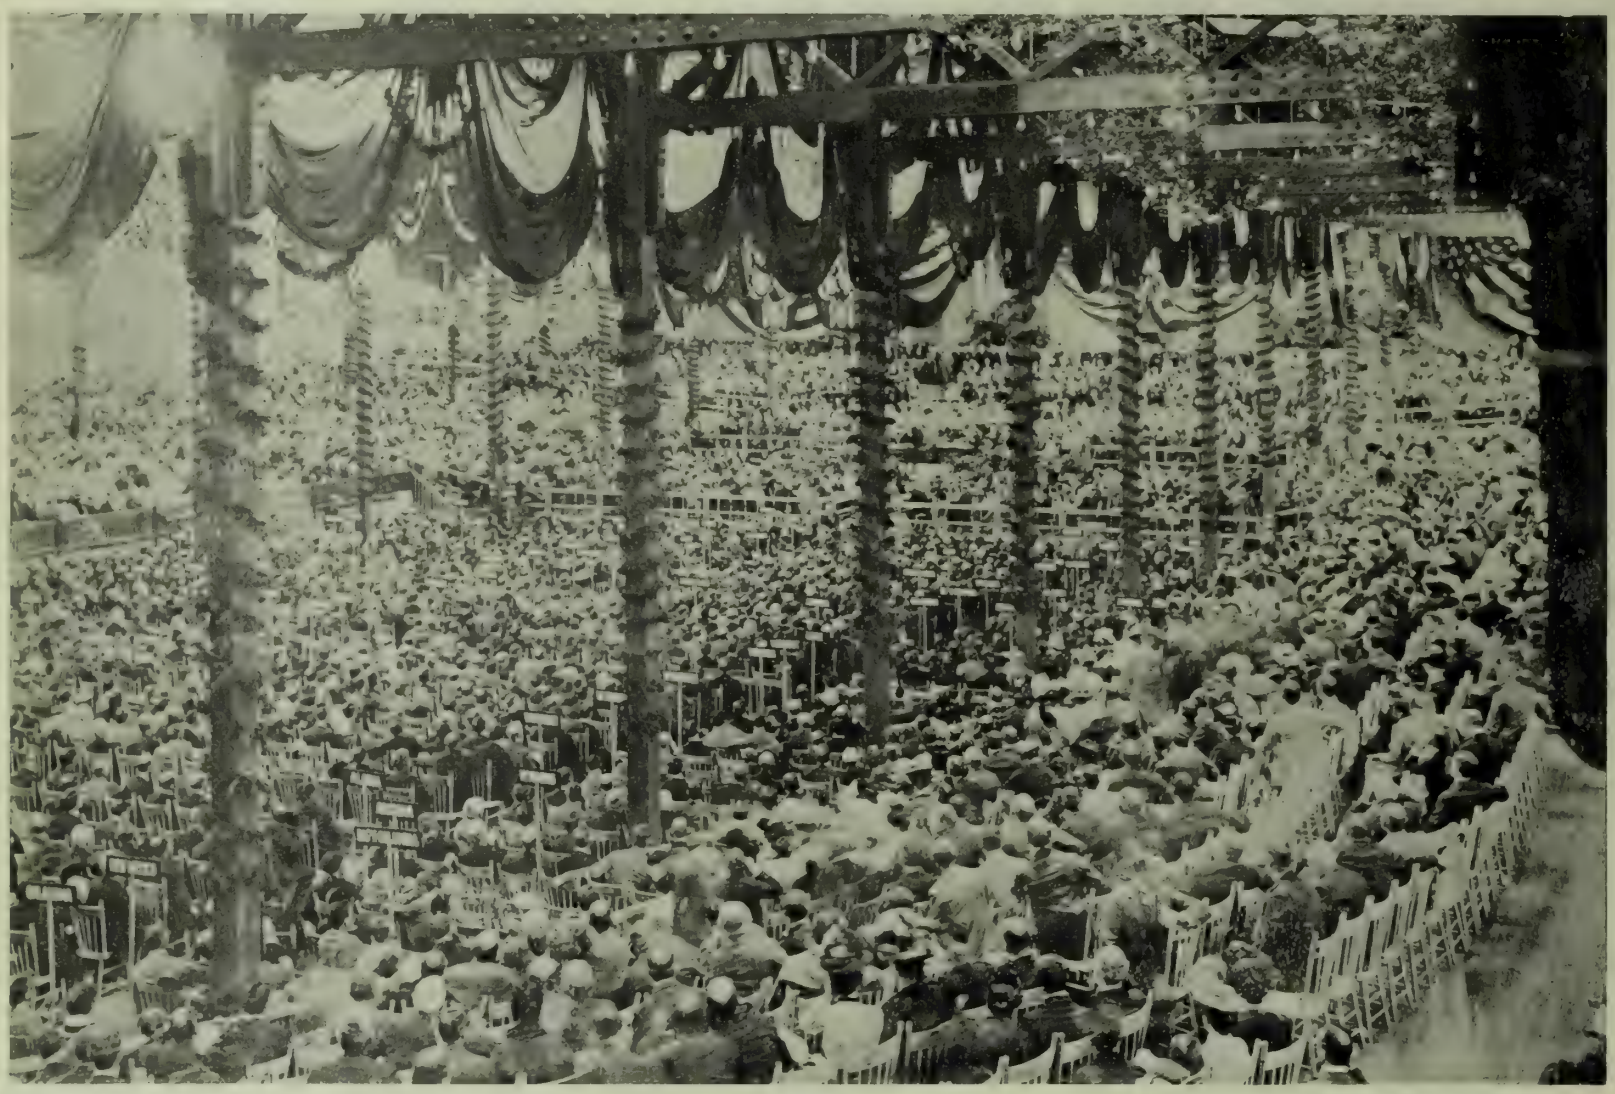


he Chinese Capital.
ction of Tien-Tsin.
Bostwick.

Pagoda Tower, Pekin.
The Cells Where Candidates for Governments Appointment are Examined.

ON OF THE CHINESE EMPIRE

THE NATIONAL REPUBLICAN CONVENTION.



The Opening Session, Looking Toward the Platform.

The Convention Hall.

China's Military Resource.

Continued from page 7.

China's only military resource. Throughout the Empire, a sort of militia makes up a body of nearly one hundred thousand men on a peace footing and nearly six hundred thousand on a war basis. Part of these men are armed and part are not, but the great arsenals which the Empire has been stocking may be able to supply them all before the foreigners scatter Li Hung's foreign-drilled troops. The result will not be trained soldiers, it is true, but with modern arms, courage, overwhelming numbers and fierce hatred may offset the training and intelligence of the Europeans.

The ample provision for war in the shape of arsenals and factories for the making of weapons is the surprising feature of the whole situation. In a general way, it may be said that the coast of China is better provided with guns than that of the United States—and all made in Chinese workshops. To show what one arsenal is capable of producing, a report made out less than two years ago gives the following work in progress in the one at Shanghai: Two 9.2 guns to be mounted on hydro-pneumatic disappearing carriages; two 9.2 guns for garrison batteries; eight 6-inch guns, twelve 4 7 guns, twenty 12-pounders, twenty 6-pounders and fifty 3-pounders, all "quick-firing." All the steel for these guns was made in the arsenal from native ore. The machinery at this arsenal is adequate for the manufacture of all calibres up to 12-inch fifty-ton pieces. Besides this arsenal there are similar institutions at Tien-Tsin, Nanking, Hankow, Foo-Choo, Canton and Ching-Tu. The arsenal at Tien-Tsin is under the provincial government of the Viceroy of Chi-Li. It is well supplied with everything in the way of tools and machinery, and has spare room enough for a plant to supply the whole Chinese army.

Considering the enormous area to be covered, the immense population to be conquered, and the tremendous resources of the country in men and lives, considering the proximity of the yellow people to their base of supplies and our distance from our own, considering, above all, the tenacity with which the Chinese mind holds to an idea once formed, the European nations may well expect a long war and a hard one, with a chance of ultimate defeat.

When that tired feeling comes along, sidetrack it with Jesse Moore "AA"—the best whiskey in the land.

Meditations of a Matron.

I HAVE never in all my life seen such a queer summer, my dear Diary. People are so divided that it is hard to go to any place in California without meeting someone that one knows quite well. In a way it is nice, but of course, it makes life at the principal summer resorts very quiet. I am at Del Monte this week, and am perfectly happy. It is beautiful down here. The weather is ideal. There is no place on earth where the sky is so blue. Robert and I get up quite early every morning and go out to the Links. He plays a very steady game now, and strange to say, I am slowly becoming fond of golf. The Links at Del Monte are very picturesque. I like to get to the third green where there is a most beautiful view of the fields and trees, and the blue, blue water of the Bay beyond. There are quite a number of people now at New Monterey, among them several artists and some of the girls from town have gone there to sketch. Monterey is to San Francisco what Fontainebleau is to Paris, the halcyon dream of the artist, the coloring is so rich. It was there that Charles Rollo Peters painted his finest pictures, which by the way, created the greatest furore in New York. It was in Monterey too that Robert Louis Stevenson wrote some of his most charming sketches. It is a dear place. I love to wander about and to drive over to Cypress Point and take tea under those wonderful old trees. I shall be quite ready to remain the month here, but of course, I do not know whether we can manage to stay away so long from town. Leila will, however, fix that. Papa has been promising to come down here and stay with me when Robert returns to town, but I do not know if I should be quite content without him. It is really wonderful how adaptive Robert is. He is a born diplomatist. Little Cricket thinks she is getting her own way all the time, and in that labors under a delicious hallucination. At least, that is what Arthur says about me. Mama and Leila are still at the Hotel Rafael. Leila plays golf every day. There re eighteen holes on those links, so she takes nine in the morning, and nine in the afternoon. There are many really good players over there. Leila says half the fun at San Rafael is that the members of the Club have little contests daily. They play for balls, for new clubs or for luncheons, so there is always something to add zest to the game. Riding and driving, too, are very popular. A riding club has been established so most of the girls go out every day. As the horses are gentle and yet good, it is a capital opportunity for girls to learn. Leila has taken it up, I should not be surprised yet to hear of Mama's going in for it. Walter Dean is much better now; his mother, Mrs. Walter and he have gone up to spend a few weeks at Castle Crags. Helen and her father are at the hotel. Mr. Gillway gave a large dinner out at Pastoris' on Thursday evening. Almost every day there is something in the luncheon or dinner way. So many people have houses for the summer. The Chauncey Winslows give a dinner this week. At Burlingame, Arthur writes that life is filled with polo and golf. He is very much interested in polo, though Papa disapproves strenuously. He does not think Arthur can afford to keep a stable, but Arthur is determined to play so I suppose Papa will have to give in; he is so accustomed to the inevitable giving in now, that it is almost second nature to him. Edith McBean has been down there this last week; she played golf quite frequently. Arthur specially mentioned a pretty white linen golfing hat she wore. I was astonished at his noticing it. Mrs. Scott is an inveterate golfist and plays an excellent game. I am quite surprised that Mrs. Joe Tobin has not become interested in it. Now, Diary dear, I think I have told you all I know that has happened this week. There is, as you see, no really gay time upon us.

Most people will be quite surprised to hear Walter Magee and Flora Dean are to be married on Friday. I shall tell you all about the wedding next week for I really think I must go up to see Flora married. She has been at Vassar College for the last few years where she really did awfully well. I think Walter and she will make an ideal couple. He is one of the most popular young fellows about town.

MRS. CRICKET.

The White Man's Burden

can be named in the single word—dyspepsia. It is the one disease, which more than any other, affects the American people. It is common to all classes and all conditions. It makes life miserable. It mars family happiness. It interferes with business and pleasure alike, and it discounts a man's usefulness just as much as it discounts his happiness.

There's a remedy for dyspepsia. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has lifted this burden from the bodies of hundreds of thousands. It cures ninety-eight out of every hundred who give it a fair and faithful trial.

"I used ten bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and several vials of his 'Pleasant Pellets' a year ago this spring, and have had no trouble with indigestion since," writes Mr. W. T. Thompson, of Townsend, Broadwater Co., Montana. "Words fail to tell how thankful I am for the relief, as I had suffered so much and it seemed that the doctors could do me no good. I got down in weight to 125 pounds, and was not able to work at all. Now I weigh nearly 160 and can do a day's work on the farm. I have recommended your medicine to several, and shall always have a good word to say for Dr. Pierce and his medicines."

Free. Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser is sent free on receipt of stamps to pay expense of mailing only. It contains 1008 pages and over 700 illustrations. Send 21 one-cent stamps for the book in paper covers, or 31 stamps for cloth binding to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

J. J. Pfister KNITTING CO.

103 Post St., S. F.
near Kearney.

Beautiful New Styles.

Men's, Women's and Children's

BATHING SUITS.

Alapaca and Knitted

At Prices to Suit Everybody.

Sweaters, Jerseys, Golf Vests and Jackets

Outing and Riding Leggings,

Sporting Goods.

Send for Illustrated Catalogues.

A Toilet Necessity.

WAKELEE'S COLD CREAM of Roses.

Made with pure Almond Oil and Distilled Water of Roses.

HOTEL VENDOME.

At San Jose is one of Central California's most beautiful hostelries. In the midst of its own twelve-acre park; two blocks from the railroad station where almost hourly trains connect with the outside; the starting point for Lick Observatory; the center of a greater number and variety of attractions than any other place on the Coast; furnished finely, graded and watered roads for driving and cycling lead in every direction; with over 250 elegantly furnished rooms, and suites with bath and toilet; perfect in appointment, service and all the accessories of comfort, and one of the most attractive features of San Jose, the metropolis of the world renowned Santa Clara Valley.

GEO. P. SNELL, Manager

PERRY DAVIS' PAIN-KILLER.—Its valuable properties as a speedy cure for pain cannot fail to be generally appreciated, and no family should be without it in case of accident, or sudden attack of dysentery, diarrhœa or cholera morbus. Sold everywhere. Avoid substitutes; there is but one Pain-Killer—Perry Davis'. Price 25c and 50c.

DUNCAN SPRINGS HOPLAND Mendocino Co.

Two miles from railroad station; 101 miles from San Francisco; enequalled soda and magnesia springs; hospitable management; first-class table; hard-finished hotel; picturesque site and surroundings; two trains daily; long-distance telephone; terms $10 to $12 per week; housekepping cottages $15 to $20 per month. Waters bottled by W. H. Bone, 605-607 Merchant street, S. F. Through fare $3 80 Send for circulars. Address O. HOWELL.

Brushes for barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bath-houses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS., Brush Mfrs.

TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO STREET

573-579 Market Street, San Francisco | R. H. PEASE, President and Manager. | 73 and 75 First Street, Portland, Ore.

MONTROSE BICYCLE SENT FREE

on approval to your address WITHOUT A CENT IN ADVANCE. SEND US YOUR ORDER, state whether you wish lady's or man's wheel; give color, height of frame and gear wanted and WE WILL SHIP THE WHEEL C. O. D. on approval, allowing you to uncrate and examine it fully before you accept it. If it is not all and more than we claim for it, and a better wheel than you can get for any where near the price from any one else, refuse it and we will pay all express charges ourselves. The "MONTROSE" Bicycle at our Special Agent's sample price of $16.50 is the greatest bargain in a bicycle ever offered. We guarantee it equal to any $40 wheel on the market, and you need not accept it nor pay a cent if you do not find it as we represent. We are EXCLUSIVE BICYCLE MANUFACTURERS and take this method of quickly introducing our 1900 MODELS. This offer of a sample wheel at this low price is made to secure a RIDER AGENT in each town to represent us and take orders. Our agents make money fast.

SPECIFICATIONS. Frame, 22, 24 or 26 inch; ladies, 22 inch. Best tubing with forged connections, flush joints, improved expander device to fasten seat post and handle bar; Royal Arch crown; the celebrated Mavis hubs and hanger—the easiest running known; Record "A" tires, the best and one of the most expensive tires on the market. The genuine $4 Mesinger Hygienic saddle; pedals, tools and accessories the best obtainable. Enameled in black, maroon or coach green, highly finished and ornamented; special finished nickeling on all bright parts. We thoroughly test every piece of material that goes into this machine. Our binding year's guarantee bond with each bicycle.

FREE to any one sending the $16.50 cash in full with order we will send free a genuine Burdick 10,000 mile barrel pattern cyclometer; or a high grade floor pump. Your money all back if you are not perfectly satisfied.

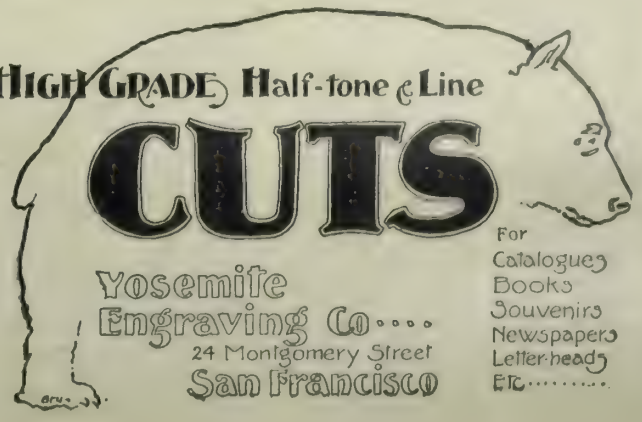
CHEAP WHEELS. We do not manufacture the cheap department store kind of wheels, such as many new concerns and big supply houses advertise and sell as high grade. We can furnish them, however, at $5 to $7 stripped; or $9.75 to $12.50 complete. We do not guarantee nor recommend them. BEFORE ORDERING a bicycle of any one else, no matter who or how cheap, write us and let us tell you how much we can save you on the same machine.

If you are UNABLE to BUY a wheel we can assist you to EARN A BICYCLE by distributing catalogues for us a few days. We need one person in each town for this purpose. We have several hundred SECOND HAND WHEELS taken in trade which we will close out at $3 to $10 each; also some shopworn samples and '99 models very cheap. Send for Bargain List. OUR RELIABILITY is unquestioned. We refer to any bank or business house in Chicago, or any express or railroad company. We will send you letters of reference direct from the largest banks in Chicago if you wish it.

SEND YOUR ORDER today. This low price and these special terms of shipment without deposit will be withdrawn very soon. Give name of this paper.

J. L. MEAD CYCLE COMPANY, Chicago, Ill.

We Make the Cuts in this Paper.



IN BOOKDOM

BOOTH TARKINGTON'S Monsieur Beaucaire, published by McClure, Phillips & Co., is a light and graceful romance of the eighteenth century, of the time of lace ruffles, keen sword-, large oaths, low bows and sweeping courtesies; more especially, of the time when Bath was a great name and Beau Nash, its king, rejoiced when nobles, belles, poets, and statesmen thronged his rooms and when the high play of buck and blood brought him great profit. The Duke of Winterset, of sporting proclivities, plays in a private room with the French ambassador's barber, who detects him with a card up his sleeve. As the price of his silence, the young Frenchman Beaucaire compels the Englishman to introduce him to the fine world of Bath, and in particular to the reigning beauty, Lady Mary Carlisle, as the Duc de Chateaurien. He will cast aside his black peruke, his own hands and his own razor shall cut off his moustache, and invested in white satin he will shine a man of parts, a man of birth and fashion. The Duke of Winterset, blind with rage, is forced to stand by and see the sweet looks bestowed on the debonair ex-barber. More, when the evening ends a red rose that had lain on the beauty's bosom disappears within the superb waistcoat of Beaucaire. In a week the men of the town are mad with envy of his retinue, his equipage, his engaging manners, his success with women. Duels are forced upon him, but he is a master with the rapier and the challengers come to grief. On one occasion he hears a bit of gossip concerning a young prince, cousin of Louis XV., who had been commanded to marry the Princess Henriette and who had rebelled. To defend this lady in particular and all Frenchwomen incidentally he easily runs the traducer through the shoulder and sends a basket of red roses to Winterset, whose rancor he rightly blames for the encounter. One evening all Bath goes junketing to a country-house. Beaucaire attains the coveted honor of riding closest to Lady Mary's carriage; she listens to his tender avowals and everything goes well for the young man's cause, when a party of disguised men come tearing down the road with cries of "Barber! Kill the barber!" Beaucaire defends himself with consummate skill, but is disarmed from behind and seriously wounded. At his cries his servants come to protect him. Lady Mary is on the point of taking him into her carriage when Winterset unmasks and tells the lady what manner of man she has been favoring. Beaucaire listens smiling, he has no words with which to defend himself, and no breath; as soon as the carriage rolls away he falls. On the next great gala night at Beau Nash's, when everbody is discussing the scandalous affair, the young Frenchman, who has been threatened with arrest, jail, a thrashing if he ever shows up in the town again, appears, handsomer than ever, though very pale, a dozen orders shining on his breast. When angry men crowd around to seize him the French ambassador chances on the scene and salutes him with great respect as Prince Louis Philippe de Valois, Duke of Orleans, Duke of Chartres, First Peer of France, Knight of the Golden Fleece, etc., etc. He had fled from France in disguise to escape the King's importunities in regard to marrying. The Beauty of Bath asks to be forgiven, but the spell is broken. "'Tis true there is not a peasant in France who would not have known 'one born,' but they are wonderful, this English people, holding an idea once it is in their head. . . . There is only jus' one in the whole worl' who would not have treat' me in the way you treat me. I am goin' back to espouse mademoiselle, my cousin. My frien's, I ask your felicitations." Monsieur Beaucaire passes out.

* *

The West End, by Percy White, at one time editor of Public Opinion, Harper and Brothers. This is a novel of London society, dealing chiefly with the family of a man who had done wonderful things in the grocery line and who was finally ennobled by a grateful Sovereign for his well-managed, well-advertised philanthropical efforts. His wife learns how to buy and wear good clothes, how to get her name into the society papers, how to entertain, how to drop her old friends when she is "taken up." Her daughter becomes a success after her first drawing room, but to the great grief of her parents, rejects eligible suitors and falls in love with a poor but handsome young officer, who goes to fight the Boers. The 20-year old son of the house entangles himself with a beautiful divorcee, whose acquaintance his mother had been obliged to drop, marries her secretly and is opportunely killed in South Africa. The story is told by the shrewd, cynical poor relation who lives in the family, steers them clear of social snags and comments wittily on society as it passes before his keen eyes.

* *

As Seen By Me, Lilian Bell, Harper and Brothers, is what the title would convey, pictures of places, impressions of foreign travel as they strike the author. She has a way, denied to many another writer of travels, of seeing the interesting and striking. For example:

People said to me, "What are you going to London for?" I said, "To get an English point of view." "Very well," said one of the knowing ones, "then you must go to 'The Insular,' in Piccadily. That is not only the smartest hotel in London, but it is the most typically British. The rooms are let from season to season to the best country families. There you will find yourself plunged headlong into English life with not an American environment to bless yourself with, and you will soon get your English point of view."

We wrote at once for rooms, and then telegraphed for them from Southampton.

Our luggage would not go on even a four-wheeler, so we took a dear little private bus and proceeded to put our mountainous American trunks on it. We filled the top of this bus as full as it would hold, and put everything else inside. After stowing ourselves in there would not have been room even for another umbrella.

In this fashion we reached "The Insular," where we were received by four or five gorgeous creatures in livery, the head one of whom said, 'Miss Columbia?" I admitted it, and we were ushered in, where we were met by more belonging to this tribe of gorgeousness, another of whom said, "Miss Columbia?"

"Yes," I said, firmly, privately wondering if they were trying to trip me into admitting that I was somebody else.

"The housekeeper will be here presently," said this person. "She is expecting you."

Forth came the housekeeper.

"Miss Columbia?" she said.

Once again I said "Yes," patiently, standing on my other foot.

"If yon will be good enough to come with me I will show you your rooms."

A door opened outward, disclosing a little square place with two cane-bottomed chairs. A man bounced out so suddenly that I nearly annihilated my sister, who was back of me. I could not imagine what this little cubby-hole was, but as there seemed to be nowhere else to go, I went in. The others followed, then the man who had bounced out. He closed the door and shut us in, where we stood in solemn silence. About a quarter of an hour afterwards I thought I saw something through the glass moving slowly downward, and then an infinitesimal thrill in the soles of my feet led me to suspect the truth.

"Is this thing an elevator?" I whispered to my sister.

"No, they call it a lift over here," she whispered back.

"I know that," I murmured impatiently. "But is this thing it? Are we moving? Are we going anywhere?"

"Why, of course, my dear. They are slower than ours, that's all."

I listened to her with some misgivings, for her information is not wholly to be trusted, but this time it happened that she was right, for after awhile we came to the fourth floor, where our rooms were.

I wish you could have seen the size of them. I shall not attempt to describe them, for you would not believe me. I had engaged "two rooms and a bath." The two rooms were there. "Where is the bath?" I said. The housekeeper lovingly removed a gigantic crash towel from a hideous tin object, and proudly exposed to my vision that object which is next dearest to his silk hat to an Englishman's heart—a hip-bath tub. Her manner said, "Beat that if you can."

My sister prodded me in the back with her umbrella, which in our sign language means, "Don't make a scene."

"Very well," I said, rather meekly. "Have our trunks sent up."

"Very good, madam."

There was a pocket edition of a fireplace, and they brought us a hatful of the vilest soft coal, which peppered everything in the rooms with soot.

We climbed over our trunks to sit by this imitation of a fire, only to find that there was nothing to sit on but the most uncompromising of straight-backed chairs.

We groaned as we took in the situation. To our poor, racked frames a coal-hod would not have suggested more discomfort. We dragged up our hampers, packed with steamer-rugs and pillows, and my sister sat on hers while I took another turn at the bell. While the maid is answering this bell, I shall have plenty of time to tell yon what we afterwards discovered the process of bell-ringing in an English hotel to be.

We rang our bell. Presently we heard the most horrible gong, such as we use on our patrol wagons and fire-engines at home. This clanged four times. Then a second bell down the hall answered it. Then feet flew by our door. At this juncture my sister and I prepared to let ourselves down the fire-escape. But we soon discovered that those flying feet belonged to the poor maid, whom that gong had signalled that she was wanted on the fourth floor. She flew to a speaking-tube and asked who on the fourth floor wanted her. She was then given the number of our room when she rang a bell to signify that our call was answered, by which time she was at liberty, and knocked at our door, saying, in her soft English voice, "Did you ring, miss?"

We told her we wanted rocking-chairs. She said there was not one in the house. Then easy-chairs, we said, or anything cushioned or low or comfortable. She said the housekeeper had no easier chairs.

We sat down on our hampers, and my sister leaned against the corner of the wardrobe with a pillow at her back to keep from being cut in two. I propped my back against the wash-stand, which did very well, except that the wash-stand occasionally slid away from me.

"This," said my sister, impressively, "is England."

We had been here only half an hour, but I had already got my point of view.

"Let's go out and look up a hotel where they take Americans," I said. "I feel the need ot ice-water."

Our drinking-water at "The Insular" was on the end of the wash-stand nearest the fire.

$100 Reward $100

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Address, F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

Sold by Druggists 75c

Hall's Family Pills are the best

Has it ever struck you that you can buy Jesse Moore "AA" whiskey for almost the same price that is paid for ordinary whiskey? You dealer has it.

Wherever there is a piano there should be a pianola. The pianola plays any piano. Any one can play it. Call and see it at Kohler & Chase, 26 and 30 O'Farrell St., sole agents.

GERMEA

The Ideal Breakfast Dish

BANKRUPT NOTICES.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES in and for the Northern District of California.
IN THE MATTER OF
A. B. PATRICK, Bankrupt.

Take notice, that A. B. Patrick, Bankrupt, above named, has been duly adjudicated a bankrupt under the Act of Congress of July 1, 1898, and that the first meeting of the creditors has been called to meet at the office of the undersigned at room 94, Chronicle Building, San Francisco, California on Saturday, the 7th day of July, 1900, at the hour of 11 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of proving their claims against the estate of said bankrupt; and that at the same time and place all creditors whose claims have been duly proven and allowed shall appoint one or three tru tees of said estate.

Dated San Francisco, June 20 h, 1900.

MILTON J. GREEN,
Referee in Bankruptcy,
In and for the City and County of San Francisco

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES in and for the Northern District of California
IN THE MATTER OF ALBERT BERGSTROM, Bankrupt.

Take notice that Albert Bergstrom, Bankrupt, above named has been duly adjudicated bankrupt under the Act of Congress of July 1 1898 and that the first mee ing of the creditors has been called to meet at the office of the undersigned at room 94, Chroni le building, San Francisco, California, on Saturday, the 7th day of July, 1900, at the hour of 11 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of proving their claims against the estate of said bankrupt; and that at the same time and place all creditors whose claims have been duly proven and allowed shall appoint one or three trustees of said estate.

Dated San Francisco, June 2 st, 1900.

MILTON J. Green,
Referee in Bankruptcy,
In and for the City and County of San Francisco.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.—Gould and Curry Silver Mining Company.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, Cal. Location of works, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 7th day of June, 190 , an assessment (No. 90) of Fifteen (15) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the comt any, room No 69, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street San Francisco, Cal.

Any stock upon which this assessment shal, remain unpaid on the 10th day of July, 1900, wil be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on TUESDAY, the 31st day of July, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the cost of advertisng and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.

ALFRED K. DURBROW, Secretary.

Office: Room No. 69, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
NOTICE NAME THUS Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND CO THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

HAVE YOU EVER THOUGHT

WHAT A GAS RANGE WILL DO?

It will do everything any other cooking apparatus will do. but it will do it BETTER QUICKER, EASIER and CHEAPER!

IT WILL DO AWAY WITH

Dirt, Worry and Ashes
Your Kitchen will be Clean,
Your working hours shorter.
Your Food will be better Cooked,
Your Life Prolonged, and
Your Happiness assured.

STOVE DEPARTMENT,

415 POST ST., SAN FRANCISCO

Eighty-five Fine Sunny Rooms. Elevator Service

THE BRADBURY,

J. A. FERSON, Proprietor.

FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL

N. W. Cor. Polk and California Sts.,

San Francisco Cal

Excellent Cuisine References required
Transient trade solicited. Rates $2 00 and upwards.
Reasonable by the month.

TEL HYDE 2771

SAN FRANCISCO BANKS

THE BANK OF CALIFORNIA

SAN FRANCISCO

Capital, $2,000,000 Surplus, $1,000,000
Profit and Loss Account January 1st, 1900, $2,321,212
WILLIAM ALVORD.....President
CHARLES R. BISHOP.....Vice-President
THOMAS BROWN.....Cashier
S. PRENTISS SMITH.....Assistant Cashier
IRVING F. MOULTON.....Second Assistant Cashier
ALLEN M. CLAY.....Secretary

CORRESPONDENTS

New York.....Messrs. Laidlaw & Co. / The Bank of New York, N. B. A.
Baltimore.....The National Exchange Bank
Boston.....The Tremont National Bank
Chicago.....Illinois Trust and Savings Bank / Union National Bank
Philadelphia.....Philadelphia National Bank
St. Louis.....Boatmen's Bank
Virginia City, Nev...Agency of the Bank of California
London.....Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons
Paris.....Messrs. De Rothschild Freres
Berlin.....Direction der Disconto Gesellschaft
China, Japan and East Indies.....Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China
Australia and New Zealand.....The Union Bank of Australia, Ltd., and Bank of New Zealand

Letters of Credit issued available in all parts of the world.

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California Street

Guarantee Capital and Surplus.....$2,2 3,146 59
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash..... 1,000,000 00
Deposits Dec. 30, 1899.....28 503 655 41

OFFICERS

President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Second Vice-President, H. HORSTMANN
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann
Ign. Steinhart, Emil Rohte, D. N. Walter,
H. B. Russ, N. Ohlandt, John Lloyd.

General Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow.

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST

Deposits Jan. 1, 1900.....$26,110 681
Paid Up Capital..... 1,000,000
Reserve Fund..... 210 067
Contingent Fund..... 497,391

E. B. POND, Pres. W. C. B. DE FREMERY, Vice-Pres
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier
R. M. WELCH, Assistant Cashier.

DIRECTORS

George W. Beaver, Robert Watt, Thomas Magee, George C. Boardman, W. C. B. de Fremery, Daniel E. Martin, Albert Miller, George Tasheira, E. B. Pond.

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country. Receives deposits. Country remittances may be made in checks payable in San Francisco, Postoffice or Wells, Fargo & Co's Money Orders, or coin by Express, but the responsibility of this bank commences only with the receipt of the money.

No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee
Office Hours: 9 a. m. to 3 p. m. and Saturday evenings, for receipt of deposits only, 6:30 to 8 o'clock.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 POST STREET

Below Kearny Mechanics Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000
Paid Up Capital, $300,000

JAMES D. PHELAN, President
S. G. MURPHY, Vice-President
JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Presiden
GEORGE A. STORY, Cashier
C. B. HOBSON, Assistant Cashier

DIRECTORS:—James D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, Frank J. Sullivan, Robert McElroy, Chas. S. Neal and James M. McDonald.

Interest paid on deposits.

Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co or Exchange on City Banks.

When opening accounts, send signature.

A FLAT FAILURE.

"I HAVE a charming idea of spending the summer," said Mrs. Dobley over the breakfast table.

"If it is a coaching trip through Germany or a houseboat on the Thames, you may count me out," said Mr. Dobley.

"It is nothing so commonplace," said Mrs. Dobley. "It is simply a gypsyish plan of doing exactly as we please all summer long, stopping in town when we wish or going away indefinitely. We'll close up the house."

"Do you propose that we carry tepees like the Indians?" asked Mr. Dobley.

"No," exclaimed Mrs. Dobley, triumphantly. "I propose that we take a flat somewhere, furnish it up with summery Japanese rugs and bamboo doors and wicker chairs just like a summer cottage. Don't you remember that last year we agreed that the coolest, pleasantest place we found was New York, and how lovely it was to take a day off from the seaside?"

"But what is the objection to remaining right here in our happy, high-priced home?"

"That's just it," said Mrs. Dobley. "We could economize all through summer. Besides, it wouldn't be any fun to stay here! We'd just have to keep on being respectable!"

1. Enjoying forty winks.

3. Help! help!

2. Snakes alive!

4. The mystery unravelled.

"If you summer in a flat, you'll find respectability exciting in the fall," said Dobley; "that is, I've heard Freshington say so."

"My idea is," said Mrs. Dobley, "to have just one Japanese man who will do all the work and who will be prepared to get up dinners and suppers in a chafing dish at a moment's notice. We will dispense with all ceremony. We won't even have to dress for dinner unless we wish. Then people won't know where we live and can't call on us. We shall simply disappear without announcing our intentions or sending out any cards. No one will really know where we are, and we can enjoy the idea that people think we are away when we are really right in town."

"It would be much more mysterious to take another name and a disguise for the summer," said Dobley. "I might wear glasses and an English suit and black whiskers and you could dye your hair red—one of those Titian shades."

"It would seem too suspicious," said Mrs. Dobley, "although I admit it would be great fun. But people are suspicious enough in flats, anyhow."

"But fancy our feelings when the Society Notes make mention of the fact that the John Dobleys have closed their house in Gramercy Park and have taken a cheap flat in Harlem for the summer. It would ruin us. No, we shall have to take another name. I should suggest Blotskovitchky. It would give the impression that we are Russians, and everything we do would be excused. Then it would be mysterious. It would also look well on one of those little tin plates they put over the letter boxes in the hall."

"Here is one advertisement that appeals to me," said Mrs. Dobley. "Just listen: 'Look at these magnificent new apartments in the Out-of-Sight—the most exceptional location in Manhattan—rents 25 per cent. cheaper than any other high-class apartment—strictly fireproof—steam heat—electric light and elevator, all light corner rooms—open plumbing—hot water furnished—tiled bathrooms, needle showers—gas ranges and logs—filtered Croton water—parquet floors—cabinet trimmed—marble pastry table in kitchen—cellar chutes—convenient to elevated and all surface cars—only a few more left.' What do you think of that?"

"It reminds me," said Dobley reflectively, "of a man who advertised for a place as a gardener. He stated that he was a neat, capable, experienced, reliable, educated, refined man who could speak three languages; understood pruning and trimming hedges and the care of horses."

"Your judgment is so keen and correct in all cases," said Mrs. Dobley, "that I want you to go with me to look at this flat."

So the Dobleys proceeded northward and across town by various transfer routes until they came nearly to the city limits.

"I shouldn't be at all surprised," said Mr. Dobley, "if we could get fresh eggs, vegetables and good roads up here. And it's so interesting getting here. We have experienced every mode of travel except the underground system. But it is positively sylvan once you get here. It makes me feel as though we were in the Alps and I long to yodel."

"The air is beautiful!" said Mrs. Dobley, sniffing delightedly. "It's so different!"

"And there's so much of it!" said Mr. Dobley; "you get that peculiar bracing effect that one gets on a mountain top."

"It makes you wish to drink in great draughts of ozone," said Mrs. Dobley delightedly.

"Yes—I have often experienced that mountain peak thirst without a restaurant within fifteen miles," said Mr. Dobley. "It is a unique experience!"

The Out-of-Sight was an imposing building. A man in a blue denim suit, came from some underground depth of the flat and jingled keys while he looked over the Dobleys.

"Wanterseethe flat?" he asked.

"We should like to observe its numerous and unaccustomed beauties," said Mr. Dobley. "We have been lured from home by your advertisement, but we want the flat broken to us gently. Joy sometimes kills."

The janitor eyed Dodley queerly and led the way into a small elevator car. He tugged at a wire rope that passed through the car, but it never budged.

"It acts like this sometimes," said the janitor. "It gets as contrary as a mule and again it's gentle as a kitten. Then sometimes it shoots up like a rocket and strikes the roof with a bang. The tenants enjoy it so. But we had to stop the children taking rides for fun. They seemed to think it was some sort of chute arrangement for their amusement—a children's playground."

"It's in one of its pouting moods to day apparently," said Dobley. "Suppose we try the stairs?"

"It's on the thirieenth floor," said the janitor, "you'd better wait till it limbers up."

Suddenly the car with a few convulsive jerks and groans started upward in a series of slow jumps, stopping between floors as though unwilling to proceed further and then going on in a succession of quick leaps.

The car stopped and with a clanking of bolts and bars the door was opened and the Dobleys were released.

"In case of fire in the elevator shaft," said the janitor, "this hall leads to this window at the end where we have rope fire escapes that we drill the tenants in using twice a week. Then there are hand grenades and axes in brackets on the wall, as you see."

The janitor opened a door and led the way through a gloomy and narrow gangway into a room papered in red "with gold freckles," to quote Mr. Dobley. The ceiling had clusters of scarlet circles over its surface set in green leaves.

"What a charming summer effect!" exclaimed Dobley; "a tomato and lettuce salad! With a bottle of mayonnaise painted in one corner this room would be ideal for a dining room."

"These is the parlors," said the janitor, "and them is roses—not tomatoes. The lady who lived here had green brocade satin furniture with gold legs and she had the room done up in this way."

"Let us see the kitchen, please," said Mrs. Dobley; "after all, the kitchen is the most important room in a house."

The janitor proceeded through a dim and dingy room to a dark, cavelike apartment in the rear.

"This must be one of those new and fashionable beefsteak dungeons," said Mr. Dobley. "I declare there is nothing missing in these modern flats!"

Suddenly the janitor flooded the room with electric light and disclosed the fact that the room was a kitchen, one sink and two tubs long by a dumb waiter door and a gas range wide.

"This range is a 'Baby Grand,'" said Dobley, reading from the oven door. "They have a much richer tone than the uprights."

At this moment from under the sink a strange insect procession emerged, taking a winding course over the floor, while Mrs. Dobley's eyes protruded in horror.

"Look!" she said, pointing at the pageant. It was a row of water bugs in perfect Indian file headed by a sedate, fully grown specimen.

The janitor stepped forward to cut off their advance, but Mr. Dobley held him back.

"No crossing the line without a badge while the march is in progress," he said. "This, ladies and gentlemen, is the celebrated tribe of Ogallalas, headed by Chief Rain-in-the-Face."

"They'll never hurt you," said the janitor. "They are tame."

"Tame?" said Dobley. "They're trained. It's the most marvellous exhibition of intelligence I ever saw! And yet they say insects have no brains!"

There was a set of rules on the wall. "Projectiles received from ten to eleven." Dobley looked inquiringly at the janitor.

"We have a new system here," said the janitor. "We have no more hauling up and down of waiters. Each flat has a chute and set of projectiles. Ashes, garbage, and trash of all sorts is sent down in the projectiles at the hour set, and rolls, milk, and groceries are delivered in the same way.

"It's a great system," went on the janitor; "from 10 to 11 you'd imagine a battle was in progress."

Mrs. Dobley shrieked and tried to climb on the gas range at this juncture. A large mouse was standing on his hind legs looking through the glass door in the cupboard.

"That's only Admiral Dewey," said the janitor, with a laugh. "You see the lady who lived here was very fond of animals. She had a cage of white mice, but one day she gave them all their freedom. The result is that this apartment house has a collection of these rare pearl gray mice—just like Dewey. He does all sorts of tricks. Then there's Sampson, Schley, Hobson, and a lot more. They answer to their names."

The janitor opened the cupboard door and threw in some crumbled cheese to Dewey, who turned two somersaults and stood on his hind legs in acknowledgment.

"We only take strictly private families," continued the janitor. "The rule is to let in no families with dogs or children. But what are you to do? They smuggle them in in crates and barrels after the lease is signed. There's a family moved in downstairs—third flat D, front, east. They swore they had no encumbrances of any kind and two days after they were settled along comes a golf case and a champagne basket by express. Next day a two-year-old boy and a fox terrier were in the flat."

"A capital plan," said Dobley.

"This is the butler's pantry," said the janitor, showing an aperture in the wall. "You must pick out a tall, thin one."

"What is the rent?" asked Mrs. Dobley.

"Only thirty-five hundred a year," said the janitor. "Summer rate."

"We'll think about it," said Dobley.

"Well, you'll have to decide quick," said the janitor. "There's two parties just crazy to get it. They went down to the City Hall this morning to try and get a copy of their marriage certificate."

"Marriage certificate?" exclaimed Mrs. Dobley. "Why, what is that for?"

"No one gets in here without a certificate," said the janitor, "and references from the last janitor they lived with. I've had to make it a rule."

"But we have no marriage certificate," said Mrs. Dobley blankly.

"Well, I'm sorry, but I can't break the rule. I had a couple bring a family Bible up here in a go-cart yesterday as proof. But as I told them what proof is that? That's too easy."

"But I have my photograph taken in my wedding dress," said Mrs. Dobley; "and orange blossoms and all."

"Sorry, but I can do nothing for you here. We've got to be particular and I can't make any exceptions. It's a rule of my own." He bowed the Dobley's out.

"Well, I certainly think you might have told him that we were really married!" said Mrs. Dobley reproachfully. "You just stood there absolutely quiet. I don't wonder he was suspicious!"

"I thought it best," said Dobley thoughtfully; "to allow his suspicions to become rooted. I feared that he would lease us the menagerie. We would have to hire a keeper to look after the collections and feed the animals. Come, let us go back to the centre of town."

N. Y. Sun.

The Orignal Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to-lunch.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

Jesse Moore "AA" whiskey is used at all the principal hospitals in the United States. Why is it?

DIVIDEND NOTIDE—Savings and Loan Society 101 Montgomery street, corner of Sutter—The board of directors delared a dividend for the term ending June 30, 1900, at the rate of three and one-quarter (3¼) per cent per annum on all deposits free of taxes and payable on and after July 2, 1900. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of dividend as the principal from and after July 1, 1900.
CYRUS W. CARMANY, Cashier.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.—Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco, 33 Post street. For the half year ending June 30th, 1900, a dividend has been declared at the rate of three (3) per cent per annum on all deposits, free of taxes, payable on and aft r Monday July 2nd, 1900.
GEORGE A. STORY, Cashier.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.—The German Savings and Loan Society, 526 California street. For the half year, ending with June 30, 1900, a dividend has been declared at the rate of three and one-half (3½) per cent per annum on all deposits, free of taxes payable on and after Monday, July 2 1900.
GEO. TOURNY, Secretary.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.—San Francisco Savings Union, 532 California street, corner Webb. For the half-year ending with the 30th of June, 1900, a dividend has been declared at the rate per annum of three and six tenths (3 6-10) per cent. on term deposits and three (3) per cent. on ordinary deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Monday, July 2, 1900.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier.

MOORE' POISON OAK REMEDY
Cures Poison Oak and All Skin Diseases. Sold by All Druggists.

AMUSEMENTS

Orpheum

Clayton, White and Company; Quaker City Quartette; The Four Cohans; Todd-Judge Family; Carrington; Holland and Galpin; Gilbert and Goldie; Musical Dale; American Biograph.

Reserved Seats 25c.; Balcony 10c.; Opera Chairs and Box Seats 50c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.

Columbia Theatre

BEGINNING MONDAY NIGHT, JULY 2nd.
Second week Charles Frohman presents
HENRY MILLER
and a special company
First week 6 nights, matinees Wed. and Sat.
First time here of the great New York Lyceum Theatre success.

The TREE OF KNOWLEDGE

an original play by R. C. Carton, to be interpreted by the greatest cast ever secured for an American production.

July 9—"A Marriage of Convenience."

California THE POPULAR HOUSE

H. FRIEDLANDER & Co., Lessees and Managers. [Tele. Main 1731

Week Commencing Sunday Night, July 1st. Matinees Saturday. Special Matinee Wed. July, 4th.
First time in San Francisco of Hoyt's latest and biggest farce comedy

A DAY AND A NIGHT.

Presented with the full strength of
DUNNE & RYLEY'S ALL STAR CAST.
Appearance of Miss Louise Gunning, and Miss Norma Whally.
Our Never Changing Popular Prices.

Alcazar Theatre.

BELASCO & THALL, Managers. Phone 254

Week of July 2nd.
The hit of the year, every night at 8:15.

FLORENCE ROBERTS

Assisted by White Whittlesey
In a costly costume and scenic production of CARMEN.

Matinees Saturday only.
Alcazar Prices, 15c, 25c, 35c, 50c.
Special matinee Wednesday July 4th.

PRETTY WORK
NICE PRESS COPIES

Use Smith Premier Type-Writer

The telegraph department of the Southern Pacific Co. dispensed with all other makes and now use the SMITH PREMIER EXCLUSIVELY.
Also more than 200 banks use the
SMITH PREMIER Type-Writer
We Rent New Typewriters
Art Catalogue
L. & M. ALEXANDER & CO.
110 Montgomery St., S. F.
Branches: Portland, Seattle, Los Angeles.

NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned has, by order of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of California, been appointed assignee in bankruptcy of Prosley C. Hyman in the place and stead of Henry C. Hyde, the former assignee, deceased.
Dated June 27th, 1900.
FRANK L. OWEN, Assignee.

AT THE THEATERS

When Henry Miller and his company come to San Francisco, the critic must confine himself to the play; the audiences know that the acting will be attended to. Miller is hardly a great actor, but he is just our side of the border; his people are well-chosen, with the metropolitan stamp of taste and without the metropolitan flaw of flashy cleverness. The perfect, satisfying quiet of their methods, the perfect taste of their costuming, the flawless stage-management—Heavens, what a change from our Frawleys and Neills!

The play is a clever, amusing little caprice. It is not comedy, it is not farce, it lies in a border-land bounded by the two and by pure fancy. Its classical counterpart is "As You Like It." When Jerome K. Jerome tries to be either amusing or pathetic in essay or story, he is affected and strained. But the drama is a rather strained form of art, dependent from start to finish on conventionalities, so that this fault loses itself when Jerome tries playwriting, and his excellencies remain. Anyone should have known, reading "Sunset" and "Barbara" which he issued in yellow backs for amateurs in his 'prentice days, that the author's talent lay in that line rather than in the strained "Three Men in a Boat." There are some things wrong in "Miss Hobbs"; the heroine is too fearful and wonderful in her make for any creature of this earth and the theme is as old as the Greek drama, but are willing to forget the faults because it is clean and sweet and above all relaxing and amusing.

The acting is so even and so good that there is little need to pick out one above the others. Miller sinks himself in a secondary part which calls for no great exercise of his powers. Miss Anglin's interpretation of the serious Miss Hobbs shows a new side of her talent. Mrs. Whiffen, "the finest lady on the American stage," has a long role and carries it with distinction.

* *

O Miwosa San, fairest of Geisha girls, is again drawing crowded houses at the Tivoli, in a picturesque setting of a tea-house and palace garden. The costuming and stage pictures of the chorus are a delight to the eye. Helen Merrill in the title role is very pretty and attractive amidst peach blossoms, fans and chrys anthemums. Edwin Stevens as the great and only Marquis Owari is immense in more ways than one; his manner of getting off his tellingly sarcastic remarks is always inimitable, starting a big laugh every time, and his "steam-roller" gait is winning, to say the least. He shares the honors with Ferris Hartman, as the cute Chinese, one of the funniest roles in comic opera land, and with Annie Meyers, who is excellent as the lively Molly Seymour, making the most of all her lines, acting with an infectious abandon, and showing her fine sense of humor, "that rare thing in woman." Helen Davenport is the aristocratic Lady Wynne, with the aristocracy left out. She lacks the high bred which "stamps the caste of Vere de Vere," and speaks her lines monotonously. The English girl with the monocle does better. The costuming of the play is at all points artistic.

* *

An event of unusual interest will be the production Sunday evening at the California theatre of Hoyt's last farce-comedy, "A Day and a Night." This play is a satire on the stage itself. The lines are bright, the situations amusing and the musical numbers new and catchy. Dunne and Ryley's company present among the fun makers Mathews and Bulger, Walter Jones, Tony Hart, Phil Ryley, C. Herbert, N. Sebastian, George Tropy, Mary Marble, Bessie Tannehill, Maude Courtney and Adlyn Estee. Important additions to the play will be Norma Whally, the English beauty, and Louise Gunning, the "Scotch lassie," the first whom comes direct from London, and the second from New York, especially for this production. Much is expected of "A Day and a Night."

* *

"Sapho," which has held the stage for four weeks at the Alcazar, will give place on Monday next to the powerful and picturesque play "Carmen." It will be beautifully set and costumed. The cast includes a selection of the best people in the Alcazar stock with the addition of Lorena Attwood and many supernumeraries. Florence Roberts has never been seen in "Carmen," but judging from her brilliant work in "Sapho" she has nothing to fear from contrast with the very greatest who have appeared in this romantic role. White Whittlesey will prove a valuable "Jose" and the support will be adequate. Special matinee Wednesday, July 4.

* *

The Orpheum next week promises another good bill. The four Cohans will present a new sketch. Clayton White assisted by Louise Muller and Agnes Paul will present the "Waldorf-Metropole Episode." The Quaker City Quartette will present an original musical specialty. The hold-overs will be the Todd Judge family, Carrington, Holland and Galpin, Gilbert and Goldie, Musical Dale, and the biograph. Matinee Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.

* *

At the Alcazar "Carmen" will be followed "The Country Girl" by permission of Adah Rehan.

* *

At the Orpheum this week the four Cohans head the bill, and at their head is George Cohan, the Hoyt of the vaudeville sketch and an actor in his own right. The turn is three-quarters of an hour long, which is about the Orpheum record, yet it leaves the audience wishing for more—a crucial test. The standard of the house is rising again.

* *

The wonderful success of "Miss Hobbs" at the Columbia Theatre will be followed by R. C. Carton's greatest success, "The Tree of Knowledge," in which will appear the full strength of the company now at the Columbia. This play will run six nights, beginning next Monday, and Wednesday and Saturday matinees. For the week beginning July 9th "A Marriage of Convenience" will be the bill.

* *

The first of the Burton Holmes Lectures will take place at the Columbia Theatre on the afternoon of the 19th inst. The first of the evening lectures will be held the following Sunday night. "Manila" is to be the subject on both occasions.

* *

There will be a special 4th of July matinee at the Alcazar, Wednesday, July 4th.

BUYERS' GUIDE

SAN FRANCISCO.

RELIABLE BUSINESS HOUSES.

City or Country Orders promptly filled. Catalogues and Price Lists sent on application. Correspondence solicited.

Mention The Wave.

ATTORNEYS AT LAW.

MILTON J. GREEN, Attorney at Law. Referee in Bankruptcy in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Office room 94, Chronicle bldg.

A. K. DAGGETT, Drawing of deeds and all legal papers a specialty. Notary Public, 14 Montgomery St., S. F. Telephone, 305.

DENTIST.

DR. C. W. DECKER, Dentist, 806 Market Street, Phelan Building.

HOMŒOPATHIC REMEDIES

WESTERN HOMŒOPATHIC PHARMACY—139 Powell St. S. F. W.W. Stocker. Tel. Bush 23.

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.

ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU, Main Office 510 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Dealers in all kinds of Newspaper Information. Advance Reports on all Contract Work. Phone Main 1042.

RESTAURANT.

POODLE DOG RESTAURANT, northeast corner of Eddy and Mason streets. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone main 429. Blanco & Brun, Proprietors.

Seattle Business Directory.

ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW.

LAMBUTH, 204-5 Pacific Block. 157 Yesler Way.

DANCING ACADEMIES.

DANCING CLASSES—Stage and Ball-room dancing. Lessons daily. Prof. Wilson, Ranke Hall, 5th ave and Pike street.

DENTISTS.

S. R. WAGONER, 15 Haller Building.

DRESSMAKERS

MME. SMITH, ladies' tailoring, room 7, Hinkley.

DYEING AND CLEANING.

ATLAS CLEANING and Dye Works. Ladies' and Gents' Cleaners and Repairers. 222 Union street bet. 2d and 3d ave. Tel. Buff 1001

SEATTLE Clothes Pressing Co. Clothes cleaned, pressed and repaired. 1105 3d st. Tel. Buff 1004

MINES AND MINING.

O. R. DAHL Buys and Sells good Mining Properties, Companies organized. 528 N. Y. Block.

PLUMBING, HOT WATER HEATING.

SPELLMAN, Plumbing, 215 Columbia street. Tel. Black 1621.

PHYSICIANS & SURGEONS.

DR. G. V. CALHOUN, Starr-Boyd Building.

TENTS & AWNINGS.

THE FELITZ TENT AND AWNING CO. Manufacturers of and dealers in Tents, Awnings Flags, Sails and Ore Bags. 117 Yesler Way.

Tavern of Castle Crag

AND SODA SPRINGS

NOW OPEN.

Located in the midst of grand and impressive mountain scenery. With Mt. Shasta and The Crags for a background.
Fine hunting and fishing.
Unsurpassed cuisine and service and reasonable rates.
RAILROAD FARE round trip, including sleeper both ways $14
For rates, terms and other information address E. B. PIXLEY, Manager.
Care Pacific Improvement Co., Crocker Building, San Francisco, Cal.

A Delicious Beverage for all Occasions

Ross's Royal Belfast Ginger Ale

Connoisseurs pronounce it "the best imported."

Sherwood & Sherwood,
AGENTS
212-214 Market St.,

LAKE COUNTY.

New 19-passenger Yosemite Stages, all outside seats, direct to the most picturesque portion of California. Best equipped stage line in the state. Leaves Calistoga daily (Sunday excepted) at 11:30 a. m., direct to Harbin, Seigler, Adams, Howard, Anderson, Astorgo, and Glenbrook; half an hour for lunch at Calistoga; also to Middletown, Lower Lake, Kelseyville and Lakeport. Wm. Spiers, Proprietor. Calistoga, Cal.

.....BUY YOUR.....

Fireworks

.....AND.....

4TH of JULY

Specialties

Direct from the Makers.

California Fireworks Co.

219 FRONT STREET, S. F.

IF YOU WANT THE

BEST COAL OIL.

BUY

A GLOWING HIGHWAY TO HAPPINESS
.....IS THE ROAD THAT LEADS TO DEL MONTE

Added to the many pleasures afforded by its enchanting surroundings are FINE GOLF LINKS

✻ THIS SEASON'S ✻

HOMES OF PLEASURE

THE PEERLESS CALIFORNIA RESORT

SantaFeRoute

OVERLAND EXPRESS

Every day in the year. Pullman Palace and Upholstered Tourist Cars leave for Denver, Kansas City, Chicago and the East. Take Market Street Ferry at 5:30 p. m.

Personally Conducted Tourist Excursions leave three times each week in Pullman Vestibuled Tourist Cars and are exceedingly popular with the traveling public. The principal cities of the East are reached by them and the service in all that counts for comfort and convenience is almost equal to the Palace cars. The cars are finished in mahogany, lightened with Pintsch gas and a Porter is in charge to attend to the wants of passengers. Plenty of clean linen is provided and the beds are very comfortable. A handsome folder, describing this service in detail, may be had for the asking at the Company's Office. 641 Market St.

VALLEY ROAD

Between Stockton, Fresno, Hanford, Visalia Tulare and Bakersfield, furnishes a good local train service.

SAN FRANCISCO TICKET OFFICE,
628 Market Street. Telephone Main 1531

The O. R. & N. Co.

DISPATCH FAST STEAMERS

TO PORTLAND

From Spear-St. Wharf at 10 a.m.

FARE $12 First Class, $8 Second Class } Including Berth and Meals

State of California sails June 2, 12, 22; July 2.
Columbia sails June 7, 17, 27; July 7.

Short Line to Walla Walla, Spokane, Butte, Helena, and all points in the Northwest.
Through tickets to all points East.

E. C. WARD, General Agent, 630 Market St.
GOODALL, PERKINS & CO., Superintendents.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. Moana, for Aurtralia Wednesday July 11, at 8 p.m.

S. S. Australia, for Honolulu only, Wednesday, July 25 at 2 p.m.

Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.
J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf San Francisco.

For Alaskan ports, 11 a. m. June 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, July 5, change to company's steamers at Seattle.

For B. C. and Puget Sound ports 11 a.m. June 5, 10, 15, 20, 25 30, July 5, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, 2 p. m. June 2 7, 12, 17, 22, 27, July 2, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Newport (Los Angeles) and Way Ports, 9 a. m. June 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28. July 2, and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Harford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, and Redondo (Los Angeles), 11 a.m. June 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30; July 4, and every fourth day thereafter.

For Mexican ports, 10 a. m. seventh of each month.

For further information, obtain Company's folder.

The company reserves the right to change steamers sailing dates, and hours of sailing without previous notice.

Ticket Office: 4 New Montgomery St (Palace Hotel)
GOODALL, PERKINS & CO., Gen. Agts.
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

NOTICE OF ASSESSMENT — BULLION MINING COMPANY—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California; location of works, Virginia District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the sixteenth (16th) day of May, 1900, an assessment (No. 56) of three (3) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 11, 331 Pine street San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 20th (20th) day of June, 1900, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Tuesday the tenth (10th) day of July, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors

R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.

Office: Room 11, No. 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

4th OF JULY

Excursion Rates

WILL BE MADE BY THE

Southern Pacific Company

FOR ROUND TRIP TICKETS BETWEEN ALL STATIONS ON ITS LINES, AS FOLLOWS.....

Fare and a Third
FOR STATIONS WITHIN 125 MILES DISTANCE

Fare and a Fifth
TO STATIONS DISTANT 126 TO 200 MILES

One Fare
TO STATIONS DISTANT 201 TO 300 MILES

TICKETS WILL BE ON SALE ABOUT JULY 1ST TO 4TH INCLUSIVE, AND GOOD FOR RETURN TILL ABOUT JULY 5TH. FOR EXACT DATES AND RATES, GO AND SEE

T. H. GOODMAN, Gen. Pass. Agt.

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention
A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED

Occidental Hotel

SAN FRANCISCO
WM. B. HOOPER, Manager.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers Medium, Soft and Hard
ALSO
Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide
Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks

Manufactured by Mount Vernon Co. Baltimore.
MURPHY, GRANT & CO Pacific Coast Sole Agents

BAJA CALIFORNIA

Damiana Bitters

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. Send for Circular.

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

TO CHICAGO

IN 3 DAYS

From San Francisco at 10 a. m.

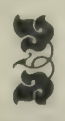
Chicago Union Pacific
AND
Northwestern Line

Double Drawing-Room Sleeping Cars, Buffet Smoking and Library Cars, with barber. Dining Cars—meals a la carte. Daily Tourist Car Service and Personally Conducted Excursions every week from San Francisco at 6 p. m. The best of everything.

R. R. RITCHIE,
General Agent Pacific Coast
617 Mark tStreet (Palace Hotel)
San Francisco, Cal.

Telephone Main 199.
Blake, Moffit & Towne
Dealers in PAPER
55, 57, 59, 61, First St., San Francisco.
Blake, Moffit & Towne, Los Angeles. Blake, McFall Co., Portland, Or.

ELECTRIC



SUPPLIES
CONSTRUCTION
REPAIRS

California Electrical Works
409 MARKET STREET

Sturtevant House
Broadway and 29th Sts., New York.
WILLIAM T. BANG, PROP.
American and European Plan.

Don't Borrow a Home!
BUY IT Your rent payments for the borrowed home will do it through the aid of the
CONTINENTAL Building and Loan Ass'n of California
WM. CORBIN, Secretary and Gen. Manager.
Home Office, 222 Sansome St., San Francisco

Irving Institute Select Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies
2126 California Street, San Francisco.
Next season will begin August 6th. Accredited to the Universities. Seminary and Full Conservatory of Music. Primary Department for Children. Carriage will call. For futher information, address he principal. REV. EDWARD B. CHURCH, A. M.

Alfred Cane, Luther A. Teague
Frederick Teague.
Teague, Cane & Teague
DENTISTS.
Claus Spreckels Bldg. Third and Market Sts
hone Main 1459. Sixth Floor, S.F., Cal

Thuringia Insurance Co.
OF ERFURT, GERMANY
Capital, $2,250,000 Assets, $10,984,248
PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT
204-208 Sansome Street, San Francisco
VOSS, CONRAD & CO., General Managers

A. O. LINDSTROM AL. JOHNSON
Phone Main 5178
Sutter Street Hammam
TURKISH AND RUSSIAN BATHS
415 Sutter Street, between Stockton and Powell
Open Day and Night for Gentlemen
For Ladies, from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m.

New Stories Re-Told.

x x x

ONE GOOD TURN DESERVES ANOTHER.—The sweet, gentle, intensely feminine, clinging-vine womanly young woman and the fluffy girl went into the drug store. The shrinking violet, lifting her great soft eyes appealingly to the proprietor, timidly asked if she might please look at the directory just a minute. The druggist gave it to her. She thanked him in five or six different styles, then she and Fluffy studied the book for half an hour and took down addresses. They had turned to go when she whispered to Fluffy, "It's a perfect shame not to buy anything when we used his book so long. I'm going to get something." She fished a ten-dollar gold piece from the bottom of her little chatelaine purse, laid it on the counter and with another soft smile and pleading upward look said, "Please give me a two-cent stamp."

x

THE GOLDEN TOUCH.—King Midas started up from his hard golden couch and threw aside the golden coverlet with an angry jerk. "What's wanted now, why can't you let me forget my troubles a few minutes?" The chamberlain, who had been bribed, prostrated himself before his sovereign and murmured apologetically, "I think you've got the drop on the deity that gave you your power, got a chance to do something really great." "Unfold." "There's a man outside from Leadville, seedy-looking party, says he has a gold brick to sell you cheap." "Ha! Admit him. He'll be badly left when I get my work in on his merchandise."

x

OVER THE LINE TO RENO.—A peroxide Juno interviewed a San Francisco fortune-teller on the usual subject. "Lady," said the seer, "you will visit foreign lands and the courts of kings and queens. You will conquer all rivals and marry the man of your choice; he will be tall, dark and distinguished-looking." "Young?" "Yes, and very rich." The fair visitor rose and in her eagerness grasped the fortune-teller by both shoulders: "How, oh, how shall I get rid of my present husband?"

x

FATHER PAYS THE FREIGHT.—The native who had returned after a long absence was inquiring how the family of boys next door had turned out. "Well, they are all at work one way and another. Dick's teaching school, Tom's in real estate, Henry's a musician, Joe has gone in for literature and Rube's running for Congress." "And the old man take's it easy now, I suppose, enjoys his well-earned rest?" 'Oh, he's pegging away harder than ever; he's supporting Dick and Joe and Tom and Henry and Rube."

x

THE SEX TRIUMPHANT.—He had pulled her hair, used bad words, plagued her kitten, eaten her candy, broken her teaset, cut the sawdust out of her doll, put the blame of the stolen preserves on her and when she had been sent to bed without a light he had jumped out of the dark and grabbed her ankles as she went upstairs. She sobbed as she knelt by her bed and prayed: "O Lord, bless brother Tom; he lies, he steals, he swears—all boys do. Us girls don't."

x

PREPARING THEM FOR IT.—An Episcopal clergyman of Detroit was in the habit of making announcements directly after giviug out his text. Recently he perpetrated the following: "My text to-day is taken from Corinthians, x, 16—'For the devil, like a roaring lion, goeth about seeking whom he may devour.'" Then, without a pause: "The bishop of the diocese, who is making an extensive round of parish visits, will be with us next Sunday."

x

HIT IT BY ACCIDENT.—At a time when every man, woman and child in Colorado Springs was investing in mining-stock and almost every man, woman and child had been badly bitten, it happened that a certain mine-owner and stock manipulator died suddenly. The local paper held the press to put in an account of his death headed, "Death Loves a Shining Mark," but when it came out the people with whom he had had business dealings were surprised and pleased to read, "Death Loves a Mining Shark."

PALACE HOTEL
The high standard of excellence maintained by this hotel is recognized and appreciated by a fastidious and discriminating clientele who regularly make it their headquarters when vis ti Francisco.
The GRAND HOTEL is operated in conjunction with the Palace to which it is joined by a covered passageway, placing under one management 1400 rooms, more than half of which have baths attached.
AMERICAN PLAN. EUROPEAN PLAN.

Famous FOR ITS Purity!

Seattle U. S. A.

WHEN LEAVING THE CITY PLACE YOUR VALUABLES IN THE Safe Deposit Vaults
OF THE
First National Bank
N. W. Corner Bush and Sansome Sts.
Office Hours: 8 a. m. to 6 p m.
EVERY POSSIBLE SAFEGUARD TO PROPERTY
REASONABLE RATES
PROMPT ATTENTION

REPSOLD
REPSOLD REGISTERED BRAND SELECT VINTAGE
Select Vintage Wines
For Your Home Dinner
This brand of wine is served at all first class clubs, hotels and restaurants
A. REPSOLD & CO. Office. 416 Pine Street

THE
White Pass and Yukon Route
The Pacific & Arctic Railway and Navigation Co.
British Columbia Yukon Railway Co., British Yukon M, T. & T. Co.
and Canadian Development Company, Ltd.
THROUGH LINE TO DAWSON.
Two first-class trains daily between Skaguay and Bennett, B. C. Ten first-class steamers operating between White Horse and Dawson. Through Telegraph Service Skaguay to Dawson and Intermediate Points.
SKAGUAY IS THE GATEWAY
—TO—
KLONDIKE AND CAPE NOME GOLD FIELDS.
FOR RATES AND PARTICULARS APPLY TO
S. M. IRWIN, Traffic Manager, Skaguay, Alaska, and Seattle, Wash
Phone Main 574
S. P. BROWN General Agent 116 Yesler Way, Seattle Was

W. C. ACHI & CO.
Real Estate Brokers
We will buy or sell real estate in any part of the group. We will also buy or sell Stocks in any corporation in the Hawaiian Islands.
Office, 10 West King Street, Honolulu, H. I.

a Perfect Complexion
Strawberry Cold Cream
Mede from the pure fruit juice at
GREENBAUM'S
200 POST STREET Corner Grant Ave,
Sent anywhere on receipt of 25 cents,

From Admiral George Dewey:
Mr. George Mayerle, German Expert Optician, 1071½ Market street, San Francisco: Dear Sir—I am still using with much satisfaction the glasses you sent me at Manila; also, the new ones suit my eyes perfectly.
Very truly yours,
George Dewey.

A GRADUATE
George Mayerle
German Expert Optician
Consultation, Examination and advice free.

OPTICIAN HONORED
1071½ Market St.
near Seventh
Telephone Mint 257
German Eye Water 50 cents.

From General Wm. R. Shafter:
Mr. George Mayerle, San Francisco: Dear Sir—The glasses made by you received yesterday. I have never been better fitted than with this pair.
Very truly yours,
Wm. R. Shafter,
Major-General U. S. V.

The Wave

1900

VOL. XXI, No. 24 SAN FRANCISCO—JULY 7, 1900 – SEATTLE PRICE 10 CENTS

A Show at the Stockton Street Fair.

Photo by W. J. Street.

is published every Saturday at The Wave Building, 24 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal., and Colman Building, Seattle, Wash.

Entered at the Post Office as second-class matter.

Subscription: Per year, $3.00; six months, $1.75; three months, $1.00. Foreign subscription (countries in postal union) $1 per year additional. Sample copies free.

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

PROPRIETORS

SAN FRANCISCO—July 7, 1900—SEATTLE

CONTENTS

Events Current 2
Editorial Comment 3
Views Along the White Pass and Yukon Railrord 5
Romance en Route, by Gelett Burgess 6
A Chinese Tract 6
Things and People, by Boswell Jr 7
The Stockton Street Fair, Illustrations 8
The Inauguration of Governor Dole 9
Correspondence—London Paris 10
Our Illustrations 11
Meditations of a Matron 12
The Cowboy and the Lady 13
At the Theatres 13
New Stories Re-told 16

EVENTS CURRENT.

The Chinese Crisis. War is on in China beyond a shadow of a doubt. This closing year of the nineteenth century sees the reawakening of the oldest existing civilization and the beginning of a conflict which may trouble Europe as much as did the Crusades. This has been a disastrous week and a desparately anxious one for the whole civilized world. It is highly probable that there is not one foreigner left alive in Pekin. Baron von Kettler, the German minister, is known to have been killed. Hard as it seems, the allied army had to fall back and abandon the Europeans, including their Pekin ministers, to the mercy of the Mongolion population. The last news which came from them, sneaked out by native runner, is dated nine days ago and describes a most desperate condition of affairs. The remnant of the foreigners was then gathered in the British consulate, making a final stand. They were surrounded and under almost continuous fire. Their sick, dead and wounded, among whom were many women and children, were gathered with them inside their lines. The mob was surging through the streets carrying the heads of the captured legation guards on poles. Provisions were so low that the women, who had been giving up their food to the children and the defenders, were near to starvation. Worst of all, ammunition was very low. An assault had been made that very day, and had been repulsed, but it seemed doubtful if attack could be resisted. There are four hundred legation guards of various nationalities, including about seventy Americans, in the Chinese Capital, and about six hundred civilians and children. Of these, perhaps eighty are Americans—mainly missionaries. They include the wife, daughter and nieces of Minister Conger. Unless there has been some unknown change for the better in the political outlook, the friends of these whites may give them up for lost. It was found to be impossible to reach the city with the troops at hand. June 30, directly after the relief of Tien Tsin by the allied force, a scouting expedition found Admiral Seymour with the Pekin relief force of 1600 men stalled and unable to advance, although he had moved his army but nine miles. He had been met by such overwhelming numbers of well-armed Chinese that, after fighting seven battles, he decided to accept a state of siege and wait for relief, By attacking together, the two forces, coming in on opposite sides, formed a junction and withdrew to Tien Tsin. Seymour had lost about two hundred and fifty men and, although he had inflicted great damage on the enemy by the superior shooting of his soldiers, he made little impression, owing to the difference in numbers. The admirals in command, taking these facts into consideration, decided that it would require an army four or five times as great as their little handful to cut a way to the capital, and determined to hold Tien Tsin, Taku, and the ground already won. There are about 12,000 international troops at Tien Tsin and 8,000 between that point and Taku. They have all they can do to keep communications open, without attempting to push on. Moreover, they are short of artillery and ammunition, and food is running low. A large and surprisingly well armed native force has pushed in between Tien Tsin and Pekin. It was the van-guard of this army which crowded back Admiral Seymour. The murder of the German minister, which is probably the only case of the sort recorded in history, was committed by a mob, mainly soldiers, it is said. The stories of the affair all implicate the government.

Political Aspects of the Chinese Disturbance. The week's political news of the Chinese crisis is as important and sensational as the military developments. Again the ruling power has shifted. Prince Tuan, father of the puppet boy-Emperor, and head of the Boxers, is in full control of the Empire and the uprising. Kwang Su is dead from poison, taken under compulsion, from whom no one knows exactly. The Dowager Empress was poisoned at the same time, but the drug failed to kill, leaving her insane, however. By imperial decree Tuan has declared war on the world, calling on every province to rise and expel the foreigners. The revolt is spreading in the Southern provinces; even such a strongly European city as Shanghai has apprehensions of trouble. Canton is in a ferment and may become dangerous at any moment. On the European side, no government has as yet declared actual war. The United States has gone in the opposite direction, Secretary Hay notifying the Powers that no state of war was considered by the United States to exist in China, and that the troops sent were solely for the protection of our legations and subjects. Before the entire seriousness of the situation was realized there seemed to be a general disposition among diplomats to draw off European troops and give Japan the free hand which Europe denied her after the Chinese war of 1894. But it is certain that in China's present temper and preparedness no power of Japan's size can do much. The admirals agree that at least 500,000 men with ample artillery and supplies, will have to fight at least a year to conquer the Middle Kingdom alone, and that many more will be necessary to hold the immense empire of 400,000,000 people. It will take about as many troops as Europe can spare. Of the Enropean nations, Germany, nerved by the unprecedented insult offered in the murder of her minister, is most active in preparation. The Emperor William has announced that he will send at once 20,000 troops and five battleships. Even more than this will be needed from each country if the various European nations decide to subjugate China and avenge their ministers, now almost certainly victims of death and torture.

The Democratic Convention. While the late Republican convention was the most harmonious in the history of the country, with practically no disagreement either on platform or candidates, the Democratic party seems to be weakening its case by dissentions in the party assemblage now meeting at Kansas City. When Richard Croker returned from Europe early in June, he gave out to the press an interview which was intended as an olive branch from the conservative part of the party to the Popocratic silver wing. He dwelt upon imperialism, trusts and the mistakes of the administration, passing over silver in a few words as a minor issue hardly worth the notice in view of the "new and vital" problems which have risen since 1896. It was a hint to the western branch of the party to make Free Silver less prominent an issue. There is no doubt that the Eastern Democrats were at that time willing to permit a silver plank to be inserted in the platform provided that it could be given a sort of subsidiary place and provided that Bryan and the rest were willing to treat it as a minor issue except in those rabid western localities in which it would do the most good. It seemed for a time as though Bryan were ready and willing to hedge on silver, by far the wisest course for his party, but as the time for the convention approached, he reasserted his old, uncompromising attitude on the financial question. In the week before the convention, "straw-ballots" showed that the gold forces could probably control the convention, and that, if Bryan should refuse to make a stand either way, the party would be in the obsurd position of having nominated Bryan, the apostle of silver, on a platform without a free silver plank. Bryan came out, however, and took his stand, declaring that he would accept the nomination on no other than a free silver basis, and that if the party repudiated the issue, he would come down by fast train to the convention and address the body in favor of his hobby. Realizing the fact that Bryan is the only man to be thought of in connection with the Democratic nomination for the Presidency, the Easterners swung to another policy. This was the reaffirmation of the Chicago platform of 1896. Although this declaration was for free silver out and out, yet it is felt that, if anything old and hazy like a platform four years old is reaffirmed without a new and specific declaration, the issue can be dodged in the campaign. But even this solution was hateful to the Western men. They made their fight upon a plain declaration. The committee on platform met on July 4, the opening day, and the silver men won. The committee declared for an unequivocal free coinage plank, and the gold minority decided not to submit a report at all. Although the convention may refuse to ratify that report, it is not likely. Free silver will be an issue, and Bryan the candidate—this in spite of the fact that the convention has been much more enthusiastic over Hill than over the Nebraskan. Yet the sages of politics are certain that the prominence of the silver issue now weakens the position of Democracy.

The Vice-Presidential Fight. The Democratic Vice-Presidential nomination has throughout been tied up with the silver question, it being felt that the place would go with the declaration on finance. Now that an open silver declaration is the strongest probability, Chas. E. Towne of Minnesota, vice-presidential nominee with Bryan on the fusion Populist ticket, has a strong lead. It has seemed, all along, that he slightly led the others, most of the delegates pledged to scattering votes on local celebrities having him for second choice. David B. Hill of New York, the gold standard-bearer of his party, was talked of at first; had the free silver compromise been reached, it is probable that he would have been nominated and would have accepted. But when it became apparent that the gold wing would lose, Hill declined any mention of his name as a candidate. Danforth of New York seems now the choice of those who believe—and wisely—that one of the standard-bearers should be an Easterner, preferably a New York man. He is not a particularly strong man personally, but he has the record of having held the New York Democrats in line in 1896, when Hill, Croker and their henchmen were sulking, and he is a non-committal man on the silver issue. Former Vice-President Adlai Stevenson has some backing among the conservatives. Shively of Indiana and Sulzner, the rabid silver advocate, who showed some strength at first, are now conceded to be out of the race. It is anyone's fight so far; our readers may know the issue before this column is in their hands.

The Philippine Peace Attempt. The plan for Filipino reorganization of Luzon and for a peaceful ending to the insurrection, tried last week in Manila by General MacArthur, has not proved a startling success. The course of the movement, the manner in which the natives let it run into the ground and lose itself in the sands, illustrates the lack of backbone in the native character and, incidentally, their incapacity for anything like self-government. Senor Paterno's convention had hardly done with meeting and passing resolutions when factions began to arise between the "military" delegates and the members of Aguinaldo's "cabinet." It resolved itself into a question of job chasing. Each one tried to outdo all the others in zeal for peace, under the belief that he who gained control at the convention would have the best chance for political advancement under the American protectorate. Then, the enemies of peace began an agitatation inside and outside the supposed peace party. As a result, Paterno called another meeting a week later and drew up a new set of resolutions, which, while nominally a program for a protectorate, was really a declaration of independence. MacArthur thereupon revoked Paterno's parole, and the latter took the oath of allegiance, coming under the terms of the amnesty act and going free. Such sincere American sympathizers as Mabini and Buencamino have already withdrawn from the movement. It was made plain by the statements of Filipino loyalists in the convention that the natives are still building hopes on the election of Bryan. Moreover, many believe that the Chinese crisis will sufficiently engage the American troops to cause them to leave Luzon undefended. Upon these two hopes Aguinaldo is supporting the tottering insurrection. The amnesty proclamation is having some effect in the provinces, however. The natives are disposed to be suspicious of our representations, but are slowly gaining in confidence in our intentions. The release of eight generals on parole was a wise move in this connection.

The Filipino Native and American Education. A Spanish paper of Manila, El Comercio, declares that as things are now constituted and as affairs are now conducted, the native Filipinos of the city shows absolutely no desire to accept the educational advantages and opportunities which are offered to them by the American government. The attendance at the public schools is slack and scanty, and kept up under compulsion, now that the novelty of the thing has worn away. The Philippine Naval Academy is a good example. It is not only a good school, but it offers an immediate chance for the practical use of an education. It trains youths for officers in the coastwise trade, a class of men for whom there is a constant demand, the vacancies now being generally filled from Spain in default of competent natives. The Americans took the school from the Spaniards and, after improving it considerably, decided to maintain it. Yet there have been only a dozen students during the American occupation. Again, the International Club, a society largely concerned in improvement of the natives, decided recently to offer two scholarships in civil engineering at a first-class American college. The students were to be chosen by competitive examination, and were to have all expenses, including transportation, paid for a full four years' course. The scheme was thoroughly advertised, yet only two applicants appeared. Hence, the Spanish journals conclude that the native Filipino does not want American education, being too lazy to use it.

Two Great Catastrophes. Two of the greatest catastrophes of the year have visited the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of this country during the past week. New York City had a dock fire which caused the loss of between two and three hundred lives, and a street-car accident in Tacoma, Wash., resulted in thirty-six deaths and at least sixty injuries. Many of the wounded will die. The New York fire occurred June 30, on the docks of three German steamship companies. A cargo of oil and one of cotton lay near to each other on the wharf. Fire broke out in the cotton and reached the oil almost at once. The resulting explosion scattered oil everywhere, and the ships on the docks burst into flames, literally roasting the people in their lower holds before they could make an escape The same fire destroyed the great ocean steamship, the immense wharves of the North German Lloyd Steamship Company, part of the dock of the Hamburg-American Steamship Company, and the Thingvalla Steamship Company, a vast storage warehouse in Hoboken, twelve canal boats and six barges. The ocean liners destroyed were the Saale, the Bremen and the Main. All three of these ships belong to the North German Lloyd Company. The Kaiser Wilheim der Grosse, the fastest and one of the largest passenger ships in the world, was damaged and had a narrow escape from total destruction. The total property loss was about $10,000,000. The Tacoma calamity happened on July 4. A street-car, badly overloaded, was crossing a bridge over a deep, abrupt gulch which runs through a portion of the city. In some manner unexplained, the motorman lost control of the car on a sharp grade just befor the bridge, and the crowded car gained such momentum that it jumped the track just over the chasm. It struck ground first on a bank thirty-five feet down, and then rolled, crushing the passengers on its way. to the bottom of the gulf, one hundred feet from the bridge. There were over a hundred passengers, and of these hardly one escaped death or serious injury. The dead were fairly ground to pieces under the wreckage.

An intoxicated policeman in San Francisco, arrested an aged and respectable woman within a hundred feet of her home, and jailed her as a street walker, because she was out at eleven o'clock in the evening. That the officer Edward G. Ring, was under the influence of liquor seemed undisputed. That the victim, Mrs. Elliot, age 52, is thoroughly respectable is conceded by every one. That the sequel should record the dismissal and disgrace of Ring is the judgment of every man and woman in the community.

Editorial Comment.

The Fresno Rate Case.

UNDER this heading the Chronicle reads the Southern Pacific Company a lecture in a temperate tone for threatening to ignore the courts' injunction prohibiting the withdrawal of the "special ticket" to Fresno. The argument that "to no other men is a general respect for law so important as to the owners of great properties is well grounded in reason. It is also true that "they can afford less than any one else to set an example of defiance of the law." The Chronicle also speaks wisely when it says "There are times when high handed acts so draw upon great corporations the indignation of communities that the utmost force of society can hardly protect them "but the premises upon which the Chronicle basis its argument are not quite as secure as the argument itself. The reasoning is wise but the facts are a little out of order. The railroad company at a time given, placed on sale a certain type of low-priced ticket between San Francisco and Fresno. This ticket the corporation attempted to withdraw. Its right to do so was contested by a resident of Fresno, and the entire controversy was brought for trial before the Board of Railroad Commissioners. Evidence was introduced upon both sides, and arguments made. The Commission, after deliberating upon the matter filed findings of fact, and a conclusion of law based upon such findings. Their findings declared in effect and in terms that the ticket sought to be withdrawn from sale was a "special, non-transferable excursion ticket," and as a matter of law determined that the corporation had no right to withdraw it.

Under the laws of this state, railroad companies are not permitted, having once reduced their fares, to increase them again without the consent of the commission, but they may issue "special tickets" and excursion tickets" at a greatly reduced rate which tickets they may withdraw at will. Just now, at this season of the year, the advertising columns o the daily papers announce that for the first five days of July excursion rates will be made and special tickets issued for round trips, between all stations as follows. A rate of one fare and one third will be charged for a round trip to any station within 125 miles distance. One fare and one-fifth will be charged to stations between 126 and 200 miles distant, and one fare only for a round trip to any station distant between 201 and 300 miles." Upon the fourth of July these "special excursion tickets" will be withdrawn. Does any one question the right of the company to do so? And if they should, would not the company be fully justified in resisting any attempt to that end, and justified in ignoring the rulings of the lower court until the highest court had affirmed that ruling? Yet according to the findings of the Commissioners, there is no legal difference between the Fresno ticket and the Fourth of July ticket. We may tangle ourselves up in a mass of original deductions, but as a cold matter of law and of fact the Railroad commissioners judicially determined after hearing the evidence that the Fresno ticket was a "special non-transferable excursion ticket" and then determined as a conclusion of law that the corporation had no right to withdraw it. We have never been able to harmonize the findings of fact with the conclusions of law, and Judge Bahrs has certainly thrown no additional light upon the subject. Indeed it does not seem possible in view of the plain reading of the law, that the Supreme Court can sustain Judge Bahrs.

As to the wisdom of disobeying the injunction—if the state could indemnify the corporation against loss it might well submit until the court of last resort had determined the case, but it is too much to ask one institution to bear al the burden resulting from the error of the state's employes.

A litigant whose property would be injured or whose income would be diminished by the operation of an injunction is permitted upon the filing of a proper indemnifying bond, to proceed as though there was no injunction. If the argument the Chronicle makes is sound, that no passenger paying the higher rate would bring suit because of the smallness of the sum involved, it must be equally true that the railway company which would suffer the accumulated losses of every passenger carried between Fresno and San Francisco, could not very well institute proceedings against each individually, nor would it have any recourse against the state.

The Democratic Platform.

BOTH the Republican and Democratic press agree upon the fact that Bryan is in absolute control of the Kansas City Convention. Whatever of good there may be in the National platform of Democracy this year is to be credited to Bryan, whatever of bad, is to be charged up against him. It is well to definitely fix responsibility and it is quite as well to fix it upon the party nominee.

The word has gone forth that unless the platform declare unequivocally for the free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, Mr. Bryan will decline the nomination. We don't believe it. Of course, Bryanism without a free coinage plank would be like a circus without horses, or a clown without a trick mule. If there had been no free silver question there would have been no Bryan. To omit such a plank would not only alienate the free silver republicans, outrage the populists, and bring disgruntlement into the camps of the "greenbackers" and advocates of fiat money, but it would leave Mr. Bryan hanging in the air without a place to put his feet.

Mr. Bryan's advisers, so say the dispatches, have told him that "a modification of his views upon the currency ratio would mean his certain election to the presidency," and Mr. Bryan is quoted as replying "If by any chance the committee on resolutions decides to report a platform in which there is not a silver plank there must be a minority report and a fight on the floor of the Convention. I will come to Kansas City on the fastest train available, make a fight for silver on the floor of the Convention and then decline to take the nomination if the Convention omits the ratio. This is final."

The Democratic press consider these words heroic. They "point with pride" and indulge in self congratulation at the man's "courage," etc. It reminds one of the gallery applause in a cheap theatre when the hero declares to the villian "If you kill me I will die." But Mr. Bryan is wiser than his political advisers. A new platform, omitting free silver, and sound on every other public question might give worry to the republicans, provided two Democrats of recognized ability were named, whose past career and public utterances harmonized with the platform. But Mr. Bryan would not do on such a platform. He would be out of harmony with it. Mr. Bryan views himself in a proper perspective in this connection, and doubtless realizes that he is Free Silver and that Free Silver is Bryan. Imagine if you can, the Philadelphia Convention threatening to run Mr. McKinley on a platform that renounced Protection and advocated Free Trade, for the purpose of catching the votes of a few doubtful states. One thing is pretty apparent, principles are not going to cut much of a figure in the Democratic platform. They are fishing for votes not enunciating party principles. The questions they seem most auxious to determine are, where can we attack the course of the Administration and receive the most benefit? The Expansion movement is strong in the West and, according to the dispatches, "both Mr. Bryan and the leaders of the party have been urged not to make the anti-expansion plank too strong, lest the declaration injures the party's chances in the Western States." Of course, the object of this suggestion is to fool the people. The platform when it is finally adopted will doubtless denounce Imperialism and roundly abuse the administration for a long series of picturesque and imaginary wrongs; will charge the Republican party with intending to do things which it never dreamed of doing, will invent facts, circumstances and policies that never existed and then point at them with scorn and contempt. This vote catching plank will in all likelihood be rounded out with a declaration that Democracy does not oppose the nation's growth or the extension of its power and commerce and will mix "liberty," "constitution," the "flag" and "glorious nation" of meaningless words. But it is a small matter—this democratic platform. Mr. Bryan will not be elected. The only hope we have, is that his defeat may be so overwhelming, so unanswerable, so complete as to forever prevent any successor or imitator from attempting to follow in his footsteps, and so relieve the nation of all fears of future Bryans and Altgelds.

A State of "Knockers."

THE episode known as the Scott Boom for the Vice-Presidency has past. One may not at this juncture revive it with any profit to Mr. Scott's ambitions, but for the sake of the future, in behalf of the really big men of the State who may hereafter aspire, let the press of the state make an attempt toward educating the people of California to a full realization of the unwisdom of permitting its representatives to repeat the contemptible and disloyal performances of the past. As a vote-getter, Mr. McKinley could have no better running mate than Mr. Roosevelt. Even with the California delegation heartily in favor of Mr. Scott, he could not have been nominated probably, but our delegation would at least have standing to its credit a certain something which it sadly lacks. In the national convention four years hence California would stand on a better footing than she will now. If our delegation had attempted to solidify the West, we would have at least made a step toward national recognition.

With such men as John W. Mackay, C. P. Huntington, D. O. Mills, C. M. Schwab and Robert Linderman of Pennsylvania favoring him, with Ex-Mayor Strong, Generals McCook and Thomas and other big men in New York City willing to help, with Henry H. Kohlstad's Times-Herald of Chicago pouring out daily broadsides favoring Scott, with Senator Hanna repeatedly declaring that Mr. Scott was entirely acceptable to the President, with the great dailies like the New York Herald, Chicago Times-Herald, Richmond, Va., Times, Boston Journal, Washington Post and Times, Philadelphia North American, Press, Times, Chicago Post, Elmira Advertiser, New York Mail and Express New York Times and a long list of great dailies that embrace every state in the Union, endorsing or encouraging Mr. Scott's candidacy, it would seem as though the California delegation had ample justification for supporting their own state. On Friday, June 15, that well known correspondent, Murat Halstead, wired the evening Telegram of New York as follows:

"Scenes shift. This morniug New York seems out of the vice-presidential fight. The nomination is going to the Pacific Coast, probably to Scott.

MURAT HALSTEAD."

On the same day the New York Sun said:—"Next to the Bliss situation the most active and serious movement in the interest of another candidate is that for Irving M. Scott of California. His boomers are here in number (the California delegation had not arrived then) and they are working hard. Among the party leaders there is a general disposition to look with favor on the claims of the Pacific Coast * * * the indications are that Scott or some other man in the West will be in the lead."

A book of press clippings taken at this time, June 15, endorsing Mr. Scott, from every large city in the union, would fill a scaap book of over one hundred pages. Senator Hanna had repeatedly expressed his preference for Mr. Scott. He was generally regarded by the press and people as the second choice of the administration, some believed the first choice. When the Californians arrived at Philadelphia they found Mr. Scott's candidacy next in importance only to that of Mr. Roosevelt. Just before they reached that city, Chairman George Knight is reported in the Philadelphia Record as saying: "We never heard of Scott as a candidate and when the delegation from our state gets here there will be an end to this sort of talk. If there is any chance at all of the nomination going to California, Governor Gage is the man who should get it." And the press of the East insisted on mentioning Mr. Gage as "ex-Governor." The San Francisco Chronicle's correspondent wires the situation on the 16th:

"The situation created by the attitude of the California delegation is remarkable. Scott's candidacy has won national recognition and throughout the East has met with a friendly reception * * * The delegation may find itself in an awkward position if it is shown that its opposition ruined Scott's chances. On the other hand its apathy may kill the Scott movement before it reaches a point where that charge could rest."

The Call correspondent said on the same day: "Despite this inclination among members of the California delegation to belittle Mr. Scott's candidacy it is regarded more seriously by delegates from other states."

On June 18th the New York Herald said: "Irving Scott's Vice-Presidential boom has died a-bornin'. The California delegation refuse to acknowledge interest in it." The great Eastern papers were shocked and surprised at the disloyalty of the Californians, and if any one of the delegation cares to read some of the hard things said of them in the East we will be glad to reprint them.

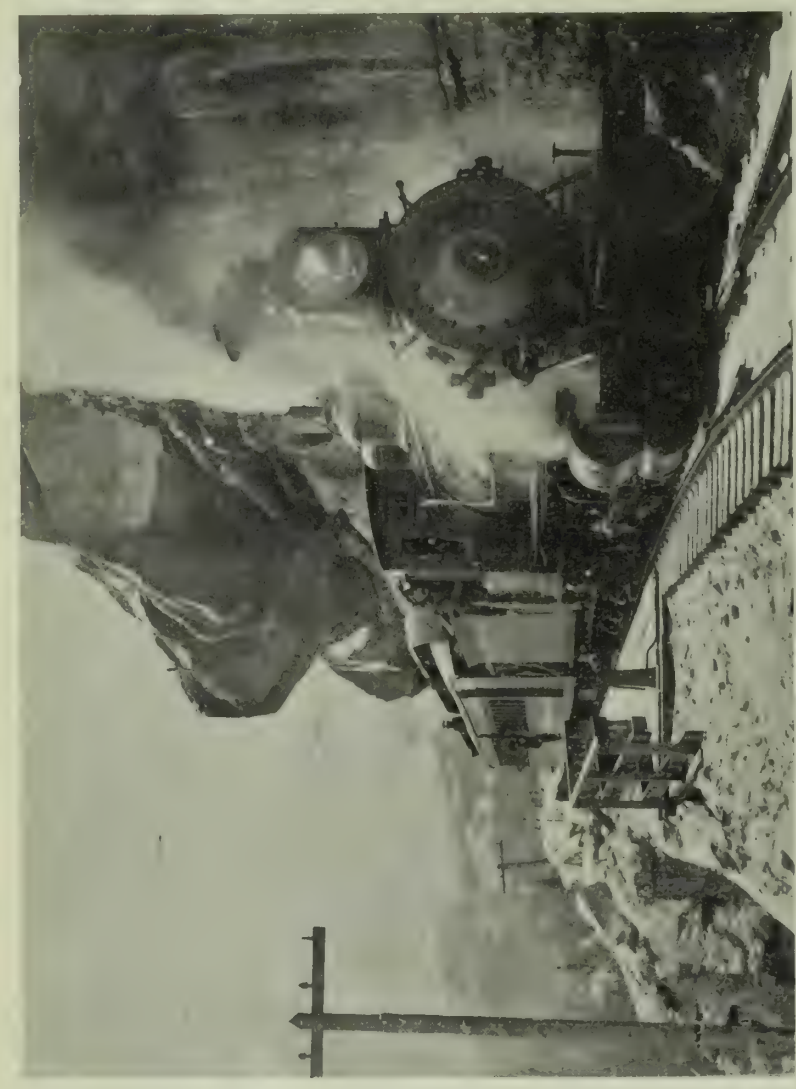
Not for Mr. Scott's sake, but for the sake of the State itself, should the press make an attempt to do some educating along these lines.

Widening Chinatown's Streets.

THE Chronicle suggests the obliteration of Chinatown by widening the streets and compelling owners to put their property in a sanitary condition. The suggestion is a good one, and yet where shall we provide for them if it shall be determined to move the quarters entirely? The foreign quarters in New York are quite as disreputable as the Chinese quarter of San Francisco. The buildings on Hester street, New York, are better than those on Sacramento street in San Francisco, but it is to be doubted if the people there are any more cleanly.

The law will not permit the confiscation of the Chinatown property, will not permit the widening of streets without the consent of the property owners, but this much is clear: The power known to the law as the "police power" which includes a supervision of things sanitary, is one of the most elastic and far-reaching of powers vested in the Board of Supervisors. As an initial step toward abolishing the unpleasant features of Chinatown, why not have the Board of Supervisors request an opinion of City and County Attorney Lane as to the most efficacious means of bringing about the suggested improvement—keeping within the law. Mr. Lane is an able lawyer, a man of infinite resources and would no doubt go deep into the subject and in the end present a well-formulated plan of procedure for the Board's guidance.

The world knows the condition of Chinatown. A court would take judicial notice of conditions then prevailing, without testimony. There is a splendid foundation to support any movement having the sanction of law, and Attorney Lane is equal to the emergency.



The Hanging Rock of Clifton.

Lake Bennet.

Skaguay Valley.

Niles Canon.

Some Views Along the White Pass and Yukon Railroad.

Photo by Barley, Skaguay, Copyright, 1900.

LITTLE ENGLAND.

The British Colony of the Barbadoes in the West Indies.

Vendors of Native Pottery.

The Principal Business Street of Bridgetown.

Negress.

DOWN where the Caribbean opens into the equatorial Atlantic, far to the windward of the other Antilles, lies the little isle of Barbados. It is but a speck on the edge of the great ocean, but one that far outdoes its size, having been the scene of more romantic adventures than any other colony over which the Cross of St. George flutters.

The island itself is an odd combination of volcanic and coral origin, those sections produced from the latter cause possessing a special peculiarity in the regularity of the terraces which mark the work of the insects. These terraces are most clearly defined, particularly along the southern coast, where the narrow mesas lining the shore are arranged with mathematical precision. It is evident that in some far-off age a turmoil of the sea threw up the higher parts of the island; abont them the coral has grown through the passing centuries until the original area has been more than doubled.

Back in the days of Cromwell the Barbados received the sobriquet of "Litttle England," all on account of the steadiast loyalty which distinguished the people. Never has the mother country had a foe against which the Barbados failed to declare herself and in all of England's wars during three centuries the diminutive colony has done her share and more in the raising of money, men and ships. Once so great did the ambitions of "Little England" become that she not only equipped a fleet to help along the cause of Great Britain, but with her squadron of tiny craft captured and held an adjacent island which was the property of the enemy. There have been civil wars and internal strifes which shook the Barbados from end to end but through it it all there has ever been a staunch allegiance by all parties to the Monarchy beyond the seas.

Round about the coast of the colony have sailed the ships of every nation and several times the fighting craft of warring peoples have met and contended within sight of the palm-shaded beaches. Our own war of 1812 brought about two encounters of this kind, both fought within sight of Barbados' shores. The first was an engagement between the American privateer "Fox" and the English ship "Lapwing," the other brought into action the British packet "Townshend" and the American schooners "Tom" and "Bony." In both of the encounters the loyal British of the Barbados were compelled to see their beloved flag go down before the Stars and Stripes.

Portuguese navigators were the original discoverers of this bit of prolific land, but they failed to see in it anything to tempt them. So it was left for subjects of James I. to take formal possession in the name of that monarch. This occurred in 1605 and it is the boast of he native Barbadan that since that time no flag save that of Great Britain has ever waved over the island. Those mariners who carved the name of James I. upon one of the island's trees in token that this bit of land belonged to their monarch, builded really better than they knew, for of all the Antilles Barbados is one of the most prolific and attractive. In spite of its latitude, the climate is healthful in the extreme and there is hardly a square mile of its area which is not exceedingly productive. Sugar is the principal product, and each year brings an immense crop. Tropical fruits and vegetables grow in abundance so that the markets of the island are plentifully supplied with every luxury while its people are free from the climatic conditions which render life burdensome during a great portion of the year in most of the other West Indies.

At the southwest corner of the island lies its capital, Bridgetown, facing on Carlisle Bay, the only good anchorage offered on the island's coast, even this being little more than an open roadstead. The Barbados is, however, located in the zone of the Northeast trades and thus the shallow bay is sheltered save when something odd in the shape of a blow howls over the sea. Bridgetown is a quaint spot with its narrow streets and buildings mostly dating from the 18th century. But once beyond the business quarter, the roads widen and are lined on either hand by pretentious villas and beautiful gardens. The government occupies the southern quarter of the town with a fine governor's residence, military barracks and attendant buildings, all surrounded by a well-kept and spacious park.

The visitor is not allowed to remain long in Bridgetown without a sight of the city's monument to Nelson which stands in the principal square, named, like its London prototype, "Trafalgar." Oddly enough, this square in the little port of Barbados is the original in name, and the monument to England's great Admiral which occupies its center is the first memorial of the kind erected to the hero of Trafalgar.

Life in this city down by the equator is one of luxurious ease and tropical indolence. No one ever seems to be in a hurry to get to business but everyone is keen for any event of sport or pleasure. As in all English communities, club life is an important factor, there being two splendid organizations, one formed of the older element, the other of the younger. There is plenty of cricket, tennis and all the outdoor sports so dear to the English heart.

Of course, Bridgetown society centers at the Governor's mansion. Even in so small an outpost there is plenty of it, the brilliantly uniformed officers of the regiment on the station forming the inner circle about which civilian soci l Bridgetown revolves.

The Britisher seems to be able to engraft himself most successfully upon any country in any zone where he may choose to make his dwelling. Inside of sixty days I met subjects of Queen "Vic" happy and contented among the frosty blasts of the Straits of Magellan, and here in Barbados, almost under the equator, I found them just as contented and taking life with the same ease.

But there are drawbacks, even to the lazy life of Barbados. The most important of these is the possibility that the island liss in the track of one of those devistating hurricanes which are common to the West Indies. Several times has the island been swept by these storms, the last disaster occurring in 1898. Each time there has been heavy loss in lives and property. These events are serious setbacks to the Barbados but in spite of them she quickly regains her losses, and the perils of the storm are forgotten under the lulling of the balmy breezes and the blue sky of the tropics.

DOUGLAS WHITE.

Three Montana trees have become famous. One, an oak grows on the edge of a precipice in Alder Gulch, where the first discovery of gold in Montana was made and where ex-United States Senator Sanders acted as chairman of a Vigilance Society. Fifteen men were hanged from the tree. A rope fastened to an overhanging limb stayed their flight as they dropped over the bluff. "Hangman's Tree" was a landmark in Helena, although little now remains of it. For a period of years rude justice was administered from this tree. A painting of it with two men suspended from a limb may be seen in the rooms of the State Historical Society. The third tree, a pine, is conspicuous from the fact that it is the only tree in the city of Butte. The sulphur fumes from the smelters will soon destroy it.

British agents have shipped thousands of American horses to Africa since the beginning of the Transvaal war. By actual trial they have been found superior in adaptability and endurance to any other animals that they can obtain. It is also claimed that they are more intelligent than those of European breed descended from long lines of carefully trained progenitors. This comes about through the fact that our Western horses for generations had to fight against wolves and other wild animals, and to find their living in a wild country in all kinds of weather. Their surroundings have made them not only hardy but keenly intelligent. Colonel Cody with his Wild West Show has done much to bring the American horse to the notice of European cavalry officers.

The Nelson Monument.

The Harbor of Bridgetown.

Native Huts, Interior.

House-Moving at Bacoor.

General Lawton's Last Photograph.

Twenty-Fifth (colored) Infantry Resting.

ROMANCE EN ROUTE.

By Gelett Burgess.

I AM tired of the question, "How do you like London?" and "How do you like New York?" "Would you rather live in San Francisco or Paris? Why, indeed, should I not like London, Kalamazoo, Patagonia, Bombay or any other place where live men and live women walk the streets, eat, drink and are merry? How can I say whether El Dorado is better than Arcady, or a square room more convenient than an oblong one? Every living place has its own fascination, its mysteries, its esoteric delights. Ask me, rather, if I can understand London, if I can catch the point of view of the French concierge, if I comprehend the slang and bustle of Chicago. Like them? Show me the town I cannot like! Know them? Ah, that is different! This is the charm of travel—to keep up the feeling of strangeness to the end; never to take things for granted or let them grow stale; to see them always as though one had never seen them before. Then, and only then can we see things as they really are. When I become cosmopolitan, world-old, blase, when I think and speak in all languages, I shall fly to some deserted island to study the last, most impenetrable enigma—myself.

But meanwhile I can purchase Romance retail, at the mere cost of a railway ticket. I can close my eyes in one city and open them next morning in its mental antipode. Romance requires only a new point of view, it is the art of getting fresh glimpses of the commonplace. One need not be transported to the days of chivalry, one need not even travel; one need only begin life anew every morning, and look upon the world unfamiliarly, as the child does. One must be born a discoverer. It was an old trick with my sister and me to regard each other, at times, as strangers, and at those lucid moments much was revealed. Thus one may keep youth, for the sport never loses color. One game won or lost, the next has an equal interest though we use the same counters and the same board. The combinations are always fresh.

Still, though one may find this fountain of perpetual youth in one's breakfast glass, the obvious, conventional method is to go forth for the adventure, and get this famed elixir at some foreign and well-advertised spring. For this purpose tourists travel, taking part in a pilgrimage of whose meaning or whose method they are ignorant. In their boxes and portmanteaus they pack, not hopes of mystery, faith in the compelling marvels of the world, nor the wonder of strange sights, but instead, fault-finding comparisons, and prejudice against all manners and customs not their own. They do not see, in the omnibus of London, the automobile of Paris and the electric street car of New York the pregnant evidence of three several points of view on life, art and commerce, but only grotesque contrasts with their own particular means of locomotion. They do not delight in the incomprehensible hurly-burly of civilization that has produced the City Man, the Bounder and the Coster, nor do they attempt to solve either mystery or get the meat from such strange shells. Instead, they see only the clerk at the lunch counter bolting his chops and half-pint, the incredible waistcoat of the pretentious blagueur, or the buttons and "moke" of the ruffling D'Artagnan of the Old Kent Road.

So the tourist travels with his eyes shut, while the true traveler has a lookout on life, keen for new sensations. To do things in Rome as the Romans do, that is his motto. He must eat spaghetti with his fingers, his rice and chopped suey with chopsticks, or he fails of their subtle relish. He calls no Western town crude or uncivilized, but he tries to cultivate a taste for cocktails that he may imbibe the native fire of Occidental enthusiasm. In the East, he is an Oriental. He changes his mind, his costume, and his spectacles wherever he goes, and underneath the little peculiarities of custom and environment he finds the essential real ties of life.

To taste all this tart flavor of living—not to write about it or fit it to sociological theories, but to live it, understand it, be it—this is the art of travel, the art of romance, the art of youth. But there is no Baedecker to guide such a sentimental tourist through such experiences as these—to give the dimensions of delight in a five-o'clock tea to one who comes with a bright eye to that hackneyed ceremonial. Murray, in his handbooks, omits to mention that the chief joy of a mi-careme festival cannot be known unless one parades in costume, throws confetti, and speaks the argot of the studios. Hare's "Walks in London" says nothing of talks with battle-struck pensioners on the benches of the Royal Hospital. It takes a lively glance to recognize a man disguised in a frock coat, and find him blood brother to the Esquimau!

Well, there is a place in Utah on the Central Pacific Railroad called Monotony. The settlement consists of a station, a water tank, and a corrugated iron bunk-house. The level horizon swings round a full circle, enclosing a flat arid waste, bisected by an unfenced line of rails, straight as a stretched string. The population consists of a telegraph operator, a foreman, and six section-hands. Yet I dare say I would like to stop there awhile, en route, and perhaps I would taste some charm that London never gave. I am not so sure that but that before I took wing again I might not like it better even than Paris!

A CHINESE TRACT.

A Remarkable Book Written in Aid of the Boxers.

ONE of those sensational stories which are pure fake ninety-nine times out of a hundred and remarkable prophecy the hundredth was published in the North China Daily News at the time of the Empress' latest coup this spring. It was from the pen of a Chinese correspondent, and so rambling and incoherent in style that it seemed the work of a madman. Indeed, its publication set Europeans in China wondering that a stable, conservative British paper like the News should throw open its columns to such sensational drivel. Yet within three months the events proved the truth of this article. Who the mysterious correspondent is, only the editors of the News know, and they are not telling. He must be a person connected with the court, because of his information concerning the inner workings of the Chinese government. Briefly, his article went about as follows:—He began by calling attention to the Boxers' society, whose general president, Prince Tuan, was father of the new boy Emperor. He asserted that they were a secret league against foreigners, and were even then preparing an uprising. In this conspiracy there were not only the Boxers but the Empress herself, all her main advisers and the educated and conservative classes generally. When the time came to strike, the drilled portion of the Chinese army was to do the real, true fighting, while the Boxers were to hang on their flanks, slaughtering missionaries and converts and keeping the revolution boiling throughout the Empire. So far as we can see at this stage, this is exactly what has happened.

But there was another warning, had the foreigners only heeded it. During the past year, there has been circulated in the Chinese Empire a little book, a mere pamphlet, which has produced, most probably, a stronger political effect than any since the Junius letters. It is nothing more or less than a tract against Christianity, and so wide has been its circulation that it has spread to every corner of the Empire. One of the rich, literati members of that educated class which most hates and abhors foreigners, has bought eight hundred thousand for free distribution.

The book is vile beyond translation, obscene almost beyond belief, so that the very fact that it can be received and believed throughout the Empire is a commentary on the ignorance of outsiders in which the low-caste Chinese moves and has his being. It consists in a string of outrageous libels, strung together on a thread. The keenness of the man who wrote it and the Chinese way of doing things is illustrated by this very characteristic. He tries to turn out something about foreigners so low and vile that whenever a Chinaman thinks of the white devils he will associate them with things low, vile and devilish. Who wrote it no one knows exactly. Most probably it was planned and executed by a committee of literati.

"A Death Blow to Corrupt Doctrines," it is called, and it professes to be issued by the Gentry and the People. Like the "Confessions of Maria Monk" and other works issued in this country for underhand polemical purposes, it purposes to be a confession. "A man of Jao-Chow, above all others distressed in heart," professes to have been initiated into the Christian sect and to have taken part in their rites. Many of his statements, most of them, in fact, are too strong for publication. Here are a few that are otherwise:

"They make use of occult and devilish arts and bewitch the ignorant by magical arts and incantations, so they joyfully enter the sect. . . . . When a person enters this religion the teacher gives him four ounces of silver and a pill. When he has taken this pill his whole mind is confused and darkened, so that he destroys his ancestral tablets, and only worships an image of a naked child which points one finger toward heaven and another toward the earth. They say this is the Prince Jesus. Families having daughters, on entering this religion, restrain one of them from marriage. These are the guardians of the locks and keys of the chest containing magical spells and incantations. They are called 'the old women who open the chest.' . . . . In case of funerals, the religious teachers eject all the relatives and friends from the house, and the corpse is put into the coffin with closed doors. Both eyes are secretly taken out and the orifice sealed up with plaster. The reason for extracting the eyes is this: From one hundred pounds of Chinese lead can be extracted eight pounds of silver, and the remaining ninety-two pounds of lead can be sold at the original cost. But the only way to obtain this silver is by compounding the lead with the eyes of Chinamen. The eyes of foreigners are of no use for this purpose. . . . . It is impossible to enumerate all their practices. If we seek for the general motive which leads to them, it is a fixed determination utterly to befool our people, and under false pretence of religion to take possession of the Middle Kingdom."

The "Man Most Distressed in Heart" fortifies his arguments by a great array of quotations from other native writers.

Con. on Page 7.

Rapid Army Transport—One Mile an Hour.

General Pilar, the Man of Mystery.

Captain Quinlan and his Macabebe Scouts.

PEOPLE AND SCENES IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Things & People.

Hearst's Chicago American.

JOURNALISM in Chicago is excited over the advent of W. R. Hearst. The Napoleonic proprietor of the N. Y. Journal has swooped down on the Windy City with a perfect cohort of literary, artistic and advertising stars and promises to show its effete newspapermen what an evening journal ought to be. All over the burg bill boards announce the forthcoming production of Hearst's Chicago American, with portraits of Carter Harrison, David Bennett Hill and J. J. Ingalls as its chief contributors. It is heralded that at the head of each department of the enterprise are Chicago men, at least by birth and early training, though tried in the crucible of New York journalism. The brilliant Carvalho is busy directing the business interests of the publication. He is the man who has made the New York enterprise of Mr. Hearst pay and it may truly be said that what he does not know about newspaper work is of slight moment. On the other hand the newspaper situation in Chicago is different to that in any other American city. The News and Record, the Tribune, the Times-Herald, the Chronicle and the sundry other big dailies are excellent publications, intelligently directed, respectable, and while conservative, sufficiently enterprising along legitimate lines. The press of a city represents its public and if yellow journalism of the New York type had been in demand there Mr. Joseph Dunlop would not have been sent to Joliet prison for conducting an indecent publication.

* * *

The fight is now on and the reporters are the first to profit by it. The wages of journalists in Chicago were very low. The stars enjoyed large salaries, but the underlings have been ridiculously underpaid. Just as the Examiner advanced salaries in every San Francisco local room so has the Chicago American. Able advertising men have also found their value enhanced; the same is true of the artists. On the other hand the publishers are not idle. They have discounted the expected red head lines of the new publication by rigging out the obsolete Journal, the evening daily, with which Editor Dunlop was connected, with ruddy captions and sable display type. It now is the image of its New York prototype. Other cards are up their sleeves, they say. An astute set of gentlemen they are and, I imagine, will find ways of "coppering" whatever new leads are dealt by the daring invader. It is the News that the enterprise is chiefly directed at. Of all Windy City publications it has the largest circulation and is an immense advertising sheet whose features commend it to the Chicagoans. Its rates are very high, and its proprietor, Victor Lawson, is said to have an income of between six and eight hundred thousand dollars a year. The Tribune is another big profit-maker. Its Sunday issue of sixty pages teems with the page announcements of the great department stores. The Times-Herald, Kohlsaat's paper, has a valuable circulation representing quality rather than quantity and after a hard fight for recognition, is now paying handsomely. The new paper will undoubtedly cut into profits all round. It advertising rates will be so low at first as to tempt the big establishments and they may support it to depress the charges of the established publications.

***

The Political Outlook.

THE topic of general discussion in Pullman sleepers just now is politics. A traveler recently returned informed me that crossing the continent back and forth he had only met two Bryan men, employees of a western railroad. The others and he assured me he had conscientiously talked about the campaign whenever the opportunity offered, announced uncompromisingly that they intended to vote for McKinley. A railway contractor, engaged with big force of men straightening out the Union Pacific, told him Wyoming would this year go Republican, because of the development of the wool industry, which had assumed great proportions. Utah is variously claimed. It is said that Colorado, which within the last five years has become the greatest gold-producing state in the union, will surely turn to McKinley and Roosevelt. The Coast, generally, is conceded to the Republican column, and the Solid South will undoubtedly be broken. On the other hand, it seems to be admitted that a strong fight will have to be made in New York, Illinois, and Indiana. There, the chief battles of the campaign will have to be waged. Though certain of victory, the Republican organization proposes to leave nothing to chance, and will make assurance doubly sure with an energetic propaganda of literature and oratory. I am told that this campaign will exceed in vigor and activity its predecessor. At all events there are likley to be spirited doings between August and November, not only in the country, but along the Coast.

***

Homesickness in the Philippines.

THERE is, I am told, an ardent desire among both officers and men now in the Philippines to return to their native land. There must have been at least 700 officers' resignations in General Otis' hands, which, however, were never acted upon. The force there is required, if not for active service, at least for police duty, and there is little chance of its release for some time to come. The fact is that life in Manila is dreary. There is but little intercourse with the Spanish and Filipinos, and American matrons and maids are few and far between. A man from there recently, told me it was piteous to see the manner in which officers and men would stare at their fair countrywomen when they appeared on the Escolta. There are few amusements; no pleasures have been organized—hence the amount of drinking we hear of. This is a temporary condition, of course. The British manage to make life endurable in Hong Kong with pony races, lawn tennis and cricket The rules of living in tropical countries are not hard to learn. Indeed it is ridiculous to hear of the rigors of the Philppines when it is remembered that the "LOOT," A PHILIPPINE CONTRAST.

American Troops Quartered in the Spanish Palace, Santa Cruz.

limate is not more trying than that of Alabama, Florida, or Louisiana.

* * *

The prevailing homesickness makes the departure of each outgoing transport a tragedy. Officers and men gather at the docks and endeavor to conjure up the illusion that they, too, are going to the blessed States. The wrecks and shadows of men who have emerged from the over-filled hospitals are envied by their more robust comrades because of this blissful privilege of departure. Something of the spirit that prevails may be gathered from a scene on the transport Thomas as she neared San Francisco on a recent trip. About 1 a.m.—it was a moonlight night and clear—the Farallones loomed up in the far distance. Most of the ship's company had retired. A few gay spirits hung over the bow watching for the first glimpse of home. In an instant the glad news was all over the great steamer. Silent a moment before, her decks throbbed with an excited throng which, being satisfied that the dark mass ahead was really America, gave itself up to music and singing until dawn broke, revealing the cliffs of the Golden Gate.

* * *

Two soldiers, one with a crutch and the other hobbling with the assistance of a stick, made their way along the pier at the Presidio from the tug that had landed them from the transport. Reaching shore, the man with the stick rubbed his foot lovingly on the red soil. The oth imitated him. "God's country, all right, Bill," he said. "Strike me if I ever leave it again."

***

A Princely Gift to Education.

THE American millionaire has again added to the country's endowment for education. Two citizens of St. Louis have just turned over to Washington University, a small and struggling institution of that city, property worth $5,000,000 and drawing the annual income of $500,000. These two philanthropists, R. S. Brookings and S. S. Cupples, have shown their wisdom by giving this endowment while they are alive and sound, so that there will be no legacy-hunting relatives contesting their wills. The property is a private railway terminus, and may be expected to increase considerally in value. This raises Washington University at once frem a fresh-water college to an institution of nearly the first rank—so far as funds go. Outside of the Atlantic coast, only Stanford and Chicago are now richer. It is to be hoped that the college will spend some of its new wealth in investigating the morphology of that species of reptile which tears the clothes off women, and which has its habitat in the strike section of St. Louis.

***

The Formal Annexation of Hawaii.

IN the photograph of the Hawaiian annexation ceremonies reproduced in this issue on page 4, there is a bit which is typical of the little island republic in the man holding a child who stands on the platform almost within reach of the new governor. There is something cozy, simple and homelike about the little republic now become a part of our nation. In all its ways its government reminds one of the early days of our own republic, when Jefferson rode his farm-horse to the White House. The tone of Governor Dole's address was a further proof, if any were needed, of the primitive, Cincinnatan simplicity which rules Hawaiian politics. The governor of another American state or territory would have talked on political movements or social reform; the keynote of Dole's address was "purity of the family life!" Imagine it, O politician-ridden United States of America! The old order must pass in the nature of things, as steamship and cable and capital bring Hawaii nearer to the mother country; let us hope that this simplicity of life will not pass with the rest. It is not the soil from which statesmen or poets or others of the great commonly spring, for genius is the flower of a trampled soil, but it is the ideal life for the ordinary man. BOSWELL, JR.

***

A Chinese Tract.

Con. from page 6.

One of these reads: "In the kingdom of O Kwo-Er they constantly practice killing men to sacrifice to Jesus in praying for happiness. . . . . When a principal man dies they offer one thousand men as a sacrifice. To procure victims they catch foreigners and traders coming into their borders, and if these are not sufficient they seize travelers, so that no one dares to go to market alone for fear of being carried off. It is considered honorable to have many wives. The principal man is allowed three thousand." Another sensational scribe, author of "The Mirror of the West," says: "In England they have the art of cutting out paper men and horses, and by burning charms and repeating incantations transforming them into real men and horses. They may, however, be dissolved by beating a gong, or by discharging large guns at them. They may also be dissolved by spouting water over them."

And so one, ad nauseam, a hundred other native writers being called in evidence to substantiate the charges laid against "the dissolute and abandoned non-human species." The citations from these writers exceed in indecency anything that can be imagined, and are too utterly abominable to be even hinted at.

"A Death Blow to Corrupt Doctrines" is not a great work of literature, but it is a work which will live in history if this disturbance precludes, as all observers believe that it does, the break-up of the Middle Kingdom and the end of China as a nation. In passing, it may be observed that the veracious author hits the mark once in a while with a chance shaft. His declaration that the foreigners are "trying to get possession of the Middle Kingkom" is a bit too near the real truth. The quarrel with the facts is over methods, not intentions.

THE STOCKTON STREET-FAIR

Photos by W. J. Street.

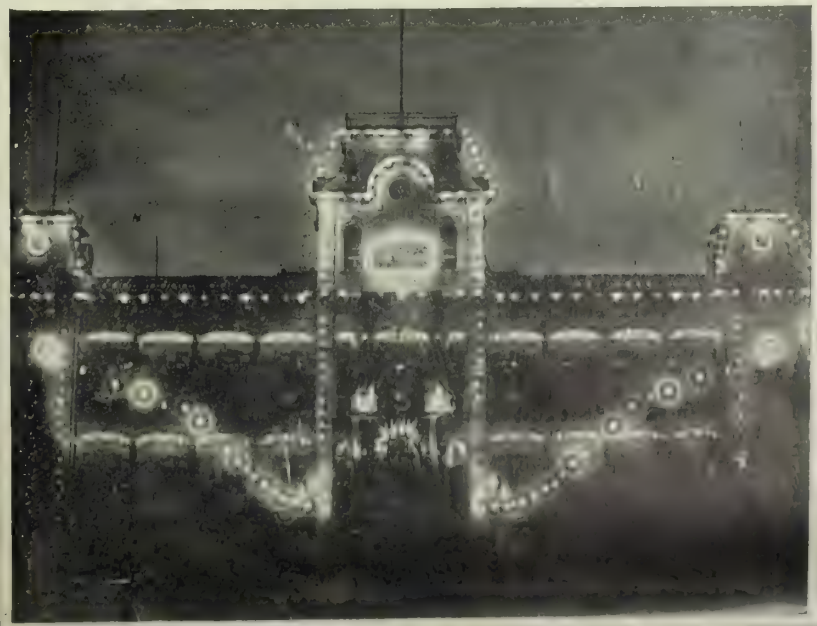
See Page 11.

THE INSTALLATION OF THE NEW GOVERNMENT IN THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS, JUNE 14, 1900.

Governor Dole's Address.

The Last Meeting of the Old Republican Cabinet.

See Page 11.



Illumination of the Government Building.
Photo by Davey, Honolulu.

LONDON.

A Model English Wife.

PARIS.

The American Menage at the Exposition.

LONDON.

MRS. GLADSTONE is dead, and the English papers are giving nearly as much space to her history and biography as they did to those of her distinguished husband; for, like her husband, she represented an ideal of the middle-class English people, being the example which good British matrons hold up to their young daughters. Gladstone, now that he is dead, and now that his career can be seen in perspective, appears as the hero and the logical outcome of the bourgeoise class. His virtues were those lauded by Samuel Smiles' Philistine works on "Thrift," "Duty," "Self-Help" and the like; his faults lay mostly in a Philistine point of view on things which were outside the regular British system of morals; even his genius was of a hide-bound sort. To correspond to her husband, Mrs. Gladstone was cut on a conventional mould and made the ideal English wife, at once the beloved of the ordinary Englishman and the abomination of the woman suffragist. One meets the type at every turn in England—quiet, repressed, lady-like, deferring everything to her husband, pleased with his gracious moods, frightened at his wrath or displeasure—the true prototype of Sweet Alice, Ben Bolt, "who wept with delight when you gave her a smile and trembled in fear at your frown." With a husband who takes no advantage of the position, this works in practice mightily well; with a brutal one—well, I think that the unhappy English wife is the most unhappy of her kind. On the other hand, few English husbands take advantage of the position, and English wives are a happy lot, in a quiet, contented way. Such a wife was Mrs. Gladstone.

A widely-circulated story of the Gladstone family life illustrates this, as well as the beautifully tender regard in which they held one another. Just after she was married her husband, who had already been a Minister, put to her the question: "Shall I tell you nothing, and you can say anything? Or shall I tell you everything, and you say nothing?" She chose the latter of the alternatives; and he told her everything and she never told anything—except once. Two Cabinet Ministers were dining with her husband, then also a member of the Cabinet when something was mentioned the details of which were known only to members of the Cabinet and to such of their wives as were trusted with their secrets. Mrs. Gladstone said, or did, or looked, something which revealed that she knew. At once there was flashed upon her from the brilliant black eyes of her husband one of those terrible looks he could give; it was a silent but an affrighting reproof. When the dinner was over and Mrs. Gladstone went up to the drawroom, she had a good old-fashioned cry, and wrote down a little note of apology to her husband.

He scribbled back a reply; it was in something like these terms:

"You are always right. You could not do wrong. Never mention it again."

Mr. Gladstone had, of course, forgotten all about it, and his surprise was as great as anybody else's when it was brought back to his memory. One day he was showing some of his old letters to some guests at Hawarden, and in the midst of it Mrs. Gladstone disappeared, and coming down with a little bundle, said she also had her little treasures of the past which she must show, and then out came this little note—faded, scarcely legible, preserved throughout half a century of common life.

This is matched by another anecdote which illustrates Mrs. Gladstone's tact, a quality which is said to have something to do with her husband's success. It throws light also on the absolute worship in which she held her husband. No one ever heard her criticize him or permit him to be critcized in her presence. One evening at the Durdans, when she and Mr. Gladstone were the guests of Lord Rosebery, Mr. Gladstone began to tell a story which he always told with peculiar gusto. Mrs. Gladstone, of course, had heard it often before, and knew the somewhat astounding climax. But she looked round, saw that some of the servants were still in the dining-room, and suddenly, while her husband was in the full tide of the story, turned to Lord Roseberry and with an air of perfect serenity on her face said: "Have you heard from the Aberdeens lately?" There was a terrible flash from the great man's eyes, and he suddenly stopped.

Then the servant went out, and he was allowed to continue his story. It was of two Orangemen. One of them was dying, and his friend was anxious to hear some message from him which would encourage him in the hopes of final salvation for the parting soul. He leant down over the head of his friend, asked him if he had anything to say, and the dying Orangeman in a scarcely audible whisper exclaimed: "D——n the Pope!" "It was not quite what I expected," said his friend, "but still it was better than nothing." It was her desire to spare the servants the scandal of hearing the "naughty" word from her illustrious husband's lips that induced Mrs. Gladstone to make her apparently silly and irrelevant remark.

With all her cleverness she was an absent-minded woman, careless about dress and the despair of maids, and her mistakes have been stock with the English "personal" papers these many years. It is related that once, being in course of dressing for dinner at a country-house where she was visiting, she put on her skirt and was then unable to find her dress-bodice. A clever maid was called in, and she concocted a makeshift bodice out of a white silk shawl. Mrs. Gladstone was about to go out in this, when she felt a lump inside her skirt. Reaching down she found the missing bodice tucked inside. In later life both she and her husband approached shabbiness, and resembled a country couple rather than the premier of England and his wife.

A gentle figure, one that cannot be appreciated by the Americans with their love of womanly independence and vigor nor by the French with their love of cleverne s and wit, but one honored in the highest by the English, she was lost to sight when her husband finished his work and went his way. Her reason for living was gone, and she lived as one who has already played her part in the world.

PARIS.

THE American family, or portion of a family, in moderate circumstances, who have come over to get what they can of Paris and incidentally of the Exposition, and who have no mind to pay the exorbitant hotel rates, wisely conclude to make a study of Parisian life by mingling with the people. To this end they take a furnished flat and find suitable servants, or rather a s rvant, for good cooks can be found who are willing to do almost everything except the washing. An agent, knowing the size of the family and the length of its purse, makes out a list of places and prices: it is then a matter of perhaps a day's work with a cab and a guide, but in the end very desirable quarters are found, consisting of a small dining-room, a smaller kitchen, a "salon," two very small bedrooms and a bathroom, all fairly well furnished. Within a stone's throw are meat shops, groceries, milk, cream, bread, fruit supplies and restaurants, so they will not starve if a cook cannot be discovered at once or if she leaves suddenly. When she comes, however, the family must cease to do its own marketing or there will be trouble. She makes a handsome commission from grocer, butcher, baker and wine merchant, which she regards as lawful perquisites. Her savory salads and delicious soups must reconcile her employers to her financial eccentricities.

The women of the family, if they will investigate, will be amazed to learn to what an extent cooking as a fine art and science is carried in France. They have heard that Paris is the best fed of all cities; they know that it is the habitat of the cordon bleu in his highest estate, but they have yet to learn of the great cookery academy which religiously guards its traditions and its recipes, teaches classes and gives diplomas and medals to the deserving. When an ambitious cook has served his time and shown what he can do, he is sure of a good position. In middle life he may retire from active service and devote himself to designing new dishes, or he may become a specialist and direct proceedings at cafes for a few hours every day, or he may himself organize classes. No woman has yet arisen to great distinction in this line, which would seem to be peculiarly a woman's; perhaps because while a man may and does give his whole time and thought to the subject, and is a husband and father on the side, so to speak, the woman must be at once housekeeper, seamstress and nurse, mother and teacher of her children; it is a case of divided interests.

The women of the family abroad will not spend many consecutive days at the Exposition, if they are wise. Nothing is so hard on brain and nerves and spinal column as prolonged sight-seeing—pleasure made a business. Perhaps they learned at the Chicago World's Fair how to spend their time to the best advantage by not looking at what did not appeal to them in any way. I know of one woman who spent three weeks at that fair and never once put her nose inside of Machinery Hall; more than that, when taken to task by her menfolks she said she didn't care for all the machinery in the world and she just loved pictures and lace and diamonds.

Women will make the rounds of the great millinery, cloak and dressmaking establishments to see the lovely things as they turned out and get ideas for the co season, then they will go where they ma the things worn—to the races, the polo grounds, the theatre, the Bois de Boulogne, the Champs Elysees. The exquisite finish, the fine handwork on Parisian gowns will appeal to the American woman, but it costs, how it costs! A few gowns will linger in the memory when the steamer is on its homeward way across the Atlantic. A wonderfully simple dress of mauve miroir velvet opening in front over a petticoat of white satin, embroidered with a design of orchids in various shades of mauve, the elbow sleeves and the square neck finished with falls of exquisite lace. A delicate pink mousseline de soie with a deep circular ruffle of black chantilly, the front gore of white covered with white lace, the bodice a yoke of white similarly covered, the lower part of the pink tucked perpendicularly, the sleeves with ruffles of black at the wrist, falling over a flounce of white. A tailor-made gown of light-brown cloth, the skirt and a part of the bodice made together, the plaits of the skirt trimmed with silk straps, a bolero of cream lace over heavy silk of the same shade as the cloth. A charming little dress of heliotrope foulard with lace collar and cuffs and bolero with long ends, the skirt trimmed with bands of lace which pass under the plaits. The little details that mean so much to the stylishly dressed woman—the stocks, the chiffon scarfs, the yokes of valenciennes and applique and insertion and jet, the ideas in cuffs and sashes and ties which shall vary her gowns and almost double the number of them in effect—the observing woman brings these back from her trip to Paris.

BABETTE.

THE NICKEL PLATE ROAD, (N. Y. C. & St. L. R. R.) offers Eastern passengers three elegantly appointed vestibuled express trains daily between Chicago and New York and Chicago and Boston. For sleeping car reservations and full information address

JAY W. ADAMS, Pac. Coast Pass. Agt.
37 Crocker Bldg., San Francisco, Cal.

If you have never tasted Jesse Moore "AA" whisky, try it and be convinced that it is the best whisky in the world.

Champagne Record Smashed.

M109,303 cases imported in 1899 of G. H. peumm's Extra Dry was never before approached. Carrying an enormous stock of choicest wines, its fine quality can not be excelled, regardless of price. Its remarkable red vintage now imported equals its best 1195ecessors.

DIVIDEND NOTICE—Savings and Loan Society 101 Montgomery stree , corner of Sutter—The board of directors declared a dividend for the term en ing June 30, 1900, at the rate of three and one quarter (3¼) per cent per annum on all deposits free of taxes and payable on and after July 2, 1900. Dividends not called for are added to and b ar the same rate of dividend as the principal from and after July 1, 1900

CYRUS W. CARMANY, Cashier.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.—Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco, 33 Post street For the h lf ye r ending June 30th, 1900, a dividend has been declared at the rate of thre (3) per cent per annum on all deposits, free of taxes, payab e on and aft r Monday July 2nd, 1900.

GEORGE A. STORY, Cashier.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.—The Continental Building and Loan Association, corner of California and Sansome streets, for the half year ending June 30th, 1900, has declared a dividend of 5 per cent per annum on Ordinary Deposits; 6 per cent on Term Deposits; 10 per cent to class "B" stock; and 12 per cent co class "A."

CAPT. OLIVER ELDRIDGE, President.
WILLIAM CORBIN, Secretary.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.—Office of the Hibernian Savings and Loan Society, corner Market, McAllister and Jones streets, San Francisco, June 27 1900.—At a regular meeting of the board of directors of this society, held this day, a dividend has been declared at the rate of three and one-eighth [3⅛] per cent per annum on all deposits for the six months ending June 30, 1900, free from all taxes and payable on and after July 1, 1900.

ROBERT J. TOBIN, Secretary.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.—Security Savings Bank, 222 Montgomery street, Mills building—For the hafs year ending June 30, 1900, dividend on form deposit at the rate of three and six-tenths [3 6 10] per cent per annum, and on ordidary deposits at the rate of three [3] per cent per annum, free of taxes, will be payable on and after July 2, 1900.

S. L. ABBOT, JR., Secretary.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES in and for the Northern District of California.
IN THE MATTER OF MAX WALTER, Bankrupt.

Take notice, that Max Walter, Bankrupt, above named, has been duly adjudicated bankrupt under the Act of Congress of June 1 1898, and that the first meeting of creditors has been called to meet at the office of the undersigned at room 94, Chronicle Building, San Francisco, California, on Saturday the 14th day of July, 1900, at the hour of 11 a. m., for the purpose of proving their claims against the state of said bankrupt; and that at the same time and place all creditors whose claims have been duly proven and allowed shall appoint one or three trustees of said estate.

Dated San Francisco, July 2nd, 1900.

MILTON J. GREEN,
Referee in Bankruptcy,
In and for the City and County of San Francisco.

Smile and Suffer.

That's the motto of many a woman's life. She manages the house, receives friends, entertains company, with a moan in the mouth which is stifled and a smile on the face which is a mask to cover up her pain. Only those who note the dark ringed eyes, the lines about the lips, the occasional pallor of the cheek, know the real story. Such women are among the most grateful for the cures performed by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. To smile and not to suffer is something wonderful to them. Women suffering from female weakness, inflammation, ulceration or the drains that so weaken the body, may take "Favorite Prescription" with almost absolute certainty of cure. It's sure to help. It's almost sure to heal. It has cured ninety-eight per cent. of those who gave it a fair and faithful trial.

Mrs. H. A. Alsbrook, of Austin, Lonoke Co., Ark., writes: "After five months of great suffering with female weakness I write this for the benefit of other sufferers from the same affliction. I doctored with our family physician without any good results, so my husband urged me to try Dr. Pierce's medicines—which I did, with wonderful results. I am completely cured. I took four bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, four of his 'Golden Medical Discovery' and two vials of his 'Pleasant Pellets.'" Sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter free. All correspondence confidential. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Tavern of Castle Crag

AND SODA SPRINGS

NOW OPEN.

Located in the midst of grand and impressive mountain scenery. With Mt. Shasta and The Crags for a background.

Fine hunting and fishing.

Unsurpassed cuisine and service and reasonable rates.

RAILROAD FARE round trip, including sleeper both ways $14

For rates, terms and other information address R. B. PIXLEY, Manager.

Care Pacific Improvement Co., Crocker Building, San Francisco, Cal.

LAKE COUNTY.

New 19-passenger Yosemite Stages, all outside seats, direct to the most picturesque portion of California. Best equipped stage line in the state. Leaves Calistoga daily (Sunday excepted) at 11:30 a. m., direct to Harbin, Seigler, Adams, Howard, Anderson, Astorgo, and Glenbrook; half an hour for lunch at Calistoga; also to Middletown, Lower Lake, Kelseyville and Lakeport. Wm. Spiers, Proprietor. Calistoga, Cal.

A Delicious Beverage for all Occasions

Ross's Royal Belfast Ginger Ale

Connoisseurs pronounce it "the best imported."

Sherwood & Sherwood,
AGENTS
212-214 Market St.,

Jesse Moore "AA" whiskey is used at all the principal hospitals in the United States. Why is it?

Our Illustrations.

ALTHOUGH Hawaii has been morally a part of the United States this decade long and although annexation has been a certainty since the summer of 1898, she did not legally enter the sisterhood of states until June 13 of this year, when the largest crowd which has ever gathered in the city since the flag-raising of two years ago witnessed the brief ceremony by which Sanford B. Doyle changed his title from President to Territorial Governor. The illustrations on page 9 show the ceremony of inauguration and the last meeting of the Republic's Cabinet, on June 14. Perhaps this is the first time in history when a republic has gone out of existence and merged into another nation without regret on either side and with universal rejoicing. The date is notable, also, as that of the United States' formal and legal commitment to the polity of territorial expulsion. There is now no going back; the boats are burned.

* *

The street fair is into fashion in California. It is a peculiar, hybrid institution, being compounded of the country fair in the East and the native California fiesta. This suits very well the cosmopolitan character of California —Anglo-Saxon ideals and ways grafted on a Spanish basis. It is not so pretty as the fiesta but there is more "business" in it.

Sacramento began it, and Stockton followed. The flour city has not so large a population as the Capitol, and was a bit unfortunate in the choice of some of the managers, but 'twas a pretty and interesting fair and, on the whole, a profitable one. The genus strolling player gathered from far and near. From Bosco, the "snake-eater" to the chutes elephant and lion, they kept the populace amused for a week. The queen was pretty, the parade fair, and the carnival merry, which is about all that is required of the fiesta part. As for the business end—well, 'twill be a long, long, weary time before Stockton puts public affairs in certain itching hands again. The views on the front page and on page 8 will give an idea of the city's appearance.

* *

Time was when every voluteer soldier went to the Philippine Islands with a camera. It was jocularly reported that the Eighth army corps carried more kodak cartridges than Springfield cartridges. He was a poor volunteer who did not come back to this country with films and prints spilling out from his baggage at every opening. That time has passed and whereas the offices of the newspapers, journals and magazines of the country are jammed to the doors with unavailable Philippine stories, sketches, and articles, the output of photographs is small. There seems no good reason for this, but it is a fact that hardly one view or snap-shot of the new campaigns has come into San Francisco. A few amateurs are at work in and around Manila, but that is about all. And the time has also passed when a "view up the Pasig" or "native women at the fountain," or "a nipa hut," are objects of interest to the average American. We are taking the islands as a matter of course and they have no longer the picturesqueness of novelty.

The views reproduced on page 5 are among the most interesting of the latest output. The photograph of General Lawton, taken in January of this year, is probably the last picture of that American hero. He was watching a detatchment of troops crossing a river, and the antics of a soldier wrestling with some baggage caused him to break into one of his infrequent smiles. At that point, the kodak fiend snapped him.

The view of the loaded bullock-carts is a document in explanation of our army's slow movement in the late campaigns. The average rate of movement of these carts is one mile an hour—a mile and a quarter in the morning when the beasts are fresh and racing like deer, and three quarters of a mile in the afternoon when they grow a bit tired from the morning's burst of speed. Even the burro of the Rocky Mountains is a greyhound compared with this.

Captain Quinlan's Macabebe scouts have stood much of the hardest work in the present campaign, being better acquainted with the country and its ways and better able to live off the land. They are finer men physically than the Tagalos as this view will go to prove, and appear more manly in every way. Moreover, they are hereditary enemies of Aguinaldo's insurgent tribe.

The colored soldiery has produced a sensation with the natives of the islands. They are used to the little Negrito, but these huge black men from the United States are a continual terror. Tagalo mothers use this part of the invading army to frighten their children into obedience. Incidentally, the black troops are the best foragers ever turned loose on Luzon.

When a native wishes to move his house, he doesn't send for a contractor, a windless and a set of jack-screws, as is a custom in these United States. He calls in his neighbors, after the fashion of a down-east house raising; they hoist the building to their shoulders and trot away with it. The "moving-bee" shown in the illustration occured at Bacoor, and traversed nearly a half-mile of ground in less than an hour. The more solid structure in the background owes its spotted appearance to the work of Spanish Native and American gunfire. General Pilar, dead this good year, is still one of the mysteries of the war. It is variously asserted that he was killed by his own people because he stood in Aguinaldo's way, that he was murdered by native deserters and that he died peacefully of fever. At any rate, all authorities agree that he is dead. The original photograph from which our photograph is copied was captured in a raid on a native baggage train, and was probably taken shortly before Pilar's death.

* *

One of the greatest feats of railroad building was the construction of the line which binds Dawson City and the Klondike country to the outside world. The country traversed presents such physical features that a railroad across it would be difficult of construction whatever the climate, but the "white silence of the North," the the heavy snowfall, the intence cold, were new problems to the engineers. The route was completed, however, and it throws open to the tourist one of the most beautiful regions, for scenic grandeur, on the Western Continent. The views on page 4 will give a small idea of the country.

You never have a head in the morning from drinking Jesse Moore "AA" whiskey. Try it.

The Sea Kings.

Since the Golden Hind went 'round the Horn and circled a world unknown,
Whenever the tides of God have beat and the winds of God have blown,
From the sunrise seas to the sundown seas, by the storm and the spendrift whirled,
The sons of the men who sailed with Drake have ruled the water world.

And whether they sail from Plymouth Hoe or out of the Golden Gate,
They are brothers in blood linked heart to heart and to resistless fate;
For the quenchless ardor to rule the seas which time can never slake,
Makes the same blood race through Dewey's veins that throbbed in the heart of Drake.

And all the way out of Trafalgar, down into Manila Bay,
The Anglo-Saxon has sailed and fought and struggled and won his way;
And wherever the tides of God may beat and the winds of God may blow,
It will be to-morrow as it is to-day and it was in the long ago!

JAMES LINDSAY GORDON.

First Really Good War Poem.

Out of the multitude of indifferent poems which have come from factory and study since the first gun was fired in the Boer-British war, the following, which appears in the Pall Mall Gazette, has merit beyond its mere meter, says the New York Press.

Long since our men went forth, superb and glistening,
Flushed with the fierce expectancy of fight;
But on us women of England, waiting, listening,
Dreaming alone at night—
O Lord, have mercy!

They revel high, to war's grim banquet bidden,
To the dregs they drain life's cup, but we sit here,
Silent, obscure, in cloudy shadows hidden,
Tortured with hope and fear—
O Lord, have mercy!

The little feet that once with sweet caressing
The mother fondled, feet of her only son,
Through what red sea of slaughter are they pressing
Beneath an alien sun?
O Lord, have mercy!

In night illumed alone by the scarlet luster
That lights the valley of death from while to while,
We hear the winds of winter rage and bluster
Around our lonely isle—
O Lord, have mercy!

On us, who grudge not that which we are giving,
Flesh of our flesh, life of our very life,
Thou, who art Lord both of the dead and living,
On mother, daughter, wife—
O Lord, have mercy!

Have You a Piano that You do not Use?

Is the piano in your home a musical instrument, and do you enjoy it as such, or does it remain unused for months at a time and become practically nothing more than an article of furniture.

The Pianola

Is ringing into use thousands of pianos that have been silent for many years.

It is bringing music into homes where it has long been a stranger.

It is making players of people who, lacking musical training, had never expected to experience the pleasure of producing music for themselves.

It is increasing the repertoire of amateur and professional pianists by making the entire literature of the piano instantly available without study and without practice.

The Pianola looks like a small cabinet. It has small felt-covered fingers that rest on the keys of the piano and, operated by pneumatic power, strike the keys with a pliant, yielding and remarkably sympathetic touch that is almost identical with that of the human fingers.

When not in use the Pianola may be easily detached from the piano and moved to another part of the room.

The Pianola can be used in connection with any Grand or Upright piano, and does not in any way mar or disfigure the instrument. It can be easily and quickly adjusted by any one.

The action of the Pianola is so simple that even a child can readily learn to play it; at the same time it is capable of so much expression that its greatest admirers are those who best understand and appreciate good music.

Price $250 Upward.

The Pianola can be bought by monthly payments. Our instruments are gladly shown to the merely curious as well as to intending purchasers.

Kohler & Chase, Sole Agents.

26, 28 and 30 O'FARRELL STREET.

Meditations of a Matron.

IT is a curious custom, but one that I have always adhered to, my dear Diary, to be near town about the Fourth of July. I had to come up from Del Monte on Tuesday because I wished to spend a few days with the Hopkins' in Menlo Park. I love their place, and should have liked to spend the whole week there, but I had innumerable things which I felt needed attention. There is so much responsibility connected with matrimony that one really is not ever absolutely free to do as one likes. For instance, Mama thinks it would look very badly were I to let Robert remain in town while I finished my visit at the Hopkins'. The girls wanted me to remain so much. Edith McBean and Theresa Morgan were there and we were having jolly times. Suddenly Mama telephoned me some advice. Of course I returned by the next train, and then Robert and I went to San Rafael. On my way to town I stopped over at Burlingame to have luncheon at the Club. I walked over the Links with Alice Hoffman. She is going in for the Tournament for the Poniatowski cup. She and Mrs. Bowers are working very hard. The Burlingame Links are exceedingly flat, and I think dfficult, for you cannot guage the distances there so well as at Monterey. How I do love that place! I miss the Bay, the beautiful trees and gardens and the hotel, but I shall return they as soon as I can. There were very few people at the Burlingame Club House for luncheon. It is curious, but the atmosphere down there seems to have a tendency to make the people self-conscious. It is perceptible even amongst the men. They never are really cordial. Perhaps it is the climate—one must always blame something. The same people at any other place on earth are very nice indeed. There are any number of smart traps down there. It is remarkable the difference between the horses in San Mateo County and at San Rafael. I came to the Hotel on Thursday and found the people quite 'cliquey.' There are but few men, the Brays from St. Louis, Mr. West from Denver, and Ed. Greenway. Golf is the order of the day. All the girls wear red coats and play all the morning. They get up small informal luncheons mostly at the Golf Club. For dinner Pastori's is quite popular. The Bucklees gave a dinner on Thursday evening out there. Friday night Robert and I went to one in the new private dining room at the hotel given by Ed. Greenway. It is a red room, and I think a tremendous acquisition to the hotel. Mrs. Ben. Oxnard was the guest of honor. She is a pretty little woman with a most fascinating Southern accent. A Mrs. Adams, a Baltimore woman, is also at the hotel. Her husband is in the Navy. She has a really true Baltimore accent, which has won Mama's heart. "Maryland, my Maryland!" is Mama's favorite song. The Boardmans have a house in the town and entertain quite a good deal. Caro Crockett and Genevieve Carolan have been staying there this last week. The Boardman boys are very popular, so is Lawrence Scott. He is staying at the hotel, and has a fascinating skelton golf cart. I should like to have one though I have ridden in more comfortable affairs.

The tennis tournament brought over a good many people. There was some capital playing, too. Robert spent all day watching the game while I went to the Golf Links with Edith McBean. She is playing a good game, but I think I shall surpass her soon. My 'form' is quite remarkable, Mr. Smith the teacher out there says.

The Caseys gave a dinner at the Golf Club on Sunday evening.

Saturday I went to town to see Flora Dean and Walter Magee married. It was such a nice wedding. Flora wore no veil. You know she is one of the most independent of girls. Robert was charmed with her. I never saw a girl who has more friends amongst the older people. You would never have known it was her wedding day; she was as calm and collected as any of the rest of us. She looked beautiful in her white gown and received gorgeous presents. There were not many friends present for it was a quiet affair. Helen Wagner, Leontine Blakeman, Therese Morgan, Gladys Merril and her sister Ethel were at the bride's side. The Hush girls were there and I am sorry to say poor Florence has been laid up with an accident to her knee. Walter and Flora left by the afternoon's boat for a trip to the Orient.

Edith Stubbs is just getting in cups. All the girls are so fond of her, and so delighted at her engagement to Harry Parker that she spends all her time accepting congratulations Harry left here a few years ago and has done so well all his friends feel very proud of him. Edith made her debut this year and has always been very popular. Mama thinks the Stubbs girls are some of the most attractive in town. They are all well educated and most musical. I wish Harry and Edith were not to live in Chicago. Now, Diary dear, I think I've told you all the news of the week—all, anyway, that I can remember.

MRS. CRICKET.

An announcement of more than a little interest is that of the engagement of Miss Jean Mary Hush of Etnemere, Fruitvale, to Mr. Frank Richardson Wells of Vermont. Miss Hush, who is an exceptionally beautiful girl and an amateur violinist of talent, is the third daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Valentine G. Hush. Mr. Wells comes of one of the most prominent families in Vermont, is a son of Major-General William Wells and is extensively interested in railroads and manufacturing. The exact date of the wedding is not yet set, but it will probably occur at Etnemere in the Fall.

Miss Mary Louise Harrison, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Greer Harrison, was married June 18th, to Mr. George Britten Walker, at Christ Church, Brondesbury, London.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and, therefore, requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address,

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Props., Toledo, O.

So'd by Druggists, 75c.
Hall's Family Pills are the best.

A fellow once said, "I want some whiskey, and I want it bad;" so they didn't give him Jesse Moore.

The decline of the use of classical quotation in legislative bodies may be traced to the case of Edward Everett, who once concluded a stately speech in Congress with a long, sonorous and superbly modulated citation of a passage from Tacitus, and then took his seat. No sooner was he through than up sprang a burly member from what was then a frontier state of the West. He had once been an Indian agent, and no sooner was he on his legs than he began to pour out a vehement harangue in Choctaw. After awhile the speaker called him to order. "I don't see why my freedom of speech should be abridged," he cried. "You let the gentleman from Massachusetts run on, and I didn't understand the first word of his lingo any better than he does mine." The scene was described as very comical, but it struck the death knell of further classical quotations in a Congress that had not the ray of an idea what the unintelligible lingo of Cicero and Tacitus was driving at.—Boston Herald.

Two Toilers.

Behold him pass through tranquil fields,
While twilight shadows round him lie;
Though bowed and burdened, yet he yields
Grace to yon gracious sky.

The grace of simple tasks well done,
That regal human grace is his;
Slow steps he home at set of sun,
Nor knows how great he is.

Beside him goes his little lass
Singing, nor deems the day too long;
She is one of those wise souls who pass
Straightway from toil to song.

HAMISH HENDRY

The Orignal Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a riva and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

MOORE' POISON OAK REMEDY
Cures Poison Oak and All Skin Diseases. Sold by All Druggists.

HOTEL VENDOME.

At San Jose is one of Central California's most beautiful hostelries. In the midst of its own twelve-acre park; two blocks from the railroad station where almost hourly trains connect with the outside; the starting point for Lick Observatory; the center of a greater number and variety of attractions than any other place on the Coast; furnished finely, graded and watered roads for driving and cycling lead in every direction; with over 250 elegantly furnished rooms, and suites with bath and toilet; perfect in appointment, service and all the accessories of comfort, and one of the most attractive features of San Jose, the metropolis of the world renowned Santa Clara Valley.

GEO. P. SNELL,
Manager

NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned has, by order of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of California, been appoined assignee in bankruptcy of Prosley C. Hyman in the place and stead of Henry C. Hyde, the former assignee, deceased.

Dated June 27th, 1900.

FRANK L. OWEN, Assignee.

DUNCAN SPRINGS HOPLAND Mendocino Co.

Two miles from railroad station; 101 miles from San Francisco; enequalled soda and magnesia springs; hospitable management; first-class table; hard-finished hotel; picturesque site and surroundings; two trains daily; long-distance telephone; terms $10 to $12 per week; housekepping cottages $15 to $20 per month. Waters bottled by W. H. Bone, 605-607 Merchant street, S. F. Through fare $3 80 Send for circulars. Address O. HOWELL.

Brushes for barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bath-houses billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen tar roofers tanners, tailors etc.

BUCHANAN BROS., Brush Mfrs.

TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO STREET

573-579 Market Street, San Francisco | R. H. PEASE, President and Manager. | 73 and 75 First Street, Portland, Ore.

MONTROSE BICYCLE SENT FREE

on approval to your address WITHOUT A CENT IN ADVANCE. SEND US YOUR ORDER, state whether you wish lady's or man's wheel; give color, height of frame and gear wanted and WE WILL SHIP THE WHEEL C. O. D. on approval, allowing you to uncrate and examine it fully before you accept it. If it is not all and more than we claim for it, and a better wheel than you can get for any where near the price from any one else, refuse it and we will pay all express charges ourselves. The "MONTROSE" Bicycle at our Special Agent's sample price of $16.50 is the greatest bargain in a bicycle ever offered. We guarantee it equal to any $40 wheel on the market, and you need not accept it nor pay a cent if you do not find it as we represent. We are EXCLUSIVE BICYCLE MANUFACTURERS and take this method of quickly introducing our 1900 MODELS. This offer of a sample wheel at this low price is made to secure a RIDER AGENT in each town to represent us and take orders. Our agents make money fast.

SPECIFICATIONS. Shelby seamless tubing with forged connections, flush joints, improved expander device to fasten seat post and handle bar; Royal Arch crown; the celebrated Mavis hubs and hanger—the easiest running known; Record "A" tires, the best and one of the most expensive tires on the market. The genuine $4 Mesinger Hygienic saddle; pedals, tools and accessories the best obtainable. Enameled in black, maroon or coach green, highly finished and ornamented; special finished nickeling on all bright parts. We thoroughly test every piece of material that goes into this machine. Our binding year's guarantee bond with each bicycle.

FREE to any one sending the $16.50 cash in full with order we will send free a genuine Burdick 10,000 mile barrel pattern cyclometer; or a high grade floor pump. Your money all back if you are not perfectly satisfied.

CHEAP WHEELS. We do not manufacture the cheap department store kind of wheels, such as many new concerns and big supply houses advertise and sell as high grade. We can furnish them however, at $5 to $7 stripped; or $9.75 to $12.50 complete. We do not guarantee nor recommend them. BEFORE ORDERING a bicycle of any one else, no matter who or how cheap, write us and let us tell you how much we can save you on the same machine.

If you are UNABLE to BUY a wheel we can assist you to EARN A BICYCLE by distributing catalogues for us a few days. We need one person in each town for this purpose. We have several hundred SECOND HAND WHEELS taken in trade which we will close out at $3 to $10 each; also some shopworn samples and '99 models very cheap. Send for Bargain List. OUR RELIABILITY is unquestioned. We refer to any bank or business house in Chicago, or any express or railroad company. We will send you letters of reference direct from the largest banks in Chicago if you wish it.

SEND YOUR ORDER today. This low price and these special terms of shipment without deposit will be withdrawn very soon. ☞ Give name of this paper.

J. L. MEAD CYCLE COMPANY, Chicago, Ill.

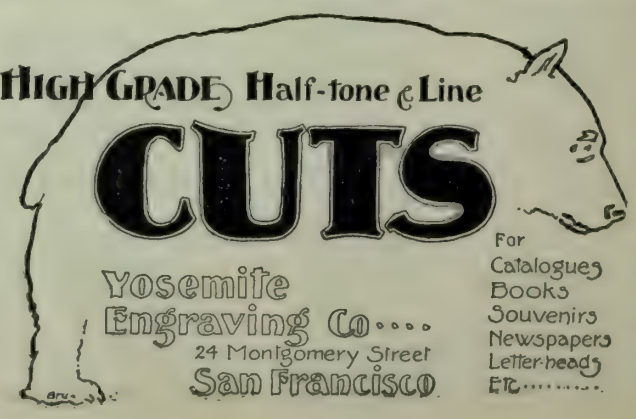
We Make the Cuts in this Paper.



The Lady and the Cowboy.

SHE was the prettiest of the pretty girls in the box and they were all stunning young women, the chaperon in the tan box coat being one of the spring's brides and this her first appearance as a duenna. The other girl was the prettiest girl's sister—not yet out. But as Buster Halligan, one of the crack cowboys and bronco rid rs, remarked to Strike-Plenty, the dude Indian, they were three queens and no mistake.

The prettiest girl had a touzle of tawny hair fluffed out over her ears and a gray felt sombrero would about with white silk pushed down over her two wicked looking topaz eyes. She was strictly up to date. She had a foot-round violet bouquet in her lap from which she selected blossoms that she ate liesurely. The two men in the background, the brigegroom and one of his urshers, were of the handsomest athletic, well dressed type that an artist has made famous. Their frock coats were ornamented with hyacinth bouquets. Their gloves were gray castor. Occasional glimpses of their waistcoats suggested Regent street. Their voices drawled musically when they spoke.

The Garden was packed to the roof and there were many children, for it was a Saturday matinee. As the great cavalcade of rough riders, Indians, cowboys, Mexicans, Cossacks and soldiers circled round the ring the hundreds of hoofs making musical thunder, the people rose and shrieked and yelled and waved their handkerchiefs like mad.

The prettiest girl shrank back a little as they thundered by, the flying feet of the horses sending up bits of earth into the box. The stolid painted faces of the Indians turned toward her with horrible grins as they saw the prettiest girl. They saluted her with wild incoherent cries and whoops. On came the cowboys riding like statutes. Among them on a splendid wild-eyed horse was one looked like a god or a devil. His felt hat was jauntily curved over his dark, finely featured face. His shirt, opened at the throat, showed a neck of bronze bound by a scarlet silk handkerchief, the ends flying. The sleeves of his blue shirt were held in place above the elbows by red garters with horseshoe buckles of gold, evidently a trophy. His eyes looked at the prettiest girl admiringly, insolently, hungrily, insultingly. His lips parted in a smile, showing white even teeth. He ignored the presence of the men in the box but he let his eyes pass approvingly over the other girls, then back to the face of the prettiest girl. As he rode by the girls in the box laughed.

"Tottie has another mash," said the bridegroom.

"I'd like to punch his head!" said the other man with a half laugh.

The prettiest girl looked up at him smiling as a girl goes at a man she knows is in love with her.

"Why, he'd shoot you, Jack. He's a cowboy," she said. And she turned back to the ring her eyes following the scarlet handkerchief.

A voice bellowed above their heads: "The next feature on the programme will be a race between an American cowboy, a Cossack and a Filipino!"

The canvas at the back of the garden parted and the contestants came through. The red silk handkerchief shone out like the shirt of a cockey. The band began a quick tune and off started the three horses. Round the ring three times they swept close under the rail that guarded the boxes and the people shouted their admiration of the cowboy who was holding back his horse for a final grandstand play. With the last round he loosened his taut rein and like a shot from a gun his horse flashed out ahead of the others and swept under the smile of the prettiest girl, he turning back over his shoulder with his glance at her face.

"Suppose you sit back a bit?" said the man who was behind her. "That fellow's altogether too fresh!"

"It's only fun," said the prettiest girl. "Don't be grumpy, Jack. He is such a good-looking chap; and can't he ride, though!"

"I think Tottie would flirt with one of the Indians if he encouraged her," said the prettiest girl's sister. "Let us be glad that it isn't worse."

"It's lovely," said the prettiest girl, "to look at these fellows and realize that they are afraid of nothing. They are like kings, fearless, wild, strong, splendid!"

She clasped her hands over her violets impulsively. The two men looked at each other and smiled.

They were leading the bucking broncos into the ring and again the red handkerchiefed man entered with others on horseback and rode slowly toward the animal clowns of the of the show.

"That chap seems lo be in everything," said the bridegroom

"That's because he's so clever," said the prettiest girl with an air of proprietorship.

"He feeds the horses, too, I suppose, when the show is over," said the man who leaned on her chair.

"That's a nice thing to say," said the prettiest girl. "Why, he's one of the stars; probably a college man who has chosen to live that life. I've often read about them."

The man with the red handkerchief looked now and then toward the box of the prettiest girl. He had the same smile in his eyes. He noted that the faces of the men had taken on an annoyed expression and also the flush across the cheek of the girl. He was acting at her, conscious only of her apparently. Across the Garden one of those magnetic currents was making their souls known to each other.

His signal came and he went up to a horse that had its forelegs braced against the rail. Two men held its head. The cowboy went through the usual antics trying to mount it and the animal viciously resisted. It was the worst of the lot. Suddenly with a wild yell he jumped upon its back. His hat flew back in the ring and down the centre of the Garden he came laughing with his hands gripping the tight bridle of the rocking, jumping animal he rode.

Suddenly the horse gave a wild swerve toward the side of the Garden where the prettiest girl sat leaning far over the rail. The animal raised itself on its forelegs almost as though it were about to stand on its head in its efforts to unseat the rider. The prettiest girl half rose with a look of horror in her eyes and as she did so her bunch of violets fell over the rail into the ring. The cowboy saw it and smiled. Loosening one of his hands from the neck of his dancing horse he swung himself out of the saddle, keeping his legs clasped in some way about the animal and steering it, snorting and bucking to the spot where the flowers lay. He picked them dextrously from the ground and threw them gracefully into the lap of the prettiest girl.

"Well done! by George!" said the bridegroom.

"It's next thing to being in the show," said the prettiest girl's sister, "I think Tottie is acting horrid."

"I haven't done anything!" said the prettiest girl. There were tears very near her eyes for she saw displeasure in the eyes of the chaperon and the other man. "I didn't mean to let them fall," she said

The cowboy did not appear during the next few acts—feats of markmanship and tumbling in the ring. There was a silence in the box where the prettiest girl sat with her friends. She had pouted her lips defiantly. She was filled with triumph.

Jack was mad, it was true, but he'd get over it. He usually did.

The grand finale had been announced. The entire company of riders were entering the ring and they advanced riding more slowly than before in time to the music. It was possible now to see the paint gleaming on the bodies of the Indians and the smears about their eyes and noses. On came the cowboys. The man in the box with the prettiest girl tried to get her to turn out of the box entrance before her admirer came nearer. He saw what they were doing and leaned out of his saddle with a gesture that was almost a signal. The man beside the prettiest girl took her elbow firmly and tried again to make her turn but she threw his hand off impatiently. As the cowboy passed the box he raised his sombrero gallantly and as he replaced it, a small folded white paper traveled through the air and fell on the floor of the box of the prettiest girl. She reached for it confusedly.

"Pardon me," said the man at her side as he handed it to her.

She laughed nervously as she opened it. "That's all it is," she said, displaying it defiantly.

It was an envelope addressed: "Mr. Will Harper, Madison Square Garden, Wild West Show."

The party moved toward the entrance. There was an ominous stillness among the women. The bridegroom nudged his bride. His friend signalled a hansom cab at the door.

"Will you excuse me?" he said, lifting his hat. "I have an engagement."

The women bowed. All but the prettiest girl. She climbed in, followed by her sister. The bride showed all her teeth in a smile and moved away with her husband. She said she would never go out again in a party with that girl; that she acted disgracefully and she hoped that Jack would break the engagement.

The prettiest girl's sister said: "I intend to tell mamma just how you acted this afternoon. Jack is angry and he is perfectly right. It was too common of you to act that way and after his sending you that beautiful bunch of violets. You ought to be ashamed of yourself!"

The prettiest girl calmly threw the violets out of the carriage. Then she raised the roof door and said distinctly: "Driver—please drive slowly about by the stage entrance!" The prettiest girl's sister gasped as though for breath.

There was a crowd of small boys about the door. A couple of broughams waited. Men were passing in and out. There were many loiterers. Up to the door they saw Jack walk and hand a card to the man. The cab stopped suddenly in answer to the prettiest girl's signal.

"He'll kill him!" she said. "He'll kill him!"

There was a pause. The cowboy came to the door. He still wore his red handkerchief and his silk garters. Jack spoke to him. The cowboy's smile had faded. He looked pityingly at the young man with the frock coat, silk hat and hyacinth bouquet. He put up his hands threateningly. The crowd of boys in the street yelled with laughter. The cowpuncher was going to whip the dude right there in the street. Suddenly a remarkable thing happened.

The dude seized the cowboy by the back of the neck, lifted him off his feet with a suddenness and an agility that surprised even the cowboy, shook him several times so violently that his teeth rattled, cuffed him over both ears soundly, and then threw him at the feet of the astonished doorman, while the boys on the curb shouted their delight, disillusioned though they were.

Then the dude straightened his hat, dusted his gloved hands together and walked around the corner toward Broadway. He did not see the hansom nor hear the prettiest girl say: "Drive back to the entrance. I just lost some violets."—N. Y. Sun.

For family use Jesse Moore "AA" whiskey is a prime favorite, and in thousands of homes it is always on the buffet.

When that tired feeling comes along, sidetrack it with Jesse Moore "AA"—the best whiskey in the land.

Realizing how large a number of our readers at the present time, are interested in and desirous of obtaining the very best of tonsorial work, it is a pleasure to write of an establishment that is perfect.

The certainty of absolute cleanliness and comfort at the Sanitary shaving, shampooing, hair-cutting, and bathing Parlors in the California Hotel, Bush Street, near Kearny, since Louis Frick became Manager is worth a more than passing notice.

All tools and articles used upon and by customers are thoroughly sterilized daily by the use of a Lilly Patent, Formaldehyde Sterilizer, rendering disease by contagion impossible. The perfumes and powders used are the finest that are imported, and a trial will cause you to send our cup and outfit there.

The Pianola is bringing into use thousands of pianos that have been silent for years. Call and see it at Kohler & Chase, 26 and 30 O'Farrell street. Sole agents.

Don't drink the first thing the bartender offers. Call for Jesse Moore "AA" whiskey and insist on getting it.

BUYERS' GUIDE

SAN FRANCISCO.

RELIABLE BUSINESS HOUSES.

City or Country Orders promptly filled. Catalogues and Price Lists sent on application. Correspondence solicited.

Mention The Wave.

ATTORNEYS AT LAW.

MILTON J. GREEN, Attorney at Law. Referee in Bankruptcy in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Office room 94, Chronicle bldg.

A. K. DAGGETT, Drawing of deeds and all legal papers a specialty. Notary Public, 14 Montgomery St., S. F. Telephone, 305.

DENTIST.

DR. C. W. DECKER, Dentist, 806 Market Street, Phelan Building.

HOMŒOPATHIC REMEDIES

WESTERN HOMŒOPATHIC PHARMACY—139 Powell St. S. F. W.W. Stocker. Tel. Bush 23.

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.

ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU, Main Office 510 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Dealers in all kinds of Newspaper Information. Advance Reports on all Contract Work. Phone Main 1042.

RESTAURANT.

POODLE DOG RESTAURANT, northeast corner of Eddy and Mason streets. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone main 429. Blanco & Brun, Proprietors.

PRETTY WORK

NICE PRESS COPIES

Use Smith Premier Type-Writer

The telegraph department of the Southern Pacific Co. dispensed with all other makes and now use the SMITH PREMIER EXCLUSIVELY.

Also more than 200 banks use the

SMITH PREMIER Type-Writer

We Rent New Typewriters
Art Catalogue

L. & M. ALEXANDER & CO.

110 Montgomery St., S. F.

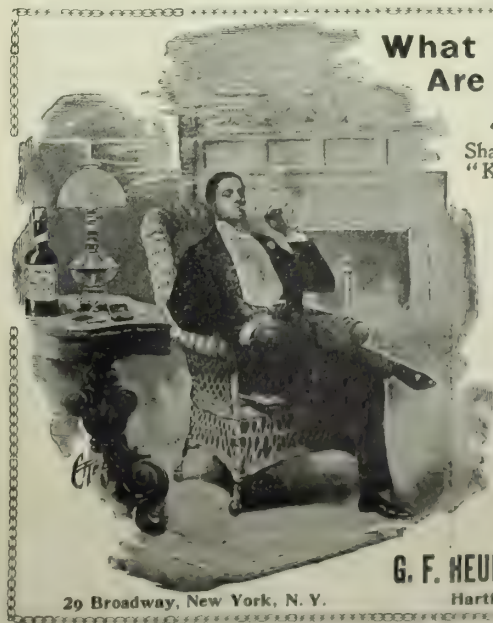
Branches: Portland, Seattle, Los Angeles.

A Toilet Necessity.

WAKELEE'S COLD CREAM of Roses.

Made with pure Almond Oil and Distilled Water of Roses.

What Are Club Cocktails?



"A MODERN ECSTASY" is a Shakespearian definition for a "Cocktail." "Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings."

Wherever good livers are found, wherever conviviality exists, even to the most remote corners of the earth, the "CLUB COCKTAIL" reigns supreme as a fashionable drink.

The "CLUB COCKTAILS" never vary; they are always the same. The secret of their perfect blend is that they are kept six months before being drawn off and bottled.

"Cocktails" that are served over the bar do not contain these indispensable qualities.

Seven Varieties: Manhattan, Martini, Vermouth, Holland Gin, York, Tom Gin, Whisky.

For sale by all first class dealers.

G. F. HEUBLEIN & BRO., Sole Proprietors.

29 Broadway, New York, N. Y. Hartford, Conn. London.

PACIFIC COAST AGENTS

SHERWOOD & SHERWOOD,

Los Angeles San Francisco Portland

MUSEMENTS

Orpheum

Smith and Fuller; Stella Mahew; Barrere and. Jules; The Four Cohans; Clayton, White and Marie Stuart, assisted by Miss Eva Randolph; Quaker City Quartette; Todd-Judge Family; Biograph.

Reserved Seats 25c.; Balcony 10c.; Opera Chairs and Box Seats 50c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.

Columbia Theatre

BEGINNING MONDAY NIGHT, JULY 9th.
Thiid week Charles Frohman presents
HENRY MILLER
and a special company
First week 6 nights, matinees Wed. and Sat.
Sydney Grundy's brilliant comedy of manners

A Marriage of Convenience

With its picturesque costumes of the Louis XIV period.

July 16.—"The Liars."
July 19–First Burton Holmes Lecture matinee

California THE POPULAR HOUSE

H. FRIEDLANDER & Co., Lessees and Managers. [Tele. Main 1731

Week Commencing Sunday Night, July 8th. Matinees Saturday. Special Hoyt's Political Satire

A CONTENTFD WOMAN

Presented with the full strength of
DUNNE & RYLEY'S ALL STAR CAST.
Appearance of Miss Louise Gunning, and Miss Norma Whally.
Our Never Changing Popular Prices.
Next.—At Gay Coney Island.

Alcazar Theatre.

BELASCO & THALL, Managers. Phone 254

Week of July 8th.
The hit of the year, every night at 8:15.

FLORENCE ROBERTS

Assisted by White Whittlesey in a modern production of

CAMILLE

Matinees Saturday only.
Alcazar Prices, 15c, 25c, 35c, 50c.

HAVE YOU EVER THOUGHT

WHAT A GAS RANGE WILL DO?

It will do everything any other cooking apparatus will do, but it will do it BETTER QUICKER, EASIER and CHEAPER!

IT WILL DO AWAY WITH

Dirt, Worry and Ashes
Your Kitchen will be Clean,
Your working hours shorter.
Your Food will be better Cooked,
Your Life Prolonged, and
Your Happiness assured.

STOVE DEPARTMENT,
415 POST ST., SAN FRANCISCO

IF YOU WANT THE
BEST COAL OIL.
BUY

AT THE THEATERS

IT was a good play and a good company at the Columbia last w ek; this sen-night it is a good company still, but a passing dull play. "The Tree of Knowledge" is a British drama on a "problem" subject and of the repressed class. Nobody does anything much—only twice, when one gentleman strikes another and goes out and makes an attempt to choke his friend's wife. The characters stand around and talk matters over and express to the audience how thoroughly they are repressing their feelings. The curtains on the acts fall, all five of them, on somebody walking off the stage or somebody standing still and thinking it over. Such a play needs tremendous power of situation or tremendous cleverness of line to carry it, but "The Tree of Knowledge" has neither. The lines break into half-cleverness now and again, but the situations have been old since the first problem plays. There is one good character, a sort of villain or as near to that type as the washed-out drama ever gets in the cynical rake without honor, played by Frank Worthing. The attempts at humor are equally slow. This element is furnished by one character, a man-of-all work with thievish tendencies. The alleged fun of this personage is of the British sort, sad and strange beyond belief to an American. Yes, 'tis a dull play at least to the barbarian Westerner who loves action.

The actors are a different story. This is the second week of the new Miller company, and I dare to put on record my belief that it is the strongest combination of players which has been seen in the city in all these latter days of jayness. Good as Miller is—and he is at the top of the second class—he hardly shows above his company. Indeed, others have had the best chance so far. Margaret Anglin took and held center stage in "Miss Hobbs," while "The Tree of Knowledge" shows E. J. Morgan to the best advantage. Morgan has risen greatly in the profession since we saw him here last summer, and his growth justifies the rise. His part in Carton's play is that of a self-repressed young Englishman suffering from continual stress of emotion. It takes an actor that is an actor to avoid overdoing this thing on the one hand and making it monotonous on the other. Morgan proves himself by doing neither. Next to him, Mrs. Whiffen shines in one of those "mother" parts in which she has no equal. No other actress possesses to such degree as she the power of expressing a lovable personality. Sadie Martinot playing an adventuress with an ugly make-up is another who stands out above the crowd.

* *

When "Children of the Ghetto" first came out in New York, Israel Zangwill the critics and the public had a rather warm controversy over its merits. Zangwill, of course, was on the side of his own show, the critics were almost a unit against it, and the public vascillated between. Zangwill, in his widely-distributed circulars, charged a combination of dramatic critics against him, with a few side-thrusts at the mythical syndicate. The play is out here now for San Francisco to judge, and one must stand by his metier to declare that the critics were right. "Children of Ghetto" is one of those plays whose only excuse for being is the fact that they are taken from popular novels and are therefore advertised gratis in advance. The theme was never made for dramatic treatment; it is far too slender for anything but a realistic novel, and the resultant play is quite mild and harmless. Why any Jew would object to it, I cannot see. There is a certain local color which comes partly from the costumes and accessories and partly from the introduction of ceremonies and daily observances common among the orthodox Jews. This, I should think, would appeal to one who knows that his ancestors to remote posterity have been nutured in those same forms. The thing is new to dramatic treatment, and one always loves to see the circumstances of his own daily life before him on the stage. Otherwise, the drawing power of the play is a mystery.

Wilton Lackaye in his own part in the original production and Rosabel Morrison in that of Blanche Bates carry away the honors in the acting. The others run the gamut, from good to fair, and down to bad supes in false noses.

Still, the play is at fault more than the company. The Jew, taken for serious representation, is a new form to the stage. Mr. Frawley's company, with good plays suited to their powers, is in for a successful season and should be encouraged, because the stock company plan is the only hope for a good theatrical future in San Francisco.

* *

"A Day and a Night" at the California is not the best of Hoyt's farces by any means, but the performance is interesting nevertheless. Hoyt, as interpreted by Dunne and Ryley's company, is a thread to string together the specialties of the dozen or so of first-class vaudeville people who make up the company. Norma Whalley, the beautiful, Mary Marble, cleverest of soubrettes, the ever popular Matthews and Bulger, pretty Maude Courtney of the rich voice and Louise Gunning with her silvery top notes—these and many others form a strong combination. The situations are not such as would appeal to the moral sense of the Purity League or to the intellect of a professor of English literature, but that is neither here nor there.

* *

Smith and Fuller will present a musical sketch at the Orpheum next week. They are both said to be clever performers; all the instruments used are the inventions of the Smith of the team. Stella Mayhew will present a specialty. She has been seen here before in legitimate roles. Her vaudeville debut is recent and has been remarkably successful. Barrere and Jules are gymnasts, on parallel and horizontal bars. The four Cohans will present another of George Cohan's pieces, "Money to Burn." The picture of the battle of the Upper Tugela is a biograph feature. Retained from this week: Clayton White and Marie Stuart, assisted by Miss Eva Randolph; Quaker City Quartette, and the Todd-Judge Family.

* *

"Carmen," as presented at the Alcazar, measures the height and depth of Florence Roberts' growth as an actress. The last twelve months have developed wonderful power in this talented California artist. She could never have handled such parts as Sapho and Carmen at this time last season. The opera has somewhat spoiled us for the play, but it is an interesting if gloomy one, nevertheless. The performance is made notable by the appearance of Lorena Attwood, an actress of grace and charm, with the Alcazar people. White Whittlesey makes, as usual, a good opposite to Miss Roberts.

* *

Hoyt's clever satire, "A Contented Woman," a play which comes much nearer being a drama than most of the author's farces, will relieve "A Day and a Night," at the California next week. Some new specialties are promised.

* *

The Cohans have another sketch, equally strong with "T e Governor" at the Orpheum this week. They are still the main attraction. White, Stuart and Randolph and the Quaker City Quartette are close up in popular favor.

* *

"A Marriage of Convenience," in which the Miller company made such a success here last year, is next week's bill at the Columbia.

* *

"Camille," the most famous of emotional plays and one of Florence Roberts' best roles succeeds "Carmen at the Alcazar.

$100 Reward $100

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.
Address, F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.
Sold by Druggists, 75c
Hall's Family Pills are the best

Has it ever struck you that you can buy Jesse Moore "AA" whiskey for almost the same price that is paid for ordinary whiskey? You dealer has it.

Wherever there is a piano there should be a pianola. The pianola plays any piano. Any one can play it. Call and see it at Kohler & Chase, 26 and 30 O'Farrell St., sole agents.

Perfection in Champagne.

The celebrated vintage of 1893 of Moet & Chandon White Seal, now being imported into the United States, is perfection, being the product of the choicest grapes. Its selection by connoisseurs is proof of its high quality.

Cramps, Dysentery, Cholera Morbus, Diarrhœa, and, indeed, all bowel complaints quickly relieved by PERRY DAVIS' PAIN-KILLER, a safe, sure, and speedy cure, for all the troubles named. Every reputable druggist keeps a supply. Each bottle has full directions. Avoid substitutes, there is but one Pain-Killer, Perry Davis'. 25c. and 50c.

The choicest club whiskey is Jesse Moore "AA," and in club life it is in great demand.

GERMEA

The Ideal Breakfast Dish

SAN FRANCISCO BANKS

THE BANK OF CALIFORNIA

SAN FRANCISCO

Capital, $2,000,000 Surplus, $1,000,000
Profit and Loss Account January 1st, 1900, $2,321,212
WILLIAM ALVORD ..... President
CHARLES R. BISHOP ..... Vice-President
THOMAS BROWN ..... Cashier
S. PRENTISS SMITH ..... Assistant Cashier
IRVING F. MOULTON ..... Second Assistant Cashier
ALLEN M. CLAY ..... Secretary

CORRESPONDENTS

New York ..... Messrs. Laidlaw & Co. / The Bank of New York, N. B. A.
Baltimore ..... The National Exchange Bank
Boston ..... The Tremont National Bank
Chicago ..... Illinois Trust and Savings Bank / Union National Bank
Philadelphia ..... Philadelphia National Bank
St. Louis ..... Boatmen's Bank
Virginia City, Nev ... Agency of the Bank of California
London ..... Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons
Paris ..... Messrs. De Rothschild Freres
Berlin ..... Direction der Disconto Gesellschaft
China, Japan and East Indies ..... Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China
Australia and New Zealand ..... The Union Bank of Australia, Ltd., and Bank of New Zealand
Letters of Credit issued available in all parts of the world.

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California Street

Guarantee Capital and Surplus $2,238,372 45
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash 1,000,000 00
Deposits July 30, 1900 ..... 28 938 395 12

OFFICERS

President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Second Vice-President, H. HORSTMANN
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann
Ign. Steinhart, Emil Rohte, I. N. Walter,
H. B. Russ, N. Ohlandt, John Lloyd.
General Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow.

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST

Deposits July 1, 1900 ..... $26,952,875
Paid Up Capital 1,000,000
Reserve Fund 218, 93
Contingent Fund 439,668

E. B. POND, Pres. W. C. B. DE FREMERY, Vice-Pres
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier.
R. M. WELCH, Assistant Cashier.

DIRECTORS

Henry F. Allen Robert Watt, Thomas Magee, George C. Boardman, W. C. B. de Fremery, Daniel E. Martin, C O G. Miller, Jacob Barth, E. B. Pond.

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country. Receives deposits. Country remittances may be made in checks payable in San Francisco, Postoffice or Wells, Fargo & Co's Money Orders, or coin by Express, but the responsibility of this bank commences only with the receipt of the money.

No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee. Office Hours: 9 a. m. to 3 p. m. and Saturday evenings, for receipt of deposits only, 6:30 to 8 o'clock.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 POST STREET
Below Kearny Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000
Paid Up Capital, $300,000

JAMES D. PHELAN, President
S. G. MURPHY, Vice-President
JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Presiden
GEORGE A. STORY, Cashier
C. B. HOBSON, Assistant Cashier

DIRECTORS:—James D. Phelan, S G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, Frank J. Sullivan, Robert McElroy, Chas S. Neal and James M. McDonald.

Interest paid on d posits.

Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co or Exchange on City Banks.

When opening accounts, send signature.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.—Gould and Curry Silver Mining Company.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, Cal. Location of works, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 7th day of June, 1900, an assessment (No. 90) of Fifteen (15) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room No 69, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street San Francisco, Cal.

Any stock upon which this assessment shal, remain unpaid on the 10th day of July, 1900, wil be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on TUESDAY, the 31st day of July, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the cost of advertisng and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.
ALFRED K. DURBROW, Secretary.
Office: Room No. 69, Nevada block, No. 309 Montomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

A GLOWING HIGHWAY TO HAPPINESS
.....IS THE ROAD THAT LEADS TO DEL MONTE

Added to the many pleasures afforded by its enchanting surroundings are FINE GOLF LINKS

✻ THIS SEASON'S ✻

HOMES OF PLEASURE

THE PEERLESS CALIFORNIA RESORT

SantaFe Route

OVERLAND EXPRESS

Every day in the year. Pullman Palace and Upholstered Tourist Cars leave for Denver, Kansas City, Chicago and the East. Take Market Street Ferry at 5:30 p. m.

Personally Conducted Tourist Excursions leave three times each week in Pullman Vestibuled Tourist Cars and are exceedingly popular with the traveling public. The principal cities of the East are reached by them and the service in all that counts for comfort and convenience is almost equal to the Palace cars. The cars are finished in mahogany, lightened with Pintsch gas and a Porter is in charge to attend to the wants of passengers. Plenty of clean linen is provided and the beds are very comfortable. A handsome folder, describing this service in detail, may be had for the asking at the Company's Office. 641 Market St.

VALLEY ROAD

Between Stockton, Fresno, Hanford, Visalia Tulare and Bakersfield, furnishes a good local train service.

SAN FRANCISCO TICKET OFFICE,
628 Market Street. Telephone Main 1531

The O. R. & N. Co.

DISPATCH FAST STEAMERS

TO PORTLAND

From Spear-St. Wharf at 10 a.m.

FARE $12 First Class, $8 Second Class — Including Berth and Meals

State of California sails June 2, 12, 22; July 2.
Columbia sails June 7, 17, 27; July 7.

Short Line to Walla Walla, Spokane, Butte, Helena, and all points in the Northwest.
Through tickets to all points East.

R. C. WARD, General Agent, 630 Market St.
GOODALL, PERKINS & CO., Superintendents.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. Moana. for Aurtralia Wednesday July 11, at 8 p.m.

S. S. Australia, for Honolulu only, Wednesday, July 25 at 2 p.m.

Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.
J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf San Francisco.

For Alaskan ports, 11 a. m. June 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, July 5, change to company's steamers at Seattle.

For B. C. and Puget Sound ports 11 a.m. June 5, 10, 15, 20, 25 30, July 5, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, 2 p. m. June 27, 12, 17, 22, 27, July 2, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Newport (Los Angeles) and Way Ports, 9 a. m. June 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28. July 2, and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Harford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, and Redondo (Los Angeles), 11 a.m. June 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 July 4, and every fourth day thereafter.

For Mexican ports, 10 a. m. seventh of each month.

For further information, obtain Company's folder.

The company reserves the right to change steamers sailing dates, and hours of sailing without previous notice.

Ticket Office: 4 New Montgomery St (Palace Hotel)
GOODALL, PERKINS & CO., Gen. Agts.
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

NOTICE OF ASSESSMENT—ANDES SILVER MINING COMPANY.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California Location of works, Virginia City, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 13th day of June 1900, an assessment (No. 51) of five (5) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary at the office of the Company, Room No. 22 Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery street San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 6th day of August, 1900, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Monday, the 27th day of August, 1900, at 1 p. m. o'clock, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.
JOHN W. TWIGGS, Secretary.
Office—Room No. 22 Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

CALIFORNIA BOOKS

A Handsome Series of New and Useful Publications

The Southern Pacific Company has published for free distribution the following books and folders which may be obtained from any Southern Pacific agent, or T. H. Goodman, general passenger agent at San Francisco. If you apply by mail inclose a stamp for each publication.

Resorts and Attractions Along the Coast Line is a handsomely illustrated folder giving a description of the health and pleasure resorts of the coast between San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Shasta Resorts embelished with beautiful halftone engravings, describes the scenic and outing attractions of the vast and wonderful Shasta region, the grandest of pleasure grounds.

California South of Tehachapi tells all about the charms of that remarkably favored semi-trophie garden spot, Southern Pacific.

A Handsome Map of California, complete in detail, reliable, skillfully indexed, and full of information about the State's resources. It is the only publication of its kind conveniently folded for pocket use.

Summer Outings is a 32-page folder devoted to the camping retreats in the Shasta region and Santa Cruz mountains It appeals more directly to that large and growing class of recreation seekers who prefer this popular form of outing.

Pacific Grove is the Chautauqua of the West, and this folder not only describes the pretty place itself, but gives a program of the religious and educational meetings, conventions, schools, etc., to be held there this summer.

Other publications are Lake Tahoe, Geysers and Lake County. Yosemite, Hotel del Monte, Castle Crags, each brimful of information about the places named, and printed in the highest style of the art.

Go and see

T. H. GOODMAN, Gen. Pass. Agt.

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention
A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED

Occidental Hotel

SAN FRANCISCO
WM. B. HOOPER, Manager.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers Medium, Soft and Hard
ALSO
Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide
Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks

Manufactured by Mount Vernon Co. Baltimore.
MURPHY, GRANT & CO Pacific Coast Sole Agents

BAJA CALIFORNIA

Damiana Bitters

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. Send for Circular.

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

TO CHICAGO

IN 3 DAYS

From San Francisco at 10 a. m.

Chicago Union Pacific
AND
Northwestern Line

Double Drawing-Room Sleeping Cars, Buffet Smoking and Library Cars, with barber. Dining Cars—meals a la carte. Daily Tourist Car Service and Personally Conducted Excursions every week from San Francisco at 6 p. m. The best of everything.

R. R. RITCHIE,
General Agent Pacific Coast
617 Market Street (Palace Hotel)
San Francisco, Cal.

Telephone Main 199.
Blake, Moffit & Towne
Dealers in PAPER
55, 57, 59, 61, First St., San Francisco.
Blake, Moffit & Towne, Los Angeles. Blake, McFall Co., Portland, Or.

ELECTRIC

SUPPLIES
CONSTRUCTION
REPAIRS

California Electrical Works
409 MARKET STREET

Old & Valuable Silver

CAN be made to brighten memories of the past, without fear of scratch or blemish, if cleaned with

SILVER ELECTRO-SILICON POLISH

It's as harmless as the flour you eat. It makes old silver new—in brilliancy—and keeps new silver always new.

The proof is yours simply for the asking. Send address on a postal, or 15c. in stamps for box, postpaid. Grocers and druggists sell it.

"SILICON," 30 Cliff St., New York.

Sturtevant House

Broadway and 29th Sts,, New York.

WILLIAM T. BANG, PROP.

American and European Plan.

Don't Borrow a Home!

BUY IT Your rent payments for the borrowed home will do it through the aid of the

CONTINENTAL Building and Loan Ass'n of California

WM. CORBIN, Secretary and Gen. Manager.

Home Office, 222 Sansome St., San Francisco

Irving Institute Select Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies

2126 California Street, San Francisco.

Next season will begin August 6th. Accredited to the Universities. Seminary and Full Conservatory of Music. Primary Department for Children. Carriage will call. For futher information, address he principal. REV. EDWARD B. CHURCH, A. M.

Alfred Cane, Luther A. Teague
Frederick Teague.

Teague, Cane & Teague

DENTISTS.

Claus Spreckels Bldg. Third and Market Sts
hone Main 1459. Sixth Floor, S.F., Cal

Thuringia Insurance Co.

OF ERFURT, GERMANY

Capital, $2,250,000 Assets, $10,984,248

PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT

204-208 Sansome Street, San Francisco

VOSS, CONRAD & CO., General Managers

A. O. LINDSTROM AL. JOHNSON
Phone Main 5178

Sutter Street Hammam

TURKISH AND RUSSIAN BATHS

415 Sutter Street, between Stockton and Powell

Open Day and Night for Gentlemen
For Ladies, from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m.

Eighty-five Fine Sunny Rooms. Elevator Service

THE BRADBURY,

J. A. FERSON, Proprietor.

FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL

N. W. Cor. Polk and California Sts.,

San Francisco, Cal.

Excellent Cuisine References required.
Transient trade solicited. Rates $2.00 and upwards.
Reasonable by the month.

TEL. HYDE 2771

New Stories Re-Told.

x x x

THE SHADOW OF A GREAT NAME.—When Frederick Remington, the artist, appeared the other day in the Grand Central Station in New York, a thin man from Boston who was accompanied by a fat, red-faced man from Chicago caught sight of him. "Why, there is Frederic Remington!" exclaimed the Bostonian. "Where, where?" asked the pork-packer. "That man coming this way. Shall I introduce you?" "Bet your life. No man I'd better like to see." "I had no idea you cared so much for his work." "Care for it! Nothing like it; knocks the spots off of everything else in the line." The man of culture presented the Chicagoan. "Proud to meet you. Remington is a great name with me." "Indeed," said Mr. Remington. "That's right. My wife will be glad I've run across you. She used to be my stenographer; liked your machine mighty well. I never would use any other and if you want a recommend from——" Mr. Remington turned away. When the Bostonian recovered he explained things. "Artist? Oh, Lord! One of them chromo men. I thought he invented the typewriter. Now wouldn't that kill you?"

x

A CAREFUL MAN.—The Rev. Lemuel Coburn, a Denver divine, had just retired with the wife of his bosom. He was sinking into his beauty sleep, when his wife aroused him: "Lemuel—sh—there's a man in the house!" "Oh, lemme alone. Same old man you've had for fifteen years." "Lemuel" she hissed, "it's a burglar. I can hear the silver rattle! Will you go down or shall I?" "Er—you go, my love," yawned the clergyman, "a man of my cloth must be careful with whom he associates."

x

ANCIENT ONES.—The wife of a professional joke-writer had finished cleaning off her husband's desk and putting things to rights before he discovered her. He dropped the volume of sermons in which he had been finding needed relaxation and sprang to his feet. "Good Lord, Martha, have you thrown 'em into the grate?" "Thrown what, Joe?" "My last jokes. Pull 'em out quick." Mrs. Miller sniffed disdainfully. "Pull 'em out yourself. I'm no catspaw to get out your chestnuts for you."

x

RULING INSTINCT.—Ex-Judge Moore of Chicago, organizer of many steel and iron interests, has a great horror of reporters and never allows himself to be interviewed. A reporter hearing that he was about to go to Europe waylaid him in the corridor but could extort nothing. "You wont say that you are going away, Judge?" "I never talk for publication." "How is the iron business now?" "I have nothing to say for publication." The reporter sighed as he stepped into the elevator and lifting his hat politely said, "A fine day, Judge." "Not for publication," was the reserved answer.

x

SHE WENT TO COOKING SCHOOL.—Weary Willie sighed heavily as the man of the house opened the door. He preferred to deal with women. "You are harsh, sir. You have never known what it is to want bread." "Haven't I though? Ain't I suffering for it now? Don't I want bread of all kinds, to say nothing of plain pie and doughnuts? My wife goes to cooking-school and for months I've been nourished on Spanish cream, charlotte-russe and lady-fingers. Bread? Greatest luxury in this house."

x

HER WOMAN'S WAY.—A young wife who was not a new woman but the same old kind had received from her husband a check-book just after their marriage. In a few shopping trips she managed to exhaust the whole deposit and had been formally notified by the bank officials that her account was overdrawn. She replied at once—"Dear Sir—I am surprised that you have no more money in your bank, as I have several more checks in my book. However, I suppose it must be true if you say so. I enclose a check for the amount overdrawn."

WHAT A DREADFUL THING it is to wake up in the night suffering from cholera morbus, and yet cases of this kind are very common. The trouble, however, will never become serious if you keep a bottle of PAIN-KILLER at hand, for it is a remedy that never fails to cure cholera, cramps, diarrhœa or dysentery. Avoid substitutes, there is but one Pain-Killer. Perry Davis'. Price 25c. and 50c.

PALACE HOTEL

The high standard of excellence maintained by this hotel is recognized and appreciated by a fastidious and discriminating clientele who regularly make it their headquarters when visiting San Francisco.

The GRAND HOTEL is operated in conjunction with the Palace to which it is joined by a covered passageway, placing under one management 1400 rooms, more than half of which have baths attached.

AMERICAN PLAN. EUROPEAN PLAN.

Famous FOR ITS Purity!

Seattle U. S. A.

WHEN LEAVING THE CITY PLACE YOUR VALUABLES IN THE

Safe Deposit Vaults

OF THE First National Bank

N. W Corner Bush and Sansome Sts

Office Hours: 8 a. m. to 6 p m.

EVERY POSSIBLE SAFEGUARD TO PROPERTY

REASONABLE RATES
PROMPT ATTENTION

REPSOLD SELECT VINTAGE REGISTERED BRAND

REPSOLD

Select Vintage Wines
For Your Home Dinner

This brand of wine is served at all first class clubs, hotels and restaurants

A. REPSOLD & CO. Office, 416 Pine Street

THE

White Pass and Yukon Route

The Pacific & Arctic Railway and Navigation Co.
British Columbia Yukon Railway Co., British Yukon M, T. & T. Co.
and Canadian Development Company, Ltd.

THROUGH LINE TO DAWSON.

Two first-class trains daily between Skaguay and Bennett, B. C. Ten first-class steamers operating between White Horse and Dawson. Through Telegraph Service Skaguay to Dawson and Intermediate Points.

SKAGUAY IS THE GATEWAY
—TO—
KLONDIKE AND CAPE NOME GOLD FIELDS.

FOR RATES AND PARTICULARS APPLY TO

S. M. IRWIN, Traffic Manager, Skaguay, Alaska, and Seattle, Wash

Phone Main 574

S. P. BROWN, General Agent, 116 Yesler Way, Seattle Was

W. C. ACHI & CO.

Real Estate Brokers

We will buy or sell real estate in any part of the group. We will also buy or sell Stocks in any corporation in the Hawaiian Islands.

Office, 10 West King Street, Honolulu, H. I.

a Perfect Complexion

Strawberry Cold Cream

Made from the pure fruit juice at

GREENBAUM'S

200 POST STREET Corner Grant Ave.

Sent anywhere on receipt of 25 cents.

From Admiral George Dewey:

Mr. George Mayerle, German Expert Optician, 1071½ Market street, San Francisco: Dear Sir—I am still using with much satisfaction the glasses you sent me at Manila; also, the new ones suit my eyes perfectly.
Very truly yours,
George Dewey.

A GRADUATE

George Mayerle

German Expert Optician

Consultation, Examination and advice free.

OPTICIAN HONORED

1071½ Market St.

near Seventh

Telephone Mint 257

German Eye Wate 50 cents.

From General Wm. R. Shafter:

Mr. George Mayerle, San Francisco
Dear Sir—The glasses made by you received yesterday. I have never been better fitted than with this pair.
Very truly yours,
Wm. R. Shafter,
Major-General U. S. V.

The Wave

1900

VOL. XXI. No. 25 SAN FRANCISCO—JULY 14, 1900—SEATTLE PRICE 10 CENTS

Henry E. Huntington, Recently Elected Vice-President of the Southern Pacific Company.

Photo by Arnold Genthe.

is published every Saturday at The Wave Building, 24 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal., and Colman Building, Seattle, Wash.

Entered at the Post Office as second-class matter.

Subscription: Per year, $3.00; six months, $1.75; three months, $1.00. Foreign subscription (countries in postal union) $1 per year additional. Sample copies free.

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

PROPRIETORS

SAN FRANCISCO—July 14, 1900—SEATTLE

CONTENTS

Events Current 2
Editorial Comment 3
The New York Steamer Holocoust—Illustrations 4
The Sereames of China 5
Famous American Cavalry Rides 5
A Perilous Ride 6
H. E. Huntington 6
Things and People, by Boswell Jr 7
Views of the Japanese Navy 8
Views of Hong Kong 9
Meditations of a Matron 10
In Bookdom, by Grace A. Luce 11
Correspondence—London Paris 12
A Bowery Rivalry 13
At the Theatres 13
New Stories Re-told 16

EVENTS CURRENT.

The Situation in Pekin. All this week, the civilized world has been eagerly waiting news of the situation in Pekin, where nearly a thousand whites, including the foreign ministers, are penned up, surrounded by the Boxer hordes. No authentic news has come out yet, but the reports from Chinese sources are a deal more hopeful. At the beginning of the week, the rumors all had it that the foreigners had been massacred to the last soul. The latest reports, however, state that the British legation was still standing on July 5, and had managed to hold out against repeated attacks. It is in the British legation that most of the foreigners are presumabty gathered. These reports, it is only fair to state, come from Chinese sources, and are just as likely to be unreliable as the sensational tales of massacre. The real state of affairs is still mainly a matter of conjecture; anxious Europe must wait. Immediate relief is impossible. Meantime, the political situation within the city is as uncertain as the fate of the ministers and foreigners. When this record closed last week, it was generally believed, since the report came on the authority of the German foreign office, that the deposed Emperor Kwang Su was poisoned, that the Empress Dowager was insane, and that Prince Tuan had virtually usurped the throne. Now, the reports tell of the Dowager in power. This is strengthened by the fact that her name is affixed to an edict dated June 30, recommending the suppression of the Boxers and the protection of foreigners. The tone of document means nothing, because her policy has always been the furtherance of trouble and the appearance of friendliness, but the general promulgation of her edicts at a date only a fortnight old shows that she was holding power several days after Pekin closed in on the foreigners. It is also asserted that Prince Chun, a brother of Tuan, is opposing the Boxers and protecting the foreigners with part of the army. Any one of these reports may or may not be true. The natural Chinese aptitude for lies and concealment and the free hand given to sensational correspondents make this passage in history an obscure one. The truth will never be known until Pekin is taken.

The Military Feature of the Chinese Crisis. The military phase of the situation goes to confirm the fear that the Chinese will make stiff resistance. When Tien-Tsin was taken and Seymour relieved, the two forces fell back on that point, which was made a sort of base for future operations. On July 3d, however, the large Chinese forces who had been swarming about the place made a determined attack with about 65,000 men, and a number of modern guns. They showed excellent gunpractice, disabling several of the pieces mounted by the 14,000 allies who held the place. Indeed, so fierce was the attack that the allied troops would probably have been forced to abandon the town had it not been for the arrival of naval guns from the British ship Terrible—they were the same guns which saved Ladysmith, by the way,—and the coming of a heavy rainstorm, which delayed the Chinese until the Naval guns could be put in position. The loss of the allies is not definitely known, but it was heavy. The relief of Pekin, impossible until an army of passable strength is landed, may possibly be delayed until after the rainy season, now just setting in. The reported massacre of the Pekin foreigners brought the Powers to their senses as regarded their hold upon Japan. That country is closest at hand, has a thoroughly drilled army with an available strength of a half million, and could have relieved Pekin at once had permission been granted. Moreover, the Japanese would have been only too happy to finish the work left over from the Chinese War of 1894. Apparently, Japan will be permitted to go ahead, for 63,000 troops are being gathered as the nucleus of an army of invasion. It is believed that this is done under some definite agreement as to division of spoils when the end comes. Our own share in the coming war is problematical. Part of the Sixth Cavalry is on the way, the whole Ninth Infantry, forwarded from Manila, is due at Taku, and two more regiments are to follow as soon as possible. The other Powers, especially Germany, are to place large forces in the field.

The Democratic Nominations. The National Democratic party has fixed up its differences and compromised on both candidates and issues. W. J. Bryan, the apostle of Free Silver is its nominee for President for the campaign of 1900, with Addai Stevenson of Illinois, a representative of the old-time Cleveland Democracy, as his vice-presidential running-mate. The platform adopted recognizes the free silver issue, being in this concession to Bryan and his wing of the party, but compromises by giving it a secondary place and making Imperialism the dominant issue. The strength of this combination is political rather than popular. It binds together the leaders of both factions, but the inconsistency of the silver compromise, the fact that the Eastern leaders were openly against it in committee, and the further fact that the silver issue will surely be cried from the housetops in the West and slurred over in the East—all this is a weak spot to Republican attacks. Bryan's nomination was, of course, only a formality. Oldham of Nebraska, the mouthpiece of the Democratic leader, placed his name before the Convention and White of California seconded it. The nomination by acclamation was the occasion of a burst of enthusiasm as wild as that which marked the Nebraskan's entry into national politics at Chicago four years ago. This was on July 5th. The vice-presidential situation began to take an unexpected turn from that time forth. The silver compromise, the placing of anti imperialism to the fore and the general harmonizing of the party made it certain that second place would go to an Eastern man, representing those to whom anti-imperialism is vital, as the first place had already gone o a Western man and a free silver advocate. This meant death for the hopes of Towne, the Populist nominee, and the other westerners. Hill of New York was probably the logical candidate and might have won, but he was persistent and seemingly sincere in his refusals. He was evidently trying to advance the chances of Danforth of his own state, a candidate with small recommendations save party loyalty and the fact that he came from New York. Under these circumstances, Stevenson, who had already served a term as vice-president and represented the whole Conservative Democracy rather than one state, gained strength rapidly and finally swept the Convention, being finally chosen by acclamation. For the first time in our history, both places on both tickets have been a unanimous choice before the Conventions. The Silver Republicans, although rather objecting to Stevenson, have indorsed the Democratic ticket, and it seems at this date as though Towne would withdraw his Populistic Vice-Presidential nomination making the ticket a unanimous choice for the free silver parties.

The Democratic Candidates. The two leaders of the present Democratic ticket both began life as lawyers and drifted logically into politics. William Jennings Bryan was born of Virginia stock at Salem, Illinois, on March 19, 1860. He entered Illinois College at the age of seventeen, graduating in 1881. He then studied law at Union College, Chicago, and in the office of Lyman Trumbull, and on admission to the bar began practice at Jacksonville, Illinois. There a year later he married Mary E. Baird, of Perry County. In 1887 they removed to Lincoln, Nebraska. Mr. Bryan made his first reputation as a political orator in the campaign of 1888, and became widely known as an advocate of a "tariff for revenue only." In 1890 he was elected to Congress on a platform written by himself. In the House he attracted national attention by his speech in the debate on the "Wilson Bill." He was re-elected in 1892, but declined a third nomination in 1894 to run for the United States Senate, but failed of election. In 1896 Mr. Bryan was a delegate from Nebraska to the National Democratic Convention at Chicago, where a timely and brilliant speech on the free silver question caused his nomination for President. Adlai Ewing Stevenson was born in Christian County, Kentucky, on October 23, 1835. After graduating at Center College, Danville, Kentucky, he removed with his father to Bloomington, Illinois, where he studied law and was admitted to the bar. In 1859 he settled at Metamora, where he practiced his profession for the next ten years. In 1864 he entered national politics as Presidential Elector on the McClellan ticket, and canvassed the State. In 1874 he was nominated by the Democrats for Congress, and was elected over a strong opponent. He was beaten for re-election, but in 1878 was again elected. Mr. Stevenson was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention of 1884, and after the election of Mr. Cleveland was appointed First Assistant Postmaster General. In 1892 he attended the National Democratic Convention as delegate-at-large from Illinois, when he was named for Vice President on the ticket with Mr. Cleveland. He was elected, and served through the term. Mr. Stevenson married in 1866 a daughter of Dr. W. Green, President of Center College, Kentucky. They have one son and three daughters, all living.

The Democratic Platform. The main, dominant plank in the Democratic platform is imperialism. Discussion of this issue begins the document takes up the first third of the space. The trust issue comes second, and silver is in third place. After delivering a general denunciation of imperialism, the issue is treated separately as affecting Porto Rico, Cuba and the Philippines. The Porto Rican section is mainly a denunciation of the laws passed for the island by the late administration. For Cuba, the party asks fulfilment of "all the pledges" made before and during the Spanish war. It demands that the nation immediately declare its purpose to give the islands, first, a state of government; second, independence, and third, a virtual hands-off protectorate such as is now given to the South American republics. The rest of the Philippine section is another denunciation. The anti-imperialist chapter closes with a statement of the party's stand on the whole question, as not opposed to extension of the republic's privileges to territories which could ultimately become states, but unalterably against it on any other consideration. Militarism is attacked in a section of its own. Trusts, under the name of "private monopolies," are the next subject of attack. The party is pledged to "unceasing warfare" on this form of ownership. Ways and means of control are suggested, such as postal laws, tariff revision, etc. The silver plank reaffirms the corresponding section in the Chicago platform of 896, and denounces the currency bill enacted by the present session of Congress. These are the main points. Minor issues commended are: popular election of Senators, arbitration between capital and labor, a department of labor in the government, pensions for Spanish war veterans, construction of the Nicaraguan canal, statehood for Arizona, New Mexico and Oklahoma with territorial home rule for Alaska and Porto Rico, improvement of arid lands, Chinese exclusion, and retrenchment and economy in government expenses. Finally, a denunciation of the alliance with England and the declaration of sympathy with the Boers, close the platform.

Renewal of the St. Louis Strike. It had been generally supposed that the recent trouble in St. Louis caused by the employes of the St. Louis Transit Company was over, but the strike declared off on July 2nd was ordered renewed July 9th, at a meeting of the Street Railway Men's Union at the West End Coliseum. When the strike was settled there were many expressions of discontent among the men, and the dissatisfaction instead of abating grew daily. Meetings were held in the course of the week, and committees appointed to procure proof of infidelity on the part of the company, with the result that the 10th of July at five o'clock was fixed upon for a renewal of the boycott on all the company's lines. The new difficulty arose through the fact that in the opinion of the employees at least, the company had broken faith with the agreement made July 2nd, having, according to affidavits presented by a Committee of the Street Railway Men's Union, been employing outside men since July 2nd. The Transit Company denied that it had intentionally violated any agreement. By a unanimous vote at the meeting called, the strike was renewed. The strikers claimed that this was the second occasion on which the company has broken faith with them and that this time no lawlessness or violence would be used, but by means of a vigorous enforcement of the boycott they hoped to destroy the earning capacity of the company. The agreement claimed to have been violated seems to have been a verbal one, made concurrently with the written one, by which the strikers understood that the old men were to be reinstated within sixty days.

American Versus British Athletes. The superiority of our own branch of the Anglo-Saxon race over our British brethren in the more nervous forms of athletic sports was again proved last Saturday in London, when a team of American athletes bound for the Paris Exposition defeated the London Athletic Club's team, made up of the best amateurs in England, Scotland, and Ireland, by a score of eight events to five. The Americans won all the events except the long-distance runs and walks, which the English took with ease. This, being the invariable rule whenever Englishmen and Americans contest in athletics, has an importance far beyond sporting interest in showing how much the American branch is differentiating from the parent stock. Athletics being an Anglo-Saxon institution, almost all the best American athletes are of Anglo-Saxon stock. For example, the only exception in the present team is Krantzlein, of German ancestry. These contests, then, stretching as they have over many years and having the same result, prove that the American is superior in nervous force, and the Englishman in endurance. In the last six contests, the English have never won a "sprint" race, a short distance run, a hurdle race, or a contest with the weights, and have shown below us in the high and broad jumps, all these being events which call for a sudden outlay of nervous force, while, with the exception of one meet, they have won every run above the half-mile, the American athletes generally being very badly beaten in these trials of endurance. Popular tradition, which attributes the quality of nervous energy to the American and plucky endurance to the Englishman, is thus pretty thoroughly justified.

Editorial Comment.

The Party of Insincerity.

THE plank in the Democratic platform that deals with expansion adheres to the safe but insincere lines prophesied in these columns weeks ago. It opens with a series of ponderous declarations that no man denies and no party, except Democracy, has ever been known to oppose. With the freshness of discovery, it enunciates and endorses the fundamental principles of the government and then, to mislead the man who thinks he thinks, it applies these living principles to a set of imaginary facts that cannot be proven, and which do not exist, unless constant and vociferous repetition make them so. Bryanism has not forgotten how to be insincere. It has not forgotten how to lie and misrepresent and it does not hesitate to prostitute the sacred teachings of our forefathers, to serve an unholy and unpatriotic end. The Devil quoting Scripture to prove there is no God, would present a more attractive spectacle than combined Populism and Democracy appealing to the hallowed spirit of American institutions to fortify conclusions built upon false, spurious and dishonorable assumption of fact.

The platform speaks for itself. Let us analyze the portion of it which refers to expansion. It says:

"We reaffirm our faith in that immortal proclamation of the inalienable rights of man (the Declaration of Independence) and our allegiance to the Constitution formed in harmony therewith by the fathers of the Republic."

This is very pretty, but inasmuch as it is at once the very keystone and foundation of the Republican party, one cannot claim for Democracy any peculiar virtue for adopting it as part of its platform, unless it be a virtue in politics to steal and misapply the principles of your opponent. In a similar lofty vein, but with an awkward disregard of history, the platform proceeds:—

"We hold with the United States Supreme Court that the Declaration of Independence is the spirit of our government of which the Constitution is the form and letter."

This also, as a principle, is very pretty and very true. If memory serves us, the Republican party rejoices in a record for adhering to the Declaration of Independence and sustaining to the fullest measure and extent the spirit and intent of that sacred document which Democracy cannot duplicate. This record of Republicanism will bear the closest scrutiny, and if comparisons are essentials we will lay that record side by side with the record of Democracy and rest our case before the American people. Then, too, this sudden, this beslobbering and unnatural affection for the Supreme Court of the United States brings grim Suspicion stalking in. There have been times—and recent times, at that—when Democracy bitterly and maliciously denounced this very court and with malevolent hate heaped upon the defenceless heads of its grave Justices a storm of calumny and abuse, much as a convicted criminal might curse the Judge who pronounced the judgment of imprisonment upon him.

* * *

But to the platform again. It is gay with mottoes of "Liberty" and "Equality." They have even stolen Lincoln from us, and ten years from now no doubt will quite as gravely claim McKinley. Here is the next declaration:

"We declare again that all governments instituted among men derive their just powers from the consent of the governed; that any government not based upon the consent of the governed is a tyranny, and that to impose upon any people a government offering to substitute the methods of imperialism for those of a republic is an act of despotism."

Think of it! This is from a Democratic platform. Among Democrats this declaration is considered a body-blow to the Republicans, but it requires a pretty young and a pretty thorough-going advocate of Bryanism to find any comfort in the declaration. It is woefully misleading and, while it states what in broad terms are wise conclusions, it is the hardest sort of a lie to meet—half truth and half falsehood. Did this Republic in all the history of its growth and expansion, ever take in any territory wherein all of the inhabitants "consented" to be governed? Did the Mexicans in California "consent?" Did the Apaches, the Comanches or any of the Indian tribes "consent?"

Under this process of reasoning at the close of the civil war the United States became a "despotism," if the Philipine situation is to be regarded as evidencing despotic tendencies. The United States has held Alaska for many years, and has so far escaped censure for it, and escaped "despotism" besides. Mr. Aguinaldo represents probably one-tenth of one per cent of the inhabitants of the Philippines. To day, any half mad fanatic might rise up in America for the purpose of overturning this government or withdrawing his "consent" to be "governed." If one-tenth of one per cent of the American people should join in his protest and withhold their "consent" to be "governed," then we must abandon our form of government or continue a "tyranny." We imagine numbers and common sense cut some figure in these matters. All of the people resident in the Sandwich Islands did not favor annexation. The percentage of Islanders objecting to annexation was many times in excess of the percentage of objecting Filipinos; but they had no self-seeking Aguinaldo among them to obstruct the best interests of the country or the wishes of the majority and hence under Democratic reasoning it is not "tyrannical" to "govern" them. Mr. Bryan dignifies Aguinaldo when he treats that little rascal as the "George Washington of the Orient." A man may be judged by the heroes he worships, but if you apply this rule to the Democratic candidate it renders him worse than we imagine him to be.

* * *

But the platform shouts out more loyal rhetoric. It says:

"We hold that the Constitution follows the flag. (This means the Philippines are to be regarded as territories, then states and all of their inhabitants voters) and we denounce the doctrine that an Executive or a Congress deriving their existence and their powers from the constitution, can exercise lawful authority beyond it, or in violation of it. We assert that no nation can long endure half republic and half empire, and we warn the people that imperialism will lead quickly and inevitably to despotism at home."

There being no intention on the part of the Republican party to establish a nation half republic and half empire, the foregoing shriek simply resolves itself into a string of words. In the settlement and acquisition of every foot of Territory in America, our army was compelled to overcome Indian tribes of more intelligence and better fighting capacity than the Filipines. These Indians were not and are not now permitted to vote, or share in any of the privileges of citizenship. They were "governed" without their "consent" and yet "despotism at home" never followed either "quickly" or "inevitably" or at all. The conditions existing in Alaska are about the conditions that will exist in the Philippines until that people or a part of them have demonstrated their fitness for better things. The hysterical not to say cowardly attitude of Democracy confess a lack of confidence in the Republic itself. It declares that if Bryan is not elected the people will not be strong enough prevent a "despotism at home." It denies to the American people adequate common sense to control the Philippines. It declares that the United States has reached its limit; and that a looting, half-breed cut-throat and a degree or two of longitude has called this nation to a halt. In the Sandwich Islands it is only necessary for some leperous islander to seize a sword and equip a handful of men with guns in opposition to this nation, when, according to Democracy, there will spring up a living principle before which our troops and our nation must stand powerless. Such a declaration will scarcely find approval among intelligent Americans.

* * *

Further referring to this subject, the platform says:

"We condemn and denounce the Philippine policy of the Administration. It has embroiled the Republic in an unnecessary war, sacrified the lives of many of its noblest sons and placed the United States, previously known and applauded thoughout the world as the champion of freedom, in the false and un-American position of crushing with military force the efforts of our former allies to achieve liberty and self-government."

The "policy of the Administration" which Democracy condemns consisted in performing a sacred duty. The day that Dewey destroyed the Spanish fleet and broke the backbone of Spanish rule in the Philippines, it became the sacred and bounden duty of this government to preserve order at all hazards and protect from the murderous and looting hands of Aguinaldo's cut-throats the lives and the property of the people exposed to their assaults. Where in God's name would this Democracy have altered the policy pursued? When would they, in their superior wisdom, have withdrawn and forsaken these people to a fate more dreadful than that which now threatens our people in China? The Treaty of Paris awarded this archipelago to this nation. That treaty was duly ratified by a two-thirds vote of the Senate and it became a part of our country. What "policy" would meet with the approval of this Democracy? Would it endorse the right of a President to give away any portion of the country?

Would Democracy have the administration haul down the flag and withdraw the protection of the Constitution which it declares "follows the flag?" Democracy urges this cheap and cowardly policy upon the American people because less than one-tenth of one per cent of the inhabitants of the islands, under the leadership of a crafty and self-seeking half-breed, objected to our form of government. What would Democracy have done? It would have given them, so its platform says:

"First, a state of government;

"Second, independence; and,

"Third, protection from outside interference."

* * *

But in the same breath, in the same plank, this same democracy declares—

"The Filipinos cannot be citizens without endangering our civilization!"

Then by all that is good, how can we give to this uncivilized people a "form of government," "then independence," then look the world in the face and say, "Keep your hands off of this unfit, uncivilized republic?" Then when the Spaniards, the Tagalos, and all the other tribes that abound in that archipelago rose up to resist the domination of some long hated tribe, who would restore peace and order? Why, America, of course.

America will give to the Filipinos all that Democracy demands, but will give it in a better way. They will have a "state of government" and it will be a stable and a wise government; they will have "independence" and it will be of the purest and best type guaranteed by the greatest nation on earth; and they will have "protection," but it will come to them as a part of this republic, and in such time and such manner as the American people deem wise and just.

The United States will not assume the grave and fruitless responsibilities suggested by Democracy, and at the same time forfeit and relinquish to the "uncivilized" Filipino who is "unfit for citizenship" unbridled license to do as he pleases, at home and abroad, and embroil us in constant wars and insurrections. The burden that Democracy would place upon this nation would be infinitely greater and require a larger standing army than would the declared purpose of the Republicans. Under Democracy's plan we would have all of the responsibility for the wrongdoing of the Filipinos. And yet we would be stripped of every right to guide or direct them, or prevent the commission of acts that would inevitably lead to vexatious difficulties. The several tribes in the Philippines would accept the control of the United States willingly, before they would bow to the domination of any tribe or faction of the Islands. Indeed, they have already done so.

Municipal Water Works.

SOME time ago we ventured the prophecy that there was a good deal of cheap politics lurking behind the question of municipal ownership of water works in San Francisco; that there would be an era of corruption, scandals and swindling accompanying the movement, because the tendency of those in power would be toward the construction of new works of great magnitude for the reason that there is more opportunity for "politics" in new work than there would be in purchasing any plant already constructed. The movement has been launched and the Board has authorized the ascertainment of the probable cost of several supplies from distant points. It has also authorized the Board of Public Works to hand in an estimate of the Spring Valley plant. In connection with the latter company's works the Board by resolutions some time ago asked that company "to offer for sale" all of its property used in supplying water to the municipality. This resolution closed with a unique and scarcely creditable threat that the water company should "bear in mind that any over-valuation will compel the people to look elsewhere for their water supply," and would result in the "withdrawing of San Francisco as a market for the sale of the company's water," and so "reduce the value of the company's lands to what they are worth for agricultural purposes merely." In plain English the Board notified the water company that if it did not permit the Board to fix the selling price, then it (the Board) would ruin the company's property, and reduce the value of its water shed and reservoirs to what they are worth for agricultural purposes.

* * *

It is one of the peculiarities of "honest" city government that its greatest claim to honesty depends upon its acting dishonestly and unfairly toward every corporation that has dealings with the general public. The people do not want to steal a water plant. We doubt very much if they want to own one at all, but if they do, they want to acquire it honestly, and they do not want either politicians, contractors or public officers to rob them in the deal, or "make politics" with their money.

When the Supervisors requested the Spring Valley in this rather brutal fashion to set a price upon its property the company responded in a dignified communication that some how or other failed to get into the daily papers. Some one suppressed it, but it is good reading even now. The corporation pointed out to the Board that in asking for this bid they were not following the provisions of the Charter, that to set a selling price at that stage of the proceedings would be an idle and useless thing. The communication pointed out that the provisions of the Charter required the Board first to secure through the city engineers "plans and estimates of actual cost of original construction from all of the several available resources of supply," and after placing them on file that then, and not until then, could the Board enter into negotiations for such utilities as they regard most important and submit to the electors the proposition for acquisition thereof. The communication further pointed out that before submitting the question of original construction or condemnation, the supervisors must consult and consider offers for the sale of existing utilities. Inasmuch as the Board was in no position legally or rightfully to request a selling figure, the company declined to fix a price but said:

"The company respectfully states that under due proceedings it would be willing to submit an offer of its entire system, which is in complete condition and operation . . . or, in lieu of an offer, the company would, under such proceedings, agree to submit the value of its properties to the determination of a majority of a Board of Arbitration, to consist of three members and to be selected strictly as follows: one to be appointed by your Honorable Board, one by the company, and the third to be selected by agreement of the two so appointed. When such Board has fixed the valuation, the company would be willing to deposit its deed in escrow to abide the result of the vote on the bonded indebtedness."

Of course it is perfectfully clear that a man with sinister notions would be interested in concealing this offer of the Spring Valley Company from the eyes of the public. There is an element of fairness to it all that must commend the proposition it contains. If Jones desired to purchase the Phelan building it is not likely that Mr. Phelan would submit its valuation to three arbitrators, one to be selected by Jones, one by Phelan, and the third to be selected by the two first chosen. Some over-clever person will find cunning and duplicity behind this offer. There are always in a community "Smarties" who are over-wise. But even admitting that there is room for collusion in such a plain straightforward plan, the whole question must go before the people, and the city is not bound unless the people so declare. With a sensational press willing to dig scandal from the Bible it is not thinkable that "things" suspected by the "over-wise" would go undetected if they existed in fact. The plan suggested by the company would certainly absolve the Board of any taint of suspicion and would put them on pretty high ground, beyond public or private criticism. Let it become publicly known that the water company has submitted a proposition so manifestly fair, and not a man in the community could maintain an opposition to it. If that end of the community that is interested on principle in acquiring water works for the city would take hold of the question, they might wrest it out of the hands of the man who is moved through purely political motives. Stripped of all political chicanery and resting upon a solid foundation, the movement might attract conservative men to its support. Indeed it is "politics," and the fear and dread of politics in municipal affairs that frighten many away from the municipal ownership theory.

Burning Ships, Piers and Warehouses Viewed from the New York Shore.

Tugs Trying to Beach the Bremen and Ma n.

Burning Lighters and Canal Boats.

The Bremen and Main Beached and Still Burning the Morning after the Fire.

THE STEAMSHIP HOLOCAUST IN NEW YORK.

THE SEMERAMIS OF CHINA.

The Intrigues and Murders Which Have Marked the Career of Tsu Tsi, the Slave-Born Chinese Empress

THE scenes have been shifted again in China. Where last week, the Empress Dowager, Tsu Tsi, seemed supreme mistress of the situation, Prince Tuan, a puppet of her creation, has grown to a controlling force. The instrument which she has worked out most of her power—poison—has been turned against herself. Demented, if not dead, she, the ruling factor in China this quarter-century, has passed out of things. The forces which she set loose were to great for her to control; her Frankenstein turned upon its maker.

Of Tuan, little is known, and even his relation with the ruling house is not certain. Some say that he is a brother of the old Emperor, whose unfortunate choice of a favorite slave-girl harnessed the late Dowager on the Empire; others make him a cousin. Of the Empress, quite the most remarkable woman of the nineteenth century, more is known, although much of the devious way of her life is hidden in the dark state secrets of the Pekin Court. It is a bloody record, complete with the commission of every crime in the Christian Decalogue and its Chinese equivalent.

It is romantic enough at the outset. Such of us as were brought up on Sunday school periodicals in our tender childhood remember that one of the worst offenses charged against the blackness of Chinese heathendom was the sale of infants as slaves in time of famine. It was in the great famine of 1831 that a Manchurian noble in reduced circumstances, being in the last extremity of want, sold his pretty seven-year-old daughter as a slave at Canton. The slave was Tsu Tsi Tsu An, afterward Empress regent of China. Just what her antecedents were, is not exactly known; like many a social struggler in another sphere, the Chinese imperial lady has tried to let world lose memory of her ancestry. The fact that her father was a Manchurian noble amounts to little. Among the governing Manchus, as the Gascons, practically everyone is noble. The rumor that she had an immediate English ancestor is persistent, although confirmed by no immediate proof, and is borne out by the fact that she is lighter in skin and more prominent of feature than most Celestials.

But whatever her antecedents, she passed into bondage at the age of seven with no apparent difference from the thousands upon thousands of slave children sold in the year of the Great Famine. Her master was a Canton merchant, and it is recorded that he treated her with great kindness—a strange beginning for her career of blood and slaughter. As she grew larger, she developed some of that beauty which served, in her career, to pave the way for the play of her brains. There she lived, and was the favorite of her master until she was seventeen. At that time, the Emperor Hsien Fung, following the Chinese custom, issued a proclamation calling upon the daughters of Manchuria to present themselves at the palace in order that concubines might be chosen for the imperial harem. With her eye always on the main chance, little Tsu Tsi played for the opportunity to enter the competition. So well did she do her part as to pursuade her master that the advantages he would gain by having a friend at court would outweigh the loss of a favorite slave, and in the end he not only gave full permission but bought the needful costumes and accessories. She won easily, and was installed in the Emporer's household.

The household of the Chinese Emporer is no exception to the other Oriental harems with respect to the intrigues which go on therein. Yet, even at her early age, Tsu Tsi went rapidly ahead, obtaining the Emporer's special favor before she had been there two years. But the chief beauty of her game, the crowning touch of art is the fact that she obtained her access to the Emperor through the Empress herself. The latter was childless, and the throne needed an heir. It was the little Manchurian girl who was chosen to become its mother. And when she gave the Emperor a son, she was fairly launched on her career.

While this heir was still a young child, in 1860, the old Emperor died of indigestion. There was no antopsy, and only a vague hint that the soft yellow hand of Tsu Tsi was in the matter. In the light of subsequent events, however, the opportuneness of Hsien Fung's death becomes significent. Since 1860, at every difficult crises in Tsu Tsi's affairs death has most fortunately stepped in to put the person most impeding her progress out of the way. The fact that her son was the next heir, and that the sooner he began to reign the longer the regency would be, may assist to a correct diagnosis of Hsien Fung's malady. In any event, his death took place, and very soon the small boy was proclaimed Emperor under the title of Tung Chi, with the Dowager Empress and mother Empress appointed coregents.

Things moved smoothly for a time after this. The junior regent took pains not to show herself too dominant, but hers was, in fact, the strong hand of the pair. It was towards the end of the Emporer's minority that his mother noticed certain unpleasant signs of independence. Tung Chi attained his majority, however, and was duly proclaimed Emporer, and the regency ended.

Had Tsu Tsi been an ordinary woman, this would have closed her career. She had climbed higher than any other Oriental woman since the time of the Zenobia; it was for her to rest on her laurels and round out her life in the luxury of a pampered harem-woman. Apparently, she did this; really, she was waiting and watching, like a spider. The opportunity came,—perhaps she made it—who knows? An alarming rumor that the Emperor's health was failing spread rapidly. The regents who had proved themselves efficient before were summoned again to take the reins of state. Within a month the youthful Emperor became, as his subjects were piously informed, "a guest on high." But the Government was saved, for the two Empresses were in full authority. Tung Chi had married a young wife not long before his death, and as she was about to become a mother, it was supposed that if she bore a son he would naturally be proclaimed the heir of his father. Perhaps Tsu Tsi feared the chance of another Empress Dowager. At any rate, for reasons best known to herself, she seated upon the throne a new Emperor in the person of Kwang Su, a young son of a brother of the old Emperor, Hsien Fung. Her choice was a direct violation of ancestor-worship, the most sacred Chinese tradition, since the new Emperor belonged to the same generation as his predecessor, whose ghostly self could, therefore never receive the homage of a living ruler. The permanence of this arrangement was assured by a mysterious and convenient illness which fell upon the widow of the late Emperor and carried her off together with the unborn babe.

After this, there were no more mysterious illnesses in the ruling Manchu family until 1881. This was, chiefly, because no person of consequence arose to oppose the triumphant Tsu Tsi. For in consequential persons, she had the headsman—poison, in her scheme of government, was for the mighty of the earth. But in 1881, there was some friction between the old Empress the senor regent, and her junior colleague, Tsu Tsi. The senior promptly died of heart-failure, leaving Tsu Tsi to rule alone until the young Emperor should attain his majority. When he had reached that age, the air of Pekin became, very suddenly, too strong and malignant for Kwang Su, and his health failed, so that the Dowager had to be called out of her retirement to assume the yoke of government. She did this at once, but the Emperor's health continued to fail. The thing which kept him alive at all was not the skill of the Chinese physicians summoned from near and far nor that of the European doctors. It was the declaration of the Foreign offices that, if the young ruler died, they would demand a strict investigation. Then came the short period when, by some mysterious means, the Emperor and his progressive advisers got control of things. Their triumph was short, for by means equally mysterious the old fiend regained her supremacy, imprisoned the ruler, forced him to abdicate and set the young child of Prince Tuan upon the throne.

After that, the Boxer uprising, in which the Empress most certainly had a hand came along to complicate matters and to drop a veil of obscurity over the stage upon which the drama of Chinese history is being enacted. The truth of affairs in the capital is as deeply hidden as sensational correspondence can hide it, but it now seems that the force which she turned loose became too great for her to control, or that she waited too long before causing indigestion to develope in the the father of her puppet-emperor.

JOHN STOLLARD.

FAMOUS AMERICAN CAVALRY RIDES.

THERE is much of interest to riders generally, but particularly to the United States cavalrymen, in reports that have come from South Africa of some of the long, hard rides made there by the British mounted troops. The specific statement is made that a squadron of the Natal Mounted Rifles recently rode eighty-five miles in twelve consecutive hours. The English press speaks of the rides of sixty miles by detached cavalry troops which are completed within the daylight hours as of frequent occurrence.

At first thought it may not appear that these rides are particularly remarkable, but the fact must be taken into consideration that the rapidity of the march must necessarily be gauged by the endurance of the poorest horse of the outfit. Many of the horses used by the English troopers are American bred, and a natural interest in this country is added to the matter, for it gives a chance to "get a line" on the endurance of the American animal under absolutely strange climatic conditions.

Col. Theodore Ayrault Dodge, United States Army, collected the official records of long-distance cavalry rides. He says that Capt. S. F. Fountain, United States Cavalry, in the year 1891 rode with a detachment of his troop eighty-four miles in eight hours. This record is vouched for, and it is better than that of the Natal Mounted Rifles by about four hours, the distance being within one mile of that made in South Africa. For actual speed this forced march stands perhaps at the head of the American army record, though other rides have been more remarkable. In the year 1879, when the Utes succeeded in getting some United States troops into what was afterward known as Thornburg's "rat hole," several mounted couriers managed to slip through the circling line of savages. All of them reached Merritt's column, 170 miles distant, in less than twenty-four hours. The exact time was not taken, for, as Col. Dodge put it, "rescue was of more importance than records."

It must be understood that all these American rides were were made without changing horses. The best rider, according to cavalry experts, is he who by instinct feels the condition of his horse, and though getting the most of the animal knows how to conserve his strength. The late Gen. Lawton, who was killed in the Philippines, in the year 1876 rode from Red Cloud Agency, Neb., to Sidney, in the same state, a distance of 125 miles, in twenty-six hours. He was carrying important despatches for Gen. Crook, and though the road was bad his mount was in good condition when Lawton, looking five years older than he did the day before, handed over his bundle of papers.

Four troopers of the Fourth Cavalry were sent in 1870 from Fort Harney to Fort Warner with despatches and were told to make the best time possible without killing their horses. They made the distance, 140 miles, twenty miles of the way being through loose sand, in twenty-two hours, the actual marching time being eighteen hours and thirty minutes. At Fort Warner they rested one day, and returned to Harney on the same horses at the uniform rate of sixty miles a day.

The cavalry horses of the American Army have undergone these endurance and speed contests carrying weights of more than 200 pounds, and without any training other than that received in the ordinary course of frontier scouting and daily drill evolutions. The greatest military ride recorded, as it appears on paper, is that of the Austrian Count Strahrenberg, who rode one horse 350 miles in seventy-one hours. The animal, however, carried only the Count's weight, 128 pounds; it had been specially trained for months to undergo the endurance test, and during the whole time of the ride it was kept up on stimulants. The horse died within twenty-four hours after the completion of its task.

Col. Dodge in his summary of remarkable ride stells of a professional express rider, whom he personally knew, who for many months carried mail from El Paso to Chihuahua, through a hostile Apache country. This man on one horse, a broncho, regularly made 300 miles in sixty hours, and then resting his mount for four days, made the return trip. As this was not a cavalry achievement, it is not used for purposes of comparison. Touching the performance, however, the military writer says that, "excepting the ass, there is perhaps no creature on earth so stubbornly enduring as the broncho."

Col. Dodge does not think that if tests were made there would be found much difference between the records which English and American soldiers would register.

Li Hung Chang, who does not believe in republics, said once in discussing governments: "Five thousand years ago China was a republic, just as the United States is today." "What made you change your form of government?" he was asked. "The change," he said, "was the most gradual in the world, and our first emperor was a plowboy."

When Li was in Germany, the Kaiser asked him, "How do our women compare with those of China?"

"I really cannot tell," said Li, slyly, fastening his eyes on the corsage of a lady who was present. "We never see half as much of our women as you do of yours."

THE NEW YORK DOCK FIRE.

See Opposite Page.

THE steamer fire of June 30 on the New York docks, with its attendant loss of life and property, was not only one of the greatest calamities of the decade, but it was made the more dreadful by a few peculiar horrors of its own. To begin with, the sharacter of the fire was unique. Never before has chipping, standing in a harbor, been attacked by a great fire. Then the rapid spread of the flames was almost without precedent. It seemed to observers as though the whole district of docks and ships burst into flame with the spontaneity of an explosion. Men working on the decks of some of the vessels were warned by the noise of the bursting naphtha tank which caused the rapid spread of the flames, and before they could reach the rail aud leap into the water, the whole fleet was wrapped in fire. The tugs which hurried in to push the burning vessels away from the dangerous piers, and the fire-boats detailed to the harbor for just such emergencies were alike powerless to render aid. In this manner three passenger steamers of German lines were caught and ruined almost at once.

But the featurs which will make this conflagration remembered among the catastrophes of the century was the slow torture by which many of the victims lost their lives. In the lower compartments of the burning steamers, the portholes, the only access to the open air except the deck gangways, were not large enough to admit, by any possibility, the body of a man. With the rush of the first blaze, the decks became a sheet of flame, cutting off all access from above, and when the imprisoned workmen and crews rushed to the portholes they found escape impossible. The scenes that followed were dreadful in the extreme. The crews of the tugs without could see the victims, could even speak with them, but were powerless to render aid. A priest on one of the fireboats even steamed down the line of portholes, giving consolation to men slowly roasting to death. Of the two hundred and fifty dead, nearly half must have perished in this manner. One victim shouted through a porthole, while waiting his slow death, that forty people were in the compartment behind him. Not even the bodies of these unfortunates were recovered.

Of the dead whose remains were more than ashes, few could be identified, so thoroughly did the fire perform its work.

A Tug of War on the Ice at 11 p. m.

A Hummock Sixty Feet High.

The Thrasher in the Ice.

A PERILOUS VOYAGE.

Experience of the Steamer "Thrasher" in the Nome Ice Peak.

TWO California men, R. J. Sadler of Los Angeles and E. L. L. Johnson of Oakland, just returned from the Cape Nome country, bring back an interesting story of hardship and peril in the far North. They were among the passengers on the Thrasher, a steam whaling-vessel fitted up for Nome passenger trade, and the first steamer to leave San Francisco in this year's Nome rush. She had a most exciting and eventful voyage, and an almost miraculous escape from the perils of a northern ice-pack.

The Thrasher left San Francisco April 21, and reached Cape Nome May 28. She carried about two hundred passengers—a hundred too many, by the way—and was but carelessly fitted for passenger service. An upper deck, used in the old days for reducing seal-blubber, had been battened and roofed over for use as sleeping quarters for the cabin passengers. The work had been hastily done, so that the wash of the heavy seas came through the cracks and left about about five inches of water as a bed-mat under the berths. There were also incidental "kicks" about the food all the way North.

The voyage was ill-starred from the first. Just outside the Golden Gate a heavy storm drove the vessel back down the Coast as far as Monterey Bay, so it was six days before she regained the latitude of San Francisco. Two more heavy storms were met on the way to Dutch Harbor. In one, the Tarasher, stout whaler though she is, was considerably damaged, two lifeboats being smashed. On May 17 they reached Dutch Harbor, coaled, and struck out on the last lap of the run.

The third day out from Dutch Harbor they began to encounter ice-floes, drifting south. On the following day this changed to "slush" ice, forming a heavy coating over the surface and impeding, although not stopping, the vessel's course. The floes continued and grew thicker, and by the next Arctic night the Thrasher was dodging floes, breaking into an opening whenever one presented itself, and stopping when the floes came down on all sides. For two days the vessel beat along in this fashion, in continual danger of being crushed. Whenever they became stalled, the captain would watch for the spot in the field which seemed thinnest and would break it by the vessel's weight. The Thrasher, being built for a whaler, has a prow of solid oak fourteen feet thick and built to slide over opposing ice when necessary. The stern would be forced up on the ice, and the vessel would then break through of its own weight.

On the third day of this progress, the floes were seen to be drifting south, and against the vessel's course with alarming speed, indicating that it was being driven by a storm. The return to Dutch Harbor was practically shut off by a pack to the rear, and danger of being crushed by the swift-running bergs became imminent. At that crisis, the look-out spied a huge mass of ice which seemed "anchored" or piled up until, by gradual sinking of its own weight, it lay fastened to the bottom. Toward this the Thrasher laid her course. The drifting ice threatening to break either the shaft or the rudder, the passengers were drafted into the crew, and during the remainder of the struggle with the pack, they worked with long poles, shoving obstructions away from the vessel's vital parts.

The "anchored" mass of ice turned out to be a huge field, perhaps five miles across, and shaped like a horseshoe, with the outer curve turned toward the storm, which was coming with increasing violence from the north, and the inner curve forming a safe little harbor. Here the water was as calm as in San Francisco bay. The vessel threw out lines and made fast. Passengers and crew hurried out upon the floe to stretch their sea-cramped legs and explore. It lacked only vegetation to make it in all respects like a veritable island. A ridge like a range of hills ran along the central part, and from this there radiated a number of canyons with rivulets from the slow-melting ice at their depths. A herd of seals and a few walrus lent a semblance of inhabitants.

The passengers, glad to be ashore at any cost, got up a series of athletic games during the long, white night, including a tug-of-war between the port and starboard berths, while the storm beat and the ice drifted on the unprotected sides of the temporary island.

By morning the storm had increased in fury, and the break-up of their friendly floe seemed imminent. Suddenly a rift was spied in the mass to the east, and a pack was forced against the ship, hemming her in. It was several hours before the area in front began to break, leaving a comparatively free channel to the north, in the teeth of the gale. Then commenced the most perilous passage of the voyage. As the great slabs broke from the main floe, they would turn over, churning the sea all round. The heavy swells increased the danger. Several times the vessel lay in the trough of the sea, with a big cake of ice poised above her, seeming about to fall upon the deck. Only cool and clever work on the part of the captain and steersman saved the vessel from this danger. All around, heavy masses were smashing into each other, breaking off and splintering fragments of many tons in weight and suggesting pleasantly the fate of the Thrasher should she collide. Gradually the larger cakes passed south, as the steamer shoved into the gale, and at length she emerged into an open sea, beaten by a heavy storm but still free from the dangerous ice. The voyage to Nome was made without further incident.

MARGARET ANGLIN'S SUCCESS.

Perhaps it is true that reputations are gained in the provinces and conferred in the metropolii. Confirmation of the exterior verdict particularly in the case of actors and actresses is often unaccountably delayed. There was Julia Marlowe, for instance—an actress who united beauty and temperament—how long did she knock at the New York temple of fame? The siege of Maude Adams was less laborious. Blanche Bates, on the contrary, obtained immediate recognition, but the seal of approval was denied Nance O'Neil, who surely has dramatic genius. Among the New York critics are several men of real insight and intelligence, yet there has reached us no announcement of a furor over Margaret Anglin. Perhaps she has appealed to San Francisco audiences in a greater variety of roles and we have had better opportunities to form conclusions. She is really one of the foremost actresses on the stage to-day. Voice, temperament, intelligence, vivacity, facility, all are hers. Whoever would deny her genius should see the performance of "A Marriage of Convenience" at the Columbia Theater in which Miss Anglin, as the Countess de Candale has an opportunity to display her talent. It is an exquisite performance she gives, full of delicacy and charm and finesse—indeed, as graceful a piece of high comedy work as we have ever had. In a few years or more this actress will have as great a reputation as Ada Rehan and will surely rise higher than Maude Adams, Viola Allen, or Mary Mannering, who are now starring it in the East.

H. E. Huntington

Career of the New Vice-President of the Southern Pacific Company.

SOME four weeks ago announcement was made of the election in New York of Mr. H. E. Huntington as vice-president of the Southern Pacific Company. It is a post of such importance and prominence that the identity of the incumbent becomes of general interest. During the past twelve months many changes have occurred in the ownership of the giant institution that operates the chief lines of traffic in California and neighboring states. The old names for so long identified with the corporation have been crossed out and a new regime has begun. There are no longer conflicting voices in its management, nor antagonistic interests working at cross purposes. One man dominates—he perhaps the greatest railroad man in the country—and his representative at this end of the line is his nephew, H. E. Huntington.

In the course of his nine years residence in San Francisco, H. E. Huntington has been so variously handled by the papers that strange impressions of his personality have been current among his contemporaries. Like his uncle, he is not much concerned about the biographies his enemies have furnished for him, but has gone his way quietly attending to the innumerable duties his original position as assistant to the president imposed on him. When one considers the vast interests concentrated in the executive headquarters of the great system, with its two transcontinental lines and their innumerable feeders, one realizes in a vague way the responsibilities which Mr. Huntington has to shoulder. In addition he is president of the Market Street Railway Company, which operates the immense street car system of San Francisco, and in his private capacity he controls the destinies of the street railway system of Los Angeles, of which he is the chief owner. Of course it is not conceivable that Mr. Huntington attempts to direct all the details of the huge business which he presides over. That is not the function of the great executive. He makes policies, confers with subordinates supreme in their own departments, who report to him, consult him on their difficulties, and submit their new ideas for his consideration. On debated points he has the final say—indeed, is the court of last resort for the institution. In addition to all this, Mr. Huntington is concerned with new construction of railways and car lines, and in this branch of his responsibilities he takes a personal part. Directly under his supervision has been the building of the Coast line, uniting San Luis and Santa Barbara.

For the position he holds Mr. Huntington has been fully trained. Twenty-five years ago he commenced his railroad career superintending the construction of some of C. P. Huntington's southern railroads. He is a shrewd handler of large masses of men and, like his uncle, an excellent trader. He soon manifested his usefulness and was gradually trusted with larger responsibilities. For some years he was vice-president and general manager of the Kentucky Central, which C. P. Huntington subsequently sold to the Louisville and Nashville system. From this road he passed to the Newport News and Mississippi Valley system, whereof he managed the northern division, uniting with these special employments much other work of general superintendence over the innumerable enterprises with which his uncle was connected. When C. P. Huntington was elected president of the Southern Pacific he sent for his nephew and made him his representative in the executive department of the corporation. Since then H. E. Huntington has devoted himself to the affairs of the California institution, of which he is now ostensibly as well as virtually the chief. Considering how well he filled a position the difficulties of

Con. on Page 7.

Things & People.

Mayor Phelan and his Critics.

NO man can do things without making enemies. It may be opportune to suggest to those who are disparaging Mayor Phelan that there are an immense number of important achievements to his credit. He has been an important factor in the political life of San Francisco; through his instrumentality we live under a new charter and while that measure is imperfect it is a thousand times better than the shred and patch work government that preceded it. For the good of San Francisco he has labored honestly, industriously and earnestly. No man has contributed more generously to causes public and private. He has accomplished much and has made mistakes. It is difficult to distribute patronage so as to satisfy a political party. It is difficult to steer a course in an emergency that will commend itself to all sides of a community. Perhaps the Mayor has pursued too single-handed a policy. He has not always consulted the Powers that Be when about to take a decided step, as his predecessors used. Nor can his concurrence in a steal be taken for granted—traits which have earned him disfavor among honest and God-fearing capitalists. No man makes the round of the circle. Mayor Phelan has faults, but who among his critics is perfect? We have in San Francisco to-day an honest administration of the city's finances. Peculation is at a minimum. Reforms, some more radical than expediency would suggest have been made—but the motive has invariably been honorable. Great changes have been effected with comparatively little friction. When the balance is struck, San Francisco's account with James D. Phelan will show so large a profit as to render insignificant the sum total of his errors.

***

Fool Advertising.

THE fact that the California delegation to the Democratic Convention found its hands full of fruit and wine which no one seemed to want, should bring home to the generous citizens who supply these products to the "jolly-boys" doing politics, that such advertising is out of date. In Kansas, instead of the politicians the hospitals reaped the benefit of the unconsumed provender. I don't know who was the fortunate beneficiary at Philadelphia. There was certainly nothing attractive about the California headquarters in the Quaker City, They were in a hotel several blocks distant from national headquarters and the boasted fruit was piled in crates in a corner of a commonplace reception room. It is possible that legions of hungry delegates swooped down upon the supply at intervals but those incursions must have been made at off moments of the busy day. The average man at a convention is too much occupied doing politics to be an available subject for advertising. If he feels the need of fruit he is generally able to purchase it. The last idea that would occur to him would be to seek a fruit stand when for a few cents he might have his fill from the scores of stores displaying the California product in prettily arranged piles. Nor are the coast delegates gainers by their "free-feed" proclivities. True a form of individuality is thereby conferred on them, but their importance is not enhanced, because organization and harmony are characteristics worth a hundred carloads of free fruit and wine and appeal to the intelligent American. As it is, California has the reputation throughout the East of being a state of "knockers."

***

Journalism in Philadelphia.

A company of newspapermen whose names and faces are familiar in San Francisco are engaged in making a great daily in Philadelphia. Among them are Arthur McEwen, Sam Chamberlain, John Lathrop, and Alan Kelly, and under the impetus of their ability and Wanamaker capital the North American has become a strong factor in Philadelphia affairs. Little more than twelve months ago McEwen was engaged by young Mr. Wanamaker and found a paper of many traditions and old-fogy ways, which sold between three and five thousand copies per day. Now it is a big publication full of vim and fight and the circulation is up to the 100,000 mark. Fight after fight has been made during this year of growth. The Quay machine, an institution inconceivably corrupt, has formed a fine target for attack. Conditions sufficiently startling to awaken the stolid Philadelphians have been developed, and set forth in McEwen's breezy and brilliant style have attracted the attention of the State. A new building for the publication is in course of construction. Naturally the brisk news methods of the intruders have rather set Quaker City journalism by its ears. A story is told of the first city editor hired by young Mr. Wanamaker, a graduate of the N. Y. Herald and a live newspaperman. At midnight his telephone rang. It was the editor of the ———. "What have you got?" asked this deadly rival. "What do you mean?" asked the Herald man when he had grasped the identity of the other. "News, of course—have you anything in particular we have not got? If so, let's have it quick!" "Go to——!" was the reply, coupled with the appropriate objurgation. The new-comer discovered next day that in order to avoid the odium of scoops this midnight consultation among the editors was customary. Whoever had an exclusive story turned it over to the others, and so there were no rude advantages taken anywhere.

The Missionaries Again.

THE statement of Ho Yow, the Chinese Consul-General at San Francisco and one of the most progressive Chinese of his race, regarding the Boxer-Missionary shindy in China, is about as sensible a view of the religious phase of the question as has been advanced by anyone, white or black. The trouble, he says, is that the missionaries, instead of keeping strictly to the teaching of religion, are trying to graft Caucasian institutions upon a body politic not yet ready for such institutions. It is as though a Buddhist coming from India to spread his faith, should make widow-murder a part of the essentials for the full acceptance of his belief. Not that I am sure that widow-murder as practiced in India is a part of the Buddhist religion; it may be a Brahmin institution for all I know, but the example will serve. Should the dark-eyed son of India presume to ordain that this way of living, which is or was a part of the national Hindoo customs, be followed by his converts, we would refuse him a hearing and cast him out, having the might and numbers to do so. But the gentle missionaries have a way of decreeing that their converts shall accept European clothes and ways along with Christianity. They are the self-righteous people who put woolen trousers and Mother Hubbard dresses on the South Sea Islanders, living, until then, in innocent nakedness, and brought them all to a Christian Heaven quite early in the game through consumption and general break-down. They are the people who took our plains Indians and made them sleep indoors as part of the plan of conversion, with the result that they made "good Indians" of their converts with gratifying speed. If the plan of salvation as conceived by the missionaries includes the acceptance of white ways, a little figuring should show them that they would gain more souls in the end by letting the powers of the earth go ahead with shell and shrapnel and civilize the heathen according to their peculiar methods, so that the way might be cleared for a general harvest. The present method is quite too uncertain and painful.

***

The Chinese War and Californian Goods.

SOME time ago, a colleague of mine made calculations based upon the records of the Army Quartermaster's Department, which proved that San Francisco has, up to January 1, 1900, received fifty million dollars worth of trade from the army expenditures for the Spanish-Philippine war. These figures make the Alaska gold boom look small by comparison. It seems, now, that the Chinese War is to benefit the Coast in the same way. Owners of horseflesh and transport ships have been receiving inquiries regarding prices from persons who are evidently representatives of the German and French governments, and the signs go to prove that these nations will probably do much of their trading for the war, in Pacific Coast ports. This is, of course, the nearest point of supply for Caucasian made goods, and the logical depot in a European-Chinese war. Australia would be the only serious rival in such trade, but Australia cannot compete with us in many lines of supplies—flour, for example. It will be a great thing for the Coast in its immediate results, and a still greater thing in the introduction and advertising which it would give to Californian products.

***

Cape Nome as a Producer.

CAPE NOME'S productive power is still a mystery. Returning miners tell conflicting stories. This one holds that there is very little gold, the other has it that the yellow metal is there but that the first-comers have staked it out and spoiled the camp for this summer's "tenderfeet." But all agree on one point: Nome is no longer, as in the early days, a "poor man's camp." The first comers hold the beach and a few of the capitalists of the camp are in possession of the diggings further inland. In spite of the finds of doubtful richness to the North and South, the pay dirt in the immediate region is staked out long since. The fact that the region is populated above its productive limit is proved by the return of most of the Dawson City contingent to the British Columbia diggings. Unless some new and extensive fields are unearthed in the immediate region, unless the problematical "Mother Lode" is found, the country will offer nothing to later comers. With Dawson City and the Klondike, it is different. The production there seems greater than ever; new fields of fair richness are continually being discovered. A late estimate places the year's yield from the district at $30,000,000. While this is probably a good-sized over-statement, it is by no means impossible.

***

Poet Markham Returns Favors.

OF COURSE, a poet is supposed to be grateful for favors conferred, and Edwin Markham of "Man With the Hoe" fame owes his literary reputation, or most of it, to the boosting of the Examiner when his "masterpiece" first appeared, but the lines to Hearst's new Chicago American which appeared in last Sunday's Examiner must have been a frightful strain on the poetic conscience. Everyone knows what the Examiner Journal is, and how dangerous an influence it has made itself to the spread of those ideas which Mr. Markham, as a "poet of principle," should logically be expected to advocate. Cheap patriotism, tandry "culture," sensational politics, are the bone and firbre and being of the combination, and no one has a right to expect anything better of the American. The gist of Markham's labored lines seems to be praise of the new Titan as the foe of trusts and capitalism and the other forces which, according to the "Man With a Hoe," have slanted back the brow and blown out the soul of the laborer. He picked the point well; it is the only point on which he could defend the journalistic combination which discovered him, and preserve a show of fidelity to his principles. It was very nice of Markham, without doubt, but it will not add to his reputation as a Prophet of the Dawn.

***

An Effect of Paint.

THE effectiveness of external polish has been recorded in a number of connections, but never more strikingly than in the instance of the old Montgomery street cars. Proposing to reorganize the system no effort was made by the company to better the service and the antique cars with their mournful "plugs" of horses plied the street. Worn and dingy they were, in sorrowful contrast to the rest of the system, though the degree of their patronage was no better than their appearance. One day Mr. H. E. Huntington, growing tired of waiting for the new franchise which was to change all this, ordered the cars into the Market street shops. They emerged brilliant in new paint and varnish. Lo, within a week the receipts from this line had actually doubled.

***

One Way of Advertising.

THE town of Three Oaks, Michigan, leads the country in patriotic charity and in self-advertising. When the country was contributing toward the Maine monument fund, a brass cannon, sent from the Philippines by Admiral Dewey, was offered to the town which should contribute the most in proportion to the population. Three Oaks won out, and the ceremony of presentation was arranged for last month. It was then that the good citizens of that live burg came out and showed what sort they were. Early last month every daily newspaper and every weekly journal in the country received a circular from the enterprising little town. It offered to send, free of all charge, all sorts of articles regarding the celebration. Telegraphic news to any length would be furnished gratis; all the lucky recipient need do would be to write or telegraph the number of words wanted. General articles to be used in advance and "Sunday stories" with illustrations were also offered. The illustrative matter was not in the form of drawings or photographs, but in zinc and copper cuts, all ready for use. With these was a map showing the "principal cities of importance in the United States." In the map received by this and the other San Francisco papers, these points were New York, Chicago, Three Oaks, and San Francisco. In the ones received at Denver, which I chanced to see, the points were New York, Chicago, Three Oaks, and Denver. As a consequence, Three Oaks received a heap of advertising, such as never before fell to the lot of an American town. The reader doubtless read about the celebration, and Helen Gould's presence at the function, and the participation of the military and naval dignitaries, without knowing that the small town paid the freight. It must have cost a pretty penny, but for one day Three Oaks was famous throughout the land. Couldn't some of the leading citizens of that enterprising burg be induced to settle in San Francisco? Heaven knows we need them!

BOSWELL, JR.

H. E. HUNTINGTON.

Continued from page 10.

which his associates alone realize, he is sure to win new honors.

Personally, Mr. Huntington is a man of agreeable personality and of a simple and cordial manner. He is quite without the pretension and affectation which so many men of importance consider proper attributes of their dignity. He is very approachable, quick of decision, and a true friend of his friends. An excellent administrator, he has been successful in building up a large private fortune. He took hold of the Los Angeles railway system when it was losing money and its bonds were far below par. Within a few months he had converted it into a profitable property. Its equipment is now as fine as any line in the country boasts, and the service is admirable.

The time is rapidly approaching when the hostility to corporations which has been the religion of the Californian demagogue must be abandoned if the State would progress. Vice-President Huntington will be surely be a strong factor in showing the way to a more intelligent attitude towards the great business interests of the Pacific Coast.

HONG-KONG THE CENTER

OF FOREIGN INFLUENCE IN CHINA

Victoria Hall.

Queen's Road.

The Foreign Quarter.

"The Peak."

Shipping in Port.

The Harbor.

Vignette Photos by Taber, S. F.

The Matsushima, the Bull-Dog of the Japanese Navy.

The Hiei.

Quarters on the Hiei.

A 7-inch Krupp Gun.

Officers of the Chitose.

SOME VESSELS OF THE JAPANESE NAVY IN SERVICE FOR THE CHINESE WAR.

Meditations of a Matron.

THIS has been a wonderfully gay week, my dear Diary. Perhaps not gay in the old way of parties and dinners, but in the way of sport. That is the world in which we are all enjoying ourselves so much nowadays. Robert and I went to Burlingame to stay over the Fourth. There was a great deal of excitement on the Links. Alice Hoffman seemed to be the favorite player. Many people knew the cup would be hers. I had watched all the players for several days, and made up my mind Mrs. Bowers would be the winner. She plays a fine game. She has a quick subtle swing that seems a surprise even to the ball when it dashes through the air. She seems to be perfectly poised and sure of herself. Mrs. Bowers is one of the scientific players with whom it is not always a question of luck. Alice Hoffman's golf is strong and daring, but it is not the graceful game that Maud Scott and Alice Moffit showed us a year ago. Alice is too strong; she is such a determined character, the ball seems to be hypnotized—but that is not golf. Mrs. Gilman Brown and Caro Crockett play the same careful, deeply studied game. They love it, and in the end they are sure to be triumphant. Caro Crockett was a picture when she made her long drive. She is a pretty girl anywhere. Her success was well deserved, and I do not think she ever before realized her popularity. Edith McBean is one of those who will yet be among the foremost players.

After the contest all Burlingame sat about the porch and became quite demonstrative to each other and enthusiastic about the game. It is really unfortunate how few people nowadays feel sufficiently secure of their positions to give vent to their feelings. Even my best friends bow coldly sometimes when in Burlingame, as they say, "How do you do, Cricket?" I endeavor to put a person like that at her ease, for I feel so sorry for her. Mama says that's where being a thoroughbred makes itself obvious. I never saw Mrs. Henry Scott look better than she did on Wednesday. Girls are all fond of her, she is so distinctly sympathetic. Helen Hopkins, too, looked stunning, as did Therese Morgan and Mrs. Joe Tobin. After a long day at Burlingame, I was glad to go to the Hopkins to dinner. We had a very jolly evening and next day I loitered about their place with the girls. We discussed the people we know and talked a deal about the girls who are engaged and half engaged. We always consider an affair a half engagement if it has not been announced. There are several of those on the tapis at present. One of them will unite one of the nicest and brightest girls to a young man who is particularly well endowed with the luxuries of this world. It is going to be a great surprise to most people, for they have not been seen much together. In fact, everyone links his name with that of another girl—but she understands.

It is a great pity that there is not a restaurant like Pastori's down near San Mateo or Menlo Park. Leila is constantly writing me about different dinners to which she goes in San Rafael, and a great number of them take place out at Fairfax. The drive is jolly and then the cooking is excellent. Why does not one fill the two wants of San Mateo by building a beautiful big hotel down there and have an open air restaurant? I am sure it would be a capital investment. Think, too, of the fun we should all derive from it. I begged Robert to make the venture, but he says he is not sufficiently rich. It is a curious thing, but before I married Robert I looked upon him as having a never ending bank account. Such a thing as having to retrench in my housekeeping or anything of that sort never occurred to me. But I find it is just the same as it was with Mama. I have my income, and of course it is very liberal, but Robert will allow no bills. He says they cause too much unhappiness. Bills to me are as natural and necessary as three meals a day. So I have made a little arrangement with Papa to charge things to him and I can pay him when I get ready. Of course I hope Robert will never discover it. I am such a poor manager. When I first received my allowance, it seemed so huge I bought quantities of things I did not need. Now I need the money. I am so glad I have such a duck of a father; he immediately came to my assistance. But that is unfair to Mama and Leila, so I must not let it happen again.

I met Mrs. Harvey in the train the other day going down to Del Monte. She is one of the people who love it. My heart immediately went out to her. If I only could induce Mama to let me stay down there, and Robert could come from Saturday until Tuesday. She does not think I ought to. The Hagers are there and are simply wild about it. The weather is so lovely and I adore the flowers and beautiful big trees. Bertha Dolbee and Helen Wagner are also enjoying the drives and swimming there. They spend most of the mornings on the Links. The people at San Rafael are all dinner crazy. Lelia has an invitation every evening. About the nicest at the hotel was one Mr. Greenway gave on Thursday evening. It was particularly well cooked, and a very jolly crowd were there, There are a good many men at the hotel now. Lawrence Scott, Bruce Webster, Harry Houghton, and ever so many more. The Boardman boys are in the village but they keep up their end by Welsh rarebit parties. Bruce Webster took about twenty to Pastori's on Saturday night. We went over to Lucia Kittle's wedding and joined the party Gerald Rathbone was there and I was surprised to think he had forsaken Burlingame even for a night. That same evening the Johnsons gave a large dinner at their home on the hill. They have an awfully pretty place and one of the finest views in the town of San Rafael. The Houghton's house on Inspiration Point has the finest, for besides the view of the hills they have that of the Bay also. Mrs. Folger, Mama and Mrs. Grant have their euchre parties once a week. Some of the girls occasionally get up a party to pass the afternoon as the Smiths did last week. Mr. and Mrs. Kimball have been staying with the Thomases. I often see Molly dining about. One girl I have particularly noticed over here is Miss Sussman. She is one girl at least of whom I have heard nothing but praise. She has been staying at the Hellers. I wish Robert and I had taken a house here, it is so nice to be able to have one's friends down for a few days. Mama and Leila could have occupied it in our absence.

I must now tell you of the Kittle wedding. Crowds of people wended their way across the Bay to be present. Lucia looked very well indeed. Nowadays I think all brides look well. This idea of being pale and sad seems to have died out. I never could quite see why a girl should be sad on her wedding day.

Dr. Sherman is tremendously clever, one of our ablest young physicians He has been associated with the Children's hospital for some time. I have heard people say there is nothing he does not know about bones.

The Kittle place in Ross valley is exceedingly pretty. After our congratulations to Dr. and Mrs. Sherman we sat about mostly under the trees, for the day was very warm. The dear little church was a mass of green and flowers. Just exactly as one expected to see a church in that picturesquely wooded valley. Most of the girls of Marin county wore organdies and other light dresses. Foulards rather represented those who crossed the Bay. I think this is the last of the summer weddings, Lucia's present were very fine. Such excellent taste had been used in their selection.

I had almost forgotten to tell you of the tennis at San Rafael. Leila was there and so was Arthur who is a most enthusiastic tennis player. He felt sad about Hardy losing but said Whitney played a particularly good game. The courts were crowded. Leila said it quite reminded her of years ago, but lately tennis seems to be coming into popularity again. Arthur thinks there is no game like it. The matches at San Rafael lasted from Saturday until Wednesday when Whitney carried off the cup.

Now, I think this is really all, so Diary, Dear, Goodby.

MRS. CRICKET.

Grand Old Men

Some men seem to defy old age. They walk erect. Their eyes are bright. Their laugh is hearty. They are men of to-day—not men of yesterday. They are also men who have kept themselves in good physical condition in the past. As we grow older waste matter accumulates in the system. The body cannot throw it off without assistance. So, little by little the machinery of the body is clogged, vitality is lowered, and enjoyment of life ceases. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, cannot make old men young, but it does make them strong and healthy. By removing the waste accumulations, by increasing the blood supply, by strengthening the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition, and thus increasing the assimilative and nutritive powers, "Golden Medical Discovery" makes grand old men.

"I suffered for six years with constipation and indigestion, during which time I employed several physicians, but they could not reach my case," writes Mr. G. Popplewell, of Eureka Springs, Carroll Co., Ark. "I felt that there was no help for me, could not retain food on my stomach; had vertigo and would fall helpless to the floor. I commenced taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and little 'Pellets.' I am now in good health for one of my age—60 years. I owe it all to Dr. Pierce's medicines."

Dr. Pierce's Pellets greatly benefit old men by keeping the bowels in activity.

Shade Won't Work

because it isn't mounted on THE IMPROVED HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLER. A perfect article. No tacks required. Notice name on roller when buying your shades.

NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned has, by order of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of California, been appointed assignee in bankruptcy of Prosley C. Hyman in the place and stead of Henry C. Hyde, the former assignee, deceased.

Dated June 27th, 1900.

FRANK L. OWEN, Assignee.

DUNCAN SPRINGS HOPLAND Mendocino Co.

Two miles from railroad station; 101 miles from San Francisco; enequalled soda and magnesia springs; hospitable management; first-class table; hard-finished hotel; picturesque site and surroundings; two trains daily; long-distance telephone; terms $10 to $12 per week; housekepping cottages $15 to $20 per month. Waters bottled by W. H. Bone, 605-607 Merchant street, S. F. Through fare $3 80 Send for circulars. Address O. HOWELL.

Brushes for barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bath-houses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS., Brush Mfrs.

TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO STREET

573-579 Market Street, San Francisco | R. H. PEASE, President and Manager. | 73 and 75 First Street, Portland, Ore.

MONTROSE BICYCLE SENT FREE

on approval to your address WITHOUT A CENT IN ADVANCE. SEND US YOUR ORDER, state whether you wish lady's or man's wheel; give color, height of frame and gear wanted and WE WILL SHIP THE WHEEL C. O. D. on approval, allowing you to uncrate and examine it fully before you accept it. If it is not all and more than we claim for it, and a better wheel than you can get for any where near the price from any one else, refuse it and we will pay all express charges ourselves. The "MONTROSE" Bicycle at our Special Agent's sample price of $16.50 is the greatest bargain in a bicycle ever offered. We guarantee it equal to any $40 wheel on the market, and you need not accept it nor pay a cent if you do not find it as we represent. We are EXCLUSIVE BICYCLE MANUFACTURERS and take this method of quickly introducing our 1900 MODELS. This offer of a sample wheel at this low price is made to secure a RIDER AGENT in each town to represent us and take orders. Our agents make money fast.

SPECIFICATIONS. Frame, 22, 24 or 26 inch; ladies, 22 inch. Best Shelby seamless tubing with forged connections, flush joints, improved expander device to fasten seat post and handle bar; Royal Archcrown; the celebrated Mavis hubs and hanger—the easiest running known; Record "A" tires, the best and one of the most expensive tires on the market. The genuine $4 Mesinger Hygienic saddle; pedals, tools and accessories the best obtainable. Enameled in black, maroon or coach green, highly finished and ornamented; special finished nickeling on all bright parts. We thoroughly test every piece of material that goes into this machine. Our binding year's guarantee bond with each bicycle.

FREE to any one sending the $16.50 cash in full with order we will send free a genuine Burdick 10,000 mile barrel pattern cyclometer; or a high grade floor pump. Your money all back if you are not perfectly satisfied.

CHEAP WHEELS. We do not manufacture the cheap department store kind of wheels, such as many new concerns and big supply houses advertise and sell as high grade. We can furnish them however, at $5 to $7 stripped; or $9.75 to $12.50 complete. We do not guarantee nor recommend them. BEFORE ORDERING a bicycle of any one else, no matter who or how cheap, write us and let us tell you how much we can save you on the same machine.

If you are UNABLE to BUY a wheel we can assist you to EARN A BICYCLE by distributing catalogues for us a few days. We need one person in each town for this purpose. We have several hundred SECOND HAND WHEELS taken in trade which we will close out at $8 to $10 each; also some shopworn samples and '99 models very cheap. Send for Bargain List. OUR RELIABILITY is unquestioned. We refer to any bank or business house in Chicago, or any express or railroad company. We will send you letters of reference direct from the largest banks in Chicago if you wish it.

SEND YOUR ORDER today. This low price and these special terms of shipment without deposit will be withdrawn very soon. Give name of this paper.

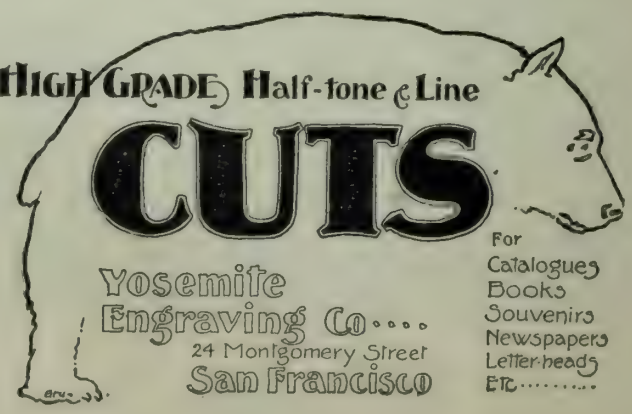
J. L. MEAD CYCLE COMPANY, Chicago, Ill.

We Make the Cuts in this Paper.



IN BOOKDOM

WOMEN writers are supposed from the very fact of their femininity to revel in sentiment. It is easy to perceive the pleasure they extract from one of their own romantic scenes, by the length of time it takes them to tell it. The few paragraphs in which a man often glides over the episode of his otherwise interesting hero's, proposal, are very different from the "linked sweetness long drawn out," in which the lady novelist tells how Arabella's head slowly sank upon Algernon's shoulder, and what he did after it was there. As a general thing men's heroines please men, and the woman novelist's hero pleases women. An average human being who has not the eye of genius, can never quite pierce through the roseate light which envelopes the differentiation of the sexes, even in mental capacity, and he sees his heroine either as an unreally perfect creature, or a man dressed up in petticoats, while she—well, if she is a married woman her hero is really too "awfully nice" and gentle for any use, and if unmarried—is just as apt to be a feminine monster wearing a dress suit.

However in the sort of tale which is now in the ascendency—a mixture of the influences of Stevenson, Kipling and other distinctly unpsychological romancers,—it does not matter so much what your hero and heroine are like. His silk small clothes matter more, in a historical novel, and the rapidity with which he can "To horse, to horse," and ride off to thrilling adventures, while the haughty lady in the tower drops a red rose. He always returns and claims her in the end, although (a fact potent only to the reader), he could have had her at any time during the exciting events ensuing, for the mere asking. Upon the cleverness with which the hero is hoodwinked in this regard by the author depends the length of his remarkable activities, and the success of a book. Women writers are learning the trick too. Their character sketching on the whole is becoming more vague and the arrangement of rings and trapezes upon which the characters cavort, more complicated. If a man goes fast enough, he will escape your sight, and if the women and men in a novel will only hurry along at the requisite pace, and perform the necessary number of actions, meeting with an extraordinary amount of picturesque preliminaries to the inevitable ending, what matter it if their qualities are misfits, and their backs conidn't be told one from another?

S. R. Crockett won his place as one of the popular writers of the day by his sympathetic delineations of types of Scottish character. He is also—for a man and a canny Scotchman "unco' fond" of sentiment. He wrote one book, all about a Lilac Suubonnet, which is just one man proposing to one girl, and doing it over and over again, from beginning to end. The average reader enjoys a "refined delineation of the affections," and his lad and lassie who made love, whole-heartedly under the Lilac Sunbonnet appealed to that general sense—which loves a lover.

But now his latest is The Isle of the Winds, a romance of Scotland and the West Indies in the seventeenth century, an adventurous romance. Of course, and how these adventurous romances do sell! They are also easily dramatized. And they stir the heart like the tales of the days of chivalry. In this last romance of Crockett's, long enough to while away a summ r's afternoon (and the sort one would like to burn the midnight oil over to finish) there are plenty of "lassie bairns," "creepie stools," "cruisie lamps," and "hoot awa's," to say nothing of rather grewsome murders and merry lovemakings. It is pulsating with good, warm, human life; and the sturdiness of the adventure, the winsomeness of his coy red-cheeked lassies, the wholesome kindliness of heart, of the men, the quaint humor of his old people, make the romance very charming. Its text, as we are told in the epilogue is that ever new-old one—"Many waters cannot quench love, neither can the floods drown it."

* *

A residence abroad often seems to do strange things with the Puritanical consciences of our American women. Artists and Litterateurs hope to gain from it that broadening influence, necessary to the development of a mind which seeks to see things in a proper perspective. But there is perhaps such a thing as becoming so broad, under the influence of Old World ideas of morality, as to knock down all one's mental fences, and grow rather dull as to the difference between a question of morals and one of æsthetics.

Blanche Willis Howard's last book, published after her death and written after her residence in Germany, where she had lived since her marriage with an Herr Professor, is rather dull, and certainly steeped in an unconvincing sort of sentimentalism. The Garden of Eden she calls it, and the Garden seems to be a cloyingly romantic place, where it is considered legitimate to wander at one's own sweet will, even with another woman's husband—if he happens to love you. The New England heroine—whe is hurried abroad as soon as practicable, where she remains until the end of the book and pursues a somewhat sentimental literary career—certainly has more than her share of ill-luck, as the first man she loves is a married man, and the second one is too and no one else makes any impression on her elevated soul. She flies from one lover at the entreaty of her mother, and forgets him—after years, when she falls in love with the other. This time she does not fly, but enjoys her "Garden of Eden" for awhile, until he dies.

"A little while they had together, and that is all the time there is in the longest life upon this beautiful, sad, glad earth—a little while."

Which is rather a gloomy conclusion for a woman to come to—and at the beginning of her career Blanche Howard wrote some really fresh, strong tales.

* *

Now what is the difference between the sentiment of the one, and the sentimentality of the the other—writer? There are as many sorts of sentiment, as there are individualities,—or books. That which creates a response in one heart, does not in another; but, roughly speaking, the book whose sentiments find the widest response in the hearts of the public is the one that wins, and you may be sure it is not the extreme of sentimentality which does it either. Crockett is to be congratulated upon the vigor and charm of his latest book, and coming in the summer time, it will read well to the accompaniment of mountain rills, or the lapse of waves by the seashore.

* *

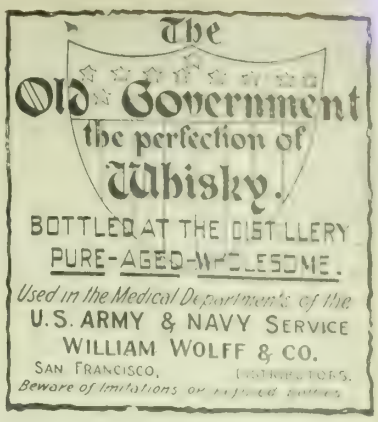
Here is a book by that intrepid woman, who has such independent views of her art, a scorner of critics, and scorner of rules of romance too,—Marie Corelli. She writes for the public direct she says, and somehow she reaches its heart too, though not a critic in England will write a good word for her books. They are reeking with sentiment, but now and then they sound a true note as well, and if they were more simple, and less bizarre and splendid in a way, we have thought, they would stand a chance for a longer life. But here she does give us something more simple, and closer to real life as it is,—in Boy—A Sketch; her most important work since the lurid Sorrows of Satan, and very different. The language, like a garment which has been carefully fitted, is more suitable for such a theme, and is less likely, too, to burst out into pathological fire-works, of the kind which adorns her more meteoric works. But this book is only the story of a bright, winning child's gradual development into early manhood. It relates the short-comings in his character which overtake him then, to the deep sorrow of his friends, and in the end, his own touching recognition of the fact that he has been a deep disappointment to them and to himself. However, the author kindly allows him to die on the field of glory in South Africa, in the noble fashion of all soldiers who have unostentatiously done their duty. There are several unusual facts in the book—in the first place we are shown distinctly that a boy's best friend is not always his mother, the faults in Boy's character being partly attributable to the fact that his mother, when providentially given the chance, refused to turn him over unreservedly to the wise spinster, who loved him, and would, we are made to feel sure, have brought him up in the way he should go. His mother, however, like a great many other mothers, was very far from being wise or worthy of her charge, and nature having given her the child, had not felt called upon to perfect its work by endowing her with mental powers sufficient to guide him in his development. At the first glimpse of such a situation, one is only too apt to smile, as one does when he hears of a spinster addressing a mother's meeting; but after all there is nothing in the nature of things to prevent a spinster from doing the governing part of a mother's work better than the mother herself. There is nothing truer than that it takes more than one intelligence to properly rear a child. And isn't this rather an odd subject for Marie Corelli, spinster, to be writing about so touchingly and realistically? It strikes us as did the appearance of Ouida's. "The Silver Christ," "The Dog of Flanders," and other little sketches, which showed her in a more idyllic line than heretofore, but which made us like her genius the better. Boy, being called a sketch, does not lay claim to much in the novel line, but as a delineation it is not uninteresting.

The Isle of the Winds, a Romance of Scotland and the West Indies in the 17th Century; by S. R. Crockett. Doubleday & McClure Co., New York.

The Garden of Eden; a Novel by Blanche Willis Howard. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

Boy, a Sketch, by Marie Corelli. J. B. Lippincott Co., Philadelphia.

GRACE A. LUCE.



IF YOU WANT THE
BEST COAL OIL.
BUY

There is not an ounce of headache in a barrel of it—Jesse Moore "AA" whtskey.

What Are Club Cocktails?

"A MODERN ECSTASY" is a Shakespearian definition for a "Cocktail." "Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings."

Wherever good livers are found, wherever conviviality exists, even to the most remote corners of the earth, the "CLUB COCKTAIL" reigns supreme as a fashionable drink.

The "CLUB COCKTAILS" never vary; they are always the same. The secret of their perfect blend is that they are kept six months before being drawn off and bottled.

"Cocktails" that are served over the bar do not contain these indispensable qualities.

Seven Varieties. Manhattan, Martini, Vermouth, Holland Gin, York, Tom Gin, Whisky.

For sale by all first class dealers.

G. F. HEUBLEIN & BRO., Sole Proprietors.

29 Broadway, New York, N. Y. Hartford, Conn. London.

PACIFIC COAST AGENTS
SHERWOOD & SHERWOOD,
Los Angeles San Francisco Portland

Well No. 2 of the Florence Oil Development and Exploiting Company, operating in the Kittleman Hills, Kings County, California, offices Safe Deposit Building.

Well No. 2 of the Florence Oil Development and Exploiting Company, operating in the Kittleman Hills, Kings County, California, offices Safe Deposit Build ng.

LONDON.

The Archbishop of Rouen and the Bicycle Skirt

The Salle des Fetes, Paris, Erected by the Countess Castellane to Replace the Charity Bazaar.

PARIS.

Charity Bazaars and Smart Costumes.

LONDON.

ACTRESS and lady of title, English and American, middle-class matron, and all the London women are yet laboring for the cause of the armies in South Africa. For the first time in their lives,—to all outward appearances—"smart" people this season have been compelled to take serious views; and flippancy is no longer fashionable. To be "smart" is to be a "thourough-going worldling," and to be a thourough-going worldling here now, you must have not only a patriotic but a personal interest, (if not connection) in the "flower of the army," down there in Africa. The effect of their labors on the Grande Dames is clearly visible even through the quantity of pain on their faces, which is the fashion here now, as the pale cheeks and red lips are in Paris, I saw Lady Georgiana Curzon, the American beauty, and English peeress, on her way down to Woodlands yesterday to try to find some little respite from her ardvous labors as Ambassadress of Mafeking, and the director of the fortunes of the Yeomanry hospitals. But even her time of rest will be no sinecure, as at least one of her private secretaries, is to follow her down, I believe,—and it has taken three the past week to cope with the work of the Mafeking fund alone. By the way, the Duchess of Marlborough chanced to be taking the same train; a beautiful woman; tall, dark and exquisite, but to our American eyes unsuitably dressed in a frock of lite crepe-de-chine, embroidered. But to return—it is not only the grande-dame who makes sacrifices. What would the charitable entertainments be, without the actresses who assist as sellers of programs or drinks, admired of course by the crowd, but to a large degree snubbed by the aristocracy. 'Tis an ordeal which spoils tempers--to say nothing of clothes. Why, the ruin of one costly gown a day at those bazaars is none too liberal allowance. It is admissable for some titled lady, "born to the purple," (or whose husband was) to doff it for the occasion and appear in something servicable, but the actress must look her best. That is what she is there for. That is her cue, as it were, and if she hadn't always taken it heretofore, she wouldn't be there. But princesses, duchesses, actresses, and all feminine world alike, at the National Bazaar last week, trailed their long, fragile gowns over the temporary wooden floor which was rough and dirty. On the first day insult was added to injury by a heavy rain outside imagine then the mud, over which these elegantly attired creatures, stoically glided, rustling about the crowded rooms with both hands full.

The casualties among the lovely gowns of the actresses serving at the American bar were many and tragic. Miss Nellie Stewart succeeded in remaining seemingly oblivious to the fact that her exquisite white-cloth gown, was rapidly acquiring a sombre border, Miss Fanny Ward saw, as the minutes went by, the irrevocable destruction of a delicious French gown of peach-blow voile over pink silk, elaborately trimmed with designs in fine lace let into the voile, while Mrs, George Giddons, who had been dainty as a Watteau figure, in a green and whith foulard, with black velvet pipings and vest of Irish point lace—bore smilingly the harrowing knowledge that she was wearing it for the last time. But Mrs. Brown Potter, who had gone home from the Charing Cross Bazaar, in a new white lace dress, black with dirt to the knees, had gained by experience and appeared in an indestructable, easily cleaned, but very smart white alpaca especally mad eover in Paris for the occasion.

Ascot gowns now, as much as the occupation of Pretoria, form the topic of the day, and to make a round of visits to the best dressmakers and celebrated shops, as I have done, fills one's mind with elegant concoctions of light materials and colors, which are to burst forth Ascot week on the most fashionable women of the Kingdom. Black and white, as so often before, seems to be the favorite combination. One costume, to be worn by a brunette who is not slender, was of white and black foulard—the ground white with large-sized round black spots—made with a skirt finely pleated all round, and edged with many rows of fine black lace. The simply fashioned bodice was trimmed with black lace and had the finishing touch of green at neck and waist. The sleeves were something very "late" indeed, tight to the elbows, from which fell a full frill, to be completed by under-sleeves (buttoned to the wrist) of white muslin. A black lace gown, I liked even better, falling over soft shimmering white satin, with glimses of rose-colored chiffon, on the waist, and girdleclasp of jewels. The neck was cut semi-low, not discreetly filled in, but really low, giving space for a string of pearls to be worn. You may be sure that this gown is not intended for one of those, 85 debutanes whose neck has grown scraggy through the stress of many seasons. Then there was a cream guipure gown to be worn with a black picture hat, a gray crepe de-chine, embroidered with fine silver, for which a big pink hat is destined.

But Ascot week, owing to the uncertain British climate, requires cloth as well as muslin, and I saw cloth gowns of pale blue, pink and mauve shades.

The Ascot enclosure will blossom, in places, as the rose, for there are light pink parasols, as well as hats, and petticoats which one is bound at times to see: but on the whole the best dressed women will carry plain silk parasols.

But what a different scene as to costume is now being presented here, in stage-land, where Mr. Beerbohm Tree—ever energetic—is now producing our old American classic—"Rip Van Winkle"—with himself in the title role, of course. The end of the first act of this production is like a scene of revelry in some old Dutch painting. The slender English men and women of the cast are turned by their clumsy costumes into the dumpy stolid Dutch denizens of New York a century ago. Everything is historically correct from the clattering sabots to the dainty white caps on the women's heads. It is Rip himself who dominates the first scene, for Mr. Tree is at his best when bringing out the humorous side of the character. He is in and out everywhere in this act, playing kissing games with the demure Dutch maidens, carrying the children on his back, gaily footing it with the dancers, and finally rolling on the floor at the mercy of his furious wife. In fact, he is a typical picture of the merriest, most reckless ne'er-do-well, with a droll accent, easy philosophy, jolly laugh, and all the other fascinating qualities of an incorrigable. Lily Hanbury, who plays Gretchen, is almost too beautiful for the part, but makes an excellently realistic stage picture in the first act, bending over the queer old Dutch wash-tub and doing quite a respectable bit of washing, her shapely arms shining with soap-suds.

KATRIONA.

PARIS.

FIVE years ago, in America, the question of the bicycle skirt, (or lack of it) for women, ceased to be discussed as a matter of vital importance. It gradually disappeared with the fashion of the wheel itself, until the length (or briefness) of the golf-skirt took its place. Even that is now decided by everyone wearing a skirt long enough, to satisfy the most puritanical. But now over here in France the bicycle skirt comes up again, though it will soon go down—where it belongs. Not in Paris, oh, no,—Paris is occupied with the remaining trails of the glory of the Exposition, visits of royalties, fashions on the Bois, the rise of the American woman as the popular hostess of the hour, picture galleries, and such trifing matters. What to wear on an automobile is a question which has relegated the bicycle to the unfashionable shades. But down in the provinces—at Rouen—some one has discovered, and an Archbishop at that, that women are wearing divided skirts.

One might say that the French ecclesiastical authorities, on the whole, have been having trouble with the wheel and the skirt, ever since they come in juxtaposition. Cardinal Richard not long ago issued his manifesto that priests should not wheel in their cassocks. Why? Because it compelled them to ride women's wheels, and the resulting spectacle was not (clerically) considered edifying.

But that was an earlier effort than this provincial endeavor which has now attracted the attention of Paris. Contrary to the case in Paris, where the passing show is too varied, its movement too fast, for any fad to remain alive very long, the bicycle is not a dead issue in the Provinces. It is the country, where it is somewhat of a necessity, that it is popular. The last ecclesiastic to become exercised over the divided skirt, worn by most of the women riders, is the Archbishop of Rouen. He says that the bifurcated garment is unwomanly and un-Christian. It is neither orthodox nor gentle. Whether or not it is comortable does not enter into the matter,—from the venerable man's point of view. If then, it is wrong for a Christian woman to wear it, the warfare against the garment should have its headquarters at the church. The first militant step taken was when the Archbishop instructed the priests of his diocese to refuse admission to the Cathedral to those women who rode up, attired in reprehensible costume. Now, what is the result? Rouen is a central point, being at the convergence of excellent roads, for many French cyclists and tourists who come to see the Cathedral, and most of the women in these parties arrive unsuspectingly, in divided skirts. The old verger meets them, carrying over his arm the ecclesiastical indulgence of a long skirt, which he offers. He has laid in a large supply. He chooses them out without regard to color or fit. If you are tall you are given a long one, but if you are short you are given a long one too, and what does the verger care for the fact that a blue waist does not go with a green skirt, or vice-versa? He knows only that if you pay a franc, you may put on the ugly, man selected thing, and thus arrayed, enter and survey the wonders of the Cathedral. The women of the city, of course knew about the new order of things, they were warned about the old verger, and bifurcated skirts are becoming a thing of the past on the streets of Rouen. But the English tourist,—she grumbles about the franc, the German accepts the inevitable with docility, the American protests, to her escort—"it is so unbecoming." One replied, I know, with unexampled truthfulness, that "it wasn't, he preferred her so."

We have lively times now in the American colony, the fashionable season here, properly lasting until the close of June. This means that the stream of travel from New York to Paris is becoming smaller by every boat and the rush is over, but those still here are entertaining with magnificence. The Countess Boni de Castellane (Anna Gould) has succeeded in affecting a certain reform in men's attire, at one of her recent entertainments, which many other social leaders, at other times, have labored in vain to bring about. At her dinner dance and flower-fete the men appeared in coats of blue, green, red, white, purple and gray, faced with equally contrasting colors; the result, by those exclusives who were present at the affair, being pronounced most picturesque.

Although French society is the most exclusive in the world, one American has been exceedingly well received therein this season. That is Mrs. Potter Palmer. As everyone knows, she possesses to a remarkable degree, the art of social leadership, and laid for herself the foundation of an international social career, at the time she was President of the Board of Lady Managers of the Chicago Exposition. But it did not follow that she would be the center of American life at the Paris Exposition, yet such has been the case. She is given precedence at dinners, even over Mrs. Peck, wife of the Commissioner, also from Chicago. She has also sent for her silver plate! This may not at first glance seem so significant, but it certainly implies that she in her turn, is entertaining, and entertaining titled foreigners who could not be asked to eat off anything less than private silver plate. Even royalty—who knows?

I heard two girl art-students in a cafe speak of her, the other day, as she passed by in her carriage.

"She was known as one of the handsome Honores in Chicago," said one, "before she married Potter Palmer, who was not so aristocratic as he is now. The Honores, men and women, were all tall and dark-eyed, and this goes well with her prematurely gray hair."

"Let me see," said the other, "her sister married Col. Fred Grant, I think, who belongs to a family, which on the contrary might be called plain." "Yes, and it was while with Mrs. Palmer in Italy," pursued the other, complacently sipping from her glass, "that their daughter Miss Julia Grant, met her future husband, Prince Cantacuzene. They say that when Miss Grant was at West Point, the cadets used to scramble for the petals of the roses that fell from her bouquet." "That was very nice," sighed the other. "At any rate she was married from Mrs. Palmer's home at Newport, and the Chicago woman's social career, seems not to have reached a climax yet. This is not only because she had the Honore beauty, but a good deal of American common sense. "And perhaps that may account for Mrs. Palmer's social success—common sense applied to social leadership.

BABETTE.

The Orignal Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a riva and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

A fellow once said, "I want some whiskey, and I want it bad;" so they didn't give him Jesse Moore.

BUYERS' GUIDE

SAN FRANCISCO.

RELIABLE BUSINESS HOUSES.

City or Country Orders promptly filled. Catalogues and Price Lists sent on application. Correspondence solicited.

Mention The Wave.

ATTORNEYS AT LAW.

MILTON J. GREEN, Attorney at Law. Referee in Bankruptcy in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Office room 94, Chronicle bldg.

A. K. DAGGETT, Drawing of deeds and all legal papers a specialty. Notary Public, 14 Montgomery St., S. F. Telephone, 3:5.

DENTIST.

DR. C W. DECKER, Dentist, 806 Market Street, Phelan Building.

HOMŒOPATHIC REMEDIES

WESTERN HOMŒOPATHIC PHARMACY—130 Powell St. S. F. W.W. Stocker. Tel. Bush 23.

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.

ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU, Main Office 510 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Dealers in all kinds of Newspaper Information. Advance Reports on all Contract Work. Phone Main 1042.

RESTAURANT.

POODLE DOG RESTAURANT, northeast corner of Eddy and Mason streets. Private dining and banquet rooms Telephone main 429. Blanco & Brun, Proprietors.

PRETTY WORK

NICE PRESS COPIES

Use Smith Premier Type-Writer

The telegraph department of the Southern Pacific Co. dispensed with all other makes and now use the SMITH PREMIER EXCLUSIVELY.

Also more than 200 banks use the

SMITH PREMIER Type-Writer

We Rent New Typewriters
Art Catalogue

L. & M. ALEXANDER & CO.

110 Montgomery St, S. F.

Branches: Portland, Seattle, Los Angeles.

Eighty-five Fine Sunny Rooms. Elevator Service

THE BRADBURY,

J. A. FERSON, Proprietor.

FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL

N. W. Cor. Polk and California Sts.,

San Francisco, Cal.

Excellent Cuisine References required.
Transient trade solicited. Rates $2.00 and upwards
Reasonable by the month.

TEL. HYDE 2771

A Bowery Rivalry.

ROSY RILEY waited the coming of her steady, Dionysius Jeremiah McGuirk. It was the night of the D. J. McGuirk Association's annual ball and the Riley home was torn up to the very foundation. For Rosy had been invited to lead the march with Dionysius, the President, known to the familiars of his set as Dinny.

Dinny and Rosy had kept company for nearly a year, but as yet he had not spoken the fateful words. He called on Rosy every Sunday and Wednesday night, on which occasions the rest of the Riley family crowded into the two rear rooms and talked in muffled voices. As Rosy's brother said, Dinny was dead stuck. Still the evenings were not marked by any particular progress toward the goal matrimonial. These two young people knew nothing of the playful badinage and make-believes of love. Rosy invariably met her visitor with a surprised "Good evenin', Dinny," and Dinny replied with a nonchalent "Good evenin', Riley," which was not meant for disrespect, for Riley was really a sort of pet name.

After this greeting Dinny and Rosy invariably and immediately seated themselves on the sofa, which now, after a year's routine, had sunk in the center. Dinny's arm stole automatically around Rosy's waist and her head sank gently on his shoulder and thus they remained from eight until ten in an apparent trance, broken only by Mr. Riley's voice declaring aloud the hour as did the watchman of old. Except that Mr. Riley's method was more conversational in this wise:

"Raw-sy—Raw-sy—I say?"

"Yes—Pap-paw?"

"D'yiz knaw what time it iz?"

Which was the signal for an immediate breaking up of the Rogers group on the settee.

But the annual ball of the D. J. McGuirk Associaton had marked an epoch in both their lives. First of all it had brought a rival upon the scene in the person of Mr. Henny Block, the blithe assistant and prospective partner in a thriving undertaker shop in the neighborhood. Henny was something of a blood. He sported russet leather shoes in the winter, wore gaily colored shirts and ties and had a stock of vaudeville witticisms which caused him to be described as splendid comp'ny. Besides this he had once been seen supping with a bleached actress in a Bowery beanery. When Mr. Block met Rosy as she came from the factory one evening and walked home with her despite the jeers of her companions, Rosy knew that she had a mash. Henny's manner was something new to her. It was carefully copied from that of the leading men on the Bowery stages and it affected her strangely after Dinny's matter-of-fact courtship.

"Miss Riley," he said, "will youse giv me the pleasure of your company to the affair Wensda' night?"

"Wensda'," faltered Rosy, remembering it was the night of Dinny's visit. "I d'no—Mr. Block, I'll have to ask me steady!"

"A—h— — — —!" said Henny.

"A—h— — —yerself!" said Rosy. "What d'youse mean?"

"A—h—h—h—He's a mug! He don't know how to treat a lady!"

"Excuse yerself, Mr. Block, he's me fren' and he's a perfeck gentl'm'n."

"Ah-h-h! Giv' him a stand-up and go wit me—an' say, ye won't know dat he ixists!"

"I'll make up me mind," said Rosy, with the instinct of a coquette, "an' I'll let youse know."

"Is dat straight?"

"Dat's straight!"

It was under the impetus of this occurrence that Dinny finally asked Rosy to lead the march at the ball.

"Well, youse go wit me, Riley, see?" he said.

And when she acquainted the Riley family with the honor that had been offered her, they looked at her with increased respect. No sane man could invite a girl to lead the grand march at a ball of his own association unless he meant to single her out from the world as the lady of his heart.

Dinny's manner when he called for Rosy was a disappointment. He was oppressed by a hired dress suit and a new shirt, the collar of which was a thorn in the neck.

Rosy had never looked better. Her lips and cheeks were red and her brown hair done "pompydore" by the girl on the next floor was sufficiently fluffy and pretty to form an admirable setting for her gypsyish face. Then she had a new pink silk shirt waist and a hat off her face with a huge pink rose nodding over its brim.

But Dinny glowered as he waited for her to put on her jacket. First of all he had scrapped with Henny Block for trying to steal his girl, and Henny had retorted with language unfit for publication. In his heart he was picturing Henny in a dress suit which he actually owned, carrying off Rosy before his very eyes. And a man can't very well start a fight at the annual ball of his own association.

So they went out and got into a crosstown car. And on the way uptown Dinny gave Rosy lessons on the proper way to lead a grand march at a chowder club ball.

"If youse get twisted," Dinny said, "I'll give youse de wink and jerk me head how yer to go. See? An' don't fall down or trip over yer feet, see? or dey'll giv' me de laugh."

Rosy listened and promised, but there was a feeling smoldering under the new shirt waist that Dinny did not shine in his role of escort as brilliantly as he did on the occasions of his visits at the Riley home. Rosy was beginning to feel the consciousness of her power. She found herself wondering if Henny would be there.

Before the march had begun Rosy was easily the belle of the ball. There was a certain ingenuousness about her. She did not swear, and she drank only sarsaparilla. Dinny went off leaving her with a group of girls and fellows at the side of the hall. Then Henny came to her side, looking more of a "dood" than ever. He came close to her and whispered in her ear:

"Say—youse is a beauty bright to-night."

"A—h—h—G'way. None o' yer funny biznes," said Rosy. But she blushed.

"Will youse dance wit me once?" hs whispered.

"I'll ask me steady," said Rosy. "I come with a gentl'm'n fren'."

"A—h—h—h—t'ell wit him. I'll break his face—de mug!"

"Excuse yourself," said Rosy haughtily.

"Ah—h—h said Henny. "He don't know how to treat yer. Say, yer out o' sight. Yer perfict hot stuff. Say, dance wit me onct—will yer—just onct?"

Henny's voice had grown low and entreating. Suddenly across the floor she saw a figure approaching—a brawny figure in a badly fitting suit towered over by a chin that looked like iron.

She spoke quickly. "Take a sneak," she said. And Henny, who had also seen the chin, took one.

Dinny took Rosy's arm roughly, pulling her out of the group.

"I'll jab dat dood in de slats if he opens his head to youse to-night," he said.

"Ah—h—h—h I'm only jollying him," said Rosy, trying to laugh. But Dinny's face was terrible to look upon.

Then the march began. Down through the hall Rosy moved on Dinny's arm, her little head poised proudly on her round neck, her pink feet twinkling in and out beneath her skirt in time to the music.

Then with a great flare of the band Dinny let go Rosy's arm at the head of the hall. She was supposed to lead a single column of girls down one side of the room while Dinny led a corresponding file of men. Then both were to meet at the foot of the hall and break into sets for the lancers.

But as Rosy lost the protecting strength of Dinny's arm under her own, she became stricken with stage fright. She faltered and her knees shook.

"Git a move on ye, Riley," said the girl behind her. But Rosy faltered—she had lost the step——.

"Make a bluff," said the girl, "for Gawd's sake, Riley, make a bluff!"

"I can't—I can't move," said Rosy; "I'll drop. Me knees is shakin'!" She began to cry like a baby.

"A—h—h—be a lady, Riley—or say, the floor-manager is on—say, drop out, Riley—on one of de chairs and I'll go on."

Rosy dropped on a chair weeping. At the moment she wished she might have died. She thought of Dinny marching proudly on expecting to meet her at the other end of the room. And now—a blur came before her eyes and she noticed the girls passing by her and commenting on her. The general opinion expressed was that she needed plain seltzer.

Just then Henny Block appeared by her side. He took her arm very gently. "Say," he said, "Miss Riley, come on out o' here. Dey're all rubberin'. Take a brace and come out."

Rosy allowed him to lead her down the narrow aisle left between the girls and the chairs until they reached the door. She was still crying.

"Ah—h—fergit it!" said Henny. "Say, dere's none o' dem rags in it wit youse. Youse de only pebble!"

Henny's lips were at Rosy's ear in a seductive whisper. Suddenly she thought of Dinny's intention to jab the slats of the man who had rescued her. She looked about her in a wild tumult.

"Let's get out o' here!" said Henny.

"I must wait for me gentl'm'n frien'," sobbed Rosy.

"Ah—h—h—! He's in a set. He can't break the set. He won't know where youse is."

"I want to go home then," said Rosy; "I'll get me hat and jacket."

"It'll take ye all night t' get them. I'll take ye home. Say, here's me hankerchief—fergit it!"

Henny led Rosy to the door, his eyes bright with triumph. He called a cab.

Rosy stared with horror. To the girls of the gang a cab was not considered respectable.

"Ah—say—," she said; "what d'youse think I am?"

"Ah—fergit it," said Henny; "I'm a gentl'm'n, I am—an' don't yer make no mistake. Yer can't go home in a car witout a hat an' in dem shoes!"

Rosy colored. She stepped across the sidewalk through the light rain that had begun to fall and entered a hansom that had answered Henny's whistle. She shrank back in the corner.

"Are youse cold?" asked Henny, politely; "dere's a blanket here on de seat."

Henny's chivalrous kindness was too much for Rosy. She burst out in a perfect passion of sobs.

"Ah—say—" said Henny, "fergit it, Miss Riley. Why don't you shake dat mug and be my stiddy? He's nothin' but a tough; say, if you wus my girl I'd do anything fer ye—say, I love youse, Rosy; kiss me onct—just onct."

Just then Henny's remarks were cut short. A heavy body was hurled against the back of the cab with such force that the vehicle jolted up on the horse's back and all but sent the driver reeling.

A white, set face appeared around the hood of the cab and Dinny with a string of profanity that almost equalled the driver's, plunged on Henny like a gorilla, seized him bodily for a minute and almost held him over his head before he flung him out wide of the cab over the wheels onto the cobble stones.

"Ye blankety, blankety, blank, blank body-snatcher," he yelled, "ye will try to steal me girl, will ye?" "Gid-ep!" he said to the driver.

Rosy's heart thrilled. Dinny sank back luxuriously in the hansom as though he were tired. Rosy's head stole gently to his shoulder.

"Dinny," she whispered, "youse can kiss me."

It was the first time, and poets have written reams on the subject of love's first kiss. But if Rosy had analyzed it, she must have admitted that it felt like a dab of cold wet flannel and landed somewhere near her ear.

She nestled close to him.

"Do you love me, Dinny?" she asked, timidly.

Dinny paused a moment as the cab swerved round a corner.

"Damned if I know, Riley," he said.

N. Y. Sun.

MOORE' POISON OAK REMEDY

Cures Poison Oak and All Skin Diseases. Sold by All Druggists.

$100 Reward $100

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Address, F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

Sold by Druggists, 75c

Hall's Family Pills are the best

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

Don't drink the first thing the bartender offers. Call for Jesse Moore "AA" whiskey and insist on getting it.

The Pianola is bringing into use thousands of pianos that have been silent for years. Call and see it at Kohler & Chase, 26 and 30 O'Farrell street. Sole agents.

DIVIDEND NOTICE—Savings and Loan Society 101 Montgomery street, corner of Sutter—The board of directors delared a dividend for the term ending June 30, 1900, at the rate of three and one-quarter (3¼) per cent per annum on all deposits free of taxes and payable on and after July 2, 1900. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of dividend as the principal from and after July 1, 1900.

CYRUS W. CARMANY, Cashier

DIVIDEND NOTICE.—Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco, 33 Post street. For the half year ending June 30th, 1900, a dividend has been declared at the rate of three (3) per cent per annum on all deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Monday July 2nd, 1900.

GEORGE A. STORY, Cashier.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.—The Continental Building and Loan Association, corner of California and Sansome streets, for the half year ending June 30th, 1900, has declared a dividend of 5 per cent per annum on Ordinary Deposits; 6 per cent on Term Deposits; 10 per cent to class "F" stock; and 12 per cent to class "A."

CAPT. OLIVER ELDRIDGE, President.
WILLIAM CORBIN, Secretary.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.—Office of the Hibernian Savings and Loan Society, corner Market, McAllister and Jones streets, San Francisco, June 27, 1900.—At a regular meeting of the board of directors of this society, held this day, a dividend has been declared at the rate of three and one-eighth [3⅛] per cent per annum on all deposits for the six months ending June 30, 1900, free from all taxes and payable on and after July 1, 1900.

ROBERT J. TOBIN, Secretary.

GERMEA

The Ideal Breakfast Dish

SAN FRANCISCO BANKS

THE BANK OF CALIFORNIA

SAN FRANCISCO

Capital, $2,000,000 Surplus, $1,000,000
Profit and Loss Account January 1st, 1900, $2,321,212
WILLIAM ALVORD.....President
CHARLES R. BISHOP.....Vice-President
THOMAS BROWN.....Cashier
S. PRENTISS SMITH.....Assistant Cashier
IRVING F. MOULTON.....Second Assistant Cashier
ALLEN M. CLAY.....Secretary

CORRESPONDENTS

New York.....Messrs. Laidlaw & Co. / The Bank of New York, N. B. A.
Baltimore.....The National Exchange Bank
Boston.....The Tremont National Bank
Chicago.....Illinois Trust and Savings Bank / Union National Bank
Philadelphia.....Philadelphia National Bank
St. Louis.....Boatmen's Bank
Virginia City, Nev...Agency of the Bank of California
London.....Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons
Paris.....Messrs. De Rothschild Freres
Berlin.....Direction der Disconto Gesellschaft
China, Japan and East Indies.....Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China
Australia and New Zealand.....The Union Bank of Australia, Ltd., and Bank of New Zealand

Letters of Credit issued available in all parts of the world.

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California Street

Guarantee Capital and Surplus.....$2,238,372 45
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash..... 1,000,000 00
Deposits July 30, 1900.....28,938,395 12

OFFICERS

President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Second Vice-President, H. HORSTMANN
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann
Ign. Steinhart, Emil Rohte, I. N. Walter,
H. B. Russ, N. Ohlandt, John Lloyd.
General Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow.

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST

Deposits July 1, 1900.....$26,952,875
Paid Up Capital..... 1,000,000
Reserve Fund..... 218, 93
Contingent Fund..... 439,608

E. B. POND, Pres. W. C. B. DE FREMERY, Vice-Pres
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier.
R. M. WELCH, Assistant Cashier.

DIRECTORS

Henry F. Allen Robert Watt, Thomas Magee,
George C. Boardman, W. C. B. de Fremery,
Daniel E. Martin, C O G. Miller, Jacob Barth,
E. B. Pond.

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.

Receives deposits. Country remittances may be made in checks payable in San Francisco, Postoffice or Wells, Fargo & Co's Money Orders, or coin by Express, but the responsibility of this bank commences only with the receipt of the money.

No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

Office Hours: 9 a. m. to 3 p. m. and Saturday evenings, for receipt of deposits only, 6:30 to 8 o'clock.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 POST STREET

Below Kearny Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000
Paid Up Capital, $300,000

JAMES D. PHELAN, President
S. G. MURPHY, Vice-President
JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Presiden
GEORGE A. STORY, Cashier
C. B. HOBSON, Assistant Cashier

DIRECTORS:—James D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, Frank J. Sullivan, Robert McElroy, Chas. S. Neal and James M. McDonald.

Interest paid on deposits.

Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co or Exchange on City Banks.

When opening accounts, send signature.

A Toilet Necessity.

WAKELEE'S COLD CREAM of Roses.

Made with pure Almond Oil and Distilled Water of Roses.

MUSEMENTS

Orpheum

Miss Lillian Burkhart; Williamson and Stone; Donohue and Nichols; Smith and Fuller; Barrere and Jules; Stella Mahew; Quaker City Quartette; Clayton, White and Marie Stuart, assisted by Miss Eva Randolph.

Reserved Seats 25c.; Balcony 10c.; Opera Chairs and Box Seats 50c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.

Columbia Theatre

BEGINNING MONDAY NIGHT, JULY 16th.
Fourth week Charles Frohman presents
HENRY MILLER
and a special company
Six nights, matinees Wed. and Sat.
In last season's greatest comedy success

THE LIARS

by Henry Arthur Jones.
July 23—"The Only Way," first time here.
July 19—First Burton Holmes Lecture Matinee

California THE POPULAR HOUSE

H. FRIEDLANDER & Co., Lessees and Managers. [Tele. Main 1731

Week Commencing Sun. Night, July 15th. Matinees Saturday Only.

Matthews & Bulger in conjunction with DUNNE & RYLEY'S ALL STAR CAST. in a Grand Revival of their Polite Funny Play

At Gay Coney Island.

Next week—"By the Sad Sea Waves.
Our Never Changing Popular Prices.

Alcazar Theatre.

BELASCO & THALL, Managers. Phone 254

Week of July 10th.
The hit of the year, every night at 8:15.

FLORENCE ROBERTS

Assisted by White Whittlesey in an artistic production of INGOMAR.

Matinee Saturday only.
Alcazar Prices, 15c, 25c, 35c, 50c.
n preparation—"The Country Girl."

Columbia Theatre.

Burton Holmes Lectures

Direction of Henry Miller.

Illustrations in colors and appropriate Motion Pictures. Two courses exactly alike.

Six Thursday matinees at 2:30
Six Sunday evenings at 8:30.

Manila, July 19 and 22.
Japan revisited, July 26 and 29.
Round About Paris, Aug. 2 and 5.
Grand Canon, Aug. 9 and 12.
Moki Land, Aug. 16 and 19.
Hawaiian Islands, 23 and 26.
Reserved seats $1, 75c., and 50c., ready Mon.

HAVE YOU EVER THOUGHT

WHAT A GAS RANGE WILL DO?

It will do everything any other cooking apparatus will do, but it will do it BETTER QUICKER, EASIER and CHEAPER!

IT WILL DO AWAY WITH

Dirt, Worry and Ashes
Your Kitchen will be Clean,
Your working hours shorter.
Your Food will be better Cooked,
Your Life Prolonged, and
Your Happiness assured.

STOVE DEPARTMENT,
415 POST ST., SAN FRANCISCO

When taken at the proper time a little Jesse Moore "AA" whiskey will prevent a cold.

AT THE THEATERS

IT IS scarcely a mooted point any longer which carries a women farthest along the road to success on the stage—cleverness or beauty. Almost all American girls are pretty—but beauties among them are as rare as in other counties. But even if a women has the real thing she is greatly handicapped by a lack of cleverness—at much more of a disadvantage than the plain talented woman, whom we have become used to as the type of the successful actress. Here in "A Contented Woman," at the California we have a beautiful girl, Miss Norma Whalley, in the title-role, and with commendable earnestness she is trying to act up to her looks. It is not an easy job, and of course she fails. Remembering that extremely clever pretty woman, Caroline Miskel Hoyt, in the role, we are not edified by this crude performance of Miss Whalley's. It wouldn't have mattered whether or not the woman in politics portrayed in this play was beautiful, so long as she was charming or had a magnetic personality, or a knowledge of her art, or any of these qualities which outbalance a lack of mere beauty. The play involves the ludicrous situation of one of the supposedly gentler sex running as candidate for mayor of the town against her own husband. The story of the campaign of politics as caricatured by Hoyt in the usual broadly farcical manner, gives opportunity for all sorts of absurdities, and for the usual large number of musical specialties. The characters are those expected to surround a contented woman or any other sort of woman—when she gets into politics. Bulger as Brighton Bells, a saloon boss, is true to life and funny in the same old way. He displays the seamy, waydown side of politics, with the able assistance of an ex-prize fighter, taken by Andrew Bode, and "me friend the bar-keep," by C. Herbert. Tony Hart, this time as Uncle Toddy, does much better work than in the earlier plays of the engagement. He is about as funny as anything in the piece, and has a laughable situation when at last subjugated by his tyrant better-half, and sent to bed with the chickens. Louise Gunning, graceful and pretty as ever, adds very much to the musical attractions of the play.

* *

By all odds the most interesting feature of the Orpheum bill this week is the work of the Four Cohans in their farce written by George Cohan—"Money to Burn." The lines and situations of the play are genuinely amusing, and each of the Cohans act for all there is in them, tempting one to the opinion that even in a much less clever farce, they could not fail to entertain any audience. The closing of the farce, with George Cohan's tremendously clever dance, as a Salvation Army Recruit, is a fitting climax. George Cohan himself is the favorite with the audience. His rendition of Splinters, a tough boy is inimitably done and not overdone.

But it occurs to one to wonder if even the Cohan's could make anything interesting out of that inconceivably stupid playlet—"The Waldorf-Metropole Episode." Not a ray of amusement was visible on the composite face of the audience until the appearance of the physical culture Professor. But even that excitement soon blew over. Marie Stuart rather saved the thing by her clever imitations of foreign music hall singers, and her French song.

The Todd-Judge family of acrobats are the best seen here in some time; the exhibition of muscular developement given by one of them with an open cabinet and calcum lights is a vaudeville novelty.

Stella Mayhew, the negro impersonator, is realistic in her methods, but can scarcely equals the darkey impersonations of Quaker City Quartette, in their barber-shop scene. The audience stays for the Biograph pictures this week, as they are of war subjects in South Africa and the Philippines, and popular.

* *

Florence Roberts, playing "Camille" at the Alcazar this week, attracts large audiences. She invests the part with the same fascination, pathos and fire, with which she endowed "Sapho." This is due to an extemely sympathetic voice, a strong emotional temperament to draw upon, and a natural archness of manner. Also, her irregularly expressive features and quickness of gesture quite fit in with one's preconceived idea of a French woman.

Mr. Whittlesey as Armand has a far more difficult part to portray than Jean.

Here we have a man who has a taste of the tragedy himself, and goes through all sorts of states of feeling, quite different from the phlegmatic Jean from the Provinces. In both plays he presents an appearance attractive enough to warrant some of the fuss made over him. But in "Camille" he is expected to do a good deal more—to express emotions with that Gallic openness so foreign to the Anglo-Saxon masculine temperament. However, perhaps the hardest task for Whittlesey was going through so large a part of the first act with nothing to say. But as a lover he leaves little to be desired, and certainly fairly divides the honors of the performance with Florence Roberts.

* *

With a performance of "A Contented Woman" at the California Theatre to-night Dunne and Ryley's comedians will bid farewell to Hoyt's farce comedies and to-morrow night they will stage "At Gay Coney Island," the piece in which Mathews and Bulger starred for several seasons. The full strength of the company will be in the cast. The specialties will be entirely new.

* *

"The Dancing Girl," probably the most sickeningly sentimental play foisted upon the public in these later days and very popular for that reason, is at the Grand this week, and doing good business. Morosco's is finding its level again, getting nearer and nearer the old days of thrill and scenic effect at every jump. Next week, "The Great Ruby" should make it all seem quite like the old days.

The new Frawleys are, as they were in the days of their late engagement at the California, a mixed lot. There is not an actor in the bunch who is not good in some one line, but a play which fits one-half the cast is generally a misfit on the rest. This week, for example, Mary Van Buren, she of the stately beauty and the sparkle, was cast for a sentimental cripple on crutches, and Frank Mathieu, who excels in a smart society part, played an enamored fisherman full of high ideals and rant. On the other hand, Harrington Reynolds was admirably fitted to his role of melodramatic old man.

This is leaving out Lackaye, who is a good actor wherever he is cast, a perpetual delight. Never since melodrama was called off the boards has an actor at the Grand received such an enthusiastic series of curtain-calls as were given him after the third act of "The Dancing Girl." And he deserved them, if the play did not.

* *

The fourth week of the season at the Columbia Theater, of Henry Miller and his special company, will see the rendition of Henry Arthur Jones' comedy "The Liars," beginning Monday night and continuing the week, with Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

This is the play with which Miller inaugurated his last season at the Columbia, and its success will be remembered.

For the week commencing Monday, the 23d, they will present "The Only Way," that successful dramatization of Dickens' "A Tale of Two Cities," in which Miller has been appearing in New York. Over seventy-five people will be included in the production, and it ought to be the star attraction of his repertoire.

* *

This week witnesses the return of the popular Miss Burkhart to the Orpheum. She is to appear in a new playlet: "Captain Suzanne," written for her by Brandon Hurst. This is the first time it has been put on, and the work of preparation has been thorough and costly.

John Donohue and Miss Mattie Nichols will give an amusing sketch, Williamson and Stone the black-face comedians introduce original novelties, and the Biograph will present new pictures.

* *

The Burton Holmes lectures begin Thursday afternoon, July 19th, at the Columbia Theatre. This lecture will be repeated on the Sunday evening following. There will be six lectures given in two courses, both courses to be alike. The subjects are: "Manila," "Japan," "Round About Paris," "The Grand Canyon of Arizona," "Moki Sands," and "The Hawaiian Islands."

* *

The sixth week of Florence Roberts' and White Whittlesey's performance of well-known plays at the Alcazar will be ushered in with a revival of the old favorite "Ingomar," first presented at the Old Bowery Theater in New York in 1851, and acted by most of the heavy stars since.

PAIN-KILLER, as an internal remedy, has no equal in cases of colic, summer complaint, dyspepsia, dysentery, and rheumatism. It is the best liniment in the world. Its action is like magic, when applied to bad sores, burns, scalds, and sprains. For the sick headache, and toothache, don't fail to try it. Avoid substitutes, there is but one PAIN-KILLER, Perry Davis'. Price 25c. and 50c.

The choicest club whiskey is Jesse Moore "AA," and in club life it is in great demand.

Wherever there is a piano there should be a pianola. The pianola plays any piano. Any one can play it. Call and see it at Kohler & Chase, 26 and 30 O'Farrell St., sole agents.

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER

A Positive Relief for PRICKLY HEAT, CHAFING, and SUNBURN, and all afflictions of the skin.

"A little higher in price, perhaps, than worthless substitutes, but a reason for it." Removes all odor of perspiration. Delightful after Shaving.

Sold everywhere, or mailed on receipt of 25c. Get Mennen's (the original.) Sample free GERHARD MENNEN Co., Newark, N.J.

HOTEL VENDOME.

At San Jose is one of Central California's most beautiful hostelries. In the midst of its own twelve-acre park; two blocks from the railroad station where almost hourly trains connect with the outside; the starting point for Lick Observatory; the center of a greater number and variety of attractions than any other place on the Coast; furnished finely, graded and watered roads for driving and cycling lead in every direction; with over 250 elegantly furnished rooms, and suites with bath and toilet; perfect in appointment, service and all the accessories of comfort, and one of the most attractive features of San Jose, the metropolis of the world renowned Santa Clara Valley.

GEO. P. SNELL,
Manager

Tavern of Castle Crag

AND SODA SPRINGS

NOW OPEN.

Located in the midst of grand and impressive mountain scenery. With Mt. Shasta and The Crags for a background.
Fine hunting and fishing.
Unsurpassed cuisine and service and reasonable rates.

RAILROAD FARE round trip, including sleeper both ways $14

For rates, terms and other information address R. B. PIXLEY, Manager.
Care Pacific Improvement Co., Crocker Building, San Francisco, Cal.

LAKE COUNTY.

New 19-passenger Yosemite Stages, all outside seats, direct to the most picturesque portion of California. Best equipped stage line in the state. Leaves Calistoga daily (Sunday excepted) at 11:30 a. m., direct to Harbin, Seigler, Adams, Howard, Anderson, Astorgo, and Glenbrook; half an hour for lunch at Calistoga; also to Middletown, Lower Lake, Kelseyville and Lakeport. Wm. Spiers, Proprietor. Calistoga, Cal.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.—MEXICAN GOLD and Silver Mining Company. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the tenth day of July 1900, an assessment [No. 64] of fifteen [15] cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the secretary, at the office of the Com pany, Room 79, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment sh all remain unpaid on the fourteenth day of August 1900, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Wednesday, the 5th day of September 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.
CHAS. E. ELLIOT, Secretary.
Office—Room 79, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.—Sierra Nevada Silver Mining Company.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, Cal. Location of works Virginia Mining District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 9th day of July, 1900, an assessment (No. 119) of Fifteen (15) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room No 14, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street San Francisco, Cal.

Any stock upon which this assessment shal, remain unpaid on the 14th day of Aug., 1900, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on MONDAY, the 3rd day of Sept. 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the cost of advertisng and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.
E. L. PARKER, Secretary
Office: Room No. 14, Nevada block, No. 309 Mont omery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

Perfection in Champagne.

The celebrated vintage of 1893 of Moet & Chandon White Seal, now being imported into the United States, is perfection, being the product of the choicest grapes. Its selection by connoisseurs is proof of its high quality.

A GLOWING HIGHWAY TO HAPPINESS
.....IS THE ROAD THAT LEADS TO DEL MONTE

Added to the many pleasures afforded by its enchanting surroundings are FINE GOLF LINKS

THIS SEASON'S

HOMES OF PLEASURE

THE PEERLESS CALIFORNIA RESORT

SantaFe Route

OVERLAND EXPRESS

Every day in the year. Pullman Palace and Upholstered Tourist Cars leave for Denver, Kansas City, Chicago and the East. Take Market Street Ferry at 9:00 a. m.

Personally Conducted Tourist Excursions leave three times each week in Pullman Vestibuled Tourist Cars and are exceedingly popular with the traveling public. The principal cities of the East are reached by them and the service in all that counts for comfort and convenience is almost equal to the Palace cars. The cars are finished in mahogany, lightened with Pintsch gas and a Porter is in charge to attend to the wants of passengers. Plenty of clean linen is provided and the beds are very comfortable. A handsome folder, describing this service in detail, may be had for the asking at the Company's Office. 641 Market St.

VALLEY ROAD

Between Stockton, Fresno, Hanford, Visalia Tulare and Bakersfield, furnishes a good local train service.

SAN FRANCISCO TICKET OFFICE,
628 Market Street. Telephone Main 1531

The O. R. & N. Co.

DISPATCH FAST STEAMERS

TO PORTLAND

From Spear-St. Wharf at 10 a.m.

FARE $12 First Class, $8 Second Class } Including Berth and Meals

State of California sails June 2, 12, 22; July 2.
Columbia sails June 7, 17, 27; July 7.

Short Line to Walla Walla, Spokane, Butte, Helena, and all points in the Northwest.
Through tickets to all points East.

E. C. WARD, General Agent, 630 Market St.
GOODALL, PERKINS & CO., Superintendents.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. Australia, for Honolulu only, Wednesday, July 25 at 2 p.m.

S. S. Alameda for Australia Wednesday Aug. 8, at 8 p.m.

Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.
J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf San Francisco.

For Alaskan ports, 11 a. m. July 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, August 4, change to company's steamers at Seattle.

For B. C. and Puget Sound ports 11 a.m. July 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, Aug. 4, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, 2 p. m. July 2, 7, 12, 17, 22, 27, Aug 1, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Newport (Los Angeles) and Way Ports, 9 a. m. July 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30, Aug. 3, and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Harford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, and Redondo (Los Angeles), 11 a.m. July 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28, Aug. 1, and every fourth day thereafter.

For Mexican ports, 10 a. m. seventh of each month.

For further information, obtain Company's folder.

The company reserves the right to change steamers sailing dates, and hours of sailing without previous notice.

Ticket Office: 4 New Montgomery St (Palace Hotel)
GOODALL, PERKINS & CO., Gen. Agts.
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

NOTICE OF ASSESSMENT—ANDES SILVER MINING COMPANY.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California Location of works, Virginia City, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 13th day of June 1900, an assessment (No. 51) of five (5) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary at the office of the Company, Room No. 22 Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery street San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 6th day of August, 1900, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Monday, the 27th day of August, 1900, at 1 p. m. o'clock, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.
JOHN W. TWIGGS, Secretary.
Office—Room No. 22 Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

CALIFORNIA BOOKS

A Handsome Series of New and Useful Publications

The Southern Pacific Company has published for free distribution the following books and folders which may be obtained from any Southern Pacific agent, or T. H. Goodman, general passenger agent at San Francisco. If you apply by mail inclose a stamp for each publication.

Resorts and Attractions Along the Coast Line is a handsomely illustrated folder giving a description of the health and pleasure resorts of the coast between San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Shasta Resorts embelished with beautiful half-tone engravings, describes the scenic and outing attractions of the vast and wonderful Shasta region, the grandest of pleasure grounds.

California South of Tehachapi tells all about the charms of that remarkably favored semi-trophic garden spot, Southern Pacific.

A Handsome Map of California, complete in detail, reliable, skillfully indexed, and full of information about the State's resources. It is the only publication of its kind conveniently folded for pocket use.

Summer Outings is a 32-page folder devoted to the camping retreats in the Shasta region and Santa Cruz mountains It appeals more directly to that large and growing class of recreation seekers who prefer this populor form of outing

Pacific Grove is the Chautauqua of the West, and this folder not only describes the pretty place itself, but gives a program of the religsous and educational meetings, conventions, schools, etc., to be held there this summer.

Other publications are Lake Tahoe, Geysers and Lake County Yosemite, Hotel del Monte, Castle Crags, each brimful of information about the places named, and printed in the highest style of the art. Go and see

T. H. GOODMAN, Gen. Pass. Agt.

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention
A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED

Occidental Hotel

SAN FRANCISCO
WM. B. HOOPER, Manager.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers Medium, Soft and Hard
ALSO
Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide
Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks

Manufactured by Mount Vernon Co. Baltimore.
MURPHY, GRANT & CO Pacific Coast Sole Agents

BAJA CALIFORNIA

Damiana Bitters

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. Send for Circular.

NABER, ALPS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

TO CHICAGO

IN 3 DAYS

From San Francisco at 10 a. m.

Chicago Union Pacific
AND
Northwestern Line

Double Drawing-Room Sleeping Cars, Buffet Smoking and Library Cars, with barber. Dining Cars—meals a la carte. Daily Tourist Car Service and Personally Conducted Excursions every week from San Francisco at 6 p. m. The best of everything.

R. R. RITCHIE,
General Agent Pacific Coast
617 Market Street (Palace Hotel)
San Francisco, Cal.

Telephone Main 199.
Blake, Moffit & Towne
Dealers in PAPER
55, 57, 59, 61, First St., San Francisco.
Blake, Moffit & Towne, Los Angeles. Blake, McFall Co., Portland, Or.

ELECTRIC

SUPPLIES
CONSTRUCTION
REPAIRS

California Electrical Works
409 MARKET STREET

Sturtevant House
Broadway and 29th Sts,, New York.
WILLIAM T. BANG, PROP.
American and European Plan.

Don't Borrow a Home!
BUY IT Your rent payments for the borrowed home will do it through the aid of the CONTINENTAL Building and Loan Ass'n of California
WM. CORBIN, Secretary and Gen. Manager.
Home Office, 222 Sansome St., San Francisco

Irving Institute Select Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies
2126 California Street, San Francisco.
Next season will begin August 6th. Accredited to the Universities. Seminary and Full Conservatory of Music. Primary Department for Children. Carriage will call. For futher information, address he principal. REV. EDWARD B. CHURCH, A. M.

Alfred Caue, Luther A. Teague
Frederick Teague.
Teague, Cane & Teague
DENTISTS.
Claus Spreckels Bldg. Third and Market Sts
hone Main 1459. Sixth Floor, S.F., Cal

Thuringia Insurance Co.
OF ERFURT, GERMANY
Capital, $2,250,000 Assets, $10,984,248
PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT
204-208 Sansome Street, San Francisco
VOSS, CONRAD & CO., General Managers

A. O. LINDSTROM AL. JOHNSON
Phone Main 5178
Sutter Street Hammam
TURKISH AND RUSSIAN BATHS
415 Sutter Street, between Stockton and Powell
Open Day and Night for Gentlemen
For Ladies, from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m.

New Stories Re-Told.

x x x

ECCLESIASTICAL SURGERY.—Dr. Blomfield, Bishop of London a half-century ago, received a complaint once, to the effect that a certain new church in the provinces had been disfigured inside and out, with "useless gewgaws." Consequently, he went down and investigated. He could find nothing amiss with the exterior of the church, nor with the interior, until just as he reached the chancel he looked up and saw four wooden images apparently guarding the pulpit. "What do those figures represent?" he inquired. "The four evangelists, my lord," replied the architect. "They appear to be asleep," said the Bishop. "Do you think so, my lord?" "That's the way they look to me," said the Bishop decidedly. "John," called the architect to a man who was at work on one of the pews, "bring your chisel and open the eyes of the evangelists."

PATRIOTISM.—Judge John L. Hall of Macon, Georgia, adds this mite to the body of our war stories: When war was declared against Spain, the darkies became greatly agitated because there was talk of putting them to the front to fight the Spaniards. They offered all sorts of amusing excuses for not enlisting. One old negro said to a man who was urging him to take up arms against Spain: "What for, Mars George," said the old man. "I ain't got nuthin' aginst them Spaniels. They never done nuthin' to me. I ain't got a thing aginst them Spaniels, what's the use of us fightin'?" "Patriotism," replied the man; "you should fight for love of country." "Heh!" said the darkey, "luv er country. I dun live in town so long I ain't got no use for de country."

HIS PRIDE FORBADE.—A Denver tramp the other day applied at a house which he had carefully chosen because the lawn did not need cutting nor the flower beds weeding. The lady of the house produced a plentiful "hand-out-" "And now I want you to chop some kindlings for me," she said, when he had finished. "I knew you were too weak to do it until you had had a square meal." "You were right, madam, quite right. Now I need the exercise, it would do me good; it would send the blood coursin' through me veins and bring back the sparkle to me eye. But I come of a proud race. I am a Montgomery of Montgomery; I could not use your back yard and its appliances as a gymnasium without payin' you liberal and, madam, I am penniless."

INTERNATIONAL REPARTEE.—Bernard Green, of the Congressional Library, happened to be crossing the Atlantic a few years ago on the Fourth of July. An Englishman of rather unpleasant manners, noticing the flags flying and the band playing, asked, "What is this the anniversary of, anyway. Isn't this to celebrate the battle of Bull Run, or something of the sort?" "Something of the sort," answered Green, "John Bull Run."

HIS MONEY'S WORTH.—When Reymini, the famous violinist, was a young man, he was engaged by a parvenu to play at a dinner, the agreement stating that he was to furnish music from eight oclock to eleven. He began with an Adante movement from Mozart, a composition which opens very low and soft. The host turned to his guests. "That's just like those musicians," he said. "I hired him by the hour, and see how slow he plays."

OBSCURE—A Frenchwoman of great personal charm was visiting a New York family and was being entertained at a roof garden. In an interlude by the ochestra she turned to her host and asked what the the musicians were playing. "I'd Leave My Happy Home For You," answered the host. "Yes, I know," answered the lady with a glance of coquetry, "but ze tune zat zey play, M'sieu—vat ees eet?"

WELL-TRAINED.—An English boy carefully reared in courtesy to toward his elders, was instructed, on going away to school, to telegraph home "Yes," if he found everything satisfactory. He did so, and the busy father having forgotten the arrangement and being therefore puzzled, telegraphed back: "Yes, what?" The answer came: "Yes sir!"

PALACE HOTEL
The high standard of excellence maintained by this hotel is recognized and appreciated by a fastidious and discriminating clientele who regularly make it their headquarters when visiting San Francisco.
The GRAND HOTEL is operated in conjunction with the Palace to which it is joined by a covered passageway, placing under one management 1400 rooms, more than half of which have baths attached.
AMERICAN PLAN. EUROPEAN PLAN.

Famous FOR ITS Purity!

Seattle U. S. A.

WHEN LEAVING THE CITY PLACE YOUR VALUABLES IN THE Safe Deposit Vaults
OF THE
First National Bank
N. W Corner Bush and Sansome Sts.
EVERY POSSIBLE SAFEGUARD TO PROPERTY
REASONABLE RATES
PROMPT ATTENTION
Office Hours: 8 a. m. to 6 p m.

REPSOLD
REGISTERED BRAND
SELECT VINTAGE
REPSOLD
Select Vintage Wines
For Your Home Dinner
This brand of wine is served at all first class clubs, hotels and restaurants
A. REPSOLD & CO. Office. 416 Pine Street

THE
White Pass and Yukon Route
The Pacific & Arctic Railway and Navigation Co.
British Columbia Yukon Railway Co., British Yukon M, T. & T. Co.
and Canadian Development Company, Ltd.
THROUGH LINE TO DAWSON.
Two first-class trains daily between Skaguay and Bennett, B. C. Ten first-class steamers operating between White Horse and Dawson. Through Telegraph Service Skaguay to Dawson and Intermediate Points.
SKAGUAY IS THE GATEWAY
—TO—
KLONDIKE AND CAPE NOME GOLD FIELDS.
FOR RATES AND PARTICULARS APPLY TO
S. M. IRWIN, Traffic Manager, Skaguay, Alaska, and Seattle, Wash.
Phone Main 574
S. P. BROWN General Agent 116 Yesler Way, Seattle Was

W. C. ACHI & CO.
Real Estate Brokers
We will buy or sell real estate in any part of the group. We will also buy or sell Stocks in any corporation in the Hawaiian Islands.
Office, 10 West King Street, Honolulu, H. I.

a Perfect Complexion
Strawberry Cold Cream
Mede from the pure fruit juice at
GREENBAUM'S
200 POST STREET Corner Grant Ave.
Sent anywhere on receipt of 25 cents,

From Admiral George Dewey:
Mr. George Mayerle, German Expert Optician, 1071½ Market street, San Francisco: Dear Sir—I am still using with much satisfaction the glasses you sent me at Manila; also, the new ones suit my eyes perfectly.
Very truly yours,
George Dewey.

A GRADUATE
George Mayerle
German Expert Optician
Consultation, Examination and advice free.

OPTICIAN HONORED
1071½ Market St.
near Seventh
Telephone Mint 257
German Eye Wate 50 cents.

From General Wm. R. Shafter:
Mr. George Mayerle, San Francisco
Dear Sir—The glasses made by you received yesterday. I have never been better fitted than with this pair.
Very truly yours,
Wm. R. Shafter,
Major-General U. S. V.

The Wave

1900

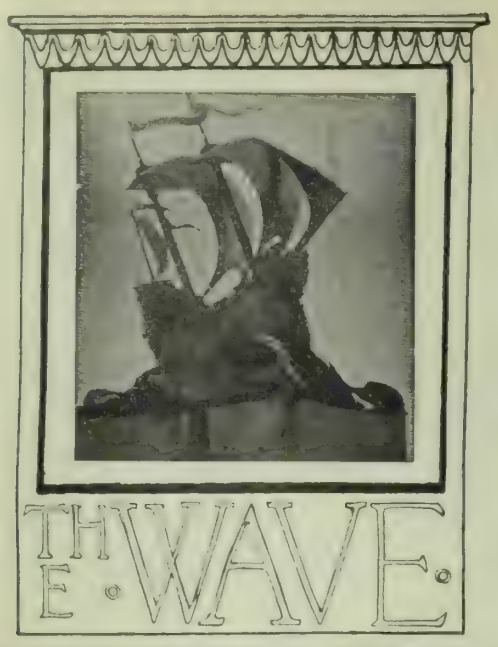
VOL. XXI. No. 26 SAN FRANCISCO—JULY 21, 1900 — SEATTLE PRICE 10 CENTS

Waiting in Line for the First Mail of the Year

The Afternoon Crowd on Front Street.

Photos by Johnson and Sadler.

THE SPRING RUSH AT NOME CITY.



is published every Saturday at The Wave Building, 24 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal., and Colman Building, Seattle, Wash.

Entered at the Post Office as second-class matter.

Subscription: Per year, $3.00; six months, $1.75; three months, $1.00. Foreign subscription (countries in postal union) $1 per year additional. Sample copies free.

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

PROPRIETORS

SAN FRANCISCO—July 14, 1900—SEATTLE

CONTENTS

Events Current 2
Editorial Comment 3
Incomparable Hiya-Ai-Kwang 4
The Deposed Emperor 5
Views of China 5
The Cape Nome Re-Action 6
Things and People, by Boswell Jr 7
Hindoo Devotees in the Ganges, Illustration 8
The Meanest City 9
The Famine in India 9
Meditations of a Matron 10
At the Theatres 11
A Suburban Cinch 12
Correspondence—London 13
New Sugar Enterprises in Hawaii 14-16
New Stories Re-told 18

EVENTS CURRENT.

The Chinese Situation Grows Darker.

Still the safety of the Pekin foreigners, the absorbing topic of the day in the civilized world, is in doubt. This week, however, there is much less cause to hope than formerly, as a number of reports, emanating from Chinese sources but agreeing in the main details, relate that the legations are all destroyed and the foreigners all dead. The information came to the consuls at Shanghai so direct that they cabled it as a fact to their respective governments and it was accepted in all the capitals of Europe. But on the heels of this report, the Chinese minister at London gave out a statement to the effect that the legations were standing and under Imperial protection on July 9th, two days after the date of the alleged massacre. Coming from any other government, this would have been regarded as true; coming from the Chinese who have lied and temporized all through the crisis, it is regarded as a ruse aimed to mollify the Powers until public indignation cools, permitting the news to be broken gently. European diplomats naturally inquire if the ministers are safe and under protection, and if Pekin can so readily communicate with London, why no word comes out from the surrounded legations to their home governments. Every other indication, every other probability points to an awful slaughter in Pekin. It is needless to say that, if it has really happened, the Chinese have perpetrated a crime without parallel in the history of nations. As far back as history goes, the persons of ambassadors have been respected even by the bitterest enemies. The murder of a Roman messenger, who had by no means the standing of an embassador, was made by Julius Cæsar the occasion of exterminating the offending tribe. It is probable that the ensuing war will be one of vengeance rather than of conquest. All this, of course, is conditional on the reports being true. If the Chinese authorities—as seems unlikely—are really guarding the embassies, the trouble must be considered more in the light of a rebellion, which the Powers must assist in suppressing.

The Alleged Slaughter at Pekin.

The story of the slaughter of the Pekin legations is told with such circumstance and comes, with slight variations, from so many sources, that it is worth respecting here on the belief that it is true. Certainly, the consuls at Shanghai, being on the ground, must have been given strong proof of its reliability before sending it to their home governments. At the same time, it may be only a clever hoax of the sensational newspaper correspondents. According to the story, on a date varying in the accounts from July 1st to July 7th, the foreigners, having weakened in the fire which they had kept up incessantly on their native besiegers, seemed to be running out of ammunition. Accordingly, Prince Tuan, placing artillery, attacked them during a whole night. The loyalist Chinese troops who have been making a show of defending the foreigners thereupon attacked the Boxers but were easily repulsed, as many soldiers deserted to the fanatic ranks at the first rush. In the morning it became certain that the last European cartridge was gone, and Tuan ordered a general attack. Thereupon, the whites made a rally in hollow square formation with the women and children inside, hoping as a last chance to cut their way out. They were met outside by a heavy fire from machine-guns, and were forced to halt and make a last stand with the bayonet. The case being hopeless, they killed their women and children, and died fighting bravely. A few cut their way back to the British Compound, but were shot there or were burned to death in the conflagration that followed. The foreigners being all dead, the mob rushed on the native Christians and killed them by torture. With their last ammunition and during the last night of the struggle, the foreigners fairly butchered the closepacked mob of attacking Boxers, so that the streets of Pekin ran red with blood. If this is true, it is an incident without parallel in the nineteenth century. If false, it is a cruel hoax.

Further Chinese News.

So much news, both true and doubtful, has come out of China this week that a very rapid summary must suffice for the rest. For convenience it may be divided into ascertained facts given out by official dispatches, and reports of more or less authenticity, sent in by newspaper correspondents. It is known definitely that the Allied armies at Tien-Tsin have been hard pressed all the week, meeting with severe attacks from overwhelming numbers. It was finally decided to capture the old city, the citadel and the arsenal, which were not taken when the town was first occupied. This was accomplished after a heavy battle lasting two days. The allies lost 775 killed and wounded, the Americans suffering most heavily in proportion to their numbers, losing 215, including Colonel Liscum killed, and Majors Reagan and Lee wounded, all of the Ninth Infantry. Admiral Seymour has returned to the fleet at Taku, and Admiral Alexieff has command at Tien-Tsin. Li Hung Chang has been made governor of Chili, the province just south of Pekin, by whoever rules in the capital. This is regarded as a hopeful sign. In the list of doubtful reports are the following: The Chinese have slaughtered forty foreigners and a hundred native converts in Shanshi, a province heretofore untouched by the Boxer movement. The revolt seems to be spreading. Several Manchu regiments have been despatched by Tuan to the Southern provinces to stir up the Boxer movement there. The Chinese regular troops have captured a Russian transport, massacring its guard, in eastern Siberia. Blagoveschensk, a town in that district, has been sacked and burned by the same Chinese force. Taun has issued in the Imperial name, a general anti-foreign edict. (This is very doubtful.) It fixes a date in advance of the arrival of European troops for a general uprising. Even Shanghai seems to be threatened and residents are sending away their families. The possible or probable action of the European nations is hidden deep in the mists of diplomacy. It was reported late in the week that the Powers were trying to agree on an army and had asked the United States for 20,000 troops as a proportionate share. The raising of so many men would require a special session of Congress. A hurried Cabinet meeting was called; directly on adjournment, it was announced that there would be no extra session. It is understood that our share in the allied army is to be about 10,000 men. Contrary to the belief expressed last week, the Powers, Russia and Germany in especial, are showing no disposition to give Japan a free hand.

The Transvaal War.

The crisis in China, with its suspense and absorbing interest, has deflected public attention from the Boer War even in England, where there is logically the most interest. Yet it is still dragging on, with President Kruger a fugitive and Lord Roberts trying to close in on the government of the Orange River State and suppress it before moving against the main body of Transvaal Boers who, probably with Kruger at their head, are in the mountains somewhere about Watervalhoven, but with lines of communications running out toward Pretoria. In this quarter, the British recently fell into one of those ambushes so characteristic of Boer tactics in this war, and lost four companies captured and many killed in the hottest action since the capture of Pretoria. It is claimed that the Boers baited the ambush by wearing khaki uniforms like those of the British and by abusing the white flag. The main body of the invading army is, however, closing in upon President Steyn and his surviving forces in the western part of the Orange River State. This movement has already occupied a month, as Roberts seems to be making sure of his game before the final coup. A severe setback occurred two weeks ago, when a force of several regiments of Boers fell on part of Methuen's column at Bethlehem, cutting through and escaping into the hills. Report has it that President Steyn is with this column, but Roberts, by continuing his original plan, gives a tacit denial to the theory. Meantime, England has a war scandal of her own regarding the management of the hospitals in Cape Colony, which is declared to have been very bad. Parliament will probably investigate, urged thereto partly by the disaffected at Cape Colony who are growing more troublesome every day. Instead of being discouraged and silenced by the outcome of the war, the semi-hostile Dutch party has become more active and unfriendly. As a result, Premier Schreiner, who was such a figure in the early war time, has broken with the Afrikander leader since he claims to be a Dutch sympathizer but a loyalist first of all.

The Sources of the Alaskan Placer.

Now that the placer mining districts of Arctic America are pretty well occupied by miners and prospectors, a search for the parent lodes from which the loose gold emanated is to be the next movement in Alaskan mining. These deposits, wherever they may lie, should, from all indications, be of surprising and surpassing richness. This means that further expansion work will be done, not by the prospector, working partly by luck and partly by haphazard knowledge, but by trained geologists. The opinion of scientists who have investigated the subject is that the gold was deposited at Cape Nome and Dawson by glacial action. That is, it was carried from gold-bearing ledges by the gradual passage of glacial ice which wore it away and left it in the placer diggings. The parent lodes may, therefore, be hundreds of miles from the present deposits and may even be locked under glacial ice, but scientific study should point the general direction of the rich lands. Even with this ascertained, the ledges may be "blind"—that is, they may be buried under the surface, with no outcropping. This would mean that, after the general direction had been ascertained, the real discovery is to be only a matter of luck. In Idaho, Montana, Colorado and Utah, the gold-bearing quartz which was the source of the placer diggings was of this character, and was found only after a patient search made almost in the dark. If the amount of gold in placer deposits means anything, it would indicate that the quartz ledges of Alaska are of unsurpassed richness. It is but fair to add, in conclusion, that many practical miners take issue with the glacial theory, believing that the sources are much nearer at hand. They argue that the best claims at Eldorado show freshly-broken quartz, a condition which would not exist if the specimens had been carried thither by glacial action, since the erosion of the ice would have worn it "old" and smooth.

American Athletes Win at Paris.

As was expected, the American athletes practically swept the boards in the second international Olympic games, decided last week at the Paris Exposition. This contest was instituted in the Panhellenic festival at Athens in 1896, as a means of promoting good feeling and manly sport among the nations of the earth. The first contest was a tremendously popular affair, and drew a great crowd to Athens. This year the attendance was much smaller, and the interest correspondingly less. Notwithstanding, the best track athletes of the world, saving only two or three Englishmen whose participation could not have changed the final result, took part in the games. There were twenty-one events. Of these, the Americans took sixteen, losing only the discus-throw, for which American athletes rarely train, the tug-of-war, in which our compatriots had no team entered, and three long-distance runs, a department in which our men are generally inferior to the English. The five events lost by our men went to two Englishmen, a Dane, a Swedish team, and a Frenchman. The other sixteen were won under various conditions unfavorable to American athletes, such as turf tracks, unfamiliar distances and new systems of starting, yet the Americans generally won with ease. Kranzlein of the University of Pennsylvania, probably the century's greatest athlete, took four first places—the broad jump, the 60 meter dash, the 200-meter hurdle, and the 110-meter hurdle, in which he broke the world's record. The record for the standing high jump was also smashed by Ewry of New York.

A Philippine Peace Proposal.

It really seems as though General MacArthur's plan for the pacification of the Philippines stands an excellent chance of success. For this, the Americans have to thank Felipe Buencamino, ex-revolutionist but now the strongest friend of American rule in the islands. He has consistently worked for peace since his capture and reconciliation last winter. It was he who called the ill-fated Peace Conference, and even after its collapse he continued his work. He now comes forward with a peace proposal which, it is believed, will have a tremendous effect upon his fellow Tagolos. Briefly, this manifesto provides that the native people shall agree to lay down their arms if the Americans will accede to terms implying autonomous government under American control. The terms are as follows: The United States supremacy shall be recognized, and in return the authorities at Washington shall grant to the natives all rights under the Constitution except political ones. The native leaders shall be allowed to appear freely before Congress and ask for legislative settlement according to their individual opinions. Part of the island revenues shall be applied to the relief of the suffering native army. Congress shall determine the manner of exercising Filipino civil rights. All funds belonging to the Filipino Republic shall be turned over to the United States. There shall be independent municipal rule, and delegates from the different districts shall meet the American authorities from time to time to make requests for the good of the state. The Friars shall be excluded from the administration of church affairs. The peculiar thing about this manifesto is that it demands exactly what the United States has always stood ready to grant—excepting only the section regarding the friars. But the natives have never generally believed the American assertions, nor, indeed, have they understood them. This edict, therefore, being published as a proposal and then accepted as publicly, should go a long way toward restoring confidence. The American authorities, who have closely watched Buencamino, believe that he is sincere. They also believe that the Philippine question is no longer one of armed force, and that the war is over.

Editorial Comment.

Bryanism and Expansion.

THE Democrats insist on warning us that the Republican ticket will lose thousands of votes through what it is pleased to term the "policy of Imperialism advocated by the administration." And then it points with pride to its policy of "Expansion" as a thing calculated to satisfy the hunger of the American people without griping the bowels or bringing any uncomfortable consequences." If your house is painted white you would not be likely to permit an envious and contentious neighbor to cram it down your throat that the house was really painted black. Perhaps your neighbor might be a more insistent liar than you and his lungs might be stronger than yours, but he cannot change the color of your house. Don't let any follower of Bryanism cram it down your throat that the Republican party advocates Imperialism, for it is a lie that will not bear the light of investigation. What in the devil does democracy advocate with respect to Expansion anyhow? It approves the acquisition of Hawaii and Porto Rico, but declares against the retention of the Philippines. It declares unwavering allegiance to certain familiar principles, and arguing therefrom, denounces the Poor co Tariff Bill. Then it calmly casts to one side the prin-ple it has just used to justify its indignant denunciation d opens its batteries on the administration for practically serving the very principles it first advocated.

Democracy says:—

"We hold that the Constitution follows the flag.

For the purposes of this argument admit this to be correct a matter of law and fact. Where does it lead us? It cer-inly leads democracy into a tangle of political contradicons. Under this rule, whatever territory comes to this ation by conquest or by treaty, becomes immediately and seperably an integral part of the American Union. It is bject to the operation of the Constitution; and the inhabints thereof are vested with certain fixed and inalienable ghts, and charged with specific duties and obligations.
ne fact that the territory is newly acquired, or that the ghts of its people are young, neither adds to nor subtracts om our obligations to it, nor does it lessen or minimize the ities of our newly-born citizens. The people of the new rritory inherit, immediately, all that belongs to the people the original thirteen states. This is the substance and fect of this declaration of democracy. According to their ew of the case Porto Rico is to-day as much a part of the nited States as is Massachusetts or Vermont. Whatever e general government might do with respect to Porto Rico, might likewise do with respect to Vermont; and democ-
cy says:—

"Believing in these fundamental principles we denounce
e Porto Rican law enacted by a Republican Congress . . .
a bold and open violation of the nation's organic law . . .
d seeks to commit the United States to a colonial policy consistent with republican institutions."

* * *

This harsh arraignment of the administration can only be stified upon the assumption that by the Treaty of Paris orto Rico became a part of the Union, and neither Congress, r the Administration had a shred of right, legal or moral,
r treating Porto Rico or its inhabitants in a manner differ-nt from what it would and must treat Arizona and its inabitants.

Do you grasp the full meaning of this contention of emocracy? It means that Porto Rico is firmly cemented this Union and is as fully and completely a part of it as assachusetts or Vermont. It means that the Treaty o-aris and the subsequent ratification of that treaty by the enate finally and conclusively settled and defined the status
Porto Rico and Porto Ricans.

No stranger nation may now invade this new Island terrirry without engaging the resistance of our army and our avy. No blood-thirsty or ambitious native, heedless of his untry's good, may incite to rebellion his dusky neighbors take up arms to resist our authority. Such an act ould constitute open rebellion, and would bring down vift and well-deserved punishment, for the treaty with pain instantly made Porto Rico a part of the United States.
here are limitations upon the powers of Congress with reect to American territories. The things it may not do to ew Mexico it may do not do with respect to Porto Rico.
he Administration could not sell Arizona, nor may it now ll Porto Rico. The Administration would not dare relin uish Arizona to the Apaches because they warred against ur civilization and expressed disapproval of your authority.
or is power found anywhere to justify an Administration whittling down the nation's jurisdiction or paring down boundaries to fit the whims or wishes of sectional desires.
e had a civil war over this question once, and we thought finally settled at Appomatox.

* * *

Here steps in the absurdity of Democracy's position. The ame war that brought us Porto Rico brought us the Philppines. The same treaty that ceded to this nation jurisdicion over Porto Rico and its people, ceded the same jurisdicion over the Philippines and its people. The same vote in he Senate that ratified and confirmed our jurisdiction in orto Rico confirmed and ratified our jurisdiction in the hilippines. All the steps taken with respect to Porto Rico nd the Philippines were identical, were taken at one time n one document, by the same authorities. Between the wo there is not the slightest shade of difference. Yet ac-ording to Democracy under the rule that "the Constitution ollows the flag" we should retain Porto Rico and treat it as part of the Union, while in the Philippines the flag should e pulled down and the constitution thrown overboard to eep company with Montojo's fleet. No other party in the orld would attempt to cram such contradictory conclusions own the throat of an intelligent people.

They offer an excuse for their attitude, but surely it de-eives no one. They claim that inasmuch as Aguinaldo and clique of natives representing one tenth of one per cent of he inhabitants of the Philippines object to American rule, hat another and a greater principle is brought into life, that e are estopped from asserting any rights whatever, that so ar as the Philippines go the treaty of Paris is a nullity, that he ratification by the Senate must be regarded as an idle nd a useless thing and that our nation has been stripped are of every vestige of right, because Aguinaldo and his ollowers object. This is a queer condition of affairs, if all he solemn undertakings of a nation are to be obstructed by o slight a pretext. When California was ceded by Mexico o the United States its native population far exceeded that f the whites. Suppose that well-known bandit Joaquin Murietta, or any other man for that matter, had decked himself out in epaulettes, and gathered about him a band of natives to make resistance to our governing him. Suppose by reason of his knowledge of the country he had been able to hold out a year against our troops,and that he issued a proclamation claiming a hunger for liberty and a desire for independence of America's thralldom. Would you have favored our withdrawal from the conflict and surrender of this country to this masquerading highwayman? We think not. When we purchased Alaska of Russia, if the Esquimaux residing there had resented our intrusion with mauser rifles and high sounding platitudes, would you favor giving up the territory? If you would you don't deserve the name of being an American citizen. If you would not, then where can you find the slightest difference between these instances and the situation in the Philippines?

* * *

If the constitution follows the flag as democracy declares then either at the moment Congress ratified the Treaty of Paris or the moment we took possession there by force of arms,the archipelago became part of the Union. Instantly, it became an inseperable part of the United States; instantly it became subject to the operation of our constitution; instantly the inhabitants thereof became vested with certain fixed and inalienable rights and charged with the performance of specific duties and obligations; instantly every swarthy half-breed bearing a gun or a sword a bolo or a bow and arrow, and bent on resisting the occupancy of the Americans, bent on resisting our laws, or guilty of shooting at our flag or our men, became rebels subject to the treatment usually accorded to rebels. At what time does democracy fix the coming of the flag with its constitutional accompainment? Must this government wait until it can take a poll of the natives of the ceded territory before it can claim any authority for its Treaties or its Acts of Congress? Is a handful of rebellious and none-too-honest natives who are hungry for loot and eager for murder to stay the hand that would extend liberty, protection, and wise government to a peaceful people? The truth about this party of Bryanism is that it has laid like a treacherous and relentless tiger watch ing every movement of the President during all the trying years of his administration. It has been praying that Mr.
McKinley might err, so that it could reap advantage from the error While President McKinley has been weighted down and overwhelmed with distressing cares; while upon his shoulders have rested grave and serious responsibilities, involving the very integrity and honor of the nation; while he has stood patiently and vigilantly at the helm guiding with rare judgment the ship of state through perils of a most, threatening character, this contemptible party of Bryanism hungry for votes and greedy for power, has harrassed and annoyed the administration with false and malicious charges, has obstructed the peaceful and orderly conduct of public affairs, has, instead of diminishing the countries' difficult ties, added to them; and has prayed hourly that the administration might err so that Bryanism might profit by it,—has prayed that the hard-driven man who stood at the head of the government might sink under the weight of cares, migh-let something escape his observation that could be distorted into a wrongful intent. And all of this, for what? All of this to land that "eminent" and "peerless statesman," that "rival of Lincoln and Jefferson," that "most American American" William Jennings Bryan in a place where mediocrity shall never sit so long as intelligence dominates in America.

Assessor Dodge's Latest Dodge.

If the fool killer would drop down somewhere in the neighborhood of the Peninsula upon which San Francisco is built, he would find his time so occupied that other fools in other communities might look ahead to at least several years of immunity from the creature charged with the duty of removing them from earth.

San Francisco just now is having it dinned into her ears that the present census will place her below her former rating in the list of American cities. There is plenty of reason for it all, but it seems to be nobody's business to mend it and so it will probably continue. We have repeatedly affirmed and re-affirmed the necessity for nursing and expanding our foreign commerce. We have repeatedly urged that an effort be made to get the business of the city out of the hands of the importers and into the hands of manufacturers. Ask any man with an ounce of grey matter in his head what will most quickly increase population and prosperity of the city and State, and he will reply "Commerce and Manufacture." Even the school-boy knows this. We all know and must admit, that the Pacific Coast manufacturer works at a great disadvantage in California. There is not a retail merchant in the city who would not be willing, if it would induce new manufacturies to come here and old institutions to expand, to favor a measure that would exempt all factories—the buildings, machinery and real property in actual use—from taxation. Such a measure must be initiated in the legislature. If couplen with all our woes,brought before that body,the first inquiry that would meet its promoters would probably come from the San Francisco delegation and would be "How much is there in it?" It would not matter how vitally important the question might be to the State and city, all the legislative boodler could see would be the possible profit that would accrue to men with present factories.

Assessor Dodge, by some unlucky ingenuity, has contrived a most effective device for driving business out of San Francisco. He determined to make good the necessities of the city by putting the screws on large corporations and assessing at fanciful figures that intangible thing known as a "franchise" which any five men in the State can procure for two dollars and fifty cents. Such a performance among "honest reformers" is regarded as a clever and effective method of indicating one's complete independence of the "money-power," and a large number of votes are supposed to be obtained by pursuing such a course. Following out this beautiful theory for squeezing dollars out of the unwilling purse of wealth—and incidentally injuring the city abroad—Mr. Dodge assessed the franchise of the Alaska Packing Association at sixty thousand dollars A preposterous and scandalous figure. Everyone knows that the franchise of this association consists merely of the right to be a corporation. Neither the State nor the municipality parted with a dollars worth of property in granting that franchise; neither rights of way nor special privileges of any character went with it. The meetings of the association are held in San Francisco, its operations in Alaska are directed from here, its purchases are made here—all to the vast benefit or San Francisco. Its actual business, be it remembered, is conducted in Alaska. Ex-Mayor Pond, who is one of the directors of the association, declares that unless the unjust and iniquitous tax be relinquished the company will move its entire establishment North. He says:

"We can buy our coal a dollar a ton cheaper there, and in other respects would be quite as comfortable there as in San Francisco. Besides, we should be rid of the annoyance of the unjust tax which this city seems anxious to impose upon us."

The company disburses each year in the city of San Francisco fully a million and a half dollars, and some five thousaud men are employed by it, nearly all of whom are residents of San Francisco.

Heaven deliver us from Dodge's or any public officers like him. The Alaska Packer's Association is not compelled to do its business or make its purchases in San Francisco. Its business consists of catching and canning salmon in Alaska, and it may, on a month's notice, become a packer's association in truth,it may pack up its books and papers and pack off to some other city where it will be treated more fairly. Such a step would injure San Francisco, but the company is justified in making the move if it is to be misused. What is San Francisco's loss will be Seattle's gain, for the latter municipality is not afflicted with the municipal measles and does not break out against every interest that maintains it. Will some one please call Assessor Dodge down and then hold him down?

Respectable Democracy's Duty.

Some time ago we directed attention to a thoughtful article written by Judge Robert Y. Hayne, entitled, "A Gold Democrats's Olive Branch." In this article Mr. Hayne suggests that the Gold and the Silver wings of democracy come together and compromise their differences. Bryanism however was in no mood for such a suggestion, and the platform of democracy reviews its pledge for free coinage of silver, at he old ratio. It is another phase of Judge Haynes, admirable letter, however, to which we wish to direct attention.

He cited as a reason why the two factions of Democracy might come together, the fact that "the situation is somewhat different from what it was four years ago," and defining that assertion he says: "The difference is that the recent acts of Congress involve a pledge of the national faith that existing obligations be discharged in gold. It is not probable that any considerable number of voters would desire to see such a pledge violated; and the American people would not sanction it."

We have before now directed Judge Hayne's attention to the overwillingness of Populism to violate this very "pledge of national faith," and now we desire to direct his attention and the attention of every other thoughtful, conservative, Democrat to the platform of his party an this subject,which denounces the very act that Judge Hayne asserts involves a pledge of national honor. It is a duty that Democrats of the higher type owe to themselves and to their party, to make Mr. Bryan's defeat so certain and so overwhelming as to eliminate him and his kind forever from American politics. This may not be accomplished by refusing to vote,but it can be done, and done effectively, by voting for the Republican electors.

Commencing with the issue of Angust 4th the selling price of the "Wave" will be reduced to 5 cents per copy. At the same time the form of the publication will be changed and the number of pages in each issue increased from 16 to 24. The features, illustrative and literary, that now characterize the publication will be maintained. The additional pages will be devoted to reading matter.

INCOMPARABLE HIYA-AI-KWANG

A Half-True Tale of the Taku Bombardment. By A. J. Dawson.

WHEN George Patterson reached the mission station in Tientsin he was a fine-drawn convalescent, with an appetite and a zest in eating which was nothing short of wolfish. This was the aftermath of heat apoplexy in the Red Sea, followed by a pretty severe bout of fever picked up during a day ashore in Ceylon. It was George Patterson's first journey to foreign parts, and the nature of it had been such as to speedily suck out from the young man's cheeks the beefy sap of his native Sussex.

It may possibly have drawn out something else, this voyage. One cannot definitely say just what is lost when the painted vampire East seizes upon and thins young English blood. Patterson had been in the first fight of creditable young enthusiasts, when he had entered the missionary training establishment at Home. The missionary's work was a tradition of three generations' standing in the Patterson family, and what he had done had been expected of George.

But, apart from that, he had taken up the training as a genuine devotee; and, beyond all doubt, he truly believed, when he landed at Tientsin, in the Christian doctrines which it was his business to teach. He had studied the Chinese language, too.

But of course he knew nothing of China. He had never before been farther East than you may travel on the Chatham and Dover Railway. So he came to Tientsin to teach the prehistoric Chinee.

For some reason, or, it may be, for none, the Tientsin station sent him back to the coast, and stationed him at Taku. And that was how George Patterson came to meet Hiya-ai-Kwang, the sixteen-year-old daughter of the respected, but not too scrupulous, Tung-Kwang, the moulder of idols. And that again was the how and the wherefore of various happenings the which are not very likely to be dwelt upon at Exeter Hall next May. Therefore, they may as well be told of in this place.

In the street of modellers and colored light makers at Taku, Tung-Kwang's daughter was known as "The Select and Incomparable Hiya-ai-Kwang," "The Many-Colored and Superior Dove of Radiant and Unassuming Beauty,' "The Superfine and Respected One, whose eyes are like the innermost sheen of the circles in peacocks' feathers," and so forth, in many variations of ornate and delicate eulogy.

One does not hear titles of so versatile and refined a description for nothing in Taku. Hiya was beautiful. Hiya was admired. Hiya was beloved. And all that, before Mr. George Patterson, of Sussex, ever set eyes upon her creamy cheeks, or the chrysanthemum-decked and glossy black locks of her, the which descended in tiny, vine-like tendrils upon a neck, the surpassing delicacy of which (in its nape particularly) had been known to inspire young modellers in Taku to frothy spoken poetry, both abroad, at high noon, and at night, when slumber wafts men into the Middle Air.

Within ten minutes of their first meeting, the young missionary was sorely smitten by the (to him) bizarre attractions of the incomparable Hiya-ai-Kwang.

When a young man of pious upbringing and fresh from a Sussex village, is smitten in this wise, east of Suez, he is generally smitten with very exceptional thoroughness; his fall is very helpless and irrevocable. George found it so.

And for her part, dainty, Dresdeny, little Hiya, with her lily feet and Marshall Neil finger-tips, found the missionary—what would you think? Pious, admirable, impressive?—bizarre, and in much the same way strangely attractive and attractively strange, as she herself appeared in his eyes.

There is a deal of plain truth and human nature in the homely old proverb that says, "Cold rat is as freshly appetising to the person whose customary dish is rice, as are peacocks' tongues to the round-bodied mandarin, whose table groans daily under frogs and puppy pie."

In writing to his missionary friend and chief, the Rev. Edward Platt, whose handsome residence and farm stands, as you may know, beside the Nanku, between Tiensin and Peking, George Patterson said:—"I find our great aim and end is the better served by me when I confine my energies principally to one street, or even for some time, to one house, than when I endeavor to reach the many at longer intervals."

Which reminds one irresistibly of the wise man of Shantung, who said:—"The more dovelike the woman, the greater need is there to beware of serpentlike craft in those whose footsteps her beauty controls."

Now, among the many devout admirers of the Incomparable Hiya, no single man, prior to Mr. Patterson's arrival, had been so favoured, so envied, and so altogether likely, as a candidate for the giving of the betrothal presents, as Ling Po, the substantial and reputable young mandarin of the eleventh order. And Ling Po's father was a warm man whose store of taels and of lacquered objects of art and usefulness had Tung Kwang's unaffected regard.

Ling Po's ancestors, occupying commodious tombs and enjoying every possible filial attention, were above the highest-flying cloudlet of reproach; respected members since time was of that ancient and venerated order the Celestial Brotherhood of Harmonious Amiability; or, as Mr. Patterson's ignorant compatriots would say: "The Boxers."

If Ling-Po had a fault it was that his mind was somewhat inert, a slow-moving instrument. But his pig-tail was of remarkable length and distinguished fineness, and, as his excellent father said: "It is more fitting that a mandarin's thoughts should move with dignity and slowness than that they should scurry hither and thither like hungry and impecunious chairbearers."

For two weeks Ling-Po meditated upon the matter of the missionary's attentions to the Incomparable Hiya, sitting disconsolately upon earth the while, and ascending but very seldom and for fleeting intervals only to the restful Middle Air.

Then he rose and proceeded on foot to the young missionary's home. There he found his rival seated in a tiny pagoda in the mission garden. For fully fifteen minutes Ling- Po engaged the missionary by an outpouring of the most refined and respectful kind of salutions. Then he rose to depart, saying as he did so:—

"This very ordinary and undistinguished person has a request to make, the which he is certain will at once be granted by the pure-minded and noble-descended foreigner before him. It is that the exceptionally superior and admirable foreigner will refrain from again visiting or speaking to that Delectable One whom men call the Incomparable Hiya-ai-Kwang.

"And now, lest he be entirely overwhelmed by gratitude for the prompt and graceful granting of his request, which is certain to be forthcoming, from a nobleman so illustrious to an individual so obscure, this person will take leave to withdraw from the benign radiance of the distinguished one before him."

And the polite "Boxer" accordingly withdrew, leaving the missionary nicely balanced betwixt laughter and annoyance.

Mr. Patterson found that his duties did not justify him in visiting Tung-Kwang's shop fewer than three times a day during the next week. And that was a surprise and the source of more sleeplessness to Ling-Po. At the week's end, the mind of the young mandarin moved again. He proceeded to the local chief of the Celestial Brotherhood, kow-towed with much politeness, and delivered himself briefly and to the point, thus:—

"During some months now this obscure member of the Sacred Brotherhood has been requested to aid and assist in the society's present honorable crusade against the foreign devils. Hitherto, inward conviction of his own worthlessness has led this person to unassumingly decline such honor.

"In all humanity he now, however, wishes to offer his unimportant services, and proposes to begin this evening by burning the yamen of that degraded foreign devil who is called Patterson, and whose trade is the spreading of devilish devices from the barbarous West, under cover of puerile and foolish superstitions connected with the Christian myth."

The local chief bowed and smiled benignly upon Ling-po.

Two days later George Patterson's little house was reduced to ashes and its occupant escaped with little beyond his life and a sleeping suit.

Many men would have retired, baffled, at this point. It took George Patterson by the other arm. He blazed with righteous indignation; his language, though of the pulpit, was anathema—an eloquent out-pouring of pedagogish wrath, stiffened, too, by a smack of robust British insularity.

"Savage and dastardly outrage. The only poor shelter the place afforded me burned about my ears, to gratify an ignorant savage's crazy spite. Ling-Po will be delivered up for punishment, for severe and salutary punishment, or, if I know my countrymen, this barbarous town will speedily share the fate of my house. Not for nothing do British gunboats lie out there! We shall see!"

"But, surely," murmured the Incomparable. Hiya-ai-Kwang, "surely you would never harm the misguided Ling-Po! Or has this person, in her foolish obtuseness, entirely misunderstood the spirit and essence of the pious teachings with which the illustrious foreigner has ravished her senses?"

"The Incomparable does not understand," said Mr. Patterson, almost sulkily. "It would be absurd for this person to tamely submit to such an outrage."

"But your—the Founder of your religion!" murmured the Dove, coyly argumentative. "Has the pious and distinguished Mr. Patterson forgotten the refined and tear-compelling narratives with which he has probed to its remotest depths the unlearned heart of this person? Then, too, that most delectable and not-to-be-passed-over Sermon on the Mountain, of the great Founder; the smiting of the other cheek!

"No, no; the devout and noble listener cannot have forgotten. Has not the great Faith he teaches by its glory-inspired its disciples to die with smiling aimiability in the very red center of great fires for its sake? The burning of a mere house, now—Phwee! It is as nothing to so holy and exalted a mind as that of this person's instructor.

"This person's respected and usually clear-sighted Father affirms that the pious foreigner comes here but to rob us of our country and independence, with devil-sent contrivances cloaked by this religion. This person cannot believe it. She cannot believe that this faith is a mock. No, this person's justly admired listener will never work any harm to misguided Ling-po; he will never set in motion the devil guns of the foreign boats out there; of that he will now melifluously assure Hiya-ai-Kwang, and thus restore peace to her inferior mind."

And then the Incomparable was given her first glimpse of a really angry foreign devil—a missionary in a rage.

There was no personal question involved at all, he said. Justice and his duty demanded the punishment of the guilty and he must do it. She was a foolish and ignorant little girl, so the Incomparable was given to understand; and in the matter of the religious argument she had ridiculously misapplied broad, general principles to inappropriate and quite abnormal details.

Justice had to be respected. The missionary was going at once to the British Admiral on his flagship in the bay, to obtain the means of enforcing its respect.

George Patterson had in his excitement put aside his newly-acquired little knowledge of Chinese tastes and manners. He spoke with sharp Western acidity, by no means softened by the fact that he had not shone in his own view during this little encounter. The thing was a shock to dainty Hiya ai-Kwang.

"So there is reason in what my respected father says of foreign devils, then," she thought. Hiya-ai-Kwang caressed the flowers and foot-long pins in her chignon, and retired with some precipitation and many little bows from before the wrathful missionary.

"The illustrious foreigner will really go to the devil gun-boats?" she lisped, retiring.

"He most certainly will, with no delay."

"And the devil gun-boat will shoot this person's native Taku?"

"There is little doubt of that," said the missionary, with gloomy hauteur; "unless the destroyer of my house be given up to justice."

"Ah! How insufferably no-delightful!"

And the quaint, chrysanthemum-covered head finally bobbed out of sight, behind a hanging dragon.

"And then," she muttered to herself, when alone, "this person supposes they would boil the distinguished Ling-Po in pig-fat, or roast him head downward over a dilatory fire; intolerably undignified deaths, both. What can this weak, if not excessively ugly one, do towards preventing this not desirable consummation?"

While the Incomparable pondered in this wise, a very angry missionary was in sober earnest making his way toward the shore, bound for the ship of the British Admiral, athirst for the meting out of just retribution.

Thirty minutes later, a thing happened about which the entire civilized world was talking, and writing, and wondering, within a few hours. This was nothing less than an act of war, in which the Celestial Empire attacked the allied forces of Europe. And the commander-in-chief of that attack was a young girl.

And that was just like the Celestial Empire. No other than the Sublime Nation could have risen to that—the active defiance of the whole civilized world, at the instigation of one small girl, with pique in her heart and chrysanthemums in her hair!

"Voila! A woman and a parson—who was the man?" That was what the irreverent French sailors said when all was over.

For months the Celetial Brotherhood of Harmony had schemed to bind the gunners of the Taku forts to their cause; and schemed unavailingly. The Incomparable Hiya-ai-Kwang, breathless, her hair awry, her dropt fan borne after her by the respected "Boxer" mandarin, Ling-Po—Hiya the Delectable achieved the desired end—nay, a more desirable end than the "Boxers" had dreamed of—in two minutes.

Without a word of warning the Taku forts belched forth deadly shell and shrapnel upon the peacefully anchored warships of all the Great Powers. In ten minutes half a hundred valuable lives had been lost and two million dollars of damage had been done.

Then came reprisals, and Europe speedily silenced the Taku guns.

Meanwhile, however, George Patterson, aboard the British gunboat, had shared the fate of a number of men who were not less than his equals. A section of the third shell fired from Taku sent George Patterson to his last conversion. And his end was suggestive and emblematic of a good deal betwixt East and West, if one cares to think of it.

There is talk of admitting the Refined and Delectable Hiya-ai-Po, nee Kwang, to the Celestial Brotherhood of Harmonious Amiability. It is known that when her Sublime Majesty the Empress heard the story she immediately gave orders to the effect that on his wedding-day, Ling-Po should receive that much-prized decoration, the Crystal Button, from her own sacred hands.

The Old American Consulate, Tien-Tsin. Now Part of the British Enclosure and the Scene of Heavy Fighting.

Going outdoors bareheaded is a summer fad among eastern men. It originated in the colleges.

The German, French and Russian Consulates at Tien-Tsin.
On the River Bank Shown in this View, the Allied Armies are now Entrenched.

THE YOUNG CHINESE EMPEROR.

"THE Chinese Emperor Kuang Hsu, is in some respects one of the most remarkable characters in the Empire at the present time," says Prof. Isaac T. Headland of the Pekin University. "He is not what we are accustomed to term a strong haracter. As a boy he was interested in all kinds of forign toys and considered everything brought from foreign ountries, from a railroad train, a phonograph, an electric ar or a fine Swiss watch, as a toy to be played with. It as said that his own private apartment was a museum of ll the most wonderful inventions, the most intricate machnery and the most complicated productions of modern art, cience and invention that he had been able to gather, and hat his will must not be crossed in any circumstances, for e was just as likely to dash a fine Swiss watch to the floor, reaking it into a thousand pieces, as a peevish child is to estroy its doll.

"Knowing the disposition of the boy, the officials sought ut all kinds of intricate and peculiar machines as presents o him in order to enhance their interests and prospects. But as the child grew he began to develop other notions not ess peculiar. When some ladies, both Chinese and foreign, presented the Empress Dowager with a magnificent copy of he New Testament, the thing interested his Majesty, to udge from his conduct, more than it did the Dowager Empress herself.

"The day after the present reached the palace an order ame to the American Bible Society in Pekin, which attracted the special attention of the agent of that society. The order was from the Emporer and it was for Bibles—both Old and New Testements—snch as the Society was selling to his people. The Society, of course, did not understand the import of such a move on the part of the Emperor, but it was not long before we discovered what the young man was doing.

"It is a well-known fact that the young Emperor began studying English about the same time, and those who were getting books for him came to our compound and secured a small volume, which had been taken to China as a textbook. When the Emperor began the study of English he departed from the usual methods of men in his position and allowed his teacher to sit and teach him instead of forcing him to kneel in his presence. I myself worked for some time with the grandson of this teacher, teaching him English, and in return he taught me Chinese.

"The study of English, the study of the Bible and all the foreign toys the Emperor had played with, including the great inventions which mark the progress of the advancing civilization of these last years of the nineteenth century, were not lost on the young man. They could not change his impetuous disposition, but they did inspire in him a disposition to see the world and to know what was going on in it. He, therefore, began buying all kinds of books pertaining to foreign affairs.

"One of the eunichs from the palace came to me every day for weeks to get some new book for the Emp ror. He was willing to pay any price, and he would not allow me to refuse him any book which the Emperor had not yet had if it was to be got under any circumstances, for the eunich declared, whether truly or not I cannot say, that he dared not return at night 'without taking the Emperor something new.'

"He bought my wife's bicycle aud took it to his Majesty, and it was afterward reported that his queue caught in the back wheel and he had a very un-Emperor like fall. This led the Dowager to deal severely with the eunuch.

"The Emperor set himself to studying the books he had bought, and the more he studied them the more he became convinced that China was on the wrong road, and in dreadful need of a reformation. He began in a new line with the thought of liberating his people from the yoke that was upon them. On the 13th of June, 1898, he issued a decree establishing a university at Pekin, the design being to open a way by which the young men of the Empire might become acquainted with all the books he had been studying, and might themselves be prepared to issue other books of a similar character. A few days later he ordered the Foreign Office to report on the matter of encouraging art, science and agriculture, at the same time ordering any of those who were opposed to the pr gress and reform to appear before him and give their reasons. He proposed that they adopt Western arms and Western methods of drilling the Tartar troops. He abolished the literary essay as a leading part in the examinations for official distinction and substituted a knowledge of political economy and international law.

"But it was his surgical operations that caused him trouble. So long as he confined himself to the making of new offices there was no trouble, but as soon as he began to abolish old ones and dismiss Viceroys and Governors, there arose a howl which reached the ears of the Empress Dowager, and the palace and the throne of the young man were ruthlessly taken from him, and he was confined to an island in the palace grounds under strict guard.

"It is certain that when the history of China comes to be written the attempted reforms of Kuang Hsu will be classed among those of the best emperors of the past and either he will be restored to his throne to carry out his reforms or he will be looked upon as the first martyr for liberty and progress among the emperors of the Middle Kingdom."

The City of Pekin from the West Gate.

The Cape Nome Reaction.

The Overcrowded Condition and Unsanitary Surroundings of the Great Northern Gold Camp.

Shipping Driven on the Beach by the Spring Storm.

Merchandise and Tents on the Beach.

Passengers Landing Through the Surf.

THERE are two opposing elements circulating false reports about every new mining camp. One element, generally the more active because they have better control of the lines of communication, is composed of the transportation companies and agents and the business men of the town. These people, it goes without saying, are interested in bringing the greatest possible number of people to the camp, and in swelling the boom to the largest proportions. The other element is made up of the miners and prospectors, who are zealous of every immigrant coming to crowd the paying ground. The transportation companies and business men, having control of the wires and holding the ready funds, spread the first wild reports which reach civilization, of unlimited wealth waiting to be drawn from the earth. The rush follows, and about the time that it is at its height, the miners have their say. As they communicate mostly by letter, their opinions reach civilization slowly, so that the reaction is often several months later than the boom. Like any other reaction, it always goes farther than the happy medium. As the boom reports made the camp appear greater than the reality, so do these calamity howls make it appear less.

This is the case with Cape Nome. Last fall, the only news brought out made it appear "the greatest gold camp on earth." Spring had opened, and mining had begun, when the crop of miners, letters now to hand were written. Consequently, the situation as now viewed by the newspapers is reported at its very worst. Nevertheless, it is apparent that the camp has been badly overcrowded by the many who were lured North on the promises of the transportation companies. There is sure to be much suffering before the season is over, because many of the fortune-hunters, disregarding repeated warnings, have gone thither without supplies or money. And unless further strikes are made in the district, thousands of miners, prospectors and merchants will be obliged to return to the states before winter, richer in nothing and poorer by the cost of transportation two ways and a season's maintenance.

In the middle of June, there had been 16,000 men and women landed this season in Nome City, and more coming with every steamer. A little over half of these, perhaps 10,000 had business or regular employment. The rest were a mixed and motly crowd. Prospectors with claims as yet unlocated, people watching for businsss chances, gamblers, speculators and, lastly the riff-raff of the North, men without business and without principle, who followed every mining rush in the Northwest. The city has grown from a few scattered huts and a wilderness of tents to a town of respectable size with fairly substantial wooden buildings, some of them having the added dignity of two stories. The photographs taken last Fall showed a half-dozen shanties along what is now Front street, but the photographs reproduced in this issue will prove that the highway named has grown to quite respectable proportions. Back of it lies Second street, as long and as well-built, and on the outside of the centers stretches a thick cluster of shanties and tents. On the townsite itself there are hardly a dozen vacant lots.

This sudden growth, combined with careless construction of the greater part of the buildings, has caused the sanitary problem to assume alarming proportions at Nome City. Last Fall, it was foreseen that this would make trouble at some time or other. By the break of Spring and the melting of the ice, heaps of refuse which had been accumulating during the closed season began to grow offensive. The swampy tundra became a great pool of stagnant water, filthy and insufferable. The few wells were polluted, so that the wise and cautious began to make a practice of boiling their drinking water. But two were foolish to every one who was wise. The consequence was, as expected, typhoid fever in a malignant form. The disease had not proceeded far when the last news came to San Francisco, but conditions were such that the few doctors in camp were preparing for an epidemic.

But perhaps the worst feature of the situation has been the uncertainty of government, which has prevented civic order, confused established property rights, permitted theft of claims to go on unchecked, and had, up to the end of June, prevented work from going on in many of the claims—particularly the beach-diggings. The town authorities laid the burden of government upon the United States army authorities; the army people claimed that, as the town had a government of its own, the army had no right to interfere. So things went for many weeks. Claims along the beach were jumped and re-jumped. The steamship people occupied valuable mining-land on the beach for the accumulation of their freight, which lay piled up for nearly a mile along the sands. The United States Commissioner was appealed to by both sides, the miners urging him to stop the use of the beach as a storehouse, the transportation agents demanding that the soldiery be called in to clear out the government strip of sixty feet above tide-water. Furthermore, the citizens were continually calling for protection against the lawless element which made its living by fleecing unwary prospectors and which had so disorganized things by June that there intervened a reign of private right, wherein each man sat on his claim with a shotgun, as it were, and defended his own property. Murders and extensive robberies of gold-dust became so common that the citizens began to talk of organizing a Vigilance Committee like the San Francisco one of the early fifties. Such being the condition of affairs, the city authorities did the sensible thing by asking Uncle Sam's soldiers to take full control. This they did, and robbery, bunko-steering and murder ended at once. Advices from the far North were dispatched South before the military men and their advisers had made even a tentative solution of the beach problem, and the great piles of merchandise were still heaped up on rich mining sands.

Shipping in the Harbor—Taken at Midnight in June.

The Business Center.

Such disturbances seem a neccessary part of any mining camp. San Francisco had them; so did Leadville, Butte, Toombstone, Deadwood, and others too numerous to mention. The boom town is slung together in a hurry and by men without civic pride who are there to obtain wealth and leave. Since nature chooses to place wealth in the inaccessible places of the earth, the camp is usually out of reach of adequate control by government or state. Yet common sense and common decency have always won out in the end; this may be the case with Nome. Meanwhile, the output of this "greatest camp in the world" is practically nothing, since the inhabitants are too busy settling their social troubles to stop for gold.

An interesting story is that of the experience of Captain Spence, an English sea-captain, with the Emperor of Germany. It shows a new and kindlier side of the Emperor's many-sided nature. Briefly, it seems that some time ago, the English ship master was piloting his ship, the North Star, through a difficult channel in the Weser when he met a German warship entering the river before the wind. A gale of such force was blowing that it was not until the Captain had managed with much difficulty to pass the warship that he noticed she was flying the imperial standard. He was thus unfortunately too late to return the salute. His mistake resulted in a correspondence between his employers and the German Embassy in London, which cost Captain Spence his place. His ship had been saluted by a foreign power, as well as by a foreign sovereign, and he had not returned the salute. He had been guilty of a serious breach of international courtesy at sea.

But the Captain, in his unfortunate strait, sat down and wrote a frank, manly letter about the matter to the Emperor himself, giving a plain account of the facts and expressing his sincere concern for the inadvertence. It seems that in the gale which was blowing at the time, the flag on the warship had been clinging around the mast, preventing him from seeing it in time. This and his anxious navigation on account of the difficulties of the passage were given as excuses.

The Emperor, himself a sailor, promptly on receipt of the letter, communicated with Captain Spence's former employers through Count Metternich, the German Minister at London, to the effect that His Majesty "would feel sorry if Captain Spence would lose his living." His reinstatement followed.

Professor Maximilian Schuller of Berlin claims to have discovered the bacilli of cancer. He says of them that they represent the youngest form of life. Usually there are found about tumors empty capsules, as well as brood capsules. These formations, according to the Professor, are real organisms, and not alterations of cells, nor concrements of salts, as is generally supposed. He has proved this by trial and reaction, and by means of direct observation of the state of evolution made repeatedly on the live tumor as well as on the live culture. In cases of cancer these formations look brownish, and examined alive show light and glossy, which may be ascribed to their passing through interstices of matter. They can be pointed out with the strongest of microscopes. But whether this newly-discovered infinitesmal organism shall be classified with the lowest of animals, or the lowest of plant nature, Professor Schuller has not yet been able to positively determine. Nor can the extent to which his discovery of the cancer bacillus will prove useful to the medical profession yet be decided. That will be the next step.

The Chinese Minister at Washington, Wu, says that the daintiest dishes which can be served at a rich man's table in China are bird's nest soup and shark's fins. The shark's fins are considered the most delicious. They are cooked in a manner known only to the native chefs, in a certain sort of oil, and so prepared, are always included in the menu of an especially fashionable dinner. He declares that he never heard of the tiny mice dropped in honey being considered a delicacy, and pooh-poohs the idea of rodents ever being served in any form whatsoever.

Along Snake Rives.

Things & People.

Commencing with the issue of August 4th the selling price of the "Wave" will be reduced to 5 cents per copy. At the same time the form of the publication will be changed and the number of pages in each issue increased from 16 to 24. The features, illustrative and literary, that now characterize the publication will be maintained. The additional pages will be devoted to reading matter.

The "Examiner's" New Regime.

THE affairs of the S. F. Examiner have so often afforded material for comment that the latest development within its institution may be noted here without apology. In the last two years the paper has been a source of dissension in the Democratic party and by impertinent intrusions into its affairs has wrought a havoc the Democracy will find hard to recover from. In future the type of interference which precipitated the Esola scandal will be impossible, as both Mr. Robert the new managing editor and Mr. T. T. Williams, who are to guide its destinies, have no sympathy with such a policy. Mr. Robert is a competent newspaperman of wide experience gained in St. Louis and New York, who has mastered the art of making a sensational paper which will also be sane. As business manager of the Examiner, Mr. Williams has been agreat success, for Mr. Hearst's publication today earns the largest income of any daily newspaper on the Coast. He is also one of the cleverest writers in the newspaper profession, gifted with the rare ability to be entertaining on any subject from sport to science. Under the guidance of these two men the proprieties will certainly be observed and we shall be spared those personalities which latterly made the paper so odious.

***

Mr. Morosco's Dilemma.

I SUPPOSE that San Francisco theatre-goers in general wasted much time wondering why Walter Morosco is losing money in experimenting with comic opera, extravaganza and the Frawleys in the Grand Opera House, instead of returning to his old reliable money-maker—cheap scenic melodrama. The old Morosco's had a definite place in San Francisco, it catered to the wants and needs of a definite class and it made a fortune for its lessee. Comic opera, designed to compete with the Tivoli, and Rice extravaganza with glitter and—limbs—failed successively, and the Frawley season is only a doubtful experiment. Under ordinary circumstances common sense would demand that the lessee return to his old, successful line. But the circumstances are not ordinary ones. The Grand was built primarily for the accommodation of the unusual theatrical attractions which visit the city from time to time. There is no other house in town large enough to accommodate the audience which is gathered for a season of Irving or Melba. The owners, wishing to keep up the reputation of the house for just such engagements, looked with alarm upon the character of the audiences which were gathered by the cheap melodrama run under the lease of Mr. Morosco. They therefore issued an ultimatum, early last year, to the effect that the grade of productions and audiences must be altered or the lease would be cancelled. Hence the radical change in policy. Perhaps the Frawley engagement, with its kid-glove British melodrama, may succeed as a compromise. If not—"Morosco's occupation's gone."

***

One Side of the Chinese War.

EVEN at the risk of being tiresome, I must reiterate the surpassing importance of Chinese affairs and the Oriental crisis to the port of San Francisco. The individuality of China is at an end. Whether the great Empire is broken up at the end of the coming hard and bloody war and divided among the European nations, or whether the dynasty is continued under a a protectorate, the Europeans will cram their habits, customs, and ways down the throats of the Chinese. With even a moderate acceptance of Europeanism, the wants of that nation of 400,000,000 people for Caucasian-made goods will be enormous; the present China trade is only a sample in comparison. It follows that San Francisco, being the very nearest of the great Caucasian ports to the market, will have the bulk of the trade if she is willing to reach out and take it. This Chinese war is a bad piece of business; it is likely to end the century as the Napoleonic wars began it, in blood, but it is sure to have its bright side for San Francisco.

***

Chinatown and the Pekin Massacre.

THE Chinatown police and the doorkeepers of the Chinese theatre tell me that hundreds of our resident Mongolians come to them every day, asking "what the Americans are going to do to us if the people in Pekin are killed." The casual observer can hardly fail to note the suspicion and unrest which pervades Chinatown at present. It is a curious sidelight on the Mongolian character, showing that, in spite of their years of residence among us, the Chinatown Celestials still attribute their method of doing things to us. They, who give no mercy, expect none from us. Indeed, their feeling of unrest may not be entirely without foundation. There is still a strong anti-Chinese feeling lingering south of Market, and a slight possibility that if the rumors of a Pekin slaughter are confirmed, mild rioting may ensue. But it can hardly be serious, although the Pekin horror, had it occurred in the sand-lot days, would have led to a duplicate massacre in San Francisco.

***

A Californian at Harvard.

I NOTICE that in the "Sunday Story" on "California Boy at Harvard" in the last Call supplement, no mention is made of young Edward Rea, son of "Boss Rea" of San Jose. This is perhaps explained by the fact that he left last year, graduating from Harvard Law School. Young Rea was as original a personality in a quiet way of his own, as has flourished in Harvard in these latter days. Coming to Cambridge from Stanford University, where everybody knows everybody, he was at first amazed by the Harvard reserve, which ordains that no one shall become acquainted with an "outsider." Rea passed most of his first year in solitude. His introduction to Harvard men in general came, however, at the end of that year. One of his classes was ruled by a professor of the pedantic stipe, held in such awe that the average Law School man would as soon have joked with the Pope. This worthy was one day lecturing on the rule in common law which declares a man legally dead after he has disappeared for seven years. He stated a hypothetical case: "We will suppose that a man and his wife are crossing the Atlantic in a heavy storm. A wave washes him away in full view of a number of witnesses. There is no other vessel in sight, and no further trace is seen of him. The wife returns to this country, and, after six years, marries. Two years later, the former husband returns and confronts the wife. Now, how would you proceed in case you were called upon to defend the legality of the second marriage?"—the professor paused, looking for a victim, and spotted Rea, leaning back with his legs crossed and a bored expression, "Mr. Rea!" he said. The Californian shifted legs, shoved his hands in his pockets, and answered in a deliberate Western drawl "Well, professor, if I could get a good, intelligent jury, and had a fair pull with the judge, I think I could prove that man a ghost in just about a minute and a half!" It was fully three minutes before the professor restored order, and Rea was asked for every law-club in Harvard at the door.

* * *

During the next year, Rea boarded in Memorial Hall with a tableful of Harvard men of the Bostonese Back Bay stripe, and bore from them much bantering about the uncultured West in general, and California in particular. He bided patiently his chance to "get it back." It came when, in wandering around Boston, he found a mistake in syntax in a Latin inscription on the Shaw monument. He said nothing at the time to his Back Bay friends, but bribed the negro waiter at his table for an ally and put him through a course of Latin pronunciation. At the very las dinner of the year the waiter, on a pre-arranged signal, stepped up and held forth as follows: "I say Mistah Rea, hab you seen de way dem Boston people hab fixed dis-heah Shaw monument? Dat dere Latin inscription reads dis-heah way"—and he quoted it from start to finish—"Did you notice dis-heah preposition 'ab' has got de accusative in front of it in dat inscription when any blame fool coon knows dat in dis-heah case 'ab' takes de ablative!"

***

Current Prices in Dawson.

REALLY, Dawson City is becoming a cheap city to live in. The market has been so overstocked with provisions and supplies since the railroad came through, that the price of provisions has dropped several notches. Potatoes are down to 8 cents per pound, fresh vegetables may be had at 25 cents per bunch—size not specified—and oranges are as low as $2.50 a dozen. One restaurant quotes lunches at 50 cents, about one-tenth the price prevailing in the days of the rush. Clothing is even cheaper, proportionately. Working clothes may be had at $15 a suit, and light shoes at $5. It is believed that prices will, by next summer, be at the Seattle scale plus transportation charges. Only one article is not a drug on the market; for some unaccountable reason, the whiskey supply is running short. Unless it is replenished by Fall, the terrors of thirst may be added to the horrors of the next Northern winter.

***

New Life in the Mormon Church.

THE Mormon Church, it seems, is again in funds. During the period of its troubles with the government, the tithing system was allowed to lapse, but under the regime now in control it has been put into effect again and one tenth of every Mormon income is paid over to the Twelve Apostles. President Snow has lately surrounded himself with a set of young and vigorous men, who have infused new life into the administration of affairs of the church. The great body of its members have accepted the edict against polygamy as the final settlement of that debated question. A few of the older men adhere secretly to the wives they had married under the old dispensation, but their indulgence is not countenanced by the organization. An interesting effect of the elimination of polygamy is the movement to unite the seceding branches of the faith with the orthodox church. Negotiations are pending with the Hendrickites and with the reorganized church, numbering some 30,000 souls. The former body demand substantial recognition in the apostolic body and doubtless will obtain it, as the heads of the church are most anxious to obtain possession of a certain square of land in the town of Independence, Mo., that is hallowed by Mormon tradition. On this plot the prophet Joseph Smith predicted a Mormon temple would arise and around it a city of Zion would be built. If the Hendrickites are tempted back to the fold, the church will proceed to realize the prophecy, for the others are too poor to do so.

***

The Democracy and the Declaration.

OF all the plays made for the grand-stand during late years, by the present Democratic party, under the leadership of the man of hybrid politics, who has hoisted their standard, perhaps the most patent and absurd was the reading of the Declaration of Independence at their recent convention. Not that this noble document could in itself ever be out of place or undignified, but in this case it represented the raft at which a drowning man clutches. "The Star Spangled Banner" was struck up by the band, the Declaration was read amid cheers, and the cause of the flamboyant misfortune of the party smiled upon the loyal assemblage from the rostrum. The whole thing was like the action of a vaudeville star, who wraps herself in a huge flag at the close of her song, to win the applause she had not been able to get in any other way. The Democratic party which had stood for human slavery and seen that blot on the escutcheon wiped out, in spite of itself, which had tried secession and failed, had croaked "The results of the war are a failure," and been silenced, had stood for greenbacking, flat money, fifty cent dollars, and the abolition of the Supreme Court, and had seen all these protogés sink out of sight under the waves of progress,—now had reached solid ground at last, and safe on the rock of the old Declaration, stood and cheered itself hoarse. In all conflicts, the survival of the fittest is the resultant gain. And whatever else goes under, in the next campaign, it won't be the Declaration of Independence. As a platform there is no fault whatever to be found with it. Still it has not been the custom to leave it to do the whole work, nor has it ever been considered the exclusive discovery of any one party.

BOSWELL, JR.

The next issue of the Wave will contain an interesting and instructive article on the Chinese crisis written by Eli Sheppard formerly United States Consul at Tien-Tsin, acting American Minister at Pekin for a time during Grant's Administration, and for sixteen years a resident of China. Probably no American has greater knowledge of Chinese politics and Oriental character, and his views on the situation will carry weight.

L. Johnson, an American, has become prominent among sporting men over in England, through his splendid driving of four-in-hands, and the general fitness of his horses. He has caused much comment by his very un-English method of holding the reins, insisting that it is the preferable way, the English method being tiring to the muscles of the arm, and therefore not suitable for long drives. He admits that the English coach whips to great perfection, but denies that the Britons can, with their system of holding the reins, have anything like the control over the horses that he can. This rank heresy has created much talk, especially as Mr. Johnson is perfectly willing to put his ideas to the test at any time, by competing in trials with any coaching man over there, in such ways as driving figures, short turns, or any test as to the control under which he holds horses. His challenges have not yet, however, been accepted. He also proposes to drive six-in-hand. English coaching men insist that if he tries it, he will become tangled up.

England has a war supply scandal of her own in the Kynoch case, which is interesting the courts, the public and the government just at present. It seems that the company in Birmingham presided over by a brother of the Colonial Secretary, and whose shares are mostly held by the Chamberlain family, has obtained contracts of excessive size for cordite and other munitions of war, notwithstanding the fact that the quality of the stuff supplied proved inferior to that furnished by other manufacturers, and further, the fact that its tender quoted was the highest price. So high was it, that the War Office authorities entered into correspondence with the Kynochs to obtain a reduction, and did not succeed sufficiently to bring the figure down to that quoted by other makers. Plain men, not officially influenced are under the impression that dealings of this kind would not have occurred without somewhat sinister motives coming into play somewhere. But the most rigid investigation fails to disclose the source or amonut of the bribes.

Hindoo Devotees Bathing in the Sacred River Ganges; an Incident of the Annual Pilgrimages in India.

THE MEANEST CITY.

"Life's" Clever Little Hoax on the American People.

IN the number of Life dated February 15th, this year, a prize of fifty dollars was offered for the best statement of facts to prove any particular city in this country the meanest one. The contest is ended. We are no longer expected to have a reasonable doubt as to which is the "meanest city in the United States." The stigma has been placed upon unobtrusive Peoria, Illinois. Avoid her now, all unwary emigrants from the Empire state, and you too, from the far West who fondly imagined you saw an "Eastern" city, when you steamed into this former pride of the Middle West. She is forever smirched among cities. For this is what has been said of her:—

Peoria, Illinois, the dirtiest city in the United States, is situated within easy smell of several packing houses, three distilleries, a glucose plant and a stagnant lake.

When it does not rain in Peoria, the inhabitants congratulate one another and exclaim: "Vot a fine day!"

When the sun shines in Peoria, it is last week's sun just penetrating the soot. All business houses close, and the whole community take a holiday.

Hogs run Peoria streets with impunity, as might be expected in a city where everbody is either a Ritzenheimer, an Ottenwoller or an Eckerstein.

The buildings in Peoria are low, because otherwise hundreds of citizens, made desperate by their environment, would seek relief by leaping from top stories. Low structures increase the mortality race.

So mean is Peoria, that it has a flourishing Creve-Coeur Club, composed of men who are broken-hearted over living in the place. The membership and the waiting list together are equal to the same male population. The club is named after old Creve-Coeur fort, erected by La Salle and Tonti near the site of the present city. La Salle and Tonti were broken-hearted because, after braving so many perils, they rounded up at such a spot.

If you reside in the valley of Peoria, so thick are the smoke and dust that when you ascend the bluffs you experience nausea from the comparatively rarefied atmosphere. And if you dwell on the bluffs, you can venture below only when supplied with individual smoke consumer and compass.

Peoria has had two distinguished inmates—Bob Burdette and Col. Ingersoll. Burdette on escaping underwent such a reaction that he became a humorist; Ingersoll, while confined there had implanted in him the firm conviction that there can be no hell after death.

Having briefly touched this subject of Peoria, I must now go and take a bath. A Fugitive.

Was the deed in truth done by one of her own ungrateful inhabitants, signing himself in this way, A Fugitive? If so, and his other alias under this pseudonym is discovered, he may well continue his Fugitive act. But the probabilities are that it was no Peorian, who thus carried a dagger under his cloak. For the "Meanest City" contest shows all through the trace of the same hand; the one who promoted the scheme and must have been widely travelled, deluged himself with arguments, and as the crowning effort of his sense of humor, bestowed his own prize upon the gem of his own collection.

For the arguments in this contest bear internal evidence of having all been written by one who is usually an outsider.

By the same token, he is probably a New York man—possibly one of that genus of wandering newspaper man who has worked six months on some paper in every part of the country, beginning and ending with New York.

The offer did not call out any answers for a month—the editors of Life probably allowed that length of time before turning their humorist loose, so as to present a decent showing of a contest. Then "Frozen Faced Ike" reopened against the weather of Duluth, which it doesn't require a resident to tell us—is bad. Most of these mythical residents, by the way, harp upon the weather, as does the casual visitor to a place. Jersey City, on the other hand, is mean just because it is Jersey City, Minneapolis because it happened to be born in Minnesota, Butte because it lies in a basin. Wallowing there, "Harry Majors" unpatriotically tries to cut holes through its atmosphere, and when he cuts back to Minneapolis again, as "Subway," gets on the same strain, until he draws himself up with a jerk, and remembers his former effort by a—"not even excepting Butte, Montana." But this Easterner forgets again and rings in that old New York joke on Brooklyn suburbanites, when he is away over in Butte. By the time he reaches Cincinnati, he is weary of thinkiug up pseudonyms, and talks about New York again. When he at last openly attacks the metropolis, his knowledge of details makes out such a bad case, that it really seems the "meanest in the bunch."

The American people like to be humbugged. They are used to it. It is a part of their craving for facetiæ, which makes them laugh over a practical joke even on themselves. But can they laugh over the tragic fact that Northampton, Mass.:—

has practically no men? Better to dwell in the plague-stricken districts of the Orient, or among the wild tribes of Patagonia, than exist in such a place. Northampton is the most afflicted, the most hopelessly null, the most intolerable city in the United States, for the noblest work of God is almost lacking.

The streets of Northampton are choked with spinsters of every variety, Smith College students being an imported injury which it is hard for the original sufferers to endure. There is no virility in the atmosphere; heroic conditions do not exist; everywhere is a sickening safety.

Or at the news from Minneapolis that:—

Some enterprising man has started a stage line to the Falls of Minnehaha, so that people can see something active once a week, and on each trip is the wit who remarks, "The laugh is on us!"

In reading of Boston over Tom Tupper's signature, we come upon the New Yorker's objection to the meanness of a place where a man has to make love to his girl by dictionary. Would that disturb a real bean-fed Bostonese in the least? Or would he find fault with his city because Homer is still rampant there, and it is the home of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company?

"Stub Pen" objects to the very things in Philadelphia which might attract the notice of a New Yorker there on a visit,—its water supply, gas company, and street railway system. Then he wants to buy bread on Sundays. No Philadelphian ever wanted to buy bread on a Sunday, but Franklin, and he was able to do so. It may be true, as the New Yorker says in another letter on the same subject, that, Philadelphia is "dopey with old families," and that there "every old cow has ancestors, and cream sets so slowly that a request to pass the butter takes you back to the middle ages," but a native Philadelphian glories in this.

How this New Yorker's imagination revels in the dullness of smaller Eastern towns, as Watertown, Schenectady, and Somerville! As he proceeds, he comes to use uncomplimentary epithets with greater and greater fluency, and by the time Harrisburg is reached, the vituperation suggests a reckless use of all the mud he has left in stock.

The Life humorist then starts West, stopping at Denver to polish off the City of the Plains as follows:—

Denver is a reformed mining camp, sprawling at the foot of the Rockies; but its reformation only came when its mines were played out, and the tough and rugged miner was outnumbered and outvoted by the hollow-chested consumptive from the Land of the East Wind.

The Denver of churches, booms, Puritanism, and respectability closes up shop at 6 p. m.; and then the whirlers from Whirlville get in their work. What the mining shark failed to collect from the confiding tourist by daylight, the nocturnal promoter annexes in the halls of roulette and faro by night.

Denver has periodic spasms of reform based on financial, rather than moral grounds; they are designed to make the nocturnal banditti surrender their hard-earned loot to the daylight skinners of the consumptive city; it is simply spoiling the Egyptians of faro.

The climate of Denver is extreme; in summer it is a bake oven, in winter an ice chest. Denver has been compared to Sheol, which is unjust to Sheol; for while you cannot really cool off in Sheol, you can strike good company.

Tenderfoot.

Perhaps as a climax, and still using the pseudonym of "Tenderfoot," he might brazenly have tried his hand even on San Francisco. He might have begun, "San Francisco is a reformed, over-grown mining-camp, perched on the hills by the Golden Gate," and leaving out considerable, used as one of the arguments for calling it the meanest city in the United States, that "it has periodic spasms of reform based on financial, rather than moral grounds." The Golden Gate is, however, slighted, as are the neighboring burgs of Oakland, Alameda, and Petaluma. There is justice in it. San Francisco ought to run a dead heat with New Orleans as the "laziest city" in the country, but she can hardly be called mean, even by her worst enemy.

The Life humorist has, however, visited Los Angeles and even San Diego. He says of the latter:

The town, like a squab pigeon, was bigger at its boom-birth than it ever has been since. In area it is the second largest city in the United States, and in enterprise the smallest. Its taxes correspond with its area, but what it lacks in population it makes up in fleas; so it may be said to be on the jump.

Its city council is larger than most State legislatures; lobbyists say they don't come high, but they "come so d——d often."

The principal amusement of the inhabitants consists of "running down" their neighbors, backbiting, spreading scandal, and "skinning" one another. When not busy with this, they are watching for rain—that never comes."

San Diegans are firmly convinced that there is only one way to climb the encircling wall of stagnation; and when Gabriel blows his trumpet they will still be tugging at their bootstraps."

"Weary Willie" maligning Cleveland speaks in the language of a Chimmie Fadden:

A mug wot dey called Moses Cleaveland founded dat Home for Feeble-minded just about a hundren years back. Wen he seen wot he done, he went out in de woods near Glenville and died. Its a cinch de rest o' de guys wot was foundin' towns about den would a smeared him for queerin' de bizness if he hadn't. He had it comin' to him.

Mean? Why, Cleveland raised Mark Hanna an' she's been gettin worse ever since.

In the same number he has a statistical dab at our, own City of The Angels (?) down below. He has been an "Eastern tourist" and he knows all about it:—

"If an Eastern tourist venture out at noon, he is overcome by heat; if at night, he is frost bitten. Should he wander after dark, footpads rob him of what little the hotels leave. After the footpads finish, the hotel turns him out, and then goes after the footpad.

Hotels charge Waldorf prices for Bowery accommodations.

Each day four oil companies are formed, and ten barrels of oil produced. Gold mines are abundant, gold bricks more so.

It is the graveyard of theatrical troops.

He doesn't own any oil wells down there; he isn't among their boom-born nouveau riche aristocracy. He is only plain unenthusiastic New York, and it worries him that:—

Most of its citizens find it convenient to date their pedigrees from the day of crossing the state line; and may adopt the same course in regard to their names. Mr. Black of Boston becomes Mr. White here. To say "a requisition has come" would empty any hall.

But why did he overlook Oakland? We have been defrauded. What is Peoria that she should have been chosen over Oakland?

The Famine In India.

THE latest advices from Simla show that the terrible food and water famine, together with a cholera pestilence, is still going on in India and there is, as yet, no abatement in the deplorable state of affairs. From many of the outlying districts news travels slowly or not at all, so that it is sometimes six months before the mere presence of a famine will become known. Readers of Kipling will remember in his story of William the Conqueror, the description of the really heroic efforts made by the English at these times, to lighten the grievous condition of the natives; but when the cholera rages too, it has the effect of driving away those in the famine relief camps. But in spite of this, the number employed in this work was increased by 73,000 during June.

A shortage of the water supply has as usual followed in the tracks of the famine. Springs and small streams have long ago dried up; wells are empty; while even the large rivers are now mere trickling threads of water, meandering through a wilderness of hot rock or burning sand. The drought has turned some of the most beautiful portions of Western India into a place of slow, terrible and lingering death. The people, going in search of help, have died by hundreds on the road, and jackal, pariah dog and crow fattened on their remains. In the cities, the corpse-bearers have been busy every morning removing from sight the offensive evidences of the epidemic. The sights seen in these cities have been too terrible to describe, and they must be much worse in the desolate out-lying hill tracts, where even the small measure of relief possible has not yet penetrated. The pangs of hunger are so great that the people in their desperation have taken to eating the most disgusting and impossible substances. On the borders of the Great Western Desert where is Scinde and Rajputana, not only have 90 per cent of all the cattle died, but the roads which are mere tracks across the sandy wastes, were not long ago littered for miles with human corpses.

The water supply in India depends entirely upon natural sources, except in Nagpore and a few other districts where there are water works, so that the yearly coming of the monsoon is a necessary event. But this year the meteorological reports give rise to the theory that the monsoon currents as sometimes happens, have been deflected from their usual course, the African coast. The horrors of the situation would be unexampled, if the monsoon should thus be very late or poor in quantity. Quite apart from the impossibility of all agricultural operations, it would simply mean that countless thousands of people would die of thirst.

What are some of the needs to be relieved before Finis can be written to this "tale of rotting corpses, glistening skeletons of hundreds of men and cattle, hamlets wiped out, and mile after mile of country utterly desolated?" The English Government is feeding some 6,000,000 people, but it does not provide them with clothing, which would be so bitterly needed, were the rains to come. The Mansion House Relief Fund in England may have reached possibly $300,000, but it is a mere drop in the bucket for the amount that is needed to clothe and feed one-half of the sufferers. All those natives of both sexes who cannot from caste motives engage in manual labor, must be supported from the charitable fund. But the greatest charge of all is the replacement of cattle. If India is to recover from this famine within a period of even ten years, it is absolutely necessary that as soon as the first rain falls and provides food for the cattle, the peasants who have lost their plough beasts should be provided with others. The cattle have perished by the million. No lands can be tilled, even if rains come, unless they are replaced.

It is thought that if only the people of England could be made to understand and realize the true awfulness of the state of affairs in the unhappy country under their rule, they would give with even greater generosity than they have so far done. But one of the greatest difficulties is getting dependable accounts of the state of affairs, in cases like the present, where the famine starts in out of the way districts. Like a canker, it gnaws long at the heart of India before the fact is visible on the surface. For instance, a Maharaja, or Prince, of the old conservative type, knows nothing of what goes on outside of his capital beyond what his entourage chooses to tell him. In any native state the task of famine relief is a long time in organization, because there is no proper staff of engineers or skilled civil servants to superintend things, and because all business is carried on with the utmost dilatoriness. Hence though relief measures may be started comparatively early, they usually come too late to save the thousands who are first victims of the famine. British effort is the only hope.

According to a late Washington report Miss Gail Laughlin, who is a lawyer in New York, has been appointed by the National Industrial Commission to investigate the servant girl problem in the United States. This young woman was graduated at Wellesley in 1894, and at Cornell Law School four years later. She was admitted to the New York bar in 1898, and is a member of the National Woman's Suffrage Association, and of the Committee on Industrial Problems affecting women and children. As a member of that committee she delivered an address last February on women wage-earners, which a member of the Industrial Commission heard. He was enthusiastic in his approval of the address, and as a result suggested her for this appointment. Miss Laughlin is one of those who advocate a training school for domestic servants.

Phonographic archives are about to be added to one of the public libraries, in the Austrian capital, by the Vienna Academy of Science. There will be three sections in the projected department, the first for the preservation of phonograms of every known European language and dialect, to which will be added later on all non-European languages and the second, for the record of the finest contemporary musical performances, supplemented by that of the music of peoples in distant countries. The third section will be for the collection of complete speeches by celebrated men. There are some scientific difficulties of process to be overcome, but if the experiment is a success the Vienna Academy of Science will suggest that the learned societies of other countries take up the matter.

A bacteriological method of exterminating rats, has been discovered by M. J. Danysy of the Pasteur Institute of Paris, and described in "the British Medical Journal." M. Danysy claims to have a certain microbe which can be trusted to breed a regular bubonic plague among rats, which will either remove them from this sphere of action, or reduce their numbers materially, if introduced into a population of them. By experiments on field-mice, suffering from an epidemic disease, he succeeded in procuring cultures, which used upon other rodents, in a number of places, resulted (in 50 per cent of the cases), in the entire disappearance of the rats. In 30 per cent their number was greatly lessened, and in only 20 per cent of the trials, did the method fail.

Meditations of a Matron.

A LULL in the good times seems to have arisen, my dear Diary. I have spent this week down in Burlingame It has been exceptionally quiet. The girls seem to have grown weary of men and dinners and amusements. They are beginning now to take a real summer rest. We all need it, I suppose. How I do hate it. I hate to rest and think and settle down to the inevitable fact that I am a married woman. It is a terrible thing to realize that one cannot do as one likes. Yet I should do it all over again should the opportunity present itself. I am perfectly happy. Yet, I astonished myself the other day by making the statement that happiness was such a relative thing. It paralyzed me, my own audacity. Fancy the bright vivacious Cricket of babbling fame commencing to take herself seriously. I may begin soon to study the Darwinian theory or perhaps get to the stage where Spencer is my favorite literature. I of course attribute it to the fact that I am now a married woman.

You must notice a tremendous change in me Diary dear. The first that manifested itself to me was an uncontrollable desire to give advice to all the girls of my acquaintance. In the beginning each thought it a joke, now Diary dear I am the confidante of most of the young unmarried people I know, and believe I exercise quite an amount of influence over them. A girl told me the other day she was hopelessly in love with one man but he had nothing but a salary. Another who was well supplied with this world's good things cared for her. Six months ago I should have said—If you love a poor man, marry him. Today I said, "Eva, marry the man with the better disposition." She is now engaged to a man, who before my advice, was merely a "best friend."

I am getting amazingly wise. Leila facetiously remarked when I mentioned this to her, that it might possibly arise from the fact that I am in Burlingame. Robert has bought some polo ponies. I am just wondering now what I really want. When he startled me by telling me in an apologetic sort of way that he had bought polo ponies, I immediately confessed my inability to live without accounts at different stores. I forgave him his ponies, and he has decided to obliterate from his mind the foolish repugnance he had for bills. I worry about Robert playing polo, it is such a dangerous game, but he is determined to go in for it. Of course it is Arthur's fault. I really think Diary dear that Arthur thinks he can have the use of Robert's ponies on occasions. Boys of Arthur's sort very frequently have a motive in urging their rich brother-in-laws to indulge in an expensive sport. I told Arthur on several occasions that Robert was not the sort of man to play, but Arthur was obdurate and Robert now has a stable. So much for Cricket's influence.

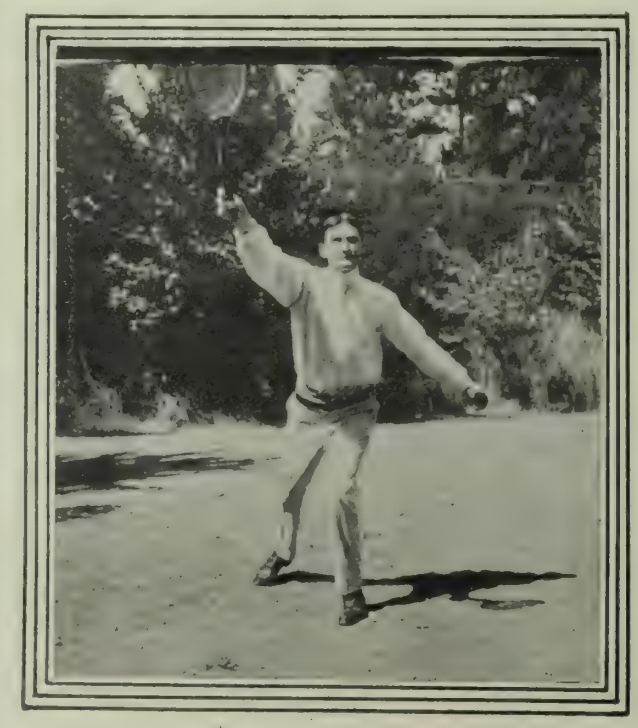
Poor little Cricket; I suppose you are tired of this rhapsody on myself, so I shall tell you of Leila's doings.

That eldest sister of mine is exceedingly gay and popular. There is never a dinner nor luncheon nor tea at San Rafael without her. I cannot for the life of me find wherein lies her exceedingly great charm. It may be a lack of appreciation in me. She says she finds Mrs. Marcus Gerstle the brightest of the young married women in San Rafael, and Mrs. George Heazleton the most intellectual. She awards the palm of beauty and intelligence to Mrs. Avery McCarthy whom she insists has a rarer appreciation of humor than anyone else over there. When I wrote asking her what she thought of the men, she merely replied in her little caustic way "Cricket, the men are all the husbands of their wives." I allow you, Diary dear, to draw your own inferences from that. Robert and Arthur each said that it implied Leila was not a man's woman. I read the list of guests and my conclusion is that there are none but married men at the hotel. Leila, however, is absolutely content, and writes most enthusiastically of golf tournaments and card parties. The last card party was given by Mrs. Smedberg. She has a house near the court house. It is a mass of vines and very pretty. All the older ladies were there. Mrs. Folger was the prettiest, she has such beautiful hair and skin. Leila's favorites are Mrs. Dean and Mrs. Grant. Mrs. Smith is also very popular. One evening Leila and Edith McBean and May Kip and several others met a crowd in town and with Mrs. Maus as chaperon had a jolly Dutch treat dinner and afterwards went to see "The Marriage of Convenience." The men, of course, were the Boardmans, Ed. Greenway and Lawrence Scott. Leila is devoted to those fellows but I always failed to find them wildly exciting for a steady diet. But then I am terribly exigeant. I liked Gerald Rathbone, Harry Stetson, Will Page and Nat. Wilson. Many are the quarrels Leila and I still have over those same fellows.

Next week I am to be in Del Monte again. It is to be with Papa. He and I love the dear old seventeen mile drive, the walks through the grounds, and the harmonious life. When Papa says Del Monte is the Queen of watering places, I immediately compare it in my mind to apollinaris sparkling and harmless. It is both, gay and not gossipy like some places. Of course, it is large and there is a great deal to do there. I have an exceedingly smart bathing suit. So far Alice Hager's ability as a swimmer takes first prize. Helen Wagner and Bertha Dolbeer too have a good deal of fun in the sea. Louise Breeze is quite good at at golf. She has one of the best shaped heads of any girl I know. She evinces quite a talent for sketching too. Castle Crag I have not mentioned, though life up there is very pleasant. I spent my jolliest summer there several years before I came out. It was the time when the Goads and the Martin boys and Marie McNutt were all young. I'd like to go up there again with the same crowd under the same circumstances. Well, wishing hardly tells you news Diary dear, so I shall say adieu for this week. With a fond anticipation of interesting you further next time.

MRS. CRICKET.

Sam and Summer Hardy, Runners-up in Doubles at the Western Tennis Tournament.



George Whitney, Pacific Coast Champion and Probably the Strongest Player in the West.

HER REASON.—A Boston groceryman relates that a little girl entered his store, recently, and asked for a cent's worth of candy.

"It's for papa," she said. "I want to s'prise him when he comes home."

The groceryman proceeded to dig out some of his stock, when the little girl interposed.

"Don't give me that kind. Give me caramels. I just love caramels."

"But I thought these were for papa," the groceryman remarked.

"I know," explained the little girl, "but when I give them to papa he'll just kiss me and say 'cause I'm such a generous little girl he'll give them all back to me. So you'd better give me caramels."

A DEFERRED PAYMENT.—A discharged soldier recently returned from the Philippines says that his company was returning from a long and tiresome scouting trip, in which most of the men had lost the greater part of their wearing apparel, when he saw, on a clothes line in the grounds of a residence adjoining a church, two shirts. As he had at the time only half a shirt to his back, he proceeded to help himself to a whole one, whereupon a woman came out of the house and said to him, in passable English, "You will pay for that on the Judgment Day." "Madam," he replied, "if you give such long credit I will take both shirts," which he proceeded to do.

A NEW TELEPHONE COMPANY.

The installation of a new telephone system in San Francisco will be watched with interest. The People's Mutual Telephone Company began operations on July 6th, installing its plant and system and intends prosecuting work as rapidly as possible. It expects to have its exchange in operation within six months and certainly offers inducements to subscribers which will atrract to it public attention and patronage. The Mutual guarananteeds free phones and switching to every public office including the Fire and Police Department and it is also to pay the city two per cent of its gross receipts. It also proposes to distribute 20,000 shares—$2,000,000 of its capital stock among the users of its phones as a consideration for signing contracts. The capital stock of the new institution is five million dollars—50,000 shares of $100 each. The corporation offers 5,000 shares for sale at $25 per share payable in monthly installments of $5

A fellow once said, "I want some whiskey, and I want it bad;" so they didn't give him Jesse Moore.

The Pianola is bringing into use thousands of pianos that have been silent for years. Call and see it at Kohler & Chase, 26 and 30 O'Farrell street. Sole agents.

A Mother's True Friend

"I would like to express my gratitude for the benefit received from your wonderful medicine, 'Favorite Prescription,'" writes Mrs. H. C. Anderson, of South Britain, New Haven Co., Conn., (Box 33). "During the first month of pregnancy I could not keep anything on my stomach. Was so sick that I had to go to bed and stay for weeks. I tried different doctors, but with little benefit. I read about many being helped by using your medicine so I thought I would give it a trial. I began to take your 'Favorite Prescription' in November and I had a nice little baby girl in February following. My baby weighed over eight pounds. I was only in hard labor about one hour and got along nicely during confinement; was up and dressed on the eighth day. I never had the doctor with me at all. My friends thought that I was sick a very short time. I think Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is indeed a mother's true friend, for it helped me wonderfully."

FAVORITE PRESCRIPTION
MAKES WEAK WOMEN STRONG, SICK WOMEN WELL.

The Old Government the perfection of Whisky.
BOTTLED AT THE DISTILLERY
PURE-AGED-WHOLESOME.
Used in the Medical Departments of the U.S. ARMY & NAVY SERVICE
WILLIAM WOLFF & CO.
SAN FRANCISCO, DISTRIBUTORS.
Beware of Imitations or refilled Bottles

IF YOU WANT THE BEST COAL OIL.
BUY

Brushes for barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bath-houses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS., Brush Mfrs.
TEL. 5810 609 SACRAMENTO STREET

1875 1900
Safe Deposit and Trust Co.
Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.
PHONE BUSH 165.
Safe-Deposit Boxes from $5.00 per year up. Trunks and Valuables of every Description Stores in Fire and Burglar-Proof Vaults at $1.00 per month.
Office Hours 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.

MUSEMENTS

Orpheum

Meeker-Baker Trio; Joe T. Sullivan and Carrie Webber; Jessie Padgham; Etta Butlea; Miss Lillian Burkhart and Company; Williamson and Stone; Donohue and Nichols; The Biograph.

Reserved Seats 25c.; Balcony 10c.; Opera Chairs and Box Seats 50c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.

Columbia Theatre

BEGINNING MONDAY NIGHT, JULY 16th.
Fifth week Charles Frohman presents
HENRY MILLER
and a special company
Six nights, matinees Wed. and Sat.
First time in this city of R. Marshall's new and original farcical romance

His Excellency, the Governor.

Originally produced at Lyceum Theatre, N. Y. July 30—"Brother Officers."
Thursday afternoons and Sunday nights Burton Holmes Lectures.

California THE POPULAR HOUSE

H. FRIEDLANDER & Co., Lessees and Managers. [Tele. Main 1731

Week Commencing Sun. Night, July 22nd
Matinees Saturday Only.

Matthews & Bulger in conjunction with
DUNNE & RYLEY'S ALL STAR CAST.
In their original success

"RUSH CITY."

A Whirl-I-Gig of fun. By Gus Heege, author of "Ole Olson and "Yon Yonson."
Next week—"By the Sad Sea Waves.
Our Never Changing Popular Prices.

Alcazar Theatre.

BELASCO & THALL, Managers. Phone 254

Week of July 23rd.
The hit of the year, every night at 8:15.
Eighth week of
FLORENCE ROBERTS
Assisted by White Whittlesey
—AND—

Only the Master Shall Blame

Matinee Saturday only.
Alcazar Prices, 15c, 25c, 35c, 50c.

Columbia Theatre.

Burton Holmes Lectures

Direction of Henry Miller.

Illustrations in colors and appropriate Motion Pictures. Two courses exactly alike.

Six Thursday matinees at 2:30
Six Sunday evenings at 8:30.

Japan revisited, July 26 and 29.
Round About Paris, Aug. 2 and 5.
Grand Canon, Aug. 9 and 12.
Moki Land, Aug. 16 and 19.
Hawaiian Islands, 23 and 26.
Reserved seats $1, 75c., and 50c., ready Mon.

HAVE YOU EVER THOUGHT

WHAT A GAS RANGE WILL DO?

It will do everything any other cooking apparatus will do, but it will do it BETTER QUICKER, EASIER and CHEAPER!

IT WILL DO AWAY WITH

Dirt, Worry and Ashes
Your Kitchen will be Clean,
Your working hours shorter.
Your Food will be better Cooked,
Your Life Prolonged, and
Your Happiness assured.

STOVE DEPARTMENT,
415 POST ST., SAN FRANCISCO

There is not an ounce of headache in a barrel of it—Jesse Moore "AA" whiskey.

AT THE THEATERS

MISS LILLIAN BURKHART in a blatant French farce and Miss Marie Stuart in a clever American one make and mar the Orpheum program this week. As to "Captain Suzanne" I am not blaming Miss Burkhart, mind you. With her native adroitness she handles the hysterical affair so well that we are enabled at times to laugh in the right places and to hold our breath with interest where we ought to be snickering at the pathetic lines. I do not remember much about Miss Stuart's playlet except that the conventional gay husband intrigues and goes out o' nights in the same old way and our old friend the innocent young wife hides the wrong man in the wrong room and gets into complications of antique memory; but I know that I laughed with the rest and voted Miss Stuart a gilt-edged mimic with a naughty, naughty kick.

Stella Mayhew does the down South darky with a realism that is almost too good for vaudeville. Barrere and Jules are clever gymnasts. The Quaker City quartet mask as blacksmiths as an excuse to introduce the time-honored musical eccentricity, while Smith and Fuller do likewise without the formality of a pretext. Williamson and Stone are amusing as burnt cork comedians.

* *

Morosco is gradually sliding toward his favorite melodrama. This week's play "The Great Ruby," is a mixture of a "Duchess" novel with an Anna Green detective story. The scenes, after the manner of late British melodrama, are numerous and short. The countless complications of the plot cause the audience to follow it with breathless interest. Some of the striking features are the driving of a coach and four-in-hand about the stage, a public luncheon scene on the Lord's Cricket Grounds, and the scene which made the play famous, a balloon ascension in which a "thrilling struggle" takes place while the baloon is in mid-air. Wilton Lackeye as Prince Cassim and Harrington Reynolds as Longman, in this balloon struggling with each other for life, aroused the enthusiasm of the house. The only other curtain call Tuesday night was won by Mary Van Buren, after her sleep-walking scene, a "swipe" from Shakespeare, by the way. As Lady Garnett she was as handsome and exquisitely gowned as usual. The part was light comedy, that of an impulsive, independent foolish young wife, and no great strain on the powers of an actress; but she made the character very likeable.

A more difficult role was that of the Russian Countess, Mirtza Charroff, played by Corona Riccardo, a new actress to the Coast. She is a very graceful and expressive young woman, with an extremely sympathetic voice. Her stage presence is picturesque, and in the melodramatic scenes she shows that she has much reserve force to call upon. She invests the supposedly wicked little diamond thief with all the womanly charm and allurement that usually goes with the stage Russian. Wilton Lackeye in the role of the Indian, Prince Cassim, looked the romantic part to perfection, and gave a realistic, pleasing reprensentation. His method was refined and earnest and not overdone.

* *

In Sir Simon Beauclerc, Reginald Travers had a chance to be decidedly funny. Robert Greppo, as Lord George Hartopp, gave a more successful delineation. But it was noticeable how early in the play most of the supposedly high-class English people lapsed into a most un-English manner of clipping off their words. Captain Dalrymple, for example, was attractive, but not at all English. The part of Brenda Elsmere, the pretty young girl of the three volume novel sort of play, was taken by Ruth Berkeley, in a characterization which was simple, winning and realistic. The main interest, however, lay in following the fortunes of the coaching party collectively, (which was the Duchess novel part,) and the story of the great ruby robbery, which was the Anna Green detective part, involving the fascinating Russian and "de diamond gang." The stage settings and elaboration of scenic effect were very good. It is well that they were, as the story offers few situations for arousing the sympathies of the audience.

It is a pity that a woman with such a face and figure as Miss Van Buren, should have so little play of facial expression. This lack was not patent in the sleep-walking scene however, as her handsome features very naturally and effectively took on the necessary glassy stare. But as her lines in this scene as well as the entire situation were only amusing, and didn't come to much of anything in the end. The whole device was rather overdone.

* *

In "The Liars" it is that the opportunity of E. J. Morgan comes in. His rendering of the role of Edward Falkner is the fine effect of the piece. The climax of the third act when, at the request of Lady Jessica, he tells the truth to Gilbert Nepean is a masterly situation, but a lesser man could not rise to the height that Morgan does. That speech elevates comedy into tragedy. One realizes how the manner and attitude of the actor have been keyed to it. He is, throughout, the somber, intense enthusiast willing to sacrifice life, honor, career for a cause or a love. There is not a false note in this performance. Miss Anglin was rather more charming, more flexible, more subtly clever than when she rendered the role of Lady Jessica at the Columbia twelve months ago. To see and enjoy her is a privilege we in the Far West may not have again, for she is destined to the highest distinction in the profession and the call can hardly be delayed much longer. Mr. Miller has certainly gained ease and naturalness since last he enacted his Christopher Deering. Then a clever and conscientious performance, now it is also a very agreeable and graceful one.

* *

"His Excellency, the Governor," a farcical romance in three acts by R. Marshall is to be the bill for the fifth week of the Henry Miller season at the Columbia Theatre, beginning with next Monday night. The play was a great success in New York and England. The cast for the Columbia will include E. J. Morgan, Frank Worthing, Charles Walcot, Sadie Martinot, Mrs. Thos. Whiffen and others. "Brother Officers" will follow.

* *

At the Columbia Theatre on Sunday night the second of the Burton Holmes Lectures will be given. "Manila" will be the subject. Next Thursday afternoon and the following Sunday night the subject is to be "Japan Revisited." The lectures are proving very popular.

* *

Next week, the Alcazar will have a rather unusual attraction in "The County Girl," one of the oldest plays now on the boards. It was first produced in 1673, being the work of Wycherlie. Afterward, Garrick adapted it for his time. Ada Rehan's name is connected with its revival in this century. Florence Roberts will play the leading role of Peggy.

* *

During the coming week Matthews and Bulger, supported by Dunne and Ryley's comedy company, at the California, will appear in their original success, "Rush City." "By the Sad Sea Waves," will follow.

* *

Miss Lillian Burkhart, entering upon this her last week, at the Orpheum, will give by request a number of her most successful plays, including:—"A Passing Fancy," "A Garret Salvation," "Fifty Years Ago," and "A Deal on Change." Jessie Padgham, a Los Angeles girl, will appear on the program for the first time. The Meeker-Baker trio-acrobats, Kitty Mitchell and Donahue and Nichols are among the other attractions.

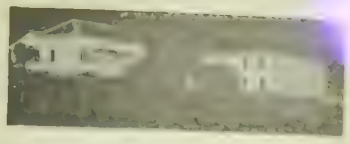
* *

Florence Roberts is starring in "Ingomar" this week to good houses. The play is of the old robust-heroic style and a trifle out of date. The acting is excellent, however, on the part of both the stars and the subordinates.

* *

Matthews and Bulger's old comedy success "At Gay Coney Island," with new specialties, has held the boards this week at the California. Being mainly a clever excuse for the stringing of songs and specialties, it just suits the company. The two head-jokers, Tony Hart as the German grocer and Phil Ryley in a dual role, were special favorites with the audience.

When taken at the proper time a little Jesse Moore "AA" whiskey will prevent a cold.



DUNCAN SPRINGS HOPLAND Mendocino Co.

Two miles from railroad station; 101 miles from San Francisco; enequalled soda and magnesia springs; hospitable management, first-class table; hard-finished hotel; picturesque site and surroundings, two trains daily, long-distance telephone; terms $10 to $12 per week; housekeepping cottages $15 to $20 per month. Waters bottled by W. H. Bone, 638 Merchant street, S. F. Through fare $3 50 Send for circulars.
Address O. HOWELL.

FOR AN OUTING....

Visit one of the many Mineral Springs Resorts along the California Northwestern Railway Co.

Leesee of San Francisco and North Pacific Railway Company. (The Picturesque Route of California.)

Where the Famous Mineral Waters of the World are Duplicated.

If you prefer the simple home life of the Ranch, free from fashion's restraints, there are many in our section from which to choose. But if you would rather the tent in some shady nook, near a lovely lake, or on the bank of some beautiful stream, remember such locations are numerous and free of charge.

Call for "VACATION," a little book just issued by the Company, giving Camping Locations, Hotels, Mineral Spring Resorts, and a list of one hundred and sixty-seven Farms and homes, where Board for the Summer can be secured at from $5 00 to $8.00 per week.

Ticket Office, 650 Market street (Chronicle building)
General Office, Mutual Life building, Sansome and California streets, San Francisco.
H. C. WHITING, General Manager,
R. X. RYAN, General Passenger Agent.

NOTICE,

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned has, by order of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of California, been appoined assignee in bankruptcy of Prosley C. Hyman in the place and stead of Henry C. Hyde, the former assignee, deceased
Dated June 27th, 1900.
FRANK L. OWEN, Assignee.

NOTICE OF ASSESSMENT—OCCIDENTAL CONSOLIDATED MINING COMPANY—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California; location of works, Silver Star Mining District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the fourteenth (14th) day of July, 1900, an assessment (No. 35) of five (5) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 69 Nevada block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the seventeenth (17th) day of Aug., 1900 will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Tuesday the eleventh (11th) day of Sept., 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors
ALFRED K. DURBROW, Secretary.
Office: Room 69, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

TELEPHONE STOCK FOR SALE.

Safest and Best Investment Before the Public To-Day.

PEOPLES' MUTUAL TELEPHONE COMPANY.

Capital Stock $5,000,000 — 50,000 Shares of $100 Each.

Is the owner of the most valuable Telephone Franchise in the United States.
Has 3500 contracts for the use of its telephones.
Has assured net income of over $100,000 a year.
GIVES city FREE telephones and switching in all city offices; FREE Fire and Police Department Wires.
GIVES city telephone users $2,000,000—20,000 shares of its stock for using its phones
Charges lower rates than Bell Company.
Will pay 10 per cent dividends on its stock if supported by telephone users.
GUARANTEES that no assessment will ever be levied on its stock.
Will keep millions of dollars in California that now go to Eastern capitalists.
ONLY 5000 shares for sale, for construction purposes, at $25.00 a share, payable in monthly installments of $5.00. Last day for subscription July 30th, 1900. The price of the stock will be raised after July 25th to $30,000 a share.
Full information furnished upon application to
PEOPLES' MUTUAL TELEPHONE COMPANY,
June 30, 1900. 206 SANSOME STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

A Suburban Cinch.

"WE'LL get Red Beak Jim to hike us down in his caloosh," said the main guy of the four. The four were job holders in one of the city departments, and they were talking about ways and means of reaching the Sheepshead track for the Suburban.

"Good thing," said the three others. "Go on and ask Jimmy for a figure, down and back, for the bunch. Hey, and don't let him dicker you out o' your gilt teeth. Jimmy's a robber."

So the main guy of the four sprinted after Red Beak Jim. He found him with the major portion of his countenance immersed in the collarette of an open-faced malt magnum.

"Hey, Jim," said the main guy, "hitch 'em up and bring 'em around about noon. Down to the Bay and back. There's four of us. What d'ye say to the note for $10 for the job?"

Red Beak Jim removed the mammoth piece of glassware from his face long enough to remark:

"Nothin' doin'."

"Aint, hey?" said the main guy. "The old caloose's fallen apart at last, hey?"

Red Beak Jim set the beer glass down and wiped off his mouth with the back of his coat-sleeve.

"It'll be jugglin' around when you're yelling for ice at any old price a hunnerd," said he "Nope, I'm 'ngaged f'r th' Bay."

"Say, you've got your fingers crossed or your suspenders," said the main guy. "Give you fifteen for the job."

"Goin't t' take three down," said Red Beak Jim. "Ten a head. Sorry I didn't ask 'em fifteen. Trucks is chargin' ten a head."

"Ten a head, hey," said the main guy, sarcastically. "What in, zinc money? Hey, pull around Jim, or you'll lose a wheel. Ten a head? Get away with that hasheesh. Give us a figure."

"You've got it," replied Red Beak Jim. "Ten per, round trip. I'm a good thing at that. But I'm nagged."

"So's me little sister," said the main guy. "All right, work your edge. What's ten a head to us, at that? Hey, we got the baby to-day Jim, and you want to put some braces under that old caloosh. We'll have two ton of money coming back. Bring 'er around, then, at noon."

"Sure," said Red Beak Jim, and he was there at noon, all right, with the hack all varnished up and dusted off, and the pair looking fit to reel off a mile in five minutes, on the bit. The four were inside.

"At the pump, gents," said he.

They yanked him in to have one before the start, and they all got him over into the dark corner. Then the main guy addressed him.

"Jim," said the main guy, "we're handling this to you because you're all right—from the knees down. On the level, though, Jim, we pass this along to you because it's right. It's prepared. It's a nightingale in the woods, and it'll be s'nging when all the rest of 'em are still trying to find out where the wire is. Horse of the century? Nix. Not for these little Willies. The black, let 'er sleep wonder? Not. We stay out there. The Whitney thing with the Frenchy name? Hoot mon. Pass this squad by. Nope. We got it right, Jimmy. And we're handling you the forty bucks now so's you can plant it right. Here's the forty—and say, you want to remember that you're paid, see? Well, you get over the fence somehow—let a kid tak · care o' your two goats and the caloosh—and you put the whole forty on Kinley Mack. See? Got that chalked? You put the forty on Kinley Mack, and part o' the two ton o' gilt we'll have on the come-back 'll belong to you. Kinley Mack's going to stand 'em all on their heads and twist 'em round. Don't say we didn't put you next. Uneeda win. Well, you win. Nothing to it. Kinley Mack. Ain't that right, you ducks?"

"That's right, all right," said the other three all together.

Red Beak Jim emptied his flagon thoughtfully.

"I got mine at that game," said he, finally. "They made a bum o' me before you people was through playin' jacks. They can run f'r Hogan. These"—salting away the two twenties the main guy had handed him—"will do f'r me. I don't want t' get rich fast, nohow. I'd booze meself foolish. Much 'bliged, gents, but I can't see no Kinley Macks or Billy Bryans, f'r that matter, wit' a spy-glass."

"All right," said the main guy, disgustedly. "But when the ring's around Kinley Mack, and they're paying off the wise people on him, you want to muffle the bleats you'll have coming, see? Don't say we never dished you up a hot one. You're a sport, Jimmy and so's a tadpole. You'll never butt in among the first six. All right. Come on, you people."

They clinked the pieces of ice against the sides of their glasses once more, and then they climed into the hack and were away in a row, to a good start.

At each of the seven places at which they stopped for ice, with trimmings, on the way down to the bay, they announced to friends that they met that it was only going to be a one horse race.

"Run on a fast track, hey?" said the main guy to everybody he knew at the stops. "Say, that's his graft. That's his main plant. A racehorse can run on any old kind of a track. Say, you get tied up with this horse of the century, hey? Say, d'je ever happen to hear of Salvator and Tenny and Hanover and Lamplighter and Henry of Navarre and Sir Walter and Raceland and Hamburg and a few old two-dollar mutts like that? Did, hey? Well, say, do they butt in? Say, Hamburg could've run backward as fast as this horse of the century that you people have all got the bug about. Kinley Mack! Kinley Mack! Hey, fellers?"

"Thash ri'," said the other three, and then they climbed into the hack again.

When they got down to the track entrance and alighted, the main guy of the four, still mindful of his duty toward struggling fellow men, made a final appeal to Red Beak Jim.

"Jim," said he, "how about taking our steer, hey? This is the good thing of the year. It's going to be a long summer. Going to put that forty on Kinley Mack?"

"I'm goin' t' take a nap after I have a smoke," replied Red Beak Jim, filling his pipe.

The four walked away with an air of disgust, while Red Beak Jim grinned after them.

Each of the four had a one-hundred dollar note wherewith to back Kinley Mack off the boards. The temptations of the first three races, however, collared them, and when the state went up for the Suburban they each had a fifty-dollar note wherewith to play Kinley Mack, the good thing. When the horses were at the post for the third race, the main guy, who happened to be standing close to the fence that separates the grand stand crowd from the people in the cheap field, saw Red Beak Jim, with his hands in his pockets and his pipe in his mouth, leaning against the rail. He called the hackman, and Red Beak Jim approached the fence with a grin.

"Thought you'd got on, anyhow, hey?" said the main guy.

"Naw, I jes' crep in t' see 'm run an' hear th' hard losers tell how it was they lost." said Red Beak Jim, "Nothin' doin' wit' me.

"Ain't going to put those forty on Kinley Mack, hey?" asked the main guy.

"Not if I'm awake," said Red Beak Jim, and the main guy walked away from the fence with an ex ression of commiseration on his face.

The horses were still at the post for the third race when the main guy was approached by a horseman he knew. The horseman was chewing a straw. He looked very wise.

"Cashed yet on Imp?" the horseman asked the main guy.

"Hey?" asked the latter, bending his ear.

"Only a canter for that one," said the horseman, in a low tone, temporarily removing the straw from his face. "Just a little exercise gallop for the black filly."

"Say, is that right?" inquired the main guy. "Is she so good as all that to-day?"

"Surest thing you know," said the horseman. "She'll give 'em all a fifty-pound beating, or I don't know a hoof from a currycomb. I'm only spinning this along to the people I've got some use for. That's the reason I dip it up for you."

"But, say," whispered the main guy of the four, "I got it straight as a ramrod on Kinley Mack."

The horseman smiled benignly.

"On this track?" said he. "That one would'nt beat a fat man on this track. He wants slop and slush. I'm only telling you, that's all. You splurge on Imp and it'll be all yours."

"I always was stuck on that darned old mare, anyhow," mused the main guy of the four, as as he walked off in search of the other three. "She sure can rip the air when she's ripe. Got a thunder of a notion to switch to her at that. That fellow ought to know. He's been handling 'em long enough. Kinley Mack only a mudder, hey? Had kind of a hunch that way myself, but I didn't want to own up. Last week, before I got this Kinley Mack thing, I was sure going to play Imp and I'd feel like a nickel's worth of lard if she'd go out and spread-eagle 'em, now that I've got this Kinley Mack thing."

He stood still for a moment with his hands in his pockets, oblivious of the jostling crowd, and then he slapped his thigh.

"I've got the hunch—it's Imp!" he muttered. "Lemme find the fellers and put 'em next."

He found the other three. They were putty when the main guy told them what the horseman had said. They'd always liked Imp, anyhow.

Their four fifty-dollar notes went on Imp straight, when the slates went up. They all stood together and rooted for the black mare when the horses got off. When Kinley Mack romped in, an easy winner, they didn't say anything at all. They didn't even look at one another. They avoided one another's gaze, thrust their hands deep into their pockets and studied the jockeys as they dismounted. When the first numbness had passed, the main guy of the four led them to the bar and they drank the longest one of the day in silence They looked into their glasses as they twiddled their spoons, but they didn't look at one another.

There was $17 still left among the four—not enough for any sort of celebration or doings when they got back to town. So the main guy gathered up the $17 in silence and put it all on a horse at 10 to 1 in the fifth race, with the idea of running the shoestring into a tannery. The 10 to 1 shot was never in the hunt at any stage of it, and they were all out. Silently they wended their way out of the gate.

Red Beak Jim was sitting on the seat of the hack, with his legs crossed, smoking a pipe. He looked interested when the four came alongside.

"You'se people must have all kinds," said he.

They climbed into the hack without a word.

"D'je play that one?" inquired Red Beak Jim, picking up the lines.

"Ask me aunt," growled the main guy.

Red Beak Jim clucked at the horses, and they moved off in good style.

The hackman pulled the horses up alongside the step in front of the first roadhouse.

"Hey, don't get too glad all of a sudden," growled the main guy to Red Beak Jim. "Who told you to do that?"

Red Beak Jim disposed of the lines and stepped down without making any reply, while the four watched him gloomily. Then he grinned, hoisted up the right-hand front flap of his livery coat, dug into his right-hand trousers pocket and pulled out a wad about the size of a healthy cantaloupe.

"I'll ask youse gents to split a couple o' quarts on me," said Red Beak Jim. "I got 8 to 1 f'r me forty."

They gazed at him and his wad with their jaws dropping.

"Did you play Kinley Mack?" they gurgled in unison.

"That's the one youse people said, aint it?" inquired Red Beak Jim. "I t'ought I'd take a little flyer on him, jes f'r luck."—N. Y. Sun.

MOORE' POISON OAK REMEDY

Cures Poison Oak and All Skin Diseases. Sold by All Druggists.

BAD DRINKING WATER.—Every one suffers greatly from the different kinds of water he is compelled to drink, and nothing is so likely to bring on an attack of diarrhœa. PERRY DAVIS' PAIN-KILLER is the only safe, quick, and sure cure for it, cramps and cholera morbus. Avoid substitutes. there is but one Pain-Killer, Perry Davis'. Price 25c. and 50c.

Has it ever struck you that you can buy Jesse Moore "AA" whiskey for almost the same price that is paid for ordinary whiskey? You dealer has it.

573-579 Market Street, San Francisco | R. H. PEASE, President and Manager. | 73 and 75 First Street, Portland, Ore.

MONTROSE BICYCLE SENT FREE

on approval to your address WITHOUT A CENT IN ADVANCE. SEND US YOUR ORDER, state whether you wish lady's or man's wheel; give color, height of frame and gear wanted and WE WILL SHIP THE WHEEL C. O. D. on approval, allowing you to uncrate and examine it fully before you accept it. If it is not all and more than we claim for it, and a better wheel than you can get for any where near the price from any one else, refuse it and we will pay all express charges ourselves. The "MONTROSE" Bicycle at our Special Agent's sample price of $16.50 is the greatest bargain in a bicycle ever offered. We guarantee it equal to any $40 wheel on the market, and you need not accept it nor pay a cent if you do not find it as we represent. We are EXCLUSIVE BICYCLE MANUFACTURERS and take this method of quickly introducing our 1900 MODELS. This offer of a sample wheel at this low price is made to secure a RIDER AGENT in each town to represent us and take orders. Our agents make money fast.

SPECIFICATIONS. Frame, 22, 24 or 26 inch; ladies, 22 inch. Best Shelby seamless tubing with forged connections, flush joints, improved expander device to fasten seat post and handle bar; Royal Arch crown; the celebrated Mavis hubs and hanger—the easiest running known; Record "A" tires, the best and one of the most expensive tires on the market. The genuine $4 Mesinger Hygienic saddle; pedals, tools and accessories the best obtainable. Enameled in black, maroon or coach green, highly finished and ornamented; special finished nickelling on all bright parts. We thoroughly test every piece of material that goes into this machine. Our binding year's guarantee bond with each bicycle.

FREE to any one sending the $16.50 cash in full with order we will send free a genuine Burdick 10,000 mile barrel pattern cyclometer; or a high grade floor pump. Your money all back if you are not perfectly satisfied.

CHEAP WHEELS. We do not manufacture the cheap department store kind of wheels, such as many new concerns and big supply houses advertise and sell as high grade. We can furnish them however, at $5 to $7 stripped; or $9.75 to $12.50 complete. We do not guarantee nor recommend them. BEFORE ORDERING a bicycle of any one else, no matter who or how cheap, write us and let us tell you how much we can save you on the same machine.

If you are UNABLE to BUY a wheel we can assist you to EARN A BICYCLE by distributing catalogues for us a few days. We need one person in each town for this purpose. We have several hundred SECOND HAND WHEELS taken in trade which we will close out at $3 to $10 each; also some shopworn samples and '99 models very cheap. Send for Bargain List. OUR RELIABILITY is unquestioned. We refer to any bank or business house in Chicago, or any express or railroad company. We will send you letters of reference direct from the largest banks in Chicago if you wish it.

SEND YOUR ORDER today. This low price and these special terms of shipment without deposit will be withdrawn very soon. Give name of this paper.

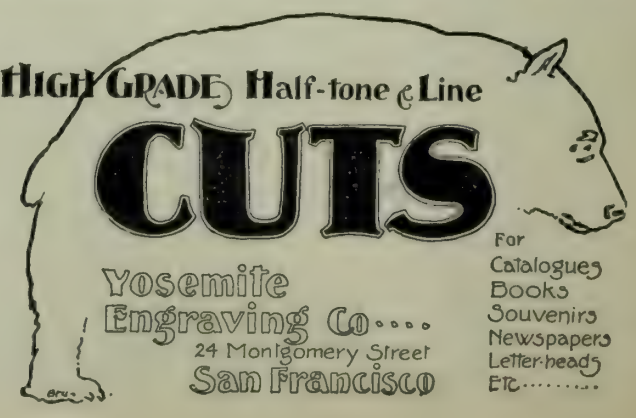
J. L. MEAD CYCLE COMPANY, Chicago, Ill.

We Make the Cuts in this Paper,



GERMEA

The Ideal Breakfast Dish

SAN FRANCISCO BANKS

THE BANK OF CALIFORNIA

SAN FRANCISCO

Capital, $2,000,000 Surplus, $1,000,000
Profit and Loss Account January 1st, 1900, $2,321,212
WILLIAM ALVORD.....President
CHARLES R. BISHOP.....Vice-President
THOMAS BROWN.....Cashier
S. PRENTISS SMITH.....Assistant Cashier
IRVING F. MOULTON.....Second Assistant Cashier
ALLEN M. CLAY.....Secretary

CORRESPONDENTS

New York.....Messrs. Laidlaw & Co. / The Bank of New York, N. B. A
Baltimore.....The National Exchange Bank
Boston.....The Tremont National Bank
Chicago.....Illinois Trust and Savings Bank / Union National Bank
Philadelphia.....Philadelphia National Bank
St. Louis.....Boatmen's Bank
Virginia City, Nev...Agency of the Bank of California
London.....Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons
Paris.....Messrs. De Rothschild Freres
Berlin.....Direction der Disconto Gesellschaft
China, Japan and East Indies.....Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China
Australia and New Zealand.....The Union Bank of Australia, Ltd., and Bank of New Zealand

Letters of Credit issued available in all parts of the world.

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California Street

Guarantee Capital and Surplus.....$2,238,372 45
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash.....1,000,000 00
Deposits July 30, 1900.....28,938,395 12

OFFICERS

President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Second Vice-President, H. HORSTMANN
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann
Ign. Steinhart, Emil Rohte, I. N. Walter,
H. B. Russ, N. Ohlandt, John Lloyd.
General Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow.

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST

Deposits July 1, 1900.....$26,952,875
Paid Up Capital.....1,000,000
Reserve Fund.....218,093
Contingent Fund.....439,608

E. B. POND, Pres. W. C. B. DE FREMERY, Vice-Pres
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier.
R. M. WELCH, Assistant Cashier.

DIRECTORS

Henry F. Allen Robert Watt, Thomas Magee,
George C. Boardman, W. C. B. de Fremery,
Daniel E. Martin, C O G. Miller, Jacob Barth,
E. B. Pond.

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.

Receives deposits. Country remittances may be made in checks payable in San Francisco, Postoffice or Wells, Fargo & Co's Money Orders, or coin by Express, but the responsibility of this bank commences only with the receipt of the money.

No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

Office Hours: 9 a. m. to 3 p. m. and Saturday evenings, for receipt of deposits only, 6:30 to 8 o'clock.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 POST STREET

Below Kearny Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000
Paid Up Capital, $300,000

JAMES D. PHELAN, President
S. G. MURPHY, Vice-President
JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Presiden
GEORGE A. STORY, Cashier
C. B. HOBSON, Assistant Cashier

DIRECTORS:—James D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, Frank J. Sullivan, Robert McElroy, Chas. S. Neal and James M. McDonald.

Interest paid on deposits.

Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co or Exchange on City Banks.

When opening accounts, send signature.

A Toilet Necessity.

WAKELEE'S COLD CREAM of Roses.

Made with pure Almond Oil and Distilled Water of Roses.

LONDON.

Gowns and Gossip of Ascot Week.

ASCOT this year, as far as dressing went, was a somewhat subdued function, in comparison with the picture of former years. Yet returning to London, the last day, with all the Kaleidoscopic variety of a tired but happy London crowd seething about one in every sort of vehicle, the jaded sight seer has the triumphant feeling, the end of the Ascot race week always brings. She has seen not only some of the finest exhibitions of horse-speed in the world, and a pace in beauty and smart dressing on the part of the women, which only London can set, but she has participated in a sort of "round-up" of all the notabilities of the season. She has been a part of the most important public event of London society.

In past years for a would-be fashionable not to have a seat in the far-famed Enclosure, which is only a small stretch of dried brown grass, set thickly with chairs in uneven rows, divided from the course by only a small iron-railing, was to be the prey of many covetous regrets and much rancor. The haughty dames and blase noblemen, sitting therein in stately rows, and surveying the crowd outside through lorgnon and monocle, with a complacent insolence born of long practice, seemed stamped with a quite mysterious and terrifying superiority. But in 1900, the old-time show of exclusiveness seemed a myth. The occupants of the enclosure were now merely a floating population; many of the smartest and prettiest women, (in the new century mode of entire freedom), roamed about with the men outside, in search of adventure, and seemed quite to shun the rather hackneyed decorum of the enclosure.

I saw a bright-faced young Peeress wandering about with a Life Guardsman, home on leave; her face wore a most pleased expression, doubtless at finding this view of the races novel and entertaining. She wore a becoming white gown with great salmon-colored picotees thrust in her bodice, and a big black hat setting off her auburn hair. Almost every other woman I noticed was also wearing one of these big black hats either resting lightly on her carefully fluffed hair, or set at a coquettish angle. T is was one of the reasons why the effect of the crowd was subdued in general. Gaily colored hats had evidently been discarded, even at the last minute, along with brilliant gowns or parasols. The absence of men at the war was of course another reason, as well as the failure of a Royal semi-state procession. But however comparatively subdued the dressing of the women, the hour for luncheon turned Ascot as usual into a big, bustling picnic. The Royalties, and the Master of the Buckhounds and his party had their luncheon in the dignified retreat of the Royal Stand, while the rest of the world lunched on their coaches, or wended their way to the immense luncheon tents, of which the Guards', the Bachelors' and White's were the smartest. Lady Constance MacKenzie, the fascinating debutante sister of the Countess of Cromartie, was one of a party at the latter place, and had on one of the new gowns which are a revival of the pretty and convenient old fashion of wearing a blouse and skirt of differing material and colour.

Her skirt was in pink foulard, and the bodice of white lace over white, with knots of black velvet put on just the right place to emphasize the graceful curves of her figure. With this gown was worn the inevitable big black hat, but in this case a large pink rose or two under the brim rested against the dark hair of the Scotch lassie who was under the chaperonage of her aunt. She is a typical young sportswoman devoted to fishing and swimming, but made quite as bewitching a picture on the box-seat of the coach in which she drove up as she ever has at tee-side or on the Highlands.

Lady Randolph Churchill, whose engagement to young Cornwallis West has become an accepted fact in spite of the opposition of that social arbiter, the Prince of Wales, was most admired among those in the Enclosure. Cornwallis West, though brother of the Princess of Pless, and member of a family noted for its physical beauty, can not endow Lady Churchill with titles and position, equal to those which her first husband bestowed upon her. On the contrary, in becoming his wife she will give up her precedence at court as the widow of a younger son of a Duke, and whatever royal function she is attending, will enter as only "Mrs. Cornwallis West, C. I.," among the usual mob of "wives of esquires and gentlemen." But this fate does not seem to deter her in the least. Though no longer young she appeared still very handsome at Ascot, in an exquisite white foulard gown with long graceful festoons of flower stems in black. The bodice had a transparent vest of plaited gauze, barred with black velvet, each line of black held in place on either side by a jewelled ornament. Round the throat was worn an immense neck ruffle of white lisse powdered with black velvet spots and edged with tiny rows of black velvet bebe ribbon. Upon Lady Churchill's wonderful dark hair rested a toque made of shirred white tulle, just slightly veiled with black and trimmed with masses of white and black roses. The only touch of color about her was supplied by a huge cluster of Cattleya orchids tied to the ivory handle of a white satin sunshade, covered with very fine black maltese lace. It was indeed a toilette ravishing enough to render any woman happy, and seemed to compensate fully for the unavoidable absence of a young Cornwallis—West.

Another woman who has not been loth to take unto herself a new, young husband, is Mrs. Gerald de Bathe, nee Mrs. Langtry, nee, the world forgets what, but she was the observed of all observers at Ascot, seeming to have drunk of the fountain of perpetual youth—(which comes in small boxes)—and smilingly oblivious to the fact of her new lord and master's (?) continued sojourn at German watering places. He has been there pretty nearly ever since he bestowed his ancestral name upon her. It is his health which keeps him over there across the water. Perhaps it is a case which bears a family resemblance to that of the husband perpetuated in the American joke: "My darling," he says, "the doctor says my health requires that I spend six weeks in the country." "How awful; I can't possibly leave town now," rejoined his devoted wife. "Yes, that is part of the cure."

But Sloan, the invincible jockey, had ridden her horse Merman to victory, and she was as happy as a woman of her years and experience can be. She wore an appropriately simple gown of pale gray canvas. A short white lace coat was worn over the excessively plain gray bodice, and the folded neck band was of white satin, clasped with one of the famous Gebhardt diamonds. Her recent snubbing by the great ladies of New York seemed not to have dampened her spirits in the least, for was she not back safe on her old hunting-ground and in "Tummie's" domain? As chaperone, she had with her, her young daughter Miss Jeanne Langtry, who is now her constant companion. This young girl was dressed with all the Parisian care of what is appropriate to the budding innocence of the young person. Probably the Jersey Lily's greatest pleasure of late years, (next to the admiration of Mr. de Bathe, of course,) has been the proper upraising of this young and tender sprout of the old plant. At any rate Miss Jeanne, who is rather pretty in a girlish way, and is at least unqualifiedly young, was surrounded by admirers at Ascot, and received attention from any number of smart people. She seldom appears in anything but white, and this week at the races wore a little gown of fine white cloth, to watch her mama's horse win the Gold Cup. The skirt of her gown was kilted in narrow pleats, and had no trimming except lines of silk stitching up and down the kilts. She wore a soft white silk blouse, with insertions of cream-colored lace, and a big white hat with blue rosettes under the brim, in a way to match that of her mama's, which was a well known big black hat with the red, white and blue colors in flowers tucked under the brim. I do not think that this was especially intended as a compliment to the flag of the United States. Still, slights make very little difference to one of the Jersey Lily's really well known social position, and she must necessarily have cultivated a forgiving disposition.

KATRIONA.

All bon vivants will be pleased to learn that genial "John" Heinkee supersedes Mr. Justin Ladagnous as proprietor of the famous Maison Riche, so happily named by dainty Aimee in her golden days. Epicures the world over know the Riche. "John" will maintain the high standard that this restaurant has always held in this city.

Catarrh Cannot be Cured

with LOCAL APPLICATIONS, as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed byone of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials free.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Props., Toledo, O.
Sold by druggists, price 75c.
Hall's Family Pills are the best.

Your sideboard at home is complete if it is not stocked with Jesse Moore "AA" whiskey

HOTEL VENDOME.

At San Jose is one of Central California's most beautiful hostelries. In the midst of its own twelve-acre park; two blocks from the railroad station where almost hourly trains connect with the outside; the starting point for Lick Observatory; the center of a greater number and variety of attractions than any other place on the Coast; furnished finely, graded and watered roads for driving and cycling lead in every direction; with over 250 elegantly furnished rooms, and suites with bath and toilet; perfect in appointment, service and all the accessories of comfort, and one of the most attractive features of San Jose, the metropolis of the world renowned Santa Clara Valley.

GEO. P. SNELL,
Manager

Tavern of Castle Crag

AND SODA SPRINGS

NOW OPEN.

Located in the midst of grand and impressive mountain scenery. With Mt. Shasta and The Crags for a background.

Fine hunting and fishing.

Unsurpassed cuisine and service and reasonable rates.

RAILROAD FARE round trip, including sleeper both ways $14

For rates, terms and other information address E. B. PIXLEY, Manager.

Care Pacific Improvement Co., Crocker Building, San Francisco, Cal.

LAKE COUNTY.

New 19-passenger Yosemite Stages, all outside seats, direct to the most picturesque portion of California. Best equipped stage line in the state. Leaves Calistoga daily (Sunday excepted) at 11:30 a. m., direct to Harbin, Seigler, Adams, Howard, Anderson, Astorgo, and Glenbrook; half an hour for lunch at Calistoga; also to Middletown, Lower Lake, Kelseyville and Lakeport. Wm. Spiers, Proprietor.
Calistoga, Cal.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.—MEXICAN GOLD and Silver Mining Company. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the tenth day of July 1900, an assessment [No. 64] of fifteen [15] cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the Com pany, Room 79, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment sh all remain unpaid on the fourteenth day of August 1900, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Wednesday, the 5th day of September 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.
CHAS. E. ELLIOT, Secretary.
Office—Room 79, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.—Sierra Nevada Silver Mining Company.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, Cal. Location of works Virginia Mining District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 9th day of July, 190 ,an assessment (No. 119) of Fifteen (15) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room No 14, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street San Francisco, Cal.

Any stock upon which this assessment shal, remain unpaid on the 14th day of Aug., 1900, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on MONDAY, the 3rd day of Sept, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the cost of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.
E. L. PARKER, Secretary
Office: Room No. 14, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

Perfection in Champagne.

The celebrated vintage of 1893 of Moet & Chandon White Seal, now being imported into the United States, is perfection, being the product of the choicest grapes. Its selection by connoisseurs is proof of its high quality.

NEW SUGAR ENTERPRISES IN HAWAIIAN ISLANDS:

Good Work Which Has Been Done on the Plantations and Improvements Now Under Way.

B. F. Dillingham of Honolulu, who has been associated with a number of the best sugar-producing estates in Hawaii, is in this city, a guest at the Occidental Hotel.

Statements having been made that Mr. Dillingham was here in the interest of sugar undertakings that gave every assurance of becoming the best paying properties on the islands, he was questioned on the subject.

"Is it a fact, Mr. Dillingham, that you are about to bring out an investment to be offered in this city? "The Post" wishes to secure reliable information on the matter."

"Such is the fact," responded Mr. Dillingham. "The investing people of this city will soon be afforded the opportunity of becoming financially interested in the largest and one of the best enterprises in the production of sugar ever inaugurated in the Territory of Hawaii."

"What have you accomplished, Mr. Dillingham, upon the Island of Oahu, on which Honolulu, the capital, is situated?"

"Since January 1, 1900, I have promoted in whole or in part the following enterprises in Oahu, which were taken up almost entirely by Hawaiian capital, namely: Oahu Railway and Land Company, Ewa Plantation Company, Ltd., Kahuku Sugar Company, Ltd., Oahu Sugar Company, Ltd., Honolulu Sugar Company, Ltd., and Waialua Agricultural Company, Ltd. The entire investment in these properties, including the original cost, is about $13,000,000. The market value to-day in Honolulu and San Francisco of the bonds and stock of the above-named corporations is over $30,000,000."

"It is reported, Mr. Dillingham, that you are building a railroad on the Island of Hawaii, and are also interested in the development of new plantations there. Will you kindly state in a general way what has been done?"

"In 1899 I associated myself with L. A. Thurston, A. W. Carter, M. P. Robinson and others, who together organized the Hilo Railroad Company, and on the 28th of March of that year were granted by the Government of the Republic of Hawaii a franchise for a term of fifty years for the purpose of constructing steam or electric railroads on any part of the Island of Hawaii and for transacting any and all business incidental or relating thereto.

"The Island of Hawaii has an area of 4000 square miles and lies in a southeasterly direction from Honolulu, about 200 miles distant. Hilo, the principal port of entry on that island, has a large harbor and is an ambitious rival of the city of Honolulu.

Hilo Railroad Company.

"The promoters of the Hilo Railroad Company acquired the control by purchase and under long leases of about 35,000 acres of the finest sugar land on the Island of Hawaii. These lands are situated in the districts of Olaa and Puna, in a southeasterly direction from Hilo.

"Two sugar plantations have been organized and incorporated under the laws of the Republic of Hawaii, taking over those valuable lands under the names of Olaa Sugar Company, Limited, and Puna Sugar Company, Limited. The mill site for the first-named plantation is nine miles and the latter twenty-seven miles from the water front of Hilo harbor.

"A standard gauge road (4 feet 8½ inches), with sixty-pound steel rails, has been constructed and equipped with Baldwin locomotives, and cars manufactured at the shops of the Hilo Railroad Company. Regular trains carrying freight and passengers have been running to the Olaa plantation since the 1st of June. Constrction work on the road will be completed to Puna plantation by the end of the year, and regular trains will be running to that point January 1, 1901.

Olaa Sugar Company, Limited.

"The Olaa Sugar Company, capitalized at $5,000,000, divided into 250,000 shares of a par value of $20 each, was the first sugar plantation started on the line of the Hilo Railroad. This plantation controls the largest area of sugar land of any corporation in the territory of Hawaii, viz:

Lands in fee, acres	14,372
Lands under lease forty years, acres	4,500
Lands controlled under option for forty years, estimated, acres	5,000
Total acres	23,872

"Of this large area there are over 20,000 acres of superior sugar land.

Water Supply.

"No artificial irrigation will be required for this plantation. The average rainfall per annum exceeds 100 inches. In no other section of the country is the rainfall more evenly distributed. There is no record of a drought in Olaa sufficient to affect vegetation. Independent of the local rainfall, the company has recently discovered subterranean streams lying near the surface of the ground at an elevation varying from 1650 to 2000 feet above sea level, which, at small expense in tunneling, have been brought out upon the surface and are under the control of the company. There are now five streams developed, flowing by actual measurement 16,000,000 gallons a day of twenty-four hours. The cheapest means known for the transportation of cane from field to mill is by water run in a V-shaped flume, but this method is used by a small percentage of all the plantations in the country, for the reason that water for such a purpose is not available. The water already developed (which, if desired, can be enormously increased) is ample to supply all requirements for milling purposes and to convey to the mill in flumes enough cane to manufacture 400 tons of sugar per day. Should water ever be needed for irrigation on Olaa, this and the undeveloped sources can be made to supply every possible need.

Olaa Within a Natural Rain Belt.

North and west of Olaa are the snow-capped mountains of Mauna Kea and Mauna Loa respectively. The clouds from over the ocean, carried by prevailing winds between those lofty mountains, whose summit peaks rise nearly 14,000 feet above the sea level, meet in their passage there the cold, condensing temperature and they are speedily brought to earth in torrents of rain. This natural condition may furnish a satisfactory explanation for the fact that the district of Olaa was never known to suffer from drought.

"Is it not possible, Mr. Dillingham, that there is too much rainfall in Olaa for cane?"

"No, I think not, and my views upon this point are fully sustained by all the best authorities. The strongest reply I can make to this question is to furnish you with a copy of Mr. Thurston's letter to Messrs. Moir and Walton, and their reply, which may also be found printed in full in the prospectus of the Olaa Sugar Company, Limited, copies of which, together with the first annual report, can be had at the law office of Messrs. Chickering, Thomas & Gregory, Mutual Life building, 222 Sansome street, San Francisco.

REQUEST TO J. T. MOIR, MANAGER ONOMEA SUGAR CO., AND C. M. WALTON, MANAGER HAWAIIAN AGRICULTURAL CO., TO REPORT ON OLAA AND KEAAU.

The following letter was addressed to both Mr. Moir and Mr. Walton:

"Hilo, Hawaii, March 22, 1899. — Options to purchase about 10,000 acres of land situate between the thirteenth and twenty-second mile posts in the Olaa district are now held by several gentlemen, with a view to converting the same into a sugar plantation. They also have in contemplation several thousand acres in Keaau. Before going further they desire to secure competent expert opinion as to the adaptability of this land to sugar cane cultivation. On their behalf I respectfully request you to personally inspect said lands and report thereon, giving your opinion upon the following points in so far as they relate to sugar cane cultivation, viz.: Soil—Its depth, character, condition, fertility. Also please state your opinion as to how it compares with the soil of other sugar-growing districts on the island of Hawaii. Climate—Temperature, rainfall, wind How does it compare with the climate of other Hawaii sugar plantations at a similar elevation? Cane—Please examine the specimens now growing on these lands and give your opinion as to their condition, how they compare with cane grown on other plantations on Hawaii, and what, in your opinion, their appearance indicates as to whether or not these lands are suitable for cane culture. In general, please state whether or not, in your opinion, a sugar plantation can be profitably established and conducted on these lands. I remain, your, very truly,

"LORRIN A. THURSTON."

REPORT OF C. M. WALTON, MANAGER HAWAIIAN AGRICULTURAL COMPANY'S PLANTATION, ON OLAA LANDS.

Mr. Walton is a Massachusetts man. He has been fourteen years in the country, during twelve of which he has been in the sugar business. For six years he was overseer of Onomea plantation. From there he became manager of the Waihee plantation for two years. Upon its amalgamation with Wailuku he became manager of Pahala plantation in Kau four years ago. He has made Pahala one of the best-paying properties in the country, and is one of the keenest, brainiest men in the Hawaiian sugar business. His opinion is one that can be banked on.

PAHALA, KAU (Hawaii), March 28, 1899—L. A. Thurston and Associates—Dear Sirs: Your favor of March 22d duly received. By your request I have visited and personally inspected a large tract of land in Olaa, between the thirteenth and twenty-second mile posts, intended to be used by you for a sugar plantation.

Character of Soil.

The soil is a deep, mellow loam, into which a stick may easily be pushed by hand to a depth of several feet.

The greater part of the tract is entirely free from stones or rocks; the remainder being slightly mixed with loose a-a, which is in no way detrimental to the growth of cane—rather beneficial than otherwise.

That the soil is wonderfully fertile is proven by the dense growth of vegetation now on the land and by the rapidity with which a piece of land will again cover itself with vegetation after being cleared. In fact, for fertility I do not think the equal of this land can be found on Hawaii.

Absence of Gulches and Stones.

Owing to the absence of gulches and hills in the contour of the lands and of rocks and the stones in the soil, the plantation can be very easily laid out and worked.

Roads.

There are several macadamized roads at present crossing the lands, making the fields easy of access. The Volcano road also runs directly through them.

Climate.

The temperature seems to be considerably higher than in the Kau district at the same elevation, and there is an absence of cold night winds.

The rainfall is great, ranging from 150 to 180 inches yer year; but owing to the a-a subsoil the water quickly disappears. In fact, a few minutes after a heavy rain there is very little water to be seen.

Growth of Cane.

I have examined cane in several localities on these lands. At an elevation of 2000 feet we were shown cane which at an age of ten months from planting could be trashed to a height of over four feet by actual measurement.

Although in the winter season, seed planted two months ago is now up to a height of seven to ten inches and looks healthy and strong.

The canes seen were of the rose bamboo and yellow Caledonia varieties. These varieties have been grown in Kau for years at an elevation of 2150 feet, yielding at times five tons and over of sugar per acre. During the last twenty months we have planted to a height of 2550 feet and have the promise of a good crop.

Water Supply.

In several places we found small streams of water coming from the ground, and believe that water can be found in sufficient quantities to be of great assistance in transporting the cane to the mill and for use in the mill and boiling-house.

Estimated Yield.

In my opinion these lands should produce a yield of from five to seven tons of sugar per acre, which should be kept up for a long time, owing to the great depth and fertility of the soil. Yours very truly, C. M. WALTON, Manager Hawaiian Agricultural Co.

REPORT OF JOHN MOIR, MANAGER ONOMEA SUGAR COMPANY, ON OLAA LANDS.

Mr. Moir is a Scotchman. He has been eleven years in the country, all of which has been spent on sugar plantations in the Hilo district. He was successively an overseer on the Wafakea and Hilo plantations, and in 1896 became head overseer at Onomea, which position he held until 1896, when he became a manager of the Honomu Plantation. When Mr. Goodale was appointed manager of Waialua last fall Mr. Moir succeeded him as manager of Onomea, the largest plantation in Hilo. Mr. Moir is one of the leading minds in the executive control of the sugar business. No man in the country is more competent to express a practical opinion concerning any detail of the sugar business.

PAPAIKOU (Hilo, Hawaii), March 28, 1899.—Mr. L. A. Thurston and others—Gentlemen: Your favor of March 22d duly to hand relative to sugar plantation in Olaa. At your request I have personally inspected those lands pointed out to me as the lands you and several other gentlemen have options on in view of making a sugar plantation.

Soil.

In all my experience (which extends over eleven years in the district of Hilo) I have never seen finer soil for raising sugar. The depth of soil is simply wonderful. It seems as though there was no end to it. You can take a stick two inches in diameter and push it down from four to six feet without meeting any resistance. There are very few rocks to be found, and the few that are found are loose a-a, which are rather preferable than otherwise.

The condition of the soil is the finest that could be wished for, being so mellow and open that although it rains quite often and very heavy at times it does not show the least sign of being soggy and wet. The soil being of the a-a formation the rain disappears very rapidly, but the land is so mellow that it retains a large percentage of moisture.

Fertility of Soil—Estimated Yield.

In my estimation these lands will produce from five to six tons of sugar right along without the least strain. I consider this a very conservative estimate, as I have never seen richer soil anywhere on these islands.

Climate.

Climatic conditions in Olaa, in my opinion, for raising sugar cane, could not be improved upon. The rainfall in some districts would be too much, but not so here. The land is so mellow and being of the a-a formation, the rain quickly disappears from the surface, and there being very little wind, the soil retains the moisture.

The Olaa district compares very favorably with the Hilo district at the same elevation. The land that I have examined lies between the thirteenth mile on the Volcano road to the twenty-second mile on the same road, and, in my opinion, is all very suitable for cane.

Growing Cane.

At "Linders," at 2000 feet elevation, there is cane to be seen measuring from four to seven feet, grown in ten months, and measuring over two inches in diameter. Practically the same may be seen at P. Peck's at 1900 feet elevation; the variety of cane spoken of and most favored is Rose Bamboo, but Yellow Caledonia comes in a good second. That growth of cane in the time mentioned above is by far and away ahead of anything that has ever come under my observation in all my experience.

The age of the cane is vouched for by Mr. Linder, whom I am personally acquainted with. I have every reason to believe that he tells the truth.

Finally, in my opinion, a sugar plantation can be established and conducted very profitably on the 10,000 acres which you have options on, with a conservative estimate of an average yearly output of from 15,000 to 20,000 tons of sugar after the most of the island is under cultivation. I remain, yours very respectfully. JOHN T. MOIR.

REPORT OF J. T. MOIR ON KEAAU LANDS.

PAPAIKOU (Hilo, Hawaii), March 29, 1899.—To L. A. Thurston and Others—Gentlemen: Your favor of March 22d duly received, relating to a sugar proposition in Keaau, district of Puna, Island of Hawaii, for which purpose you hold options on several thousand acres.

At your request I have personally examined these lands to to their adaptability for sugar cane.

Soil—I examined the soil very thoroughly and found it very rich. The a-a lands are extremely rich, with a depth of soil of from twelve inches to two or three feet, exactly similar in every respect to the best Waiakea lands, than which there is none better in the district. Pahoehoe (or flat rock) crops out here and there on the surface on what is called the Pahoehoe lands (or flat rock lands), but take it on an average light through there is eight to eighteen inches of very rich black soil of the very best quality.

Climatic conditions are just right for cane and rainfall plentiful, as shown by Waiakea plantation close by. Most of the land is covered with guava bushes and heavy ferns, which indicates fertile soil.

The elevation of these lands runs from 100 to 900 feet. In my opinion these lands would raise cane, and be a very profitable investment. There is not the slightest doubt in my mind that cane raised on these lands will yield from five to six tons of sugar per acre. I remain, most respectfully yours,

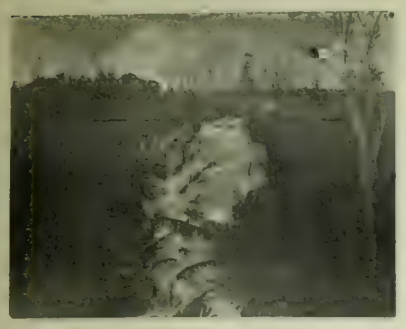
JOHN T. MOIR.

(A report on the Keaau land, similar



Olaa Water Head No. 3.—Flow, 2,800,000 Gallons per Twenty-four Hours—Elevation Above Sea, 1650 Feet.

in character to the above, was received from Mr. Walton, but it has been mislaid.)

ANALYSIS OF OLAA CANE, BY E. HARTMANN, CHEMIST FOR THE ONOMEA, PEPEEKEO AND OTHER PLANTATIONS.

The following analysis is of eighteen-months-old Lahaina cane, grown without care or cultivation in Olaa, at an elevation of 1500 feet.

This analysis is higher in sucrose (cane sugar) and purity than the analysis of cane grown on any plantation in Hilo or Hamakua.

ANALYSIS.

Total soluble solids.....	18.61 per cent
Sucrose	17.56 per cent
Purity	94.4 per cent
Glucose	.17 per cent
Glucose ratio	1.0 per cent
Acidity	.35 per cent

The juice extracted from this cane by a nine-roller mill would have approximately the following composition:

Brix	21 per cent
Sucrose	19.95 per cent
Purity	95.0 per cent
Glucose	.29 per cent
Glucose ratio	1.0 per cent

E. HARTMANN.

Papaikou, April 19, 1899.

OPINION OF DR. MAXWELL.

The above analysis has been submitted to Dr. Maxwell and he authorizes the promoters to quote him as saying that "it indicates a cane of a very high quality."

When the above letters were written it was proposed to purchase 10,000 acres. But the quality of soil and climatic conditions were so favorable that the area was increased to 20,000 acres.

Professor Walter Maxwell, who has for a number of years been the director of the Hawaiian Sugar Experiment Station and laboratories at Honolulu, and who is one of the leading authorities of the world upon the subject of sugar cane and soil analysis in connection therewith, after personal examination and analysis of soils of this plantation, made the following report:

REPORT OF DR. WALTER MAXWELL ON SOILS OF OLAA PLANTATION COMPANY—REPORT ON SOILS.

The lands embraced by the Olaa Plantation Company are found in two separate and large sections, viz: "Keaau" and "Olaa."

A. H. Keaau:—The lands of this section, due to the differences in the soils, have to be considered in two or three classes:

(1) Reddish Soils Free From Stone. These soils are located at an elevation of 200 feet and upwards. These lands embrace about 800 acres, much of which is covered with rice, heavy growths of guava, ferns, etc., but few trees. As indicated, the soils are reddish in color; of good depth and resting upon a deep sub-soil free from stone.

The chemical composition shown is as follows:

Soluble Matter Per Ct.	Organic Matter Per Ct.	Lime Per Ct.	Potash Per Ct.	Phosphoric Acid Per Ct.	Nitrogen Per Ct.
80.70	28.70	0.185	0.231	0.371	0.672

These data will be considered in later remarks.

(2) "AA" Soils. The lands of this tract, like those of the former tract, are fine breadths of undulating ground, free from gulches, but in parts somewhat stony. A rich growth of vegetation covers almost the whole of it. The soils are a vegetable mold to a depth of from twelve to twenty inches, and this rests upon an open "aa" subsoil of good depth and porousness. These lands and soil closely resemble those of the Waiakea plantation. In small patches upon this tract of "aa" soils, which comprises over 2000 acres, pahoehoe soils are found. These patches, however, comprise only a few acres of the tract.

The analyses of the respective soils are as follows:

Soluble Matter Per Ct.	Organic Matter Per Ct.	Lime Per Ct.	Potash Per Ct.	Phosphoric Acid Per Ct.	Nitrogen Per Ct.
"AA" Soils—
70.87	25.29	0.655	0.507	0.370	0.567
"Pahoehoe"—
74.98	32.40	0.538	0.538	0.281	0.672

B.—Olaa Section:—This section covers such an extensive area that, at first view, it apears impracticable to consider it as a whole. The superficial survey of the lands, with a very careful examination of the character and depth of the soil in the several widely distributed localities, showed, however, that practically only one character of soil was to be dealt with, and this fact caused the examinations and soil analysis to be based chiefly upon the fact of altitude.

(1) Lower Altitudes.—This division was represented in the examination by the lands surrounding the "Halfway House," the samples of soil being taken from the tracts owned by Peter Lee and others, at about 1000 to 1100 feet.

These lands are composed of fine, level breadths, covered with rich vegetation, chiefly of undergrowth. The soils are deep and porous, and overlie very porous subsoils. The analysis gives as follows:

Soluble Matter Per Ct.	Organic Matter Per Ct.	Lime Per Ct.	Potash Per Ct.	Phosphoric Acid Per Ct.	Nitrogen Per Ct.
81.59	29.41	0.271	0.272	0.248	0.724

(2) Middle Altitudes.—The lands included within this division comprise the areas reaching from 1300 to 1800 feet, with "Mountain View" (1500 feet) as the center. Most of those lands are spread out in very level breadths hundreds of acres in size. Excepting very small patches, such as are found about one mile up the so-called "New Road" (1400 feet elevation) are areas free from rock, but covered with a densely rich growth of timber and underbrush. The soils are very deep, and unusually porous to a depth of several feet. The analysis of the soils in this division gave an average as follows:

Soluble Matter Per Ct.	Organic Matter Per Ct.	Lime Per Ct.	Potash Per Ct.	Phosphoric Acid Per Ct.	Nitrogen Per Ct.
73.68	26.38	0.700	0.340	0.217	0.646

(3) Higher Altitudes.—The areas at these highest elevations, ranging at from 1800 to 2200 feet above sea level, comprise lands in every feature similar to those of the middle altitudes. With the exception of some limited portions, the same deep, porous soils are found, overlying very open subsoils. The uncleared areas are covered with dense vegetation, the joint product of a rich soil and heavy rainfall. The soil analysis gave as follows:

Sluicing Out Reservoir at Twenty Miles, Olaa, on Volcano Road—Elevation, 2000 Feet.

Soluble Matter Per Ct.	Organic Matter Per Ct.	Lime Per Ct.	Potash Per Ct.	Phosphoric Acid Per Ct.	Nitrogen Per Ct.
65.06	19.85	1.410	0.454	0.204	0.532

REMARKS.

In the Keaau section three types of soil have been examined: (a) The "reddish" soils, although of good depth, are not high in the elements of plant food excepting nitrogen. The phosphoric acid is good, but the potash, and more especially the lime, is low. (b) The "aa" and "pahoehoe" soils, which compose the chief areas of this section, are high in lime, potash and nitrogen, and moderately good in phosphoric acid. These soils are of high fertility, and this will be durable, on account of the amounts of the elements contained in the small stones in the "aa" soils, which will gradually be released and made available for the growing crops. The Olaa section, as already remarked, comprises large areas of level, fine-lying lands, and whose soils are of great depth and porousness. This porousness is a guarantee of perfect drainage, but it is also a factor which will cause to be required a most judicious and scientific system of fertilization in order to avoid loss of applied fertilizers and to maintain fertility. So far the leaching action of heavy rains has been retarded by the heavy undergrowths and the large content of humus and organic matter in the surface soil.

In the soils of the "lower altitudes" the lime, potash and phosphoric acid contents are moderately good, while the nitrogen is high.

The soils of the middle altitudes are high in lime, good in potash, moderate in phosphoric acid and high in nitrogen.

The higher altitude soils are very high in lime, high in potash, moderate in phosphoric acid and high in nitrogen.

Considering the high contents of organic matter in these soils, due to large rainfall, it was expected that they would be very sour. All the samples have an acid reaction, and the application of a small dose of burnt lime will be of immediate use. The soils, however, are not sour soils (excepting small wet holes where excess of organic matter has rotted), and this freedom from sourness is due to the high content of lime and to the excellent drainage.

In considering climatic conditions, the chief factor in the present case is temperature, since the rainfall is, and apparently always will be, abundant. The Mauna Coffee Plantation (Mr. Peck) furnished the maximum and minimum readings for the years 1896-97-98 and part of 1899, at the elevation of 1800 and 2000 feet. The results are found as follows:

Average night temperature for three years	63.7
Average day temperature for three years	80.7
Mean temperature for the three years	72.2
Annual mean temperature in Honolulu	74.0

The lowest night temperature recorded in the said Olaa locality during the three years was 6 degrees above the lowest temperature recorded in Honolulu. The present special characteristic of the temperature in the Olaa district in its uniformity. The removal of forest on a large scale may result in decreasing the day temperatures and slightly lowering the night readings.

The relation of the soil to the variations in the air temperature is an important factor. During the night of May 15th, when these examinations were being made, a thermometer was buried in the soil to a depth of six inches. The previous day temperature was 78 degrees. The night was very cool, the air falling to 58 degrees, but the thermometer in the soil at 7:40 did not fall below 69 degrees. Soils of a different nature would have given up their heat to a greater degree to the cool night air. It is thus indicated that the uniformity of the air temperatures, with the moist heat of the days, and the power of the soil to retain heat, will be ample guarantee of the fitness of the conditions for cane culture, which fitness is supported by the cane in different localities now growing. Yet it will probably be found that the cane at the highest altitudes will require more time to mature than at lower levels.

Considered as a whole, the proposition of the Olaa Sugar Company, by reason of its magnitude, is very impressive, and the extent of the lands, with the nature of the soils and the apparent fitness of the climate, promise for the enterprise a great future.

WALTER MAXWELL.

"You have stated, Mr. Dillingham, that the Olaa Sugar Company, Ltd., is capitalized at $5,000,000 and that the company owns in fee and control under lease and otherwise over 20,000 acres of land. May I ask what was paid for the land?"

"Fully paid up stock to the amount of $2,500,000 at its par value."

"What about the other $2,500,000 of capital stock?"

"That represents the cash capital paid and to be paid to the company for the development of the land to a 40,000 or 50,000 ton capacity."

"How much has been called in thus far?"

"Sixty-five per cent of $1,250,000—say $812,500, or 32½ per cent of the whole amount of assessable stock."

"During what period of time has this amount been called in?"

"About one year."

"How much money will be required during the next twelve months?"

"About $1,250,000, during which time the mill, now being landed at Hilo, will be set up and paid for at a cost of $550,000."

"I understand you have about $1,250,000 yet to call in, besides the 35 per cent on $1,250,000, say $437,500, due and payable at the call of the company."

"That is correct."

"Is there any truth in the statement that you are thinking of making an issue of bonds on the Olaa Sugar Company, Ltd.?"

"Yes, the stockholders have decided to make an issue of 6 per cent first mortgage 5-20-year gold coupon bonds, to be secured by a deed of trust covering the entire present and prospective property of the company. The total issue of bonds will not exceed $1,500,000, and probably not more than $1,250,000."

"Do you expect to place all the bonds in this market?"

"No, we expect to place a large amount in Honolulu. Such investments are in demand there for trust funds and will doubtless meet with special favor now for two reasons: First, the company will offer the bonds at par, giving the investors the privilege of changing the bonds at par for stock at par at any time on or before January 1, 1902, at which time the maiden crop will begin to be harvested, covering an area of 4500 acres, which at a low yield of five and a half tons per acre or a fraction more, will give 25,000 tons. With sugar at $20 per ton below the present price, there will be a profit of $750,000 or 15 per cent upon the entire capital stock of $5,000,000. The second reason why the bonds will be sought after in Honolulu is that the Hawaiian Government 6 per cent bonds will soon be taken up by the Government at Washington and nearly $3,000,000 of these bonds are held in Hawaii, and the money, when paid, will seek another home investment."

Olaa Water Head No. 1—Flow, May 15, 1899, 5,750,000 Gallons per Twenty-four Hours, Elevation above Sea, 2000 Feet.

"Will the public of this city have an opportunity to get in on the 'ground floor' with the island people?"

"Yes, we intend to offer a portion of the bonds to the public of this city upon the terms I have already named, and I am free to say in this connection that no better or safer investment, in my opinion, has ever been offered in any property in the Territory of Hawaii."

"Was not the land turned into the company at a rather high figure, giving the original promoters too much profit?"

"As I am one of the promoters, I am possibly a little prejudiced, but I don't think the promoters received more than half as much as they were entitled to, viewing the business from the usual promotion stand-point, considering that they, the promoters, put up a very large amount in United States gold coin for the land acquired for the company, taking stock for every dollar so invested, besides subscribing to over 20 per cent of the assessable stock, paying therefor the same price per share as the buyer of one single share. These promoters, now large stockholders, are now proposing to turn over all the property on the plantation thus far acquired as security for a mortgage upon which to raise about one-third of the amount they have advanced and allow the purchasers of bonds to thus secure a good 6-per-cent investment and the privilege of changing such investment for stock in the company when it will have become dividend paying, and upon as favorable terms as was granted to the original stockholders whose investment will have been held by them without earnings for a period of nearly two years. I know of no enterprises promoted elsewhere in the world on such a basis."

"Then you don't feel quite satisfied, Mr. Dillingham, with your deal?"

"Certainly I do, or I would not have taken it up. I was simply replying to your query about promotion profits, but the best answer I can give any one as to the value of land and the stock of Olaa Sugar Company as an investment is to refer you to the comparative table showing the value of lands per acre in the best paying plantations in in the Territory of Hawaii. This table was made up from the tax assessors books, and verified at the offices of the agents in Honolulu, and hence may be safely accepted as correct:

TABLE SHOWING AREA OF CANE LAND, PRESENT SELLING VALUE OF THE STOCK AND SELLING PRICE PER ACRE OF CANE LAND OF REPRESENTATIVE PLANTATIONS, AS COMPARED WITH THE PROPOSED CAPITALIZATION OF OLAA.

In each case the price includes not only the land, but all mills, machinery, buildings and other property.

In the case of Olaa, the price quoted includes the cash which will—

(1) Buy the land in fee, except 3500 acres of leasehold.

(2) Buy and install all necessary buildings, machinery, tools, animals, flumes, railroads, water works and appurtenances.

(3) Plant and mature the first crop, so that a dividend should be payable from the first crop.

TITLE.	Plantation	Area of Cane Land	Present Sale Value	Price Per Acre
All leasehold	Makawell	5,750	$4,[illegible]	[illegible]
	Hakalau	7,700	1,[illegible]	240
	[illegible]	4,500	2,[illegible]	[illegible]
	Hawaii	18,000	10,[illegible]	562
1-5 leasehold 4-5 fee	Wailuku	2,820	2,[illegible]	992
	Lahaina	11,000	4,[illegible]	128
	Kohala	2,678	[illegible]	308
	Hutch'son	5,000	1,[illegible]	320
	[illegible]	5,500	8,[illegible]	1,455
All leasehold	[illegible]	10,000	6,[illegible]	672
All fee	[illegible]huku	2,700	1,[illegible]	75
All fee	[illegible]nae	1,500	[illegible]	0
Leasehold	[illegible]
Leasehold	[illegible]kaa	7,[illegible]	2,[illegible]	[illegible]
	[illegible]mu	1,[illegible]	1,[illegible]	[illegible]
	[illegible]	[illegible]	3,[illegible]	[illegible]
	[illegible]mea	1,500	1,500,000	[illegible]
	Pokala	1,800	[illegible]	347
	Pahala	5,000	2,[illegible]	580
	Panuhau	5,000	3,[illegible]	750
	Olaa	19,500	5,000,000	256

Many things must be considered in arriving at the value of a plantation besides the area of the cane lands. But the capitalization per acreo f cane land is, in the rough, a fair comparison of relative values between similarly situated plantations.

It will be seen from the foregoing table that of the twenty representative plantations enumerated, with one exception, Olaa stock is now offered at a lower price per acre of cane land than any other named.

With its enormous area of cane land —1500 acres more than even the Hawaiian Commercial, heretofore the largest in the country—it is as certain as any financial probability can be, that Olaa stock will eventually go to a high premium.

"I notice Ewa plantation is valued at $8,000,000 with 5500 acres of land, which makes the land, under full development, with all improvements, appear to be worth $1450 per acre. Is that land held by the company in fee?"

"No, it holds a forty-year lease from the Oahu Railway Company, bearing an annual rental of 4 per cent on all the sugar raised, which will amount this year to about $84,000. The net profit of Ewa plantation this year will be over $1,000,000, which is equal to the original cost of the whole plantation to the original investors; such a result may suggest the wisdom of getting in on the 'ground floor' and assist in the development of a good sound sugar-producing enterprise. I don't wish to be understood, however, as representing that other new plantations or possibly any other plantation, will produce as much sugar per acre as 'Ewa,' but the best new plantations, with very much larger area of land, having an abundance of water, free from the expense of artificial irrigation, may be able to produce sugar at as low a cost per ton and thereby prove to be equally profitable to their stockholders."

"Mr. Dillingham, there is an impression over here that the islanders have monopolized about everything in that country that is worth having and that they don't really want to see outside investors come in. Is there, in your opinion, good grounds for such an impression?"

"If such an impression does exist, which I am unwilling to believe, nothing could be farther from the truth. There has never, in my humble opinion, been a time when there were better opportunities for safe and profitable investment than the present. The people at the islands are not only willing, but desirous to have capital flow in from the outside world. If people want good, steady, 6 to 12 per cent investments, there are plenty of good dividend-paying plantations that will pay such dividends regularly. The percentage of returns will, of course, vary with the rise and fall of sugar in the world's market. If people prefer to buy stocks in an old established dividend paying plantation, they must expect to pay the market price for such stock, regardless of the original cost, whether it be at a margin of two for one or ten for one. If investors want to get in on the 'ground floor' they must buy into the new plantation and take their chance with the island people. Yes, it is true that the islands have become a very prosperous sugar-producing country. In point of scientific method, high-class machinery and economy of management, Hawaii leads the world to-day in the production of cane sugar and will, I believe, never see the day when she cannot hold her own with any present or prospective competitor. Hawaii as an agricultural country of the highest class, has gained her position through years of struggle, financially and otherwise. The production of sugar in that country was for many years conducted in a most crude and experimental way.

"To bring the sugar industry to the safe, conservative, dividend-paying basis it has reached to-day has cost many hard-earned fortunes and experimental losses that were hard to bear. It is only just and fair to the honest, industrious people of those islands to say they are certainly entitled to all the wealth which the fertile soil of that country can possibly give."

"Speaking of new plantations, Mr. Dillingham, what plantations can you recommend for investment with a view of buying stock that will in your judgment increase in value 100, 200 or 300 per cent upon their original capitalization?"

"If sugar should decline $20 per ton below the present price, I feel confident that the following named new plantations, under their usual good management, will be able to pay 5 per cent upon three or four times their original capital stock, viz.: Honolulu Sugar Company, Ltd.; Oahu Sugar Company, Ltd.; Waialua Agricultural Company, Ltd.; Kihel Sugar Company, Ltd.; McBride Sugar Company, Ltd.; Puna Sugar Company, Ltd; Olaa Sugar Company, Ltd."

"Had you anything to do with the formation of these companies other than Olaa?"

"I was the promoter of all but one."

"If the Olaa Sugar Company issue, as you propose, $1,250,000 of bonds and they should all be taken up and returned January 1, 1902, in exchange for stock of a corresponding amount at par (to be held in the treasury in the meantime), this, as I understand it, would cancel the entire bond issue, and the total capital stock of the company outstanding would represent $5,000,000. Upon that status what would the probable earnings of the company be for the years 1902, 1903 and 1904, according to the present estimate of the management of that concern?"

Estimate of Sugar to Be Produced at Olaa Plantation.

"For the years 1902, 1903 and 1904, as follows:

Estimate for 1902,

Crop, 4500 acres (tons)	25,000
This crop with sugar $20 per ton below present price would pay a net profit of	$750,000
Say 15 per cent upon the entire capital of $5,000,000.

Estimated crop for 1903.

Crop, 6000 acres, plant cane (tons)	34,000
At $20 per ton below present price of sugar would pay net	$1,020,000
Over 20 per cent.

Estimated crop for 1904.

Crop, 8000 acres, say (tons)	45,000
At $20 per ton below present price would pay over 27 per cent.

At the present price of sugar the net profits would be as follows.

1902	$1,125,000
1903	1,530,000
1904	2,025,000
Total for three years	$4,680,000

Say 93 per cent upon the total capital, or an average of 31 per cent per annum.

Estimated Crop for 1905.

When the plantation should be fully developed.

Crop, say 10,1000 acres, the average yield will probably be fully 6 tons per acre; to be conservative, say 5 tons (tons)	50,000
At $20 per ton below present price of sugar will net $30 per ton (or, say 30 per cent on total capital)	$1,500,000
With sugar at the present price the net profit would be	$2,500,000

Or 50 per cent upon the total capital.

"Is it not quite possible Mr. Dillingham, that this wonderful showing of yours will, if published, be criticised by sugar men here at the islands?"

"More than likely, but as I believe that 'truth crushed to earth shall rise again,' I am not afraid to stand by any statements I have made. History would not be repeating itself in this case if severe criticism did not follow. While I have no desire to boom sugar stocks, they are good enough to stand upon their own merits. I see no harm in stating the truth in this connection. It is my good fortune to have been instrumental in starting successfully seven of the best sugar producing properties in Hawaii. Some of them have and all will return a net profit upon their original capital varying from 25 per cent to 100 per cent per annum, yet none of these good properties have escaped the venom of the human tongue.

"In 1892, when Ewa Plantation was in its infancy, it was dubbed a failure. Knowing ones said the water was too salt and the land was sour. Men high in authority on sugar said it could never be made to pay. The agents, Messrs. Castle and Cooke, were strongly advised to abandon that enterprise when it owed them over $400,000 upon the generally accepted theory that the first is the smallest loss. At that time the total capital stock of Ewa was $500,000 and the stock was offered at $70 a share, or $ 50,000 for the plantation. One of the wealthiest sugar men in the islands, who had quite a large holding in Ewa at that time, told me he wished he had never seen that plantation. Nevertheless Ewa Plantation has since that date paid for itself more than five times. The net profit of that plantation will exceed $1,000 000 this year. Oahu Plantation, started in 1867, was also denounced by many 'wise-acres' but it promised to be very nearly if not quite equal to Ewa when fully developed. It turned off about twelve tons of sugar per acre this year, and its stock is held at nearly $200 per share, or double its par value. Such an enormous yield of sugar causes the expense of pumping water for irrigation to sink into comparative insignificence. 'Kahuku,' 'Waialua,' 'Kihel,' 'McBride' and 'Olaa' all in their turn have been severely criticised and even condemned in various ways. But it is very safe to say without fear of contradiction from future results, that no better or safer investments for capital can be found in the world today than the stock in any of the enterprises I have named. And it is also safe to say that it is exceedingly doubtful if the stocks in any of these comparatively new plantations will ever be lower than they are now. In three or four years from now there is good reason to believe that the capital stock of all the plantations started since 1896 will be worth in the markets of the world from two to four times their par value. The real merit of the sugar industry in Hawaii has in the past been little understood outside of the narrow limits of that country. Some very erroneous ideas have been entertained as to the possible development of sugar in Hawaii. It was believed by many that the requirements of the whole of this country for sugar could be produced in those islands. Our present output is equal to about one-eighth of the sugar consumed in the United States, and it is exceedingly doubtful if we ever produce more than 750,000 tons, at which time the consumption in this country will probably have reached 3,000,000 tons.

"The bill recently passed by Congress prohibiting any corporation in the Territory of Hawaii from owning or controlling more than 1,000 acres of land practically prohibits any further development of the sugar industry in those islands by the incorporation of new companies. Sugar corporations conducted upon such a small scale could hardly be made to pay. Hence the increase of production must in future come almost wholly from the further development of the plantations started since 1896, the names of which I have already mentioned."

For further particulars, including financial statement of Olaa Sugar Co., please call at the office of Messrs. Chickering, Thomas & Gregory, 222 Sansome St.

The Orignal Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a riva and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

Will You Have a

Club Cocktail

Before Your Dinner?

You can offer this polite attention to the guest who dines with you at your home if you have a bottle of the "Club Cocktails." They are home Cocktails. They are on the sideboards of thousands of homes.

Are they on yours? It's the proper thing to have.

The age of the "Club Cocktails," the pure liquors used, the perfect blending, make them better than you can mix; better than any cocktail served over any bar in the world. Send home a bottle of Manhattan, Martini, Whiskey, Holland or Tom Gin, Vermouth or York, to-day.

For sale by all Fancy Grocers and Dealers.

G. F. HEUBLEIN & BRO.

29 Broadway, N.Y. Hartford, Conn.

PACIFIC COAST AGENTS,
SHERWOOD & SHERWOOD,
Los Angeles San Francisco Portland

Wherever there is a piano there should be a pianola. The pianola plays any piano. Any one can play it. Call and see it at Kohler & Chase, 26 and 30 O'Farrell St., sole agents.

The reason physicians always recommend Jesse Moore "AA" whiskey is because they know of its absolute purity.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

BUYERS' GUIDE

SAN FRANCISCO.

RELIABLE BUSINESS HOUSES.

City or Country Orders promptly filled. Catalogues and Price Lists sent on application. Correspondence solicited.

Mention The Wave.

ATTORNEYS AT LAW.

MILTON J. GREEN, Attorney at Law. Referee in Bankruptcy in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Office room 94, Chronicle bldg.

A. K. DAGGETT, Drawing of deeds and all legal papers a specialty. Notary Public, 14 Montgomery St., S. F. Telephone, 365.

DENTIST.

DR. C. W. DECKER, Dentist, 806 Market Street, Phelan Building.

HOMŒOPATHIC REMEDIES

WESTERN HOMŒOPATHIC PHARMACY—139 Powell St. S. F. W.W. Stocker. Tel. Bush 23.

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.

ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU, Main Office 510 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Dealers in all kinds of Newspaper Information. Advance Reports on all Contract Work. Phone Main 1042.

RESTAURANT.

POODLE DOG RESTAURANT, north east corner of Eddy and Mason streets. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone main 429. Blanco & Brun, Proprietors.

PRETTY WORK

NICE PRESS COPIES

Use Smith Premier Type-Writer

The telegraph department of the Southern Pacific Co. dispensed with all other makes and now use the SMITH PREMIER EXCLUSIVELY.

Also more than 200 banks use the

SMITH PREMIER Type-Writer

We Rent New Typewriters
Art Catalogue

L. & M. ALEXANDER & CO.

110 Montgomery St., S. F.

Branches: Portland, Seattle, Los Angeles.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.—The Continental Building and Loan Association, corner of California and Sansome streets, for the half year ending June 30th, 1900, has declared a dividend of 5 per cent per annum on Ordinary Deposits; 6 per cent on Term Deposits; 10 per cent to class "F" stock; and 12 per cent to class "A."

CAPT. OLIVER ELDRIDGE, President.
WILLIAM CORBIN, Secretary.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.—Office of the Hibernian Savings and Loan Society, corner Market, McAllister and Jones streets, San Francisco, June 27 1900.—At a regular meeting of the board of directors of this society, held this day, a dividend has been declared at the rate of three and one-eighth [3⅛] per cent per annum on all deposits for the six months ending June 30, 1900, free from all taxes and payable on and after July 1, 1900.

ROBERT J. TOBIN, Secretary.

Well No. 2 of the Florence Oil Development and Exploiting Company, operating in the Kittleman Hills, Kings County, California, offices Safe Deposit Building.

Well No. 2 of the Florence Oil Development and Exploiting Company, operating in the Kittleman Hills, Kings County, California, offices Safe Deposit Building.

A GLOWING HIGHWAY TO HAPPINESS
.....IS THE ROAD THAT LEADS TO DEL MONTE

Added to the many pleasures afforded by its enchanting surroundings are FINE GOLF LINKS

THIS SEASON'S

HOMES OF PLEASURE

THE PEERLESS CALIFORNIA RESORT

SantaFeRoute

OVERLAND EXPRESS

very day in the year. Pullman Palace and pholstered Tourist Cars leave for Denver, ansas City, Chicago and the East. Take arket Street Ferry at 9:00 a. m.

Personally Conducted Tourist Excursions ave three times each week in Pullman Vestiled Tourist Cars and are exceedingly popu- with the traveling public. The principal ies of the East are reached by them and the rvice in all that counts for comfort and conienice is almost equal to the Palace cars. e cars are finished in mahogany, lightened th Pintsch gas and a Porter is in charge to end to the wants of passengers. Plenty of ean linen is provided and the beds are very mfortable. A handsome folder, describing s service in detail, may be had for the ask- g at the Company's Office. 641 Market St.

VALLEY ROAD

tween Stockton, Fresno, Hanford, Visalia lare and Bakersfield, furnishes a good local in service.

SAN FRANCISCO TICKET OFFICE,
Market Street. Telephone Main 1531

The O. R. & N. Co.

DISPATCH FAST STEAMERS

TO PORTLAND

From Spear-St. Wharf at 10 a.m.

RE $12 First Class, $8 Second Class } Including Berth and Meals

te of California sails June 2, 12, 22; July 2.
Columbia sails June 7, 17, 27; July 7.

ort Line to Walla Walla, Spokane, Butte, Hel- and all points in the Northwest.
hrough tickets to all points East.

E. C. WARD, General Agent, 630 Market St.
OODALL, PERKINS & CO., Superintendents.

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. Australia, for Honolulu only, Wednesday, July 25 at 2 p.m.

S. S. Alameda for Aurtralia Wednesday Aug. 8, at 8 p.m.

Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.
J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf San Francisco.

For Alaskan ports, 11 a. m. July 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, August 4, change to company's steamers at Seattle.

For B. C. and Puget Sound ports 11 a.m. July 5, 10, 15, 20, 25 30, Aug. 4, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, 2 p. m. July 2, 7, 12, 17, 22, 27, Aug 1, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Newport (Los Angeles) and Way Ports, 9 a. m. July 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26 30, Aug. 3, and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Harford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, and Redondo (Los Angeles), 11 a.m. July 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28, Aug. 1, and every fourth day thereafter.

For Mexican ports, 10 a. m. seventh of each month.

For further information, obtain Company's folder.

The company reserves the right to change steamers sailing dates, and hours of sailing without previous notice.

Ticket Office: 4 New Montgomery St (Palace Hotel)
GOODALL, PERKINS & CO., Gen. Agts.
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

NOTICE OF ASSESSMENT—ANDES SILVER MINING COMPANY.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California Location of works, Virginia City, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 13th day of June 1900, an assessment (No. 51) of five (5) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary at the office of the Company, Room No. 22 Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery street San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 6th day of August, 1900, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Monday, the 27th day of August, 1900, at 1 p. m. o'clock, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.
JOHN W. TWIGGS, Secretary.
Office—Room No. 22 Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

CALIFORNIA BOOKS

A Handsome Series of New and Useful Publications

The Southern Pacific Company has published for free distribution the following books and folders which may be obtained from any Southern Pacific agent, or T. H. Goodman, general passenger agent at San Francisco. If you apply by mail inclose a stamp for each publication.

Resorts and Attractions Along the Coast Line is a handsomely illustrated folder giving a description of the health and pleasure resorts of the coast between San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Shasta Resorts embelished with beautiful half-tone engravings, describes the scenic and outing attractions of the vast and wonderful Shasta region, the grandest of pleasure grounds.

California South of Tehachapi tells all about the charms of that remarkably favored semi-trophic garden spot, Southern Pacific.

A Handsome Map of California, complete in detail, reliable, skillfully indexed, and full of information about the State's resources. It is the only publication of its kind conveniently folded for pocket use.

Summer Outings is a 32-page folder devoted to the camping retreats in the Shasta region and Santa Cruz mountains It appeals more directly to that large and growing class of recreation seekers who prefer this populor form of outing

Pacific Grove is the Chautauqua of the West, and this folder not only describes the pretty place itself, but gives a program of the religsous a d educational meetings, conventions, schools, etc., to be held there this summer.

Other publications are Lake Tahoe, Geysers and Lake County. Yosemite, Hotel del Monte, Castle Crags, each brimful of information about the places named, and printed in the highest style of the art.

Go and see

T. H. GOODMAN, Gen. Pass. Agt.

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED

Occidental Hotel

SAN FRANCISCO
WM. B. HOOPER, Manager.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers Medium, Soft and Hard

ALSO

Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide

Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks

Manufactured by Mount Vernon Co. Baltimore.
MURPHY, GRANT & CO Pacific Coast Sole Agents

BAJA CALIFORNIA

Damiana Bitters

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. Send for Circular.

NABER, ALPS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

TO CHICAGO

IN 3 DAYS

From San Francisco at 10 a. m.

Chicago Union Pacific
AND
Northwestern Line

Double Drawing-Room Sleeping Cars, Buffet Smoking and Library Cars, with barber. Dining Cars—meals a la carte. Daily Tourist Car Service and Personally Conducted Excursions every week from San Francisco at 6 p. m. The best of everything.

R. R. RITCHIE,
General Agent Pacific Coast
617 Market Street (Palace Hotel)
San Francisco, Cal.

Telephone Main 199.

Blake, Moffit & Towne
Dealers in PAPER

55, 57, 59, 61, First St., San Francisco.

Blake, Moffit & Towne, Los Angeles
Blake, McFall Co., Portland, Or.

ELECTRIC

SUPPLIES
CONSTRUCTION
REPAIRS

California Electrical Works

409 MARKET STREET

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

LIKE A MAGIC TOUCH

So quickly and easily is the brilliancy restored to tarnished Silver by

Electro-Silicon

SILVER POLISH

If in doubt what's best, why not make the test. Simply send address on a postal.

At grocers and druggists everywhere, and postpaid 15 cents in stamps.
"SILICON,"
30 Cliff St., New York City.

Sturtevant House

Broadway and 29th Sts., New York.
WILLIAM T. BANG, PROP.
American and European Plan.

Don't Borrow a Home!

BUY IT Your rent payments for the borrowed home will do it through the aid of the

CONTINENTAL Building and Loan Ass'n of California

WM. CORBIN, Secretary and Gen. Manager.
Home Office, 222 Sansome St., San Francisco

Irving Institute Select Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies

2126 California Street, San Francisco.

Next season will begin August 7th. Accredited to the Universities. Seminary and Full Conservatory of Music. Primary Department for Children. Carriage will call. For futher information, address the principal. REV. EDWARD B. CHURCH, A. M.

Alfred Caue, Luther A. Teague
Frederick Teague.

Teague, Cane & Teague

DENTISTS.

Claus Spreckels Bldg. Phone Main 1459.
Third and Market Sts Sixth Floor, S.F., Cal

Thuringia Insurance Co.

OF ERFURT, GERMANY

Capital, $2,250,000 Assets, $10,984,248

PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT
204-208 Sansome Street, San Francisco
VOSS, CONRAD & CO., General Managers

A. O. LINDSTROM AL. JOHNSON
Phone Main 5178

Sutter Street Hammam

TURKISH AND RUSSIAN BATHS

415 Sutter Street, between Stockton and Powell
Open Day and Night for Gentlemen
For Ladies, from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m.

Eighty-five Fine Sunny Rooms. Elevator Service

THE BRADBURY,

J. A. FERSON, Proprietor.
FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL
N. W. Cor. Polk and California Sts.,
San Francisco, Cal.
Excellent Cuisine References required.
Transient trade solicited. Rates $2.00 and upwards.
Reasonable by the month.
TEL. HYDE 2771

New Stories Re-Told.

LORD MORRIS AND THE DOCTOR.—Lord Morris, of the Irish bench, whose procedure is more noted for wit than for judicial dignity, was once trying a case at Coleraine, in which damages were claimed from a veterinary surgeon for having poisoned a valuable horse. The issue depended upon whether a certain number of grains of a particular drug could be safely administered to the animal. A dispensary doctor proved that he had often given eight grains to a man, from which it was to be inferred that twelve for a horse was not excessive. "Never mind yer eight grains docther," said the Judge. "We all know that some poisons are cumulative in effect, and ye may go to the edge of ruin with impunity. But tell me this: The twelve grains—wouldn't they kill the devil himself if he swallowed them?" The doctor was annoyed and pompously replied: "I don't know, My Lord; I never had him for a patient." From the Bench came the answer: "Ah, no, docther, ye niver had, more's the pity! The old bhoy's still alive."

At another time Lord Morris heard Gladstone, with whom he differed on the Home Rule question, described as a "Heaven-born genius." "Then," he said, "may it be a long time before Heaven is again in an interesting condition."

x

A MODEST REQUEST.—An Omaha man having sent his young hopeful to spend the hot season on his grandmother's farm, instructed the lad to write regularly. July 2, a month after their parting, the father received the following: "Dear Papa:—I am very well and having a good time please send me a dollar to spend on the Fourth of July. Grandma has been well all summer they are selling two bunches of firecrackers for 5 cents here I have got 30 cents saved up to buy fireworks will you please send me a pistol and a lot of paper caps. Last Sunday I went to Sunday school and the teacher told us about feeding five thousand with five loaves and two fishes are you going to send me a box of fireworks like you did last summer. I saw a box kite in a store yesterday and the man said you can send it up with a bunch of crackers on it at night and make a fine sight I would like to have a box kite for the fourth. We are all well at present & hope you are enjoying the same great blessing what are roman candles worth in Omaha. I must close don't forget the dollar. Kiss mamma and the baby for me when will you send the money. Goodby. From your loving son."

x

COURTEOUS REFUSAL.—A determined-looking woman journalist, in search of a "scoop," presented her card to the negro at the door of a high government official in Washington. The messenger courteously but firmly declined to present it. "So you refuse to take my card to the secretary?" asked the determined lady of the messenger.

"It would be against my orders, and I don't dare to," replied the messenger politely.

The visitor turned away in high dudgeon, but a happy thought occurred to her and she retraced her steps. "Here, my man," she said, insinuatingly, "Here is 50 cents. Now will you take my card in?"

"I'm paid a bigger salary than that to keep your card out, madam," responded the darky, shaking his head.

x

MISSPELLED.—Among the temporary signs prepared against the influx of visitors at the Kansas City Convention, there were some which display very eccentric spelling. That reminded Martin Maginnis of a story:—"A Missourian came to Montana and finding himself in difficulties consulted one of our prominent lawyers. 'Can you read writin'? he asked. 'No,' the lawyer said, 'I can't even read readin', and I don't think the artists out here can print paintin'," said Mr. Maginnis.

x

BITTER.—Among the American reminiscences of the late Charles Henry Pearson, one of Australia's chief men of affairs, is one which illustrates the factional bitterness left by the Civil War. A Southern lady, he says, felt called upon to explain that she was not teaching her son that it is wrong to steal because if she did "it would only unfit him for society in the North when he grew up."

PALACE HOTEL

The high standard of excellence maintained by this hotel is recognized and appreciated by a fastidious and discriminating clientele who regularly make it their headquarters when visiting San Francisco.

The GRAND HOTEL is operated in conjunction with the Palace to which it is joined by a covered passageway, placing under one management 1400 rooms, more than half of which have baths attached.

AMERICAN PLAN. EUROPEAN PLAN.

Famous FOR ITS Purity!

Seattle U. S. A.

WHEN LEAVING THE CITY PLACE YOUR VALUABLES IN THE

Safe Deposit Vaults

OF THE First National Bank
N. W. Corner Bush and Sansome Sts.
Office Hours: 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.

EVERY POSSIBLE SAFEGUARD TO PROPERTY
REASONABLE RATES
PROMPT ATTENTION

REPSOLD SELECT VINTAGE REGISTERED BRAND

REPSOLD

Select Vintage Wines
For Your Home Dinner

This brand of wine is served at all first class clubs, hotels and restaurants

A. REPSOLD & CO. Office, 416 Pine Street

THE

White Pass and Yukon Route

The Pacific & Arctic Railway and Navigation Co.
British Columbia Yukon Railway Co., British Yukon M. T. & T. Co.
and Canadian Development Company, Ltd.

THROUGH LINE TO DAWSON.

Two first-class trains daily between Skaguay and Bennett, B. C. Ten first-class steamers operating between White Horse and Dawson. Through Telegraph Service Skaguay to Dawson and Intermediate Points.

SKAGUAY IS THE GATEWAY
—TO—
KLONDIKE AND CAPE NOME GOLD FIELDS.

FOR RATES AND PARTICULARS APPLY TO

S. M. IRWIN, Traffic Manager, Skaguay, Alaska, and Seattle, Wash.
Phone Main 574
S. P. BROWN General Agent 116 Yesler Way, Seattle Wash

W. C. ACHI & CO.

Real Estate Brokers

We will buy or sell real estate in any part of the group. We will also buy or sell Stocks in any corporation in the Hawaiian Islands.

Office, 10 West King Street, Honolulu, H.I.

a Perfect Complexion
Strawberry Cold Cream
Mede from the pure fruit juice at
GREENBAUM'S
200 POST STREET Corner Grant Ave.
Sent anywhere on receipt of 25 cents.

From Admiral George Dewey:

Mr. George Mayerle, German Expert Optician, 1071½ Market street, San Francisco: Dear Sir—I am still using with much satisfaction the glasses you sent me at Manila; also, the new ones suit my eyes perfectly.
Very truly yours,
George Dewey.

A GRADUATE

George Mayerle

German Expert Optician

Consultation, Examination and advice free.

OPTICIAN HONORED

1071½ Market St.

near Seventh

Telephone Mint 257

German Eye Wate 50 cents.

From General Wm. R. Shafter:

Mr. George Mayerle, San Francisco
Dear Sir—The glasses made by you received yesterday. I have never been better fitted than with this pair.
Very truly yours,
Wm. R. Shafter,
Major-General U. S. V.

This page is to be taken from CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

The Wave

1900

VOL. XXI. No. 27 SAN FRANCISCO—JULY 28, 1900 — SEATTLE PRICE 10 CENTS

THE MORNING MARKET: IN OLD MANILA

Is published every Saturday at The Wave Building, 24 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal., and Colman Building, Seattle, Wash.

Entered at the Post Office as second-class matter.

Subscription: Per year, $3.00; six months, $1.75; three months, $1.00. Foreign subscription (countries in postal union) $1 per year additional. Sample copies free.

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

PROPRIETORS

SAN FRANCISCO—July 28, 1900—SEATTLE

CONTENTS

Events Current 1
Editorial Comment 3
The Hot Season in Manila 4
A Practical Flying Machine 5
The Theatrical Situation for 1900, Illustrated 5
Things and People, by Boswell Jr 6-7
The Upheaval in China, by Eli Sheppard 8-9
New Views of China 8-9
Correspondence—Newport-London 10
The Bluefields Mines 11
Meditations of a Matron 12
At the Telephone, by Grace A. Luce 13
At the Theatres 14
New Stories Re-told 14

Commencing with the issue of August 4th the selling price of the "Wave" will be reduced to 5 cents per copy. At the same time the form of the publication will be changed and the number of pages in each issue increased from 16 to 24. The features, illustrative and literary, that now characterize the publication will be maintained. The additional pages will be devoted to reading matter.

EVENTS CURRENT.

The Crisis in China.

Immediately after this record closed last week, a mass of direct and circumstantial evidence combined to make Europe and America believe that there was hope for the legations in Peking. Public opinion has changed again, however, as the result of more black news, and few informed persons have now any hope whatsoever. The terrible tangle of Chinese affairs, the lying tactics of white correspondents and Mongolian officials, have rendered our news of the situation absolutely chaotic. It is best to stick to proved facts. On July 20, the world was electrified by the news that our State Department had received an undated message from Conger, written in the official State Department cipher, and forwarded through the Chinese governor of Shantung province. It read as follows: "In British legation. Under continual shot and shell from Chinese troops. Immediate relief can only save us." This was followed by continual messages from Chinese viceroys to the effect that the legations were safe and under the protection of the Imperial troops. These were reiterated so often that most Caucasians came to believe them, and when Li Hung Chang vouched for their truth it was felt that the assurance must be true, although the Germans and British still withheld credence, saying: "All Orientals are liars." After that came an Imperial edict to the French and American governments, explaining away the murder of the Chancellor of the Japanese legation, but saying nothing as to the peril or safety of the other foreigners and laying the blame for the Taku bombardment upon the allies. The American copy of this document further asked the United States to mediate in the present crisis in order to save the Empire and the dynasty. The source of this message, whether Tuan, Kwang Su, or the Empress Dowager, was not revealed. No European knows who now rules in Peking. A reaction from the former hopeful feeling set in when Li Hung Chang, reiterating his statement as to the safety of the ministers, stated that an advance on Peking would mean their death. To those who know Earl Li's diplomatic methods, this went to indicate that he had circulated false reports of the safety of the legations through the Imperial viceroys in order that he might hold their pretended safety as a hostage to delay European advance on Peking. Then, on July 24, the bolt fell. On that day, the British Consul at Tien-Tsin forwarded to London a letter sent out of Peking, by Sir Claude McDonald, the British Minister and dated July 4, twenty days before. This said that the foreigners were hard pressed, could not withstand a general attack, were short of ammunition and had but two weeks' supplies. Forty-four of the little white colony were dead at that time, and about twice that number were wounded. This killed all hope. If any foreigners are alive in Peking today, there has been a wonderful change of heart in the Capital.

A Puzzling Situation.

Speculation on the truth as revealed by these varying and conflicting reports can be carried out to any length. The two significant bits of news are, of course, the Conger telegram and the McDonald letter. Taken at their face value, and supposing the Conger dispatch to be genuine in text and date, they conflict somewhat. On July 4th, McDonald declared that the foreigners had but two weeks' provisions and could not withstand a general attack. July 18th, on the date set for the end of provisions, the legations were still holding out against shot and shell. In McDonald's letter, it is stated that the whites had lost about one-eighth of their number; Conger's telegram, written, supposedly, two weeks later, and while the whites were under steady fire, makes no mention of any such loss. The conviction is abroad that the Conger telegram was written some time before the British Minister's letter, that the messenger bearing it was caught and the message taken away, and then that, when Secretary Hay and President McKinley sent their demand for news from Conger, the astute Chinese, following their policy of delay, sent it through, although the author was already dead. Color is lent to this theory by the fact that Governor Sheng, who handled it in transmission, is a thorough-going, thorough-faced rascal, and virtual head of the Chinese Secret Service. If this theory be accepted, the story of the massacre of July 7th or 9th, as given in this department last week, may be entirely true. No assurances of safety after that date have come from any but Chinese sources. The United States, being in an independent position as regards Chinese politics, has answered the request for mediation fully and frankly, and in such a manner that the truth about the imperiled legations cannot long be delayed. We will propose terms of mediation to the other Powers, says Secretary Hay, providing the Chinese government places the imperiled ministers in immediate touch with their home governments. To give the Chinese a chance of proving their good faith, Hay has sent a cipher message to Minister Conger; if that is answered without delay and satisfactorily, the United States will propose terms of mediation and will mix in the present war only to such an extent as to assure protection for American subjects. By "pony express," the present Chinese method of communication between Shanghai and Peking, an answer should come out in about six days; if it is delayed much beyond that time, the United States will regard the Chinese as the murderers of our Minister and will act accordingly. President McKinley and Secretary of War Root are said to favor an early advance on Peking, in case the relief of the ministers is deemed necessary, and believe that the movement should be risked with the troops at hand by August 15th, providing the Chinese do not deliver up the ministers by that time. A possible contingency dreaded by the whole world is suggested by the attitude of Li Hung Chang—"an advance on Peking would mean the death of ministers." The Chinese may be holding the foreigners as hostages, expecting to put them to death by torture in case the Powers do not withdraw.

The Powers and China.

The political aspect of the crisis is even more obscure than the situation in turbulent Peking, since here there is not only the Chinese liar and the newspaper liar to allow for, but the diplomatic liar of European Courts. No government has as yet declared that a war exists in China, although Russia has given it out that there is war in the Siberian provinces bordering on the Empire, where fighting has been going on daily between small bodies of troops on both sides. Although the Czar has officially announced his disinterestedness, the other Powers still strongly suspect that Russia had much to do with stirring up this trouble and that she expects to profit thereby. It is persistently reported that Germany, France and Russia will combine for mutual interest; if this is true, England, Japan and the United States will probably fall into line on the other side. In this case, the Russian alliance will most likely stand for the overthrow of the dynasty and the partition of China, in case of a successful issue of the war, and the alliance with which we stand will seek to preserve the integrity of the Empire. The first test for the attitude of the various nations will come within a fortnight in the choice of a commander for the allied troops. There has been little fighting since the taking of Tien-Tsin, although the uprising is certainly spreading. The world over, the crisis is recognized as one of the greatest events of the century and the possible forerunner of a Mongolio-European or a general European war.

The South African War.

This has been rather a bad week for the British in South Africa. Roberts' trap for President Steyn, General Dewet and the remaining forces of the Orange River State has been working rather badly. For the past six weeks, a line of British forces, stretched around the country wgich the Orange River Boers were known to be occupying, has been at work trying to locate and engage the enemy. It has been supposed that the slow process of the movement was due to the characteristic deliberate tatics of Roberts, who works out his plans slowly, making sure of his ground before striking his final decisive blow. The censorship has lifted a little, however, and it transpires that the delay has been rather due to the cleverness of Dewet, who has several times slipped his army through the lines when it seemed certain that Roberts had him cornered. The capture of two companies reported last week occurred in one of these dashes through the net. Yet the line has been drawn closer at every remove, and this week the British have been in touch with the Boers in several hot engagements, in which the honors were rather on the side of the Boers. General Knox fell in with the Boers July 19, and lost his chance, the British being held off by the guerilla tactics of their enemy's rear guard until the main body had disappeared. In the same way, Kelly-Kenny, operating near Bloemfontein, suffered a force which is supposed to be the main Orange River army to slip out, cut his communications, and capture 100 Highlanders, after inflicting moderate losses on the British. The Boers seem to have the upper hand at this point, and British reinforcements are being hurried thither, in the belief that De Wet realizes his inability to dodge an engagement much longer and will risk a battle at that point of ventage. In still another direction, Generals Methuen and Baden-Powell have driven in the Boers at their front, formed a junction, and tightened the circle by another notch. In London, there is the usual impatience following a period of adversity. To quiet the clamor of the liberals, Secretary Chamberlain has given out an official announcement to the effect that the Dutch Colonists of Natal and Cape Colony who have joined the Boers and are ranked, therefore, as rebels, will not receive any harsh punishment. It is further reported that all Roberts' army, both men and horses, are in a bad way physically owing to the rigors of the hard campaign, which has been pressed without rest since the capture of Cronje.

The Indian Famine.

The monsoon, the rain-bringing wind, has broken over India, and the continuance of the drought which brought on this year's famine is happily averted. This situation remains very serious, however. The famine cannot be ended in the natural way until the peasants have brought another crop to maturity. Under present conditions, the sowing and reaping of a crop is impossible without liberal aid. In the stricken districts, the plow-oxen are all dead. To replace them will cost at least $5,000,000. The great starving population must be fed up to a working scale clear through seed-time and harvest-time. There is no seed, and no means of providing any are at hand. The peasants are so scantily clothed that they are in no condition to withstand the cold, wet season of the monsoon. The Indian press is complaining bitterly of the apathy of the home Government, and some missionaries have ventured to prophecy a general rising unless the policy is changed. It is pointed out that the Government has not relaxed in the least its regular taxes on the stricken districts, whereas this was done in time of famine and pestilence, even under the rule of the tyrannical native princes. The Russian government spent nearly $120,000,000 in relieving the late famine in the Empire, while the scanty bounty given in India is taken from the taxes or from borrowings which the peasants will have to make good at some future time. The only offset is an inadequate private relief fund of $2,750,000. The India press further points out that the Government "continues the drain of revenue to England to pay what are called the 'home charges,' among them such a charge as $23,750,000 exacted annually to pay the cost of maintenance in England of the depots of regiments serving in India. It is estimated that the total drain from India to England this year will amount to not less than $80,000,000, for which no commercial return or equivalent in any shape whatever will be made; the total similarly abstracted during the last twenty years being put at $2,500,000,000." This has led to a demand, practically unanimous throughout native and British India, for a substantial relief appropriation to be made at once before the present season of plentiful rains brings another famine through lack of means for planting and gathering the crops.

France Tries to Encourage the Birth-Rate.

France is the one civilized country of the world, in which the death-rate exceeds the birth-rate. The point where the two stood equal was passed over twenty years ago, and the disproportion has been growing yearly since. So strongly do the French feel this, that the fact has colored all French mass legislation ever since. Yet no step has been taken to encourage increase of population by direct laws until the present session of the National Assembly. M. Piot, an authority on the subject, is now to introduce a bill into the Senate bearing directly on the subject. It contains the following proposals: A reduction of taxes of the father of a family of more than three children in proportion to the number of children living, the exemption from active military service of the head of every family of four children, the reform of the succession of duty which would reduce, according to the number of children, the imposition of a tax of 30f. per head or per household without child. (which would bring in the total receipt of nearly 200,000,000.,) and the reduction to the sixth degree of the right of collateral succession. This measure also includes exemption from military service of the eldest son of a family having four children, exemption from deposit money and certain repayments for the fathers of four children living in French colonies, improvement of the public health by the rigorous application of temperance legislation, and laws for the protection of children, simplification of the formalities of marriage and naturalization, and the gradual decrease of the work of women in workshops. Besides these specific provisions, M. Piot anticipates that regulations may be made under the bill, when passed, with a view of bettering the situation of fathers of families; for instance, by increasing the salaries of public servants according to the number of children they may have living.

Cuba to be Released from American Rule.

Affairs have gone along so smoothly in Cuba during the two years of American rule, that the early withdrawal of the American troops and the granting of the promised independence to the people of the Island are set by President McKinley for the near future. At a cabinet meeting held last week, it was tentatively agreed to remove all troops within nine months' time. At a later meeting, a program for the reorganization of Cuban affairs was agreed upon. According to this, the Cubans will hold a general election in September, when delegates will be chosen to draw up the Constitution of a Cuban Republic. These persons will meet in October, and if their work is satisfactory to the United States, the affairs of the island will be turned over to them. It is understood that the Administration does not intend to be severe about terms of settlement. All that will be required of the Cuban Constitution is that it shall be formed on the broad principles of republican government and that it shall recognise the sovereignty of the United States in five particulars, viz:—First—The foreign relations of Cuba are to be managed through the American Government at Washington. Second—Cuba is to have no power to declare war without the consent of the United States. Third—The United States Government is to have veto power over legislation increasing the Cuban debt beyond certain limits to be set forth in the new constitution. Fourth—The United States is to have a certain, well-defined supervision over the Cuban treasury. Fifth—The United States is to retain for a period of years, if not indefinitely, control of the fortifications which command the port of Havana and other important cities of the republic. If the Cubans elect to office men willing to accede to these conditions, the dream of "Cuba Libre" will probably be realized at the next session of Congress. It is understood that General Wood, who has all along done such good work in Cuba, will be retained until the end, and will manage the choice and operation of the Constitutional Convention. Indeed, it is largely his representations that have led the President and Cabinet to decide upon action in Cuban matters at this early date.

Editorial Comment.

"An Insolent Utopia."

THAT staid old journal, Harper's Weekly presents a new instance of failure of municipal ownership that is worth considering. Guild A. Copeland in an article entitled "An Insolvent Utopia" picks up the experience of Boston in that direction, which commenced with the administration of Mayor Josiah Quincy. The writer has a recollection of reading with much approval some years ago a magazine article which set forth the municipal innovations inaugurated by Mayor Quincy; and the beauty of his theory, the completeness of its scope and plan, all appealed strongly to one's sentimental nature. But alas! subjected to the test of practical experience and practical politics, the Utopian dream falls flat, a dismal and expensive failure. There is a "new era" on in San Francisco, and some fellow some day will go over the bills for supplies the cost of government maintenance, and set before us in the public prints what every one suspects, i. e., that our "new era" city government is costing more in the way of supplies and service than any sane business man would pay. If we can only "wake up" before the folly of "owning something" takes firm hold of us, if we can only become wise before we have launched into the business of attempting to make some engineering dream about water supply come true, if we can only have our money in our municipal pockets when wisdom comes we will be lucky indeed.

Mr. Copeland's article says:—

"It was only two years ago that Mayor Josiah Quincy began in Boston his experiments that were so widely described, at the time in the American press. He aimed to build up a model city government, whose employees should themselves do the work that in other cities is done by contract or through private firms. So Boston was not content merely to have departments for building, cleaning, or repairing streets or water-systems or sewers. Its stationery and printing work was turned out by one city bureau. Another bureau was established for carpenter-work, repair-work of various kinds on the public buildings, and even for electrical construction and repair. An ice-plant was established for cutting and storing ice to be used in the drinking-fountains. Veterinary bureaus were devised to look after the horses used in city work. Of course the horses themselves were bought for the city. Wheelwrights, blacksmiths, painters, and letterers, and a whole army of labor came into the city's employ.

This was, in effect, the nearest approach to the development of the "municipal ownership" idea ever seen in any American municipality. It was a modified form of socialism, and at the outset it won high praise. The city was to save the money heretofore paid in middle-men's or corporations' profits, and was not to allow greedy contractors to wring dishonest profits from the municipal treasury. The painful announcement that the whole scheme is now discredited and is a subject for popular ridicule may cause some sorrow among those municipal statesmen elsewhere who have been so strongly on the side of "municipal ownership" as a theory which might save American cities from present evils."

It took Boston some time to discover its unfortunate plight, and when the exposure did come the city was simply stunned. A tremendous debt had been piled up,—to day it exceeds by four times the limit fixed by the State Legislature. The interest on this debt, with sinking fund payments, now amounts to more than the entire amount annually raised by taxation for all city purposes, outside of school expenditures. Think of it, and this in conservative Boston where, as Mr. Copeland says "political conditions are pure," beside those of New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, or San Francisco."

* * *

The uncovering of this unhappy condition or affairs was brought about by the election of a practical business man, an old resident, who was not inclined to spend two dollars for one. Soon after being inducted to office he was called upon to sign some vouchers for city work. He at once discovered that the figures were exhorbitant, and began a quiet investigation, which resulted finally in the closing up of the municipal bureaus that had found so much gleeful commendation among municipal ownership sentimentalists. Mr. Copeland says:—

From the statement of a skilled workman who held a high place in one of these bureaus, but was powerless to do much in the way of correcting abuses, a few figures are worth quoting. Reckoning up the cost of material at the current quotations, and the probable cost of labor necessary to do the work under the supervision of any reliable contractor or business house in Boston, he found that a job of electrical equipment on the ferry-boats operated by the city should have cost $6800. As a matter of record, it actually cost $10,200. The electrical work on a city building for hospital nurses should have cost $1528. It really cost $4754. The work on a city armory should have cost less than $2,600, but the city had to pay nearly $6,700 for the job. Some work on a public school, estimated as likely to cost $1,471 if done under contract, cost the city about $3,600.

Meanwhile investigations were being pushed in other directions. The city's ice-plant made an inviting field. After the statisticians had finished figuring on that public-spirited enterprise, it was found that the ice used by the Water Department in the drinking-fountains cost about $60 a ton, when it might have been bought from the local ice companies for $2 or $3 a ton. Orders were immediately given to get rid of the ice-plant at the best possible terms.

Dishonesty in the shape of embezzlement or the like could not be traced to any public officer, but wasteful and extravagant folly, political interference and influence, did the job. They had civil service in Boston, too, but it was dodged, misapplied, and farcical, just as it is in San Francisco today. An instance is cited:

In the municipal printing-plant, under the Quincy régime, one of the employees was notoriously unsatisfactory. He was told that his services were not needed and that he could consider himself dismissed. He replied jauntily that even the public printer did not dare to discharge him. This impudent reply resulted in his prompt discharge. Yet he came back the next day, and said coolly to his superior: "Alderman Blank of South Boston says I'm to go back to work; but if you make any kick about it I'm to have your place and you go. See?" And he did stay, although his work was as unsatisfactory as before.

* * *

An intoxicated and inefficient police officer in San Francisco arrests a respectable woman within one hundred feet of her home, and puts her in jail among criminals. He is not dismissed or relieved of duty, but simply fined a small amount. Was there any political pull behind that transaction? Go up to the City Hall and inquire about civil service among the rounders and heelers who have secured office through political pull, and then go among the respectable homes of the men and women who have passed the civil service examination and ask each class what they think of the operation of the new charter civil service law, you will gather a clear idea of the matter from this inquiry.

San Francisco is dangerously near the Boston experience, and nothing but the common sense of the majority of the voters can save her from a similar fate. Among other things we are going to build a water works and stretch miles of pipe up into the mountains, lay out miles and miles of a distributing system in San Francisco. We are going to do these things to take the water business out of the hands of a corporation, whose rates we may lawfully regulate and reduce whenever they are too high. Then we are going to own street railways, and electric light plants, and possibly telephone lines. Park extensions have already been voted for, but San Francisco is to have all of these things, and yet it has demonstrated an entire inability to properly pave one street (Third Street) so as to bear the heavy traffic passing over it.

Franchise Assessments.

IN the public mind there is a good deal of misinformation as to what constitutes a "franchise."

The term "franchise" suggests to the ignorant mind a valuable but intangible something that only the very rich are able to acquire and enjoy. It is variously regarded as an instrument for oppressing the poor or as representing some particularly valuable right belonging to the public that has been filched by the rich. There may be some reader of the Wave who does not clearly understand just what Dr. Dodge has been assessing—in some cases high up into the hundreds of thousands. What is a franchise? Take the most common character of franchise that to transact a commercial business. Say that Jones, Smith, White, Brown and Robinson desire to go into a business similar to the Alaska Packing Company. They form a partnership under the laws of the State and successfully engage in the business of catching and canning salmon in Alaska for twenty years. So long as they continue a partnership there is no "franchise" to assess. Their stock of goods, solvent credits and assets are annally taxed in the place where they are located; but further than that the assessor does not go. He does not tax their right to do business or their right to maintain a partnership. On a given day these partners resolve to incorporate, so that in case of the death of one it will not be necessary to wind up the partnership affairs. To this end, articles of incorporation are drawn and filed with the County Clerk of the county wherein the members of the corporation agree to locate their "principal place of business." The term "principal place of business" is not meant to define the place where the actual operations of the company are transacted. All of the stores or shops or physical business of a corporation may be located in San Francisco, and its "principal place of business" (the place where its directors meet) may be down in San Mateo or in any other county in the State for that matter. After filing these articles of Incorporation with the County Clerk, a certified copy is transmitted to the Secretary of State for filing there. If the individuals interested desire it, a "Certificate of Incorporation" is then issued by this official for a small charge; but it is not necessary in any sense. From the day this certified copy of the articles is filed at Sacramento, the corporation is created. The old partnership may then transfer its assets to the corporation and take shares of stock in proportion to their several interests. The business proceeds just as it did before. If one of the partners dies, his shares of stock are administered upon, and divided among his heirs. While under the partnership arrangement the partnership ceases and the old firm's business is closed. This is the intangible thing that Assessor Dodge has valued up into the tens of thousands of dollars, we believe without warrant or justification.

The franchise of a street railroad, gas, water, or electric light company is quite another thing, for to these corporations there are conveyed certain valuable rights of property and privileges on the public highways that are very properly assessable. The ordinary commercial and manufacturing corporation acquires no such rights, indeed, from the municipality it acquires absolutely nothing, and it should no more be taxed upon its "right to exist" than should a partnership. If, as Assessor Dodge claims, the law compels him to assess all corporate franchises, then he should in the case of commercial and manufacturing corpporations, place the valuation at a nominal figure. To do otherwise is unjust even though sanctioned by the statutes. Frequently it happens that the law vests in the public officer general authority in a given direction, similar to the case in hand, but at the same time there is vested a certain discretion which the officer is presumed to exercise. While the city may need the money, sound business judgment—we almost said common honesty—scarcely approves onerous burdens on a "right to exist" simply because the persons taxed have assumed a corporate form and are making money. Then too the "franchise" of a prosperous corporation is identical with that of one that is unsuccessful. Whatever the state has given to one it has given to the other. If the A B Company is making larger profits than the C D Company the former company pays more taxes because it has more assets. But you would not assess the ships of the successful company at a higher valuation than you would the same character of ships in the ownership of the unsuccessful corporation. The vessels being identical, the valuation should be the same. This franchise being identical their valuation is identical. Because the managers of one corporation have a genius for business, scarcely offers a good reason for taxing that genius.

"Bimetallic Price Level."

THERE is a new phrase in the silver plank of the Democratic platform this year. It says: "We reiterate the demand . . . for an American financial system . . . which shall restore and maintain a bimetallic price level."

A "bimetallic price level" means a silver "price level" in this case. Talking with a silver man the other day, he said:

"There will be no such thing as a 62 cent dollar, with free silver. You gold men know that there will not. Our dollars will be hundred cent dollars, and you will have to take them at a hundred cents."

"But the people wouldn't take them at a hundred cents."

"Ha, ha!" declared the silver man, "but we propose that you shall take them, you must take them at full legal tender."

"If that be the case the merchant must diminish the purchasing value of your dollar by increasing the selling price of his goods. If he cannot refuse to take your cheap dollar at its real value he can compel you to pay more of them so as to make up the difference."

This is what Bryanism means when it says it wants to "restore and maintain a bimetallic price level." It says the gold dollar of to day has too great a purchasing power and it is this that Bryanism proposes to change. Can labor with its fixed scale of wages take any comfort from a proposed change that lessens the purchasing power of its dollar?"

Suppose some fellow should secure an injunction against the Examiner preventing the publication of that journal until an appeal could be decided, what would the Examiner do? Shut up shop and await the decision, or follow the plain method of the law as the corporation is doing in the Fresno case? The position of that journal is so absurd that it can mislead none but the ignorant into censuring the corporation, but then the ignorant have no rights the Examiner is bound to respect. Still there are some good people who believe the ignorant have some rights. They have the right to demand the unbiased truth from their advisors, the press. And when it comes down to a fine point the intelligent have a right to demand that ignorance be not misled. There is more danger to this government from ignorance at home than from enemies abroad, and more harm in one Examiner than a dozen islands in the Philippines.

Now there is another opportunity for the cowardly party of Bryanism to take advantage of the administration and find fault with whatever may be done in China. If troops in adequate numbers be sent to the protection of Americans the party of Bryan will howl; if they are not sent they will howl louder still. Democracy now would like the country put to the expense of an extra session of Congress, so as to give it an opportunity to air itself in patriotic oratory.

American Fashions on Native Forms.

Shipping the Hemp Crop.

Native Troubadours, Manila.

THE HOT SEASON IN MANILA.

HOT, hot, hot! The enervating, moist heat of the tropics, unhealthy, fever-bringing, seems only intensified by the recent rains. The new people, mere "tenderfeet" from the States, cherished foolish hopes before the rainy season began, that the showers would bring relief. The rains have come, sudden tropical downpours which fall in the late hours of the night and come as though the Heavens were pouring the water down by the bucketfull, but they bring no clearing of the humid air. Day breaks as damply hot as before. The heat waves mingle with the steam that floats across the lazy Pasig, carrying suggestions of fever and prickly heat, and the insanity of the tropics comes over men who have dared too much in the sun. The tennis-courts, where social Manila used to play at playing in the cool days of the less insufferable season, are deserted; the very talk of the golf-links, bruited in the fine days following the last rainy season, will cause any mess-room to rise up and call you accursed. No one tries to work much in the heat of the day, or at any other time for that matter, except a few seasoned natives, to whom heat and moisture are as natural as to a water-buffalo. I am writing this, myself, wi' deeticulty, resisting an impulse to a wet, perspiring, unrefreshing, tropical sleep, in the early hours of the morning, when it is most nearly endurable.

For the heat of this steam-b th of the world takes Americans, I find, in two ways. One sort has a healthy desire to sleep through it, to hibernate from season to season. For this sort it is the more endurable. We who possess that blessed faculty can drouse and loaf, as do the natives, and pull through with nerves strong and health unimpaired. It is the other kind, those with too much Anglo-Saxon steam and go to accustom themselves to the siesta of the hot season, who break down with insomnia, heat rash and final insanity. And so, with the heat bringing the prespiration out from my face to drop on this paper, I bless Heaven which gave me the lazy streak, enabling me to sleep out my salvation—"Blessed be the man who first invented sleep!"

* * *

If anyone ever told you that Manila is a cheap town to live in, he said the thing which is not so. In no section of the United States which has come under my experience are rents, charges and rates taken on the average been so high as right here. In some respects, Philippine prices are below those prevailing in the States, but the average is much higher. For example, the clerk, newspaperman or attache of moderate wants and tendencies not "sporty" finds it easy to live in San Francisco or Chicago on an income far inside one hundred dollars a month. Of course, one cannot cut much of a dash on that sum, but he can live far inside it—live in a humble way for half of it, for that matter. But I have as yet failed to hear of any American accomplishing the feat of dragging out his existence in Manila for less than a hundred dollars (American) per month. A native, living in a nipa hut with a stool and a pot for furniture, can drag along on the bare edge of nothing and "keep up appearances;" if an American could live at that scale, all would be lovely. But he cannot. And the higher up in the scale his living gets, the more, in proportion, must he pay. Grand pianos and champagne come high.

To quote a few current prices. House-rent has gone up with amazing rapidity. The British in the city having complained of the inaccessibility of the British Consulate, orders were sent from London for a change of quarters. The consul was obliged to answer that, his allowance for rent being only $40 per month, it was impossible for him to secure good down-town quarters, as current rates were running. The house which he desired, and not a large or elegant one at that, was held at $60 a month. Ice, a necessity for Americans, comes from the new ice plant at four cents a pound to regular customers. It is fairly an ice trust, because the company, having a virtual monopoly, manufactures it at less than $5 per ton and laughs at all complaints. Fresh meat is poor, likely to be tainted, and sells at Dawson prices—it has been up to one dollar and fifty cents a pound! Strawberries, bottled at that, are two dollars a quart. Much of this is due to the belief of the native that every American is a Croesus. Some of it is due to the greed of American speculators, who have laid the foundations of several fortunes out of the profits wrung from the Army of Occupation.

A curious phase of the economic situation is caused by the keen competition of the United States commissary department, which places certain lines of goods beyond all chance of civilian competition and makes it impossible for anyone outside the army to obtain things which are almost necessities. Listerine, the only effective remedy for the annoying prickly heat, is a horrible example. The commissary sells it to the soldiers for a few cents per bottle. The drug stores claim that they cannot handle it for less than $3.50 a bottle; consequently, rather than stand up against the continual "kicking" of civilians, they do not keep it at all. Unless you have friends in the army who will lend surreptitiously from their private stock, you have to fall back on iodine and profanity.

* * *

One of the comedy features, at present, is the attempt of the natives to ape American customs. The bicycle has taken hold on the Tagal youth, to the despair of the good pedagogues who are trying to make him attend school. His sister has gone crazy over the American style of dress, with most amazing results. A Japanese woman in European clothes is only small, dumpy, and commonplace, a Chinese girl of the mission schools sometimes appears almost pretty in our regimentals; a Tagal maid is a fright, an outlandish sight for gods and men. In her native frock, a girl of the people with her coarse, black hair like a horse's main, her jet beads of eyes, her pattering gait, has a picturesqueness of her own, but done up in European clothes she looks like a witch in Macbeth. One has just staggered past my low window. She hobbles in her American shoes, as though she were "side-strung" after the manner of a fractious colt on the Western ranges. A blouse of bright, bright red with fearful and wonderful embroidery over the front falls from her shoulders down to her formless waist. "Her petticoat is yaller and her little cap"—is missing, and in its place is a thing which looks like a bunch of hay interspersed with wilted flowers stuck in her head. It is her idea of an American hat. Around one shoulder and falling under the arm is a sash, heavy with embroidery and resembling a Masonic sash worn when the order is in full regalia. Her whole attitude is one of hauteur and conscious pride.

* * *

We extract a sort of languid amusement, nowadays, out of the struggles of the new government appointees from the states with native customs, manners, language, and ways of looking at things. The old-timers take perverse delight in letting the beginners go the pace and then noting the result. An officious newcomer in the revenue service furnishes the latest story. He was out nosing around, trying for a reputation, and ran upon a shop without name, label, or visible sign. He immediately scented an unlisenced business and a chance for glory, and began investigations. There was nothing in sight which tended to show the real nature of the shop, so that he was forced to demand the truth from the proprietor.

"Thees," said the native owner, affably, "Thees ess what you call morgue, for the buboneec plague, señor."

The inspector did not stop to ask about licenses.

* * *

Another amusing feature of our daily life is El Progreso, the comic paper of the islands, albeit not so intended. It is written by an hombre who is evidently proud of his new accomplishment of English, and sports it in the editorial columns.

One day he mourns the heat in this fashion: "The day was dry, monotonous, like the day before. The same doubts that suffocate belief and atrophy the soul. And the observatory with its eternal prediction: 'Winds variable with hurricanes.'" The next day he mingles his resentment a the weather with his commiseration of the managers of the racetrack, who had financial reasons for cursing the heat that kept the crowds from the track. "Nothing," he says, "no hurricanes at least. A little drizzle that did not even dampen the track of the hippodrome, where they lost 17,000 pesos. With 17,000 pesos many things may be bought, and seventeen years of good cooking assured. How ideal!"

This is his idea of the havoc wrought on American hearths by the war: "There, in America, in the corner of the hearth robbed by war, the day will indeed live in the desolate heart of the mother, who, with her prayers and sobs, mingles, who knows, a curse. In America mothers will think always of the Philippines as Spanish mothers can never forget Cuba. In the interior it is all a cemetery without flowers, wihout flags, without candles. The rivers teem with bodies, the mountains are fertilized by the phosphorus of skeletons. Almost no men remain. There live yet only the illusions that to-morrow will be entombed also under the stone of disenchantment. There it is not to live, it is to die!"

F. R. S.

A Nipa Hut.

The Filipino Bryan Club Meets.

THE Filipino Bryan club of Manila was called to order by Polito Chineso, the President. Polito's mother was Chinese, his father a Tagalo. The club room was tastefully arranged according to the Filipino notion and brave and patriotic mottoes hung about the room, such as "Give me liberty, but give him death," "A Filipino's a Filipino for a' that," "Shoot and shout for liberty and fairly divide the loot," "The Equality of man is the decree of Heaven; shoot every man who violates this decree by being better than you."

The secretary was directed to read to the club reports of officers and absent members. But first the President ordered the Sergeant-at-arms to remove from the speaker's desk two heads of Americanos, that had begun to give off a bad odor. This done, the Secretary began.

General Petit Taglisho and his army of fifty men announced great progress. They had slipped up on two American picket men and overpowered them. Taking them to the village of Atkinso they celebrated the event by cutting the ears off the prisoners, burning their eyes out and dragging their tongues out by the roots, when the beastly wretches unfortunately died, marring the amusement of the people.

Piasano Bruno introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That we protest against the fighting qualities of the American troops, and further protest in the name of Liberty, against American prisoners dying before our people have a fair chance of amusing themselves.

Resolved, further that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to William J. Bryan, forthwith.

The resolution was carried with a whoop.

Second report was read from Manzinillo Aqua. Manzinillo told of a raid upon the village of Kansoo and the unexpected capture of many jewels and gold ornaments belonging to a Spanish lady who was put to death after being tortured by the soldiers. A wounded American also contributed to their amusement in like manner. Several other communications were put before the meeting and then the President arose in his chair.

"Gentlemen," he said, "I have now the honor of inform-

Continued on Page 7.

A Distinguished Prisoner En Route.

A PRACTICAL FLYING MACHINE.

THE Deutsch Prize of 200,000 francs for the best solution of the problem of areal navigation has already borne fruit. A diregible airship has ascended, travelled several miles, mostly against the wind, and made several complete turns on the way. This spells success to the unlearned public, but the expert in mechanics knows that it is no proof of a practical solution of the difficulty. Science is continually striking blind leads. An electrician succeeded several years ago in making artificial diamonds with the aid of a heavy current and a bit of carbon, yet the discovery rested there; no one has ever made artificial diamonds of more than microscopic size or ever will. Just so it may be with the flying machine which is the first result of this remarkable prize; it may not be capable of further development; it may remain only an attractive but useless toy.

This partially successful solution of the vexed problem honors the name of Count von Zeppelin, a German nobleman who has been useful in the connection move as a patron than as an inventor. Although a machinist of education and training,he had very little to do with the construction and invention of the aeromotor which bears his name. But he supplied the funds, assuming general direction, and trained inventors under his oversight worked out the vessel. European scientists and scientific publications knew this all the time, but they paid but little attention before the final test. In Europe as in the United States, some one is always just about to make an airship fly. Therefore, the whole scientific world was startled when, on July 2, it was reported on unimpeachable authority that the von Zeppelin ship had made a flight, including two complete circular turns, across Lake Constance. It was immediately recognized as the achievement of the year in military as well as scientific circles and German and French experts were on their way to Geneva within a day, in order to be present at the next series of trials.

According to the accounts of the European press correspondents, the successful voyage was made on the third attempt. The ship, which is a dirigible baloon, depending on a gas-bag and engine and not on aeroplanes,was brought out and placed upon the raft which was to be the starting-point on June 30. But the wind, running at thirty miles an hour, was considered too strong, and the aeronauts delayed until the following day. Then, the wind still being brisk,a preliminary flight was tried. This was taken with no design of using the steering apparatus, but solely with a view of trying out the ascending power of the baloon. This proving satisfactory,the final longer journey was set for the evening of July 2, the time of day being chosen in the belief that the wind would then be lightest. This choice of time was afterward proven a mistake.

This decisive test was made the occasion of much ceremony. Von Zeppelin delivered a speech,a prayer was offered, and then the five men who were given the honor of the first voyage in an airship stepped into place in two suspended boats. The baloon rose, the bows pointing into the wind, which was running at about eighteen miles an hour. For a time, it seemed as though the heavy current would force the machine back. The elevation was increased accordingly, and the spectators cheered as they saw the ship shoot straight against the wind. A moment of tension succeeded when it was seen that the course was veering, as though the vessel were unable to meet the wind. This was changed to the wildest excitement when it was perceived that it was being manoeuvered to perform a turn. Twice,as it r se, the ship described a complete circle of about 1,000 meters in diameter, and then shot off in the direction of the wind. Straight across the lake it went. A half an hour ater, and when it was hardly a speck in the gathering twilight,the crowd saw the baloon hesitate in its course, and then descend rapidly, and in an erratic manner as though something were wrong with the machinery. It continued to drop, and finally settled upon the water. Launches put off at once, and took in the Count and his party from the suspended boats, which had been designed with a view to floating should the vessel light in the water.

The cause of the descent was then made manifest. The envelope had been filled with the lightest of gas, and the rapid cooling of the evening air,aided by a cold wave which had swept in from the mountains, had greatly reduced its bouyancy. In addition, something went wrong in the machinery. The screws, which were to have made twelve hundred revolutions a minute, actually made only six hundred, and furthermore, their diameter proved too small. Something seemed wrong with the side wings, which did not always respond to the lever; these facts, taken together, caused the Count to order a descent when the machine had proceeded only a few miles,

But these are merely flaws in construction, not in plan or in principle. The facts remain. A diregable air-ship has made an ascent, has been moved at will, has carried men in its flight. Hitherto, the best achievement has been a vessel bearing only one passenger for a very short and uncertain flight—a few hundred yards at most. The others have been launched from a height of some sort; this one arose from water. It is a tremendous stride.

The craft differs little,apparently,from its predecessors of the same type. The length is only 122 metres,or 400 feet,and itsdiameter 37 feet. The length of the steerable balloon tried by Giffard was 44 metres, that of Tissandier 28, Dupuy de Lome 36, Haulien 40 5, Renard and Krebs 50, and Schwartz 47. Von Zeppelin's gas bag is divided into seventeen compartments, so that injury to one part of the reservoir would not release all the gas. The outer inclosure is covered by a network of aluminum wire and hempen cord. From this are suspended two aluminum boats, or gondolas, 25 metres shorter at each end than the airship, or, in other words, 72 metres long.

These hang 15 metres below the airship, side by side. A footbridge connects them so that a passenger can go from one to the other during a voyage. Each gondola is equipped with fifteen horse power Daimier gasolene motor, driving a horizontal shaft. Each shaft bears a four bladed screw out in front, and a three bladed one aft. The explosion in the motor is caused by an electric spark. Besides the propelling screws, there are four others, to assist in steering. Two of these are on each side of the gas cylinder,about half way up, one near each end. These screws can be used to impart a sidewise movement to the ship, as well as for steering. The engines give a total of thirty horse power.

To say that the French officials are excited would be putting it mildly. Though the improvements go no further, though the machine prove impracticable for commercial purposes,it has proved that it could be used for military attack. The accounts make the actual distance traversed a matter of uncertainty, but it seems to have been about twelve miles. An absolutely dirigible air-ship, like this one, could, in a twelve-mile trip, go clear over a besieged city, from line to line of the side which owned it,and drop high explosives in every vulnerable point. It has already been proved that a baloon, even at a moderate height, is an almost impossible target. And this potent engine of war is in the hands of Germans! Nothing has so worried the French army since the Dreyfus case.

ETIENNE MARBEL.

Mary Mannering, who will Play the Title Role in "Janice Meredith."

Jerome Sykes, Cast for the New De Koven Opera "Foxy Quiller."

Blanche Walsh, to lead in Presbrey's New Historical Drama.

THE STARS OF THE COMING DRAMATIC SEASON.

THE THEATRICAL SITUATION FOR 1900.

IT is my belief, my hope and my constant supplication to high Heaven that the summer run of vaudeville now going on in New York will end the craze for good and all. Vaudeville has reigned in popularity and prices this year long, and the pocket-vein is now exhausted.

There is a limit to the human power of inventing things strange and new; that limit seems to have been reached. Every manner and means of putting up new wine in old bottles, every dodge of the press agent, every trick of the expert manager, every way of instilling variety into Swiss bell ringing and juggling and acrobatic tumbling and song-and-dance turns has been threshed out and run through. Vaudeville is one of those things which will hang itself if given enough rope. The rope came in the summer season, when the houses playing "the legit" closed their doors and put up the boards, leaving the field to the roof-garden. It is usual for these places of amusement to put on new and startling things in the sweltering season, to introduce the novelties which are to be worn out on the various circuits during the summer season. In this fashion the female impersonator (whose name be anathema), the rag-time craze, the one-act playlet, the girl who does imitations and other fads too numerous to mention have been started on the road to popularity. The roof-gardens have been running weeks now, and have not a brand-new feature. A few variations on old "turns" is the extent of their reaching for novelty. Wherefore, since vaudeville depends on the unexpected, I am living in hope that its popularity is over.

* * *

The historical novel is to be followed by the historical play, mainly a dramatization of the novels; this form will presumably rule the boards and run its gaudy course next season. It is to open as the ruling fad, though the presentation of any strong drama in any other style may turn the tide and originate a school of its own. That is the normal history of any play-craze, by-the-way. Some manager finds a strong, new drama, it makes a huge success; the others tumble over themselves in their haste to duplicate it by plays on the same line, in order to shine by reflected light. It all goes back to the principle that managers are canny folk and would rather bank on a proven success than speculate on a new play, however promising. This principle, which accounts for the preference for adapted plays over American plays, is the death-sentence of a native drama, also accounts for the "fad" system. Should some manager produce a successful "Wild West" play this season, I am convinced that we would see Sothern and Faversham and the rest, in boots and sombreros before the vacation. Should a successful extravaganza be forthcoming, we would have such a rage for burlesque as followed the production of Rice's Evangeline. But for the present, the historical play is to reign, just because Klaw and Erlanger made a hit with the dramatization of "Ben Hur," and because the historical novels,from which these plays are taken, have already gained public favor for their names and are advertised for nothing in advance. We are to have the whole lot—"Richard Carvel," "To Have and to Hold," "Janice Meredith," "When Knighthood was in Flower" and the rest.

* * *

I had hoped for a revival of the Shakesperian drama this season, basing my hopes upon the fact that there seemed to be no special fad in preparation for this season's drama, wherefore managers would fill in, as usual, with the neglected classics. But this hope proved vain. The historical craze settled it. Several advance announcements of Shakesperian plays have been withdrawn. Maude Adams, Faversham, Goodwin, and Julia Arthur were all expected in advance to try the classic drama, but something else took them away. The actors themselves do not relish this. It is the height and top of every player's ambition to have a Shakesperian success. This is only logical and reasonable, when you think it over. No English-speaking actor from Garrick down has ever won permanent fame—fame which

Con. on Page 9.

THINGS & PEOPLE

The old U. S. Gunboat "Monocacy", Injured in the Taku Bombardment.

Civil Service Frauds.

THE civil service law is "up to" the Supreme courts and will doubtless remain in suspense for a period appropriate to its importance. In the meantime the examination mill at the City Hall is providing clerks for the various offices at such rate of progress as the demand requires. Certain extraordinary things have come recently to light which seem to reflect on the accuracy of the test. For instance I am told of one young man who, in the common clerks' examination, obtained 99 per cent. This was earned by a copper plate hand and fine dexterity at arithmetic. In due course he was given a position in the Registrar's Office. When it came to making records in the books his admirable penmanship had disappeared, and it was a ragged, scraggly handwriting that was substituted for the elegant script of the examination papers. He was not dismissed, but was at once relieved from further duty on the books. In another instance, a young gentleman who was placed second in another examination, and on the strength of this showing found a place, was dismissed for absolute incompetence. I am afraid some of the methods in force for the identification of Chinese must be utilized by the Civil Service Commissioners, for it is evident a new industry is being developed out of the necessities of ignorant place hunters. Most of the men who have taken the examinations are unknown to politics. Who is to say that the John Jones who signs a paper is the same John Jones who subsequently obtains a place in the City Hall?

***

The Promotion of Thomas Garrett.

FROM time to time mention has been made here of the work of Thomas Garrett who, after having been city editor of the Post, Chronic'e and Examiner of San Francisco, subsequently went to Los Angeles to the Record there and has now gone to New York to take a high place on the Journal. Mr. Garrett is one of the strongest men in journalism to-day and is surely on the way to its highest places. His enemies, of whom he has a number, gleefully assumed that in Los Angeles he would be buried. On the contrary he doubled the circulation of the Record and became one of the best known figures in the southern metropolis. Prior to his departure a banquet was given in his honor and a cortege of distinguished citizens bade him Godspeed at the railroad depot. However his personality is sure to make itself felt wherever he is, for Garrett has too much individuality to be a secondary figure. He is an Englishman of unbounded energy and vitality, dowered with unusual executive capacity and the faculty of newspaper-generalship. At handling a big event he has few equals, and he has the secret of getting the best work out of his staff. An unequalled newsgatherer, he is also a keen critic of style and a stickler for grammatical accuracy. He was educated in Cambridge, is a great reader and an exceedingly clever talker.

***

San Francisco in New York Journalism.

ARTHUR CAHILL, the former Call artist, who is making a success on the New York World, says that the cut-and-dried metropolitan reporters are very pessimistic over the late influx of western men. They declare in Newspaper Row that no one stands a chance of a position unless he comes from the South or West. Indeed, most of the "fat jobs" of the year have gone to San Francisco men. To illustrate the point, Cahill tells a story. He was accosted in the elevator of the World building by a noisy person with a large jag of the second degree. "D'ye know who I am?" said the thirsty man, "look at me, I'm curioushty!" "You're what?" "I'm curioshty, nachel dime-museum freak." "What's peculiar about you?" "I'm newspaper man, 'sbperienced journ'list, an' never saw Shanfranshisco!"

***

The Latest Rubaiyat.

AN INTERESTING enterprise in which San Franciscans have a concern is the production of a new edition of the Rubaiyat with William Doxey as publisher and Miss Florence Lundborg as illustrator. While still a Californian, Mr. Doxey conceived the idea of a fresh edition of the immortal poem and he invited Miss Lundborg, who first became known through her designs in the Lark, to contribute decorations and pictures. Gradually the scheme grew until it has attained the scope of the Vedder edition and it will be sold at the same figures. The designs are in pen and ink and certainly display great talent. They have not the wild fantastic beauty of Vedder's; but are original, interesting and decidedly decorative. The lines of the figures, especially of the women's faces are rather reminiscent of Aubrey Beardsley, though that may be said of all the best pen-and-ink work nowadays, so striking is the impression the young Engman has made in this art.

***

New Writings.

WILL there soon be reaction from the present craze for historical fiction? That is a question of deep interest among the publishers. To-day a story is not a story unless it is studded with incidents and great names. Accuracy is not especially in demand—indeed it is surely a lack of originality to fail in supplying new setting for eminent personalities. I have heard recently that much is expected of the debut of two Chicago men, whose novels emerge this Spring under the auspices of the new Doubleday-Page firm. They are Theodore Dreiser and Arthur Henry—both young, on the right side of thirty, newspaper men by calling and great friends. Frank Norris read the manuscripts of Sister Carrie, Dreiser's book, for Doubleday-Page, and accepted it at once. He describes the style as grim, direct realism, tremendously strong. When Dreams Come True, Henry's novel, is very fanciful and idyllic. There is a pronounced individuality in the work of both men and they may be the leaders of a new school.

***

Distinguished Visitors.

IN San Francisco we have had quite a number of distinguished visitors lately, among others Speaker Henderson and Senator Daniels of Virginia. They have been variously entertained. The Monticello Club had a banquet for the Virginian Senator. The Speaker has been received by the Union League Club and dined and wined by senators and congressmen. At the Daniels banquet there was some excellent talking which the Senator seemed to thoroughly appreciate. Speaker Henderson is a most agreeable companion, ready of wit, an excellent story teller, and an exceedingly bright talker. Both he and Senator Daniels were guests of Congressman Kahn on a trip to the top of Tamalpais. The two men, who present an interesting contrast in appearance, were on opposite sides in the Civil War and bear the marks of their experience. Daniels has four bullet wounds and walks on crutches. The Speaker had a leg shot away and has replaced it with one of cork, which, however, does not prevent him being as active as most of us on undiminished limbs.

***

Bryan as an Egotist.

IT is said in Nebraska that the sincerest admirer of the Democratic candidate for President is W. J. Bryan. This esteem is not merely for the political prominence the candidate has achieved, or such mental attainments as he may be credited with, but extends to his physical person. In the library of the Bryan villa at Lincoln are twenty-two portraits of the ambitious patriot in the various attitudes that great men assume when f cing the camera. This form of taste in decoration may be only a pleasing eccentricity—the weakness of a great statesman. I fear the average man will construe it as the evidence of a virulent egotism. Imagine having twenty-two portraits of one's-self in one's sitting-room!

***

Mayors to be.

THE identity of the next Mayor of San Francisco is a subject on which the politicians have little to say just at present. It is assumed that Mayor Phelan, by the end of his two years' term will have had a fill of municipal honors and will be out for distinction in a more exalted field. In the Democracy are several men who have acquired sufficient political credit to Delegates Laverey and Montant, and Senator Wolcott.

Arrival of the Committee at Sagamore Hill, Roosevelt's Residence.

THE OFFICIAL NOTIFICATION OF THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

make them eligible for the place. Assessor Dodge, for instance, City Attorney Franklin K. Lane, and Harry T. Creswell. Each of these gentlemen has had opportunities of learning about the City's affairs,and if politics are to be run on a business basis, would have an advantage over candidates not so well equipped. On the Republican side it is not so easy to find available material. One could reel off a list of eminent citizens who would doubtless become the place, but, this time the party wants a bright, energetic man with youth on his side,who may yet be depended upon for conservative doing and thinking in all emergencies developed during his term. F. W. Dohrmann is such a one and would certainly be an ideal candidate if he will run, but business cares occupy most of his time. However, politics begin to be active, and it is possible, during the next few months, some new personalties will be porduced. The emergency generally finds the men and this should be no exception to the rule.

***

American Goods in Manila.

A COMMERCIAL demand from the Philippines which is hardly recognized in this country is created by the need of the island people for American machinery. All advices from the islands agree in stating that the Filipinos are mad over American made mechanical appliances. The bicycle has caught on like lightning, so that it is the ambition of every native youth in Manila to own and ride one of the new-fangled American flyers. Our clocks are in demand in every home in Manila. These articles are snapped up at fancy prices in excess of the supply. Further than this, there is a more serious demand for good industrial machinery. The freedom of trade, commerce and manufactures under American rule has given a great impetus to the industries which employ expensive machinery, and the few labor-saving American appliances shown to the rich Tagal, Chinese and Spanish planters have been bought at the seller's figure. For example, a small sugar-milling plant, which was bought in the United States for $2 000, and cost $300 to transport, was sold the day it reached Manila for $10,000. Manufacturing plants brought out by prospective entrepreneurs would pay well, as free water-power abounds and the raw material for several industries, notably woodworking, pulp-paper-making and twine manufacture are close at hand.

* * *

It is inconceivable why more people, why more Pacific Coast firms have not established agencies for machinery and metal goods in general in the Islands. Bicycles would sell at high prices and at once if the machines were on the ground. The agencies at present established have made the mistake of showing pictures and taking orders in advance. This does not appeal to the native mind, which cannot deal in futures. Any concern which is to succeed in Manila must have the goods for delivery on the spot. Sewing-machines and typewriters are wanted by the thousand. It is said that at the period of American occupation there was not a modern sewing-machine in all Manila; the few that have been imported have gone at double their home price. Typewriters are wanted by most of the rich native families and business men. Anyone having a $100 typewriter in Manila now can easily obtain $250 for it. In fact, any investment in the smaller and more common machines for sale in the Philippine towns would pay many times over.

BOSWELL, JR.

The Outing at Del Monte.

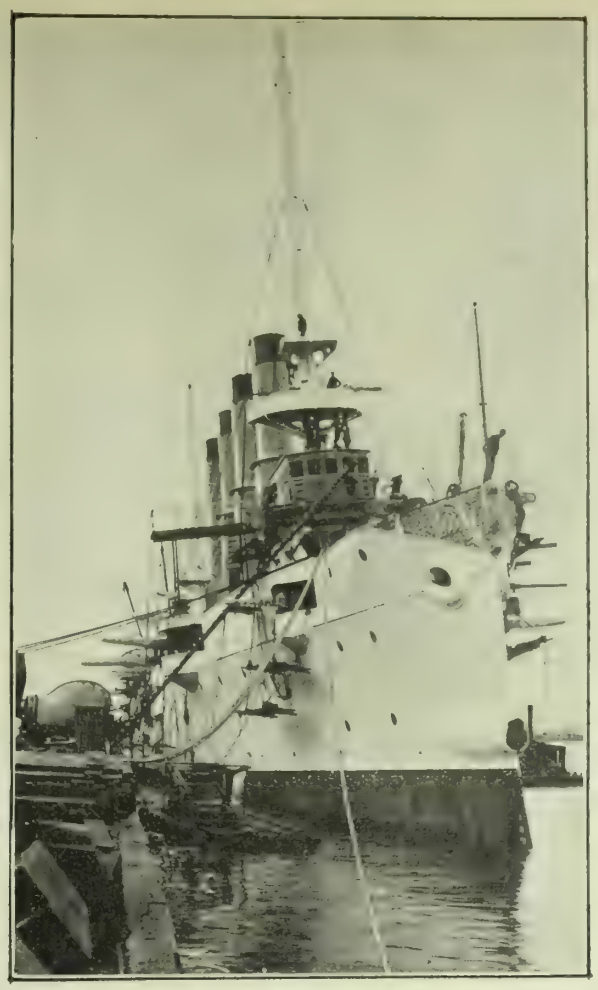
THE annual outing at Del Monte will certainly be the social event of the season. Between the 13th and 18th of August the most beautiful of all summer resorts will be given over to exponents of outdoor sports. There will be golf, horse racing,polo,tennis and pigeon shooting interspersed with music, moonlight, swimming and other forms of amusement. Last year's outing was really a notable success. The greatest interest was developed, especially in the golf tournament and the pany racing. The prospects indicate even a more brilliant gathering this August. Much interest centers in the mile race for thoroughbred ponies for the Del Monte cup. Mr. Hobart, Mr. Carolan, Mr. Raoul-Duval, have all high class thoroughbred ponies, and some are expected from the Southern Counties. There are two 3-mile steeplechase events, one each day; the course has been stiffened since last year, and the race is a mile longer, so that a horse must be able to jump as well as gallop to go the route. Mr. Driscoll and Mr. Raoul-Duval are taking a great deal of pains to fill up the race card, and all the events are sure to be worth seeing.

In the Polo Tournament there will be at least five teams. All the best players in the State—Maude, Driscoll, Hobart, Tobin and others will be seen in what promises to be the best polo tournament yet held in California.

The Golf Tournament for both men and women will be carried on in the morning of each day. Miss Crockett, Miss Hoffman, Miss Scott and Mrs. Brown of San Rafael will enter for the Henry T. Scott cup, and it is hoped that May, Maude, Hobart, Clawson, Orde and others will give a fine exhibit of golf in the men's tournament. The management of the Golf Tournament is in the hands of Mr. Downey Harvey.

A novelty in the sporting way this year will be the running of a public road coach over the 17-mile drive. Mr. Hobart's road coach "Del Monte" has been secured, and will be well horsed by the hotel stables. It will be driven by Mr. Hobart, Mr. Raoul-Duval, Mr. Beylard, Mr. Carolan and other well known amateur whips. The drive in this coach over such a perfect road, and through such lovely scenery, will surely be a charming experience.

On Saturday morning the baseball match will be played between the Burlingame team, of which Mr. Prescott Scott is captain, and the University Alumni. The Alumni team won by a small margin last year. This year the Burlingame men hope to reverse the record. On the Burlingame team will probably be some well known eastern intercollegiate players—Mr. Cunha, catcher of the Yale team, Mr. Reid, captain of the Harvard team, Mr. Dibblee, Mr. Tobin, of the Yale Freshman team, and Mr. Cadwalader, formerly pitcher for Yale. Music will be furnished by Bennett's Concert band, and there will be vocal music by the Knickerbocker Male Quartette, and one or two other prominent soloists.



THE NEW RUSSIAN CRUISER "VARIAG."
Built at Cramp's Yard and at Present Having Her Trial Trip.

THE FILIPINO BRYAN CLUB MEETS.

Continued from page 4.

ing you that the noble party of Bryanism in America has met. Our friends have kept their promises to us, our nerves are strengthened, our purpose made stronger by this action. I now request the Secretary to read to the club the Kansas Platform of Democracy relating to our beautiful Isles.

The Secretary cleared his throat and began:

"We condemn and denounce the Philippine policy of the present administration."

Here the club rose as a body crying "Down with the Americano Administration soldiers! Down with them!"

The Secretary continued:

"It has embroiled the repnblic in an unnecessary war."

"Vive Aguinaldo!" cried the crowd.

"It has sacrificed the lives of many of its noblest sons"

A peal of boisterous laughter rang through the room.

"Aud placed the United States, previonsly known and applauded throughout the world as the champion of freedom, in the false and un-American position of crushing with military force the efforts of our former allies to achieve liberty and self-government."

"To hell with McKinley," roared a half breed in the rear of the room.

"Think of the loot we lost in Manila!" cried a dusky officer.

"Think of the women there," growled a thick-necked, thick-lipped native.

"And think of the churches," cried another. And a wail went up from the crowd.

"The Filipinos cannot be citizens without endangering our civilization."

"Of course," interjected the speaker, "this is just inserted to make the point. Continue Mr. Secretary

"They cannot be recruits without imperiling our government, and as we are not willing to surrender our civilization or to convert the republic into an empire, we favor an immediate declaration of the nation's purpose to give the Filipinos—first, a state of government."

"Hear! Hear! Give us a state of government."

"Second, Independence," continued the Secretary.

"You bet, Independence, that's what we want; we don't want soldiers to restrict our independence."

"Give us independence" shouted a gentleman with an American soldier's hat and a suspicious looking watch and chain.

"And third," continued the Secretary, "Protection from outside interference."

"Now," said the president, "that is what I call decent. It gives us Aguinaldo for President, it gives us independence to do as we please, and it gives us protection from the hated government of Spain when we proceed to wrest from the Spanish autocrats the property they have wrongfully taken from us. 'Give us liberty but give them death' is the high purpose of the Filipino who agrees with us. Dewey should have sailed from Manila Bay after he had destroyed the hated Spanish Fleet. We brave Filipinos would have taken care of the Spaniards. Did we not have thousands of knives hidden in the church to arm the servants and sympathizers in Manila? Did we not have guns and powder? We would have fallen upon those people in the dead hour of night and think, my brothers in liberty, think of the loot, the ladies and the liquor." Here a howl of rage and despair went up from the members.

"But I tell you, my friends, we have in Mr. Bryan a friend. Keep solidly together, fight, resist, kill and burn until after the election in the United States; then when Bryan goes to Washington, Liberty will be ours."

The meeting was broken up by a messenger who announced that a wagon with some women in it was coming along, unprotected.

Probably, thought some, property worth having in it.

The mob went out to see the fun. PALMER BROWNE.

We were talking of a new Japanese play that was going on in London at that time, says T. P. O'Conner's M. A. P. in speaking of Sir Henry Irving, and he was telling us of a Chinese theatre he once went to in San Francisco with some American friends. He said he never enjoyed anything so much in his life. It was all very quaint and primitive, but the acting he thought amazingly good. But what struck him most was the audience, which was composed only of men, all with scowling, rigid faces. Not a man smiled. If they showed any expression at all it was entire disapproval of the whole performance! The actors were much more refined and seemed to enjoy themselves immensely. The play itself, he said, was most realistic—in a scene of great pathos, and to show the greatest emotion, the actor wiped his eyes and nose with his finger and thumb! After the play was over the manager invited Sir Henry and his friends round to the back of the stage, where they were introduced to some of the principal actors.

They were shown to the eating-house, where they were introduced to a Chinaman who spoke pidgin English. "Why," Sir Henry asked, "do you have this chop-house in the theatre?" The man explained that it would be quite impossible for an actor to have his meals at another house, because he would have things thrown at his head and very possibly be killed on the way; that was why the actor was not fond of going out for a walk. Sir Henry said he could quite understand the feeling, but suggested that they might go armed in some way!

But the Chinamen shook their heads and said that the actor no could go for walky because him velly bad man, all the people say him bad man. "But surely," said Sir Henry, "you yourself like actors?" "No, no," was the reply, "actor vagabond, we no likee." And Sir Henry spent half an hour trying to explain that the actor was not such a vagabond as they thought, but still, they persisted that he was a number one bad man "Well," said Sir Henry, "do you ever happen to have heard of a man called George Washington?" Oh, yes, they thought he was a very great man. "Well," said Sir Henry, "I think I can tell you of a still greater man than George Washington. Have you ever heard of William Shakespeare?" "Yes," and they both nodded their heads in approval, "he was a number one great man was William Shakespeare." "Well," said Irving, "William Shakespeare was an actor."

Departure of the U. S. Transport Sumner for China with the Fifteenth Infantry.

Departure of the U. S. Transport Sumner for China with the Fifteenth Infantry.

The Foreign Quarter of Shanghai

The Upheaval in China.

By Eli Sheppard, Former United States Consul at Tien-Tsin and Acting Minister in Peking.

THE nations of Europe and America have at last awakened to the fact, for it is a fact, that a gigantic political and social upheaval is threatened in China, and that a momentous crises in the affairs of the world is, as certainly, impending. A great philosopher of France once compared Asiatic nations to the Seven Sleepers of Ephesus: "Ordinarily," said he, "they sleep from generation to generation; but now and again, they turn over from one side to the other and when they turn over great changes are likely to take place in the affairs of mankind."

It is now just one generation, since China turned almost over, in the throes of a bloody revolution, known as the Tai Ping Rebellion. The history of that rebellion shows how profoundly the peace of Europe may be disturbed by a national revolution in China. The present outbreak in that Empire bids fair to eventuate in a second Tai Ping rebellion or possibly in a complete overturning of the Chinese Empire and if it does turn out so, that is, if the present revolution is successful, the world is face to face with an event so big that no living man is likely to fully grasp the possibilities it may involve.

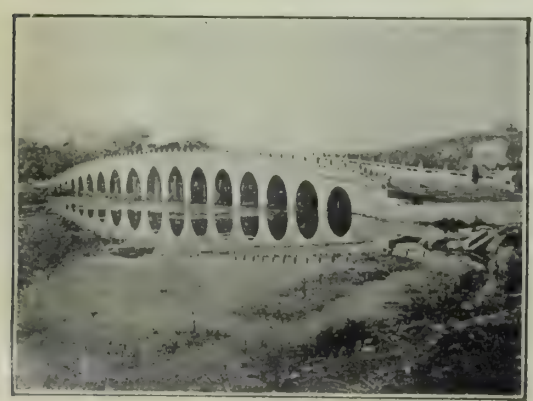
For a quarter of a century the statesmen of Europe have been discussing the division of China, with as much assurance and complacency as though the inhabitants of the oldest, the richest and the proudest Empire in Asia, were as shambles in the markets of the world. It has been taken for granted heretofore that the Chinese people at large were utterly indifferent to the indignities and insults heaped upon their Empire by European nations: that they were wholly oblivious to foreigners and foreign affairs: that they were altogether wanting in courage and patriotism and that they would be just as well content under a foreign rule, and decidedly better off than they are under the domination of the Manchuria Tartars. The world now realizes its mistake, and knows with what savage hatred the foreigner and his arrogance is regarded by the masses of the people of China, and the fearful consequences resulting therefrom. Whether or not the Boxer rebellion succeeds in overthrowing the present government of Peking, it is apparent to the world that a momentous change has come over the spirit of China at last, that old things are passing away, and that all things are becoming new. For more than four weeks past the whole of Christendom has been in a state of agonizing suspense over the fate of the diplomatic representatives of Europe and America, and their families residing at Peking. It is not yet definitely known whether any, or if any, what number of the foreign community at Peking, have escaped death at the hands of the Boxers. It is certainly known, however, that at least a portion of the foreign diplomatic body have been massacred under circumstances of the most revolting barbarity and cruelty, and that great numbers of foreign missionaries and Christians in different parts of the country have been likewise murdered and their homes and property destroyed. Enough is already known to render it almost conclusive that the government of China, or at any rate some of the highest officials of the Empire, have actually participated in these outrages and it will require strong, direct and most unimpeachable evidence on the part of the Peking government to satisfy the nations of Europe that the Empress Dowager herself has not openly connived at, or passively assented to, the terrible crimes against the law of nations and humanity which have so shocked the world.

By the usage of all civilized nations, no less than by the laws of hospitality and humanity, the lives and property of friendly foreign ambassadors and the members of their official and domestic household, while residing at the court to which they are accredited, are held peculiarly sacred and inviolable; and no government on the face of the earth will, or can be permitted to exist, that openly or flagrantly disregards its sacred duty to defend and protect these friendly "hostages within its gates."

This much is then certain:—The government of China must acknowledge its international obligation to protect the lives and homes of friendly foreign ministers accredited to its Court; it must offer acceptable apologies for the insult that has been given at Peking, and it must, by a suitable indemnity for recent outrages perpetrated, and the injuries done and, give satisfactory guarantees for the future safety of foreigners living in the country. China must either do all this to the entire satisfaction of the Treaty powers of Europe and America, or take the consequence of being treated by them henceforth as a Pariah and an outcast among the nations of the earth. It seems too incredible for belief that the government of China, the oldest and most enlightened nation in Asia, will deliberately and openly defy the world in such an issue. There are no doubt, Chinese officials and many of them of the highest rank and authority, who are ready to defy the world; who hate and despise foreignors, and look upon us all alike as barbarians. Not only so, but there are millions of Chinese of high and low degree who ardently wish to see all the "foreign devils" driven out of China and forever barred out of the country.

The "Society of Respectable Fists," otherwise called the "Boxers," is composed of the rampant element of foreign haters—the "Jingoes" of China. They are the fellows who are spoiling to try conclusions with the "Mailed fists" of Germany and other European nations and it is most likely they will be afforded an opportunity of doing so to their heart's content, before this affair is ended.

It is now known that for months previous to the outbreak in Peking, companies of Boxers were daily seen practicing their gymnastic movements or drill in the streets of the Chinese Capital, and even in the immediate neighborhood of the foreign legations. It is also now known that General Qung and his army of Black flags has recently been secretly summoned to Peking, and that at least four of the northern



PALI-KOW BRIDGE, OUTSIDE PEKING.
(This was the scene of a victory of the French and English allies over the Chinese in 1860.)

GATE IN THE GREAT WALL, (Through this pass and this gate, Marco Polo is believed to hav will proba

China, the Home of the Newspaper Liar.

provinces of China and all of Manchuria are up in arms; and that military preparatious on a gigantic scale have been secretly going forward around Tien Tsin and Peking for many months. The most astonishing part of the situation is that all these movements have been so quietly conducted that none of the foreign ministers at Peking seem to have been alive to the siguificence of what was going on.

Mr. Conger, the American minister, as late as the end of May, is reported to have expressed the opinion that the Boxer movement would amount to nothing, and Sir Clande McDonald seems to have entertained the same idea. The missionaries living in the interior seem to have been the only foreigners in the country who clearly foresaw what was coming.

NG ON THE NAN-KOW PASS. ed China. Through them, also, the Russian army of invasion er.)

For diplomatic reasons, the Government of the United States and some of the European Governments also, affect to believe that the Central Government at Peking was not itself fully aware of what was going on; and that when the outbreak occurred, it burst out so suddenly and violently that the Government of China was powerless to suppress it, much less able to offer protection to Foreigners.

Until more definite knowledge of the facts can be obtained, it is impossible to tell whether or not the Chinese Government has not been behind the Boxers, and that it is not, even at this time, giving them secret aid and encouragement. Should it finally appear to the satisfaction of European Nations that the Chinese Government has been culpably negligent, or criminally involved in these Boxer outrages, a fearful reckoning is in store for the present Tartar Dynasty, or if it finally proves to be an undoubted fact, as it now appears to be, that the highest officials of the Empress Dowager's are implicated, and that her chief minister and confidential adviser is the leader of the Boxer movement and in command of the Boxer forces at Peking, it will so compromise the Dowager Empress in the eyes of the civilized world, that European nations will be forced by the united sentiment of all Christendom, to wage unceasing war upon her until she has been driven from the throne and she and her ministers sent into perpetual exile. It may appear later on, and it is not improbable that such is the fact, that Prince Tuan has really deposed the Empress Dowager, siezed the reins of Government, and constituted himself, for a time at least, the Military Dictator of the Empire.

It is no secret that the Empress Dowager has been a mere puppet in the hands of this audacious Tartar Prince, ever since the Edict "adopting" his son, as heir apparent, the young Emperor Tung Che. By that Edict, which was in itself a political revolutionary coup, Prince Tuan became at once the "Father-in-law Elect" of Her Imperial Majesty, and in effect, the Constitutional Regent of the Empire.

It is admitted on all hands that Priuce Tuan has thus placed himself at the head of the Imperial clan, and it is scarcely less certain that he is the leader and planner of the anti-foreign movement, and is directing the forces and operations of the Boxers.

Nobody seems to know what has been the fate of the legitimate Emperor, Kwang Su. This unfortunate youth was mainly compelled to abdicate in favor of the Empress Dowager, because of his known leaning towards modern progress and reform. He was openly friendly to foreigners and for that sin he was deposed; whether he is now living or has committed suicide, nobody knows. No one mentions him, he left no actual heir to succeed him, and nothing stands in the way of Prince Tuan's dictatorial will and authority.

The whole situation in China is so involved and complex, so full of uncertainty and doubts, that no one can foresee what the final catastrophe will be.

It will be utterly impossible for the Governments of Eutope to withdraw their armies from China until a stable and orderly central government at Pekin has been established, with which they can treat. There is no other alternative; or if there is, the keenest statesmen of Europe have not been able to find it out. Nothing is more certain than that the nations of Europe will neither pocket the affront which a barbarious Asiatic Prince has put upon them, nor surrender men with the cherished hope of securing the commercial prize of the Orient.

If a rational government cannot be found at Peking, sufficiently strong and honest to safeguard the treaty rights of foreign nations for the future the nations of Europe will be compelled to undertake the pacification of the country, in which event China will be divided up among the Great Powers of Europe and disappear from among the nations as a political entity, and herein lies the supreme danger of the present situation. The government of the United States has wisely decided to hold aloof from any entangling engagements with European nations at this crises in the Orient. The division of China into separate spheres of influence, among the Powers of Europe, will almost certainly result not only in a bloody civil war in the Empire itself, but is morally sure to precipitate a great international war between some or all of the nations of Europe, before the work is finally completed.

The Theatrical Situation for 1900.

Continued from page 5.

outlasted his generation—except in the good old plays. Garrick, the Kendalls, Macready, the Keans, the Booths, Irving, Terry, Salvini, Mrs. Siddons, even Peg Woffington, are all remembered for their Shakesperian work and for that alone. It is the Academy of the Anglo-Saxon actor, the seal of renown, the final test. And therefore Maude Adams, Faversham, and a few more who are as high as they can get in the modern play are longing for a chance at the form in which success or failure will test their claim to permanent renown. They've been long waiting, and must now wait another season. Our Shakespere next year must come from another source, for they say that Bernhardt, in her American trip, is to feature "Hamlet."

RUINED ROAD TO THE TOMBS OF THE MING DYNASTY, OUTSIDE PEKING.

LONDON.

Regal Festivities at Buckingham Palace.

NEWPORT.

A Marriage in High Life.

LONDON.

WE have a little actress here, who is creating quite a sensation just now. She stands out against the general dull gloom of the theatrical season like a star on a dim night. Yet, she began to work up to the blazing point some time ago, and has only just reached it. I mean Ada Reeve, who is singing in "Florodora" at the Lyric Theatre. Against the background of a theatrical season made up of uninspired effort, cut-and-dried comedy, factor-made fun and heavy, sausage-like humor, litt e lissome Ada Reeve glides, full of fascination, and the dominating haunting quality of real magnetism. She can pick up her long skirts and dance so charmingly, that the house involuntarily says —"Yum, yum!" She is a "reader" of imitative songs, in such a clever, artistic way that she beats Yvette Guilbert on her own ground. Poor Yvette, her excess of popularity seems now on the wane, they say over in Paris, and she would quiver all the way up her black gloves, to see how completely she is being outdone, by this younger "diseuse." The conventional London musical—comedy "artist" is a thin "lady," gotten up in a cheaply elegant costume, odiously dull, rather voiceless, trying for an effect of "good taste," and totally devoid of humor. Miss Reeve is pungent, droll, and chic. She is even more chic than the average Parisienne. And whatever an actress is, if she is chic, she will win.

"Florodora," the comic opera in which she appears, has been likened to a huge hunk of bread, spread over with a small bit of butter, and Ada Reeve seems to be the bit of butter. It is the sort of thing, quite humorless but with plenty of charming music, which can so easily be made a failure. Watch for it when it is done over in New York next fall. It will depend entirely upon who sings it. Here, "Florodora" does not weary you because Miss Reeve is in it, and she is always trotting upon the stage apropos of nothing at all. You should hear her sing "I've an Inkling, Ninkling, Ninkling." The art of singing silly songs significantly, is not to be sneezed at.

To turn right from this subject of pleasurable entertainment, let us proceed to one of far grander, more decorous, but infinitely more dull and solemn entertainment, a state concert at Buckingham Palace. Who is it that said, "Life would be bearable were it not for our amusements?" These highly respectable functions, the state concerts, are usually brilliant as regards the spectacular effect but likely to be decidedly dull. In an ordinary way the preparations for them, from a millinerial as well as a modistic point of view, are quite as exciting as when a court drawing-room is in progress. The same court head dress, plumes and veil are worn, and of course, the extremely decollete dress, with its mere excuse for a sleeve, is equally the rule at both concert and presentation. At the evening function, the concert, however, the six yards of train is not commanded. Everyone carries bouquets, and the jewels form special features.

At the last one, the Khedive of Egypt, blazing with orders and diamonds, was the guest of honor. He is portly enough to belong to the British royal family. It used to be the fashion to drag the nation's high born captives at the royal chariot wheels, now they are dragged—to a state concert. He was being very affable no doubt, but the sombre cast of his features left one in doubt as to whether he had dined too heavily, or was only shocked at the very English display of shoulders about him. He was sitting of course with his royal keepers, upon the sacred dais, ensconced in one of the thrones, made of gilt and velvet upholstery. He undoubtedly had a favorable view of the shoulders, as the rigid etiquette requires that no one shall on any account turn her back to the royal party. But of course no one wishes to. Against the walls are upholstered seats, the chairs are placed parallel with these, leaving a broad aisle from the dais to the stage at the opposite end. People began to arrive at about half past nine, and the royal procession with the Khedive in tow were discovered at half past ten. They entered by a door to the right of the stage, and passed majestically along the aisle left by the arrangement of the chairs. Everyone bowed deeply to them, and the shoulders bobbed courtesies, but the royalties got along rather slowly, graciously staying their course now and then, to speak to those in the court of sufficient high rank to come under their notice. As the Queen no longer attends these giddy festivities, "Tummie" himself took the chair. The Khedive was arranged at the Princess of Wales' right hand. But the concert couldn't begin until the Prince gave the necessary signal by slightly lifting his right hand which caught by the waiting singer, starts her off upon a series of deep bows one to the royalties one to the right wing of the audience and one to the left. After awhile she sings. But when she finishes no one must betray by the lifting of an eyelash what he thinks of the performance, not until royalty gets in his applause. The Princess of Wales' cue is a lady-like little "tip-tapping," which means the lady, who is quite deaf, has been edified sufficiently. The Khedive being rather sleepy, did not applaud with much enthusiasm until after the last number. They had all enjoyed a feast of music at the Marlborough House dinner, given in his honor just before the concert.

The Royal Garden Party given later was attended by the same peers and peeresses, generals, and Indian rajahs, princes, and princesses with leading statesmen, heads of professions and church dignitaries intermingled gaily, forming a dazzling mass of color against the green back-ground of the Buckingham Palace lawns. Aft r chatting with a few favored guests the queen drove out through the double lines of visitors probably as distinguished as was ever formed in England. Cabinet ministers, ambassadors, actors, princes, doctors, and lawyers stood bareheaded till the sovereign was out of the grounds. Among the women, beautifully dressed in summer gowns, the few Americans present were easily distinguishable by their air of aristocracy.

KATRIONA.

NEWPORT.

A WEDDING is at once the object, the climax and the goal—from the woman's standpoint, at least—of social life. A cynic says, "An old maid is one who has failed in business." Has not the debutante an undercurrent of this in her mind from the time she comes "out," until she goes "in," again, and becomes a matron. Heiresses usually marry young. This proves the value of capital in business.

Here in Newport this week, the whole town has been in a state of delightful ferment over the marriage of two wealthy, jolly and popular young people, Miss Charlotte Whiting and Mr. Harry Osborn Havemeyer, Jr. They are members of that innermost, exclusive set of New York and Newport society in which Mrs. Herman Oelrichs and Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish are the leaders. And yet this remarkable July wedding, the merriest ever seen here, did not attempt any especial effect of elegance, its principals only going in for unadulterated jollity. It was a college wedding. Young Havemeyer is a recent graduate of Yale, and his college chums were there in full force to see that the affair went through as it should. They all came to help "Harry" out. And the way they did it, was to say the least, thorough and heartfelt. Harry will probably never forget it.

The ceremony, which was simple, on account of the bride being in half mourning, took place at Swanhurst, the summer home of the bride's aunt, Mrs. George L. Rives. The decorations, both within doors and on the grounds of the beautiful place, were truly marvellous, outrivalling those even at the Grant-Cantacuzene wedding last summer. As on that occasion the wedding breakfast was served in a huge palm filled, bunting draped tent on the lawn, where 200 guests seated themselves at the thirty-eight large tables, decorated with great baskets of sweet peas and other flowers. But as soon as the ceremony was performed, the unique part of this wedding began, for then we found out that there was not only an orchestra to discourse music within doors, and another band on the lawn, but still another band about somewhere, getting in its work whenever it got a chance, having been hired by the college fellows without the groom's knowledge. The orchestra played "The Voice That Breathed O'er Eden," in proper style, but the college boy's band kept up, "I'd Leave My Happy Home For You," undaunted and without ceasing. The band on the lawn, in its efforts to keep in harmony with both sides, switched from Mendelssohn to rag-time and back again. The spirits of the Yale men rose higher and higher, and it was soon whispered about that there was a secret on hand. This was sprung when, after the reception, the bride and groom disappeared for their going away. Violent signs were communicated among the best man, the ushers and the other Yale classmates of the unsuspecting groom. Everyone followed them outside, where we discovered the bride's carriage in waiting. The two gray horses were decorated with glistening harness and bouquets of lillies of the valley and maiden-hair fern. Bunches of these flowers gleamed on the swelling breasts of coachman and footman. It was a gorgeous equipage. What was our surprise to find drawn up behind it, a large drag, into which stepped the extra band. A cheer announced the appearance of young Mr. and Mrs. Havemeyer. They scampered to their carriage, running the usual gauntlet of rice and old slippers. But as they started off, a blare from the band told them that the drag was following in their wake. From it swelled the strains of "I'd Leave My Happy Home For You." One of the ushers, scrambling up beside the footman, beat time with two old slippers all the way to the pier. But even this racket was almost drowned out by the shouts of the concourse which followed. The proud and elegantly gowned New York matrons, staid Wall street magnates, society buds and Yale college boys all made for t e Commercial wharf in any sort of vehicle or on foot. It was a sight which Newport townspeople will never forget.

When we arrived the bridal carriage stood on the pier and there was the pretty, excited, little bride blowing kisses to her friends with all an American girl's abandon and indifference to the outsiders who were watching. The whole populace were, metaphorically speaking, at her feet. And high above the din was heard the band relentlessly playing "Dinah," "I Want You Ma Honey," and "I'd Leave My Happy Home For You."

By the time the bride had gone aboard, the Yale men were doing a cake-walk on the Pier. Mr. McCormick of Chicago, one of the ushers, led down the best man, F. C. Havemeyer, to the tune of "Dinah," while the others "patted Jubah." It was certainly an unusual sight, as the steamer went out, to see guests, cabmen, ushers, longshoremen, the best man and everyone else, give vent to their enthusiasm in prolonged and united cheers.

After the happy young couple were really out of sight, we settled down to talk over the unique affair, and what the bride wore. Her wedding gown was simplicity itself, but that sort of magnificent simplicity which costs a small fortune. It was garnished with rare old point lace, which is an heirloom and every year becoming more valuable. The groom's gift was a tiara of sparkling diamonds worthy of the Sugar Trust millions, and the well known good taste of the Havemeyers. The bridesmaids, who seemed quite en rapport with the hilarity of the Yale men, wore white silk crepe gowns with jackets of old Spanish lace, and white leghorn hats trimmed with pink roses and white chiffon. They carried large bouquets of pink roses, festooned with long pink streamers. The bride's going away gown was of purple silk with hat of violets. The groom is notably tall and athletic looking. It is said that like his bride he is devoted to golf, swimming, yachting and other out door sports.

One of the many innovations at this wedding was commendable on the score of good taste —the gifts were not at any time displayed, but were taken as they arrived and deposited in the vaults of the Newport Bank, where Mr. Havemeyer, Jr., does "business."

BABBETTE.

A wedding of more than usual interest was that which took place on Wednesday, July 18th, at Christ Church, Brondesburg, London, uniting Miss Mary Louise Harrison to Mr. George Britton Walkington. The bride is the second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Greer Harrison, of San Francisco, and the groom is a native and resident of Belfast, Ireland. The ceremony was performed at two o'clock by the rector of the church, assisted by Rev. A. J Harrison, who is an uncle of the bride. She was given into the keeping of the groom by her mother, and her bridesmaids were her two sisters, Miss Ethel and Miss Elsie Harrison. Immediately after the church ceremony, there was a reception at the home of the bride's aunt, Mrs. S. M. Harrison, and later in the day, Mr. and Mrs Walkington left for their future home, "Grace court," within a short distance of Belfast.

A "Wedding Hymn" was composed in honor of these happy young people. The words by Lucius Harwood Foote, and the music by Wallace A. Sabin. It is a petty bit of music and the words are very appropriate.

All bon vivants will be pleased to learn that genial "John" Heinkee supersedes Mr. Justin Ladagnous as proprietor of the famous Maison Riche, so happily named by dainty Aimee in her golden days. Epicures the world over know the Riche. "John" will maintain the high standard that this restaurant has always held in this city.

Discouraged

Men, who have suffered the tortures of dyspepsia, will find encouragement in the following letter. It points the way to certain help and almost certain cure. In ninety-eight cases out of every one hundred in which Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is used the result is a perfect and permanent cure. "Golden Medical Discovery" cures diseases of the organs of digestion and nutrition, strengthens the stomach, purifies the blood, and nourishes the nerves. It has cured in hundreds of cases after all other medicines have utterly failed to give relief.

There is no alcohol contained in "Golden Medical Discovery," and it is entirely free from opium, cocaine, and all other narcotics.

"Your 'Golden Medical Discovery' has performed a wonderful cure," writes Mr. M. H. House, of Charleston, Franklin Co., Ark. "I had the worst case of dyspepsia, the doctors say, that they ever saw. After trying seven doctors and everything I could hear of, with no benefit, I tried Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and now I am cured."

Chronic dyspeptics may consult Dr. Pierce by letter free. Correspondence private. Address Dr. Pierce, Buffalo, N.Y.

Free. Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser is sent free on receipt of stamps to pay cost of mailing only. Send 21 one-cent stamps for paper-covered book, or 31 stamps for cloth bound volume. Address as above.

IDA. B. SPENCE, Ref. D. Optician.

In this age of enlightenment, restlessness and scientific advancement there is no profession more important in city, town or country than a thoroughly skilled and scientific Optictan. Dr. Ida B. Spence whose portrait apdears herewith, one of the founders of the San Francisco Optician Company, at number 237 Kearny street, is the only practicing Lady Optician on the Pacific Coast. Dr. Spence is a graduate of Ophthalmic Calleges of London and Chicago. She is particularly successful with nervous persons and children.

Moet & Chandon

(The Largest and Oldest Champagne House in the World.)

White Seal (Grand Cuveé), of exceptional bouquet and dryness.—Court Journal.

1875 1900

Safe Deposit and Trust Co.

Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.

PHONE BUSH 165.

Safe-Deposit Boxes from $5.00 per year up. Trunks and Valuables of every Description Stores in Fire and Burglar-Proof Vaults at $1.00 per month.

Office Hours 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.

The Bluefields Mining District.

While the mines of the frozen North have drawn their tens of thousands of miners and settlers from the United States, ready to brave the terrors of an Arctic winter and the heavy expense of northern transportation for the chance of gold-hunting in an already overcrowded country, another mining district of almost unknown wealth lies closer to hand, in a country of pleasant climate and surroundings and to be reached for a sum which is only a fraction of the small fortune needed to take the prospector to Dawson or Nome. This is the district of the Bluefields mines, situated in the pleasantest and most healthful part of the state of Nicaragua, and reached by steamer from New Orleans at a cost of only $55, first class.

This mining district lies about two hundred miles from Bluefields, going by way of Prinzipolca, Bluefields being only a four-days journey from New Orleans. The mines, both placer and quartz, have been only partially opened. Capital is scarce in Central America, and the citizens are not especially enterprising, so that a comparatively small amount of development work has been done, and that by Americans. But it is noticeable that this work has paid in every case; not an American dollar or days work has been put in that has not returned manifold rewards. The main reason for this is the fact the Nicaraguan country has gold everywhere. It may not run so rich as in other mining countries, although some remarkable heavy placer yields are reported, but it lies in all the soil, and generally in quantities well above the productive limit. To settle a bet, it was proved a short time ago that the red soil in the roads of Bluefields, which lies, as before stated, two hundred miles from the scene of actual operations, have more than a trace of gold.

Don. A. P. Alvarez, President of Nicaragua.

General Carlos Lecayo, Consul of Nicaragua at San Francisco.
Photo by Imperial Gallery.

A few figures will show something of the richness of the placer mines. Paul Rener, now a prosperous and wealthy mining man, came to the country "broke" and staked a placer claim. In one day, he took sixty-four pounds, not ounces, of placer gold out of a pocket on his claim, one of the nuggets weighing twenty-seven ounces. The money gained in this manner he turned over into quartz-mining, working with low-grade ores, and has made heavy profits from it ever since. Another claim in the district yielded $18,000 in one day, and proved that it was not a "single-pocket" mine by turning out $50,000 in three months. The El Dorado, which has been a consistent and steady producer, records one day's output of 348 ounces. All these mines are in the Suma district, only two days by water from Bluefields.

Quartz mines, however, are the properties which insure the stability and permanence of any mining district, and in this respect the Bluefields mines are especially favored. The Constancia will serve as a fair example. This mine has been in operation for ten years, and has been a steady producer, yielding 100 ounces a week with a force of sixty men. Operations have been restricted by lack of capital, this amount of ore having been worked all these years by a three-stamp protecting mill. At present, a five-stamp 750-pound mill is being built to replace this dwarf. The Siemper Viva, also hampered for lack of capital, has been working since 1891 and has sent its regular 400 ounces a month to Bluefields. Others which are doing as well with their limited means are the La Luz, Los Angeles, Neptune, Atlas, Santo Domingo, Hidden Hand, and Jumbo. These have only dipped into the quartz-bearing districts; with capital and expert management, their number may be multiplied infinitely.

One special advantage possessed by these mines is the fertility of the surrounding country. In almost every other mining country on earth, nature has chosen to deposit the precious veins in a hard and inhospitable country. But in Nicaragua, they lie in one of the garden spots of the continent. Scratch the earth with a stick, anywhere around the Bluefields region, and it smiles in fruit and flowers. The unusual spectacle is presented, all through the placer claims, of miners combining their vocation with ranching, tilling little market gardens for their tables. The larger mines very generally operate plantations. It may not be amiss to mention that the soil of this section of Nicaragua holds riches in tillage as well as in precious metal. The rubber industry, for example, offers the brightest inducements Eight hundred acres of rubber land sells, at present, for $300. Upon this area, 16,000 trees can be planted and brought to maturity in eight years for $5,000. After that, each tree will yield, on an average, four pounds of rubber each year, at a market price of 43 cents. It takes no expert to calculate the tremendous returns of such an enterprise. There are also handsome profits in banana culture, in vanilla, cocoa, ramil, cocoanut, mahogany, vegetables, rice and sugar. The cane of Nicaragua is comparable for richness with that of Louisiana.

A mistaken idea prevails in this country that all central America is infested with fevers, the yellow scourge in especial. Such an opinion is erroneous as regards the Bluefield region, which is absolutely devoid of all tropical fevers. No case of yellow fever was ever known within hundreds of miles of the mines. The climate is an equable and temperate one, the nights being cool enough to make blankets comfortable all the year round and the days cooled by a refreshing sea breeze.

In conclusion, it may be said that Nicaragua in general and the mining regions in particular are looking for immigrants. They want men—young, energetic live men, to build up the country and develop its resources. And, while capital is in demand, capitalists are not the only men desired. On the contrary, poor men with the desire to work—not tramps or loafers—are wanted and are encouraged by the present liberal administration.

PAIN-KILLER as an internal remedy, has no equal. In cases of summer complaints, diarrhœa, dysentery, it cures quickly. Used as a liniment its action is like magic, when applied to bad sores, burns, scalds, and sprains. For the sick headache and toothache, don't fail to try it. In short, it is a PAIN-KILLER. Avoid substitutes, there is but one PAIN-KILLER, Perry Davis'. Price 25c. and 50c.

With army officers Jesse Moore "AA" whiskey is a very popular drink.

The Orignal Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

STATEMENT

—OF THE—

CONDITION AND VALUE

—OF THE—

Assets and Liabilities

—OF—

The Hibernia Savings and Loan Society.

A CORPORATION.

And Where Said Assets are Situated, Dated June 30, 1900.

ASSETS.

1—Promissory Notes and the debts thereby secured, the actual value of which is $22,506,299 54

The condition of said Promissory Notes and debts is as follows: They are all existing Contracts, owned by said Corporation, and are payable to it at its Office, which is situated at the corner of Market, McAllister and Jones Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and the payment thereof is secured by First Mortgages on Real Estate within this State. Said Promissory notes are kept and held by said Corporation at its said Office, which is its principal place of business, and said Notes and debts are there situated.

2—Promissory Notes and the Debts thereby secured, the actual value of which is..... 45 300 00

The condition of said Promissory Notes and debts is as follows: They are all existing Contracts, owned by said Corporation, and are payable to it at its Office, which is situated as aforesaid, and payment thereof is secured by "Spring Valley Water Works Second Mortgage 4 per cent Bonds," "Park and Cliff House Railway Company 6 per cent Bonds," and "Market Street Railway Company First Consolidated Mortgage 5 per cent Gold Bond," the market value of all said bonds being $64 530 00. Said Notes are kept and held by said Corporation at its said Office, and said Notes and Bonds are there situated.

3—Bonds of the United States, the actual value of which is... ..... [illegible]

The condition of said Bonds is as follows: They belong to said Corporation, and are kept and held by it in its own vaults and are there situated.

They are "Registered 4 per cent ($18,000,000 00) and 3 per cent ($500 000 00) United States Bonds," and are payable only to the order of said Corporation.

4—Miscellaneous Bonds, the actual value of which is..... .... [illegible]

The condition of said Bonds is as follows: They belong to said Corporation, and are kept and held by it in its own Vaults and are there situated. They are "Market Street Cable Railway Company 6 per cent bonds ($954 000 00)," "Market Street Railway Company First Consolidated Mortgage 5 per cent Bonds ($282 000 00)," "Sutter Street Railway Company 5 per cent Bonds ($150 000 00)," "Powell Street Railway Company 6 per cent Bonds ($50 000 00)," "Northern Railway Company of California 6 per cent Bonds ($428,000 00)," "San Francisco and North Pacific Railway Company 5 per cent Bonds ($237,000 00)," "Spring Valley Water Works Second Mortgage 4 per cent Bonds ($359 000 00)," Spring Valley Water Works Third Mortgage 4 per cent Bonds ($406,000)," and "City of San Luis Obispo 5 per cent Bonds ($24,750 33)"

5—Interest on Miscellaneous Bonds accrued to July 1, 1900..... ..... 244 641 06

6—(a) Real Estate situated in the City and County of San Francisco ($562-628 74), and in the Counties of Santa Clara ($187,076 97), Alameda ($125 460 82), and San Mateo ($29 366 26), in said State, the actual value of which is..... ..... [illegible]

(b) The land and building in which said Corporation keeps its said Office, the actual value of which is..... .... [illegible]

The condition of said Real Estate is that it belongs to said Corporation, and part of it is productive.

7—Cash in United States Gold and Silver Coin, belonging to said Corporation, and in its possession, and situated at its said Office, Actual Value [illegible]

Total Assets..... ..... $49,168,908 92

LIABILITIES.

1—Said Corporation owes Deposits amounting to and the actual value of which is..... [illegible]

The condition of said Deposits is that they are payable only out of said Assets and are fully secured thereby.

2—Reserve Fund, Actual Value..... .. .. 3,015,760 12

Total Liabilities..... .... [illegible]

The Hibernia Savings and Loan Society,
By JAMES R. KELLY, President.

The Hibernia Savings and Loan Society,
By ROBERT J. TOBIN, Secretary.

State of California, City and County of San Francisco.—ss.

JAMES R. KELLY and ROBERT J. TOBIN, being each separately duly sworn, each for himself, says: That said JAMES R. KELLY is President, and that said ROBERT J. TOBIN is Secretary of THE HIBERNIA SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY, the Corporation above mentioned, and that the foregoing statement is true.

JAMES R. KELLY, President.
ROBERT J. TOBIN, Secretary.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 2d day of July, 1900.
GEO. T. KNOX, Notary Public.
In and for the City and County of San Faancisco, State of California.

Meditations of a Matron.

I HAVE had a very exciting time since last week, my dear Diary. Robert and I went up to Castle Crags on Wednesday and we were burned out on Thursday evening. I cannot imagine how I ever escaped from my room. I am one of the people who have no presentiments. The next morning after the fire I think, I heard of a hundred people who realized several days beforehand that something was going to happen I wish just one had whispered a word of warning into my ear, for I lost a great many of my clothes and my wedding ring. The amount of ill luck that is to happen to me on that account, so my friends tell me, is almost sufficient to wreck a hundred homes. However, I have another wedding ring, and as the summer is half over and my gowns were pretty well worn out, I shall make the best of it.

Each separate person whom I saw after the fire spoke of how she escaped I don't even remember escaping; all I can think of is a great deal of noise and bustle and the crackling of the wood as it was devoured by the flame. It was a wonderful sight and no end of people spent their time after escaping taking kodak pictures of the ruins. I did not. I sat on some leaves just far enough from the fire not to feel the heat too much, and thought of the horrible torture the Chinese were inflicting on the white people. No one bothered me at all; several people inquired as to the manner of my escape, but I did not answer. I simply took advantage of this dramatic scene to let myself be rude. The women, I saw in the papers, were very cool. They were not. They escaped, a great many pretty well clothed, and with their clothes, but every one was wrought up to a tremendously nervous condition, and made it most obvious. I do not consider it possible to be cool in a fire. Each woman at Castle Crags on Friday night is a heroine in her own eyes. I do not know about the men. I saw one with a bucket; he would put it under a faucet, fill it, then deliberately empty it, and then taking it as though it were full, would rush with it to put out the flame Lots of funny things happened. I saw one girl take off a shoe and throw it into the flames for luck. One man cried bitterly—he had spent such happy days at Castle Crags, and they were now over.

I never realized how dreadful a fire could be before, and I hope this will be my last experience of one. I do not believe now that there should be large wooden hotels in California—the wood becomes so dry. I suppose you think I can write of nothing else, but it is true, sleeping or waking, I can feel the glare and whirring of the blaze. Mama was most anxious for me to go to Del Monte. She is there with Papa, but I did not have the necessary clothes, so I am again in San Rafael. I was not in time for Edith McBean's lunche n which took place on Friday. I hear it was awfully nice, and they all had good fun. Alyse Latham looked particularly well, so did Therese Morgan. Helen Dean was there too; she promises to be a very handsome girl. She is taller than either her father or her mother, and has one of the prettiest noses of any of the girls I know. I went to Mrs. Morgan's card party on Saturday afternoon. It was a jolly affair. Everyone of the married people enjoy euchre so much. I won a pretty prize, the highest at my table. Afterwards all of the girls came in and helped to eat the ice cream and cakes. Mrs. Short also gave a card party last week. I am beginning to be as devoted to the game as Mama. I can't imagine why I used to turn up my nose at cards a year ago. There were no large dinners last week, though parties of six and eight frequently went to Pastori's to dine. It is a nice change. The ladies' golf team tournament also commenced on Saturday. Mrs. Gilman Brown and Alice Hoffman are the best players; then come Mrs. Green and Edith McBean. Each member of the successful side receives a prize. Golfers say it's a great deal of fun. I went over the Links on Monday morning and found I could play quite well. The view from the hills is lovely. I think if we stay over in San Rafael, Robert and I shall join the Club. Monday afternoon I played cards again. Mrs. Dean gave this party; it was a great success. Being a very warm day, all the ladies wore light gowns and looked charming. Mrs. Dean's was a silver grey with lace. She looked particularly well, so did Mrs. Folger. Mrs. W. G. Mann is at San Rafael at present. Robert thinks her the handsomest woman he has seen in years. She has a very strong face and is a very clever woman. I am afraid of clever people, so as yet have not dared to talk to her. I am always more in my element with people endowed with our own kind of brain.

Mama is delighted with Monterey. It is so gay, she says. There is a great deal of driving of four-in-hands and lots of excitement. Peter Martin, Walter Hobart, the Tobins and Raoul Duval have their coaches and horses and start off in great style every afternoon. Itt must be fun, but as I cannot drive a four-in-hand, I am quite happy here. Still I love Del Monte. Leila has taken a great fancy to the little Harvey girls. Anita is quite a stunning looking girl, quite as fair as her mother. Genevieve is dark with winsome brown eyes and just as merry as she can be. Anita is a famous whip; she makes a capital turn in the road and is fascinating in her driving coat. Both the Harvey girls are very accomplished and are being really well educated. Mama says it is too bad there are not more mothers like Mrs. Harvey. Swimming and golf and a little tennis pass the day very pleasantly. The Folgers, Morgans and Grants will leave San Rafael for Monterey in August.

Now, Diary dear, this seems to be all my news for this week.

MRS. CRICKET.

As a tonic, nothing in the world beats Jesse Moore "AA" whiskey.

BOOKS.

If you are looking for some book to while away the overestimated luxury of an idle vacation afternoon, you might try A Diplomatic Woman By Huan Mee (Harper & Brothers). What you want perhaps is something light, very light, of the sort that won't raise your hair the quarter of an inch, or cause you to drop out of the hammock with fatigue. Something you haven't read, something full of conversation and not too long. This little book fills the bill.

Evidently the weird South Sea Islander name of the author is a pseudonym, for the style is a direct copy of the French method of crispness and worldliness, and sounds more like the result of a superficial dipping into degeneracy, than the dip into the oriental fancy of a Huan Mee. The volume relates the very unusual and not unexciting experiences of a young and pretty woman who engages in diplomatic intrigue and involves herself in an interesting coil of adventure. She is a sharp-tongued damsel and her relating the tales herself is a distinct advantage. The Russian Cipher, Le Diablo, The Abducted Ambassador, Prince Ferdinand's Entanglement, and A Deal With China, are some of the striking titles of these little tales. As a diplomat, a woman, and a young and pretty one at that, should be a success, as diplomacy is one of the first lessons that big brothers of the race teach their little sisters. It becomes a woman's principal weapon of defense and attack; it is much more difficult to keep a secret from a raw-boned, red haired purveyor of government lies, than it is from an innocent looking little thing, who never questions, only flatters, and waltzes like an angel. Also the well known fact that no woman can keep a secret need be no drawback, as after she had once gotten it out of the man, she would probably immediately give it back to him—with her heart. That is the way with a woman diplomat.

* *

In a clever French fable it is related that after the world has been again resolved into chaos, nothing will survive eternally but "the songs our poets have sung." Now most of us, if it came to a question of literature in the matter at all, would prefer to meet again our favorite funny stories. To be made to weep is perhaps a source of some admiring gratitude, but the man who makes us laugh—we want to keep him where we can get at him often. This is why the popularity of "Mark Twain" never wanes. But in his last book, The Man That Corrupted Hadleyburg, And Other Stories, (Harper & Brothers) he is something of a surprise. He draws a moral in the very first tale, and it sticks out through every phase of the story, as plainly as a blue ribbon on a Khaki uniform. The plot is a complicated one, involving the gradual working out of a practical joke of majestic proportions, and dire significence. In fact it is almost too big to laugh at.

Briefly, it seems that Hadleyburg was a city famed for its honesty, and considered so incorruptible that it was the envy of other towns of more impeachable reputation. But it offended a stranger, who resolved upon an elaborate method of revenge. He left there a sack of gold, which was to go to the unknown citizen who had once given him good advice, upon it being proved which one this was. The treasured words were in a sealed packet. But later he privately sent a tip as it were, regarding them, to all the leading citizens. Each and everyone fell before the temptation to lay claim to the money, and sent in at the appointed time the words which were to prove his right, signed with his name. This exposes the deceit. Very amusing is the meeting where these communications are read out all identically alike. Amusing to a degree is the scheme which in the end shows how thin is the reputed honesty of the Hadleyburgians. But it has its pathetic side, too—showing the frailty of human nature and the sufferings of remorse on the part of the oldest and least culpable among them. The point of the whole story is that they never before met with temptation, and "The weakest of all weak things is a virtue which has not been tested by fire." The crestfallen citizens of this burg have now earnestly revised their former prayer into "Lead us into temptation."

One of the finest things in the book is the Essay on Play-Acting, taken from the Forum.

Catarrh Cannot be Cured

with LOCAL APPLICATIONS as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials free.

F. J CHENEY & CO., Props, Toledo, O.

Sold by druggists, price 75c.

Hall's Family Pills are the best.

GERMEA

The Ideal Breakfast Dish

A Toilet Necessity.

WAKELEE'S COLD CREAM of Roses.

Made with pure Almond Oil and Distilled Water of Roses

NOTICE OF ASSESSMENT—OCCIDENTAL CONSOLIDATED MINING COMPANY—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California; location of works, Silver Star Mining District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the fourteenth (14th) day of July, 1900, an assessment (No. 35) of five (5) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 69 Nevada block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the seventeenth (17th) day of Aug., 1900 will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Tuesday the eleventh (11th) day of Sept., 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors

ALFRED K. DURBROW, Secretary.

Office: Room 69, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

SAN FRANCISCO BANKS

THE BANK OF CALIFORNIA

SAN FRANCISCO

Capital, $2,000,000 Surplus, $1,000,000

Profit and Loss Account January 1st, 1900, $2,321,21

WILLIAM ALVORD.....President

CHARLES R. BISHOP.....Vice-President

THOMAS BROWN.....Cashier

S. PRENTISS SMITH.....Assistant Cashier

IRVING F. MOULTON.....Second Assistant Cashier

ALLEN M. CLAY.....Secretary

CORRESPONDENTS

New York.....Messrs. Laidlaw & Co. / The Bank of New York, N. B. A

Baltimore.....The National Exchange Bank

Boston.....The Tremont National Bank

Chicago.....Illinois Trust and Savings Bank / Union National Bank

Philadelphia.....Philadelphia National Bank

St. Louis.....Boatmen's Bank

Virginia City, Nev...Agency of the Bank of California

London.....Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Son

Paris.....Messrs. De Rothschild Frere

Berlin.....Direction der Disconto Gesellschaf

China, Japan and East Indies.....Chartered Bank o India, Australia and China

Australia and New Zealand.....The Union Bank o Australia, Ltd., and Bank of New Zealand

Letters of Credit issued available in all parts of th world.

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California Street

Guarantee Capital and Surplus.....$2,238 372 4

Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash..... 1,000.000 0

Deposits July 30, 1900.....28 938 395

OFFICERS

President, B. A. BECKER

First Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER

Second Vice-President, H. HORSTMANN

Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT

Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN

Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY

Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann
Ign. Steinhart, Emil Rohte, I. N. Walter,
H. B. Russ, N. Ohlandt, John Lloyd.

General Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow.

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST

Deposits July 1, 1900.....$26,952,575

Paid Up Capital..... 1,000,000

Reserve Fund..... 218, 93

Contingent Fund..... 439,608

E. B. POND, Pres. W. C. B. DE FREMERY, Vice-Pre

LOVELL WHITE, Cashier.

R. M. WELCH, Assistant Cashier.

DIRECTORS

Henry F. Allen Robert Watt, Thomas Mage
George C. Boardman, W. C. B. de Fremery,
Daniel E. Martin, C O G. Miller, Jacob Bar
E. B. Pond.

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country

Receives deposits. Country remittances may be made in checks payable in San Francisco, Postoffice or Wells, Fargo & Co's Money Orders, or coin by Express, but the responsibility of this bank commences only with the receipt of the money.

No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

Office Hours: 9 a. m. to 3 p. m. and Saturday evenings, for receipt of deposits only, 6:30 to 8 o'clock.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 POST STREET

Below Kearny Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000

Paid Up Capital, $300,000

JAMES D. PHELAN, President

S. G. MURPHY, Vice-President

JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-President

GEORGE A. STORY, Cashier

C. B. HOBSON, Assistant Cashier

DIRECTORS:—James D. Phelan, S G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, Frank J. Sullivan, Robert McElroy, Chas S. Neal and James M. McDonald.

Interest paid on deposits.

Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co or Exchange on City Banks.

When opening accounts, send signature.

Eighty-five Fine Sunny Rooms Elevator Service

THE BRADBURY,

J. A. FERSON, Proprietor.

FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL

N. W. Cor. Polk and California Sts.,

San Francisco Cal.

Excellent Cuisine References required.

Transient trade solicited. Rates $2.00 and upwards

Reasonable by the month.

TEL. HYDE 2771

TELEPHONE STOCK FOR SALE.

Safest and Best Investment Before the Public To-Day.

PEOPLES' MUTUAL TELEPHONE COMPANY.

Capital Stock $5,000,000 50,000 Shares of $100 Each.

Is the owner of the most valuable Telephone Franchise in the United States.
Has 3500 contracts for the use of its telephones.
Has assured net income of over $100,000 a year.
GIVES city FREE telephones and switching in all city offices; FREE Fire and Police Department Wires.
GIVES city telephone users $2,000,000—20,000 shares of its stock for using its phones
Charges lower rates than Bell Company.
Will pay 10 per cent dividends on its stock if supported by telephone users.
GUARANTEES that no assessment will ever be levied on its stock.
Will keep millions of dollars in California that now go to Eastern capitalists
ONLY 5000 shares for sale, for construction purposes, at $25 00 a share, payable in monthly installments of $5.00. Last day for subscription July 30th, 1900. The price of the stock will be raised after July 25th to $30,000 a share.

Full information furnished upon application to

PEOPLES' MUTUAL TELEPHONE COMPANY,

June 30, 1900. 206 SANSOME STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

At The Telephone.

Dramatic Personal.

Miss Wilhelmina Craig.
Anne—her maid.
Travers—engaged to Miss Craig.
Burton—his man.
Telephone 4456910 Black.
Miss Mayhew.
Pelham—a friend.
Mr. Craig—a father.
Miss O'Brien.
Telephone 934 Red.
Several other te'ephones.

Anne (through the telephone to Burton, at leven a. m.)—Hullo-o-o. Is this 44455910 lack?

Burton. 'Ullo?

Both. Who is this?

Anne. Hullo-o-o-o!

Burton. 'Ullo? Who is this?

Anne. Oh, is that you, Jimmie? Guess.

Burton. Yes, ma'am.

Anne. Guess who I am. Te-he-he.

Burton. I would Miss, but Mr. Travers is et asleep, miss, and there is the necessity of peakin' a bit low,—is it Miss O'Brien, perps? I could pick your voice in a crowd nywheres.

Anne. Who's she? Who is your friend Miss O'Brien, I'd just like to know, you told e only the other night——

Burton. Oh, for Gawd's sake Miss Anne, eep quiet. Don't lets 'ave a scene. Some e might be on the line.

Anne. I suppose you mean her. . . . Miss raig wishes me to tell you to convey to Mr. ravers, that she is sound asleep, she says and e can't go with him to San Rafael, this orning. She will meet him for lunch at the alace Grill, at one o'clock by our time. That all.

Burton. Yes, thank you, ma'am. But Anne—

Anne. Goodbye, Mr. Burton. Farewell. ive my love to the charming Miss O'Brien.

Burton. Yes, ma'am.

* *

(Twelve o'clock.)

Travers. Is this Craig's? Yes-ah-thanks. Miss Craig there?

Anne. I'll see, sir.

Travers. Hullo! Hullo! Hullo!

Voice. Hello, yerself.

Travers. Is this Miss Craig?

Voice. Not on yer life. Never met the loidy. ive us a chance. Say Billy darlint, comin' ound to see about de dawg?

Miss Wilhelmina Craig. Sir?

Travers. Oh! Hullo! Hullo! . . . Hullo-o. ull-o-o.

Voice. At it again, by gosh.

Miss Craig. Did some one call 934 Red?

Travers (loudly) yes! Hold on—is this Miss aig?

Miss Craig. Oh, yes, is that you Jack? How you this morning? You look fine. Wasn't e Cotillion too lovely for anything last night? didn't get to sleep until three o'clock. I had put those delicious pinks right where I uld see them when I woke up, and, oh Jack, ma says we did talk too long in the parlor, t I suppose so long as we're engaged—

Girl's voice. Did you hear that? I shall t it in Town Tattle. Wilhelmina Craig, is gaged, at last to Jack Travers. It was about e.

Travers. Hullo, Miss Travers—pshaw, I an Miss Craig——

Miss Craig. Yes, Jack.

Travers. Can't you come down and have akfast with me very soon—at the Palace ill? What's the use of waiting until luneon at one o'clock?

Miss Craig. All right, Jack. I'll start immediately. I'll meet you at papa's office on ontgomery Street, you know. And oh Jack, wear that screaming red tie.

Travers. Anything else? All right. Oh, the way, if I'm not there, just wait a few nutes for me, won't you? I may be detned. Hullo-Hullo-Hullo.

Voice. Lost her that time.

* *

(One o'clock.)

Miss Craig. Is this Mr. Travers?

Burton. No, this is Jimmie. Come, Anne r, won't you forgive me for not recogni-g—

Miss Craig. Is Mr. Travers there?

Burton. Now don't be 'ard on a fellow.

Miss Craig. I have no such intention. But ere is Mr. Travers?

Burton. He went hout just about 'alf an r ago. Don't you worry- There is no one e. He won't be back until tomorrow rning.

Miss Craig. Oh, dear.

Burton. Yes, ma'am.

Miss Craig's voice—Well, he's not there, s. I think I'll walk over to the Grill.

Burton. 'Ullo. 'Ullo. Is that Miss Craig? Travers told me if you 'phoned to say he been detained on business, and would t you at one-thirty, ma'am.

Voice. Send up thirty pounds of ice to——

Burton. I 'aint no Hiceman.

Woman's voice. Please send up to Mrs. Brown's, one spool of fine white thread, a paper of safety pins, a couple of corset lacings, a pair of shoes that will fit, three yards of pale blue silk to match that dress I bought last Saturday——

* * *

(Two o'clock.)

Travers. Is this Mr. Craig? I can't find her anywhere. Has she come back? Where do you think she is?

Craig. Over to the Grill, I tell you, Jack. In just one minute, Smythe. Wait, she may possibly have gone up to Miss Mayhew's room on the third floor—you know——

Voice—How badly that hay looked when she got here. Better sell her right away.

Travers. Yes, I know, thank you. Sorry to trouble you.

* * *

Travers. She's not there. Is this Mr. Craig? Have you any other suggestions?

Craig. By the way, Jack, I saw Wilhelmina walking up street a minute ago, with young Pelham.

Travers. The devil!

Craig—No, Pelham. They may have gone into the Woman's Exchange.

Travers. The deuce they have!

* * *

Miss Craig. Is this Miss Mayhew?

Miss Mayhew. Oh, yes, this is Miss Mayhew. Who is this?

Miss Craig.—I am Wilhelmina Craig——

Miss Mayhew. Oh, you dear! I haven't seen you for the longest time—— Not since the dinner Tuesday night. How are you? You looked simply stunning, the other night. Didn't you have a good time? I just danced my legs about off, and my hair was in tatters. Mama said when I got home—

Miss Craig. I wanted to ask you—how long has Mr. Travers been up in your sitting-room? Miss Hargrave said she saw him coming out about fifteen minutes ago, as he had a luncheon engagement with me, I just wondered that was all.

Miss Mayhew. Yes, indeed, you poor dear. I'm not surprised at all. But he asked after you very pleasantly—

Miss Craig. Oh, did he!

Miss Mayhew. Why, of course. I thought you were the greatest friends.

Miss Craig. Yes, we were. Well, goodbye, sweetheart.

Miss Mayhew. Goodbye, dearest.

* *

(Three o'clock,)

Travers. Is this Pelham? Pelham. P-e-l-h-a-m Yes, hang it. P-e-l-h-

Pelham. Here, old man.

Travers. Then you've gotten back. Have a fine time?

Pelham. Up to date. She's a regular little daisy. Broke her own record. Took the hurdles like a peach. Come around and see her tonight.

Travers. What? Where? Ah-where do I come in on this?

Pelham. Depends what you have up on her. Take my advice though, and go it easy. She may break again. My opinion is she's only half broken. Five to one, she sells at auction to the highest bidder, inside of five years.

Travers. Good God!

Pelham. Are you already in on her, as heavy as that, old man?

Travers. Everything I'm worth. My very life! Where did you have luncheon?

Pelham. At "The Poodle Dog,"—Hullo—

Voice. Iky is out at de baths, Mr. Goldstein, but he said he'd be back in ten minutes, alretty,— Pelham. Hullo! Travers! How odd for bored old Travers to get so excited over my mare's lack of staying power.

* *

Miss Craig. Papa, I want you to tell Jack—

Voice. Just a minute.

Mr. Craig. Yes, what is the matter?

Miss Craig. Nothing, only if Jack comes around anytime between now and next Christmas, will you please break off my engagement with him, and tell him I can't on any account go to the—

Mr. Craig, Yes, yes, all right. But this is business hours you know. Travers telephoned for you—

Miss Craig. He could at least have walked over, if he hadn't been in such a hurry to see some one else. He's—

Mr. Craig. Business, business my dear. Goodbye.

Miss Craig. Goodbye, papa.

* *

(Four p. m.)

Miss Craig. Is this you, Mr. Pelham? I am Miss Craig. On second thought I should just love to have you come to see me to-night. I have broken off my other engagement especially.

Pelham. Good! You should have accepted my invitation for luncheon this noon.

Miss Craig. Yes, I should. Well, goodbye, then for a few hours.

* *

Anne. Hullo, is this Mr. Burton?

Burton. Yes, its Jim, my dear.

Anne. Keep that. Is Mr. Travers at home?

Burton. Came 'ome about fifteen minutes ago, by hour time, sick with La Greep. He don't think as 'e'll be able to be out for a week or two, ma'am, but if anybody came in I was to say 'e was out, or dead. But seems its you Anne, and not that red-haired freckle-faced Kitty O'Brien—

Anne. Well?

Voice. So that's the way you talk about me, behind me back, is it, sor? Come around to-night, just you come around!

Burton. 'Ow Hawful! No thanks. Did you wish to speak to Mr. Travers, Miss Anne?

Anne. No, Jimmie, but Miss Craig does.

Burton. I'll call 'im, though I think as he's asleep, from the sounds of silence, as comes from his apartment.

Miss Craig. Hullo! Hull-o-o-o. Hullo! Is this Mr. Travers?

Travers. Yes, it is I, Miss Craig. Do you wish to speak to me?

Miss Craig. No, but I think it necessary.

Travers. Did you enjoy your luncheon?

Miss Craig. Oh! How can you be so cruel!

Travers. I'm sure I don't know. Will you pardon me, Miss Craig, if I suggest we don't go to the theatre to-night? I am feeling very badly.

Miss Craig. So am I.

Travers. The grippe I think, which so often, developes fatally into pneumonia. I will come around some other time. Perhaps by then you will have your explanation ready.

Miss Craig. Oh, dear! what nerve!

Travers. Oh, I say Wilhelmina—I don't understand, you know, Miss Craig. Hullo! Hullo! Odd, but it sounded somehow as if she sobbed as she turned away. Gad, I can't give her up.

Voice. Well, don't then.

* *

(Five p. m.)

Travers. Miss Craig, will you answer me one question?

Miss Craig. Ye-e-e-s.

Travers. Where did you have your luncheon?

Miss Craig. How cruel of you. If—I must tell—I—I—didn't have—any at all. Mr. Pelham asked me,— Travers. The wretch!

Voice. Give me 934 Black.

Miss Craig. But I didn't go. While you were—you know where—I was pacing the streets, hungry. You know how.

Voice. Please give me c34 Black.

Travers. Good! I'll be around to-night, usual hour.

* *

Anne. Mr. Pelham? Miss Craig's compliments, and she is ill sir, with the Grip, and will not be able to see you to-night.

Voice. Black 934, please.

Pelham. Sorry, I'm sure. Convey to Miss Craig my condolences.

Voice. Oh, wont you please give me 934 Black?

GRACE A. LUCE.

A fellow once said, "I want some whiskey, and I want it bad;" so they didn't give him Jesse Moore.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

573-579 Market Street, San Francisco | R. H. PEASE, President and Manager. | 73 and 75 First Street, Portland, Ore.

MONTROSE BICYCLE SENT FREE

on approval to your address WITHOUT A CENT IN ADVANCE. SEND US YOUR ORDER, state whether you wish lady's or man's wheel; give color, height of frame and gear wanted and WE WILL SHIP THE WHEEL C. O. D. on approval, allowing you to uncrate and examine it fully before you accept it. If it is not all and more than we claim for it, and a better wheel than you can get for any where near the price from any one else, refuse it and we will pay all express charges ourselves. The "MONTROSE" Bicycle at our Special Agent's sample price of $16.50 is the greatest bargain in a bicycle ever offered. We guarantee it equal to any $40 wheel on the market, and you need not accept it nor pay a cent if you do not find it as we represent. We are EXCLUSIVE BICYCLE MANUFACTURERS and take this method of quickly introducing our 1900 MODELS. This offer of a sample wheel at this low price is made to secure a RIDER AGENT in each town to represent us and take orders. Our agents make money fast.

SPECIFICATIONS. Frame, 22, 24 or 26 inch; ladies, 22 inch. Best Shelby seamless tubing with forged connections, flush joints, improved expander device to fasten seat post and handle bar; Royal Arch crown; the celebrated Mavis hubs and hangers—the easiest running known; Record "A" tires, the best and one of the most expensive tires on the market. The genuine $1 Mesinger Hygienic saddle; pedals, tools and accessories the best obtainable. Enameled in black, maroon or coach green, highly finished and ornamented; special finished nickeling on all bright parts. We thoroughly test every piece of material that goes into this machine. Our binding year's guarantee bond with each bicycle.

FREE to any one sending the $16.50 cash in full with order we will send free a genuine Burdick 10,000 mile barrel pattern cyclometer; or a high grade floor pump. Your money all back if you are not perfectly satisfied.

CHEAP WHEELS. We do not manufacture the cheap department store kind of wheels, such as many new concerns and big supply houses advertise and sell as high grade. We can furnish them, however, at $5 to $7 stripped; or $9.75 to $12.50 complete. We do not guarantee nor recommend them. BEFORE ORDERING a bicycle of any one else, no matter who or how cheap, write us and let us tell you how much we can save you on the same machine.

If you are UNABLE to BUY a wheel we can assist you to EARN A BICYCLE by distributing catalogues for us a few days. We need one person in each town for this purpose. We have several hundred SECOND HAND WHEELS taken in trade which we will close out at $3 to $10 each; also some shopworn samples and '99 models very cheap. Send for Bargain List. OUR RELIABILITY is unquestioned. We refer to any bank or business house in Chicago or any express or railroad company. We will send you letters of reference direct from the largest banks in Chicago if you wish it.

SEND YOUR ORDER today. This low price and these special terms of shipment without deposit will be withdrawn very soon. ☞ Give name of this paper.

J. L. MEAD CYCLE COMPANY, Chicago, Ill.

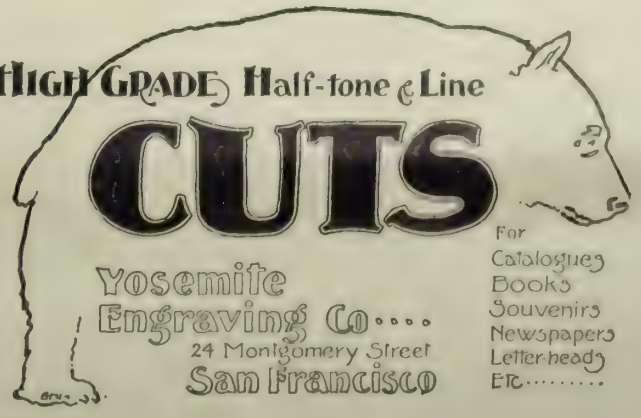
We Make the Cuts in this Paper.



MUSEMENTS

Orpheum

Mr. and Mrs. John Mason, (Katherine Gray); Nichols Sisters; Zelma Rawlston; St. Onge Brothers; Mr. and Mrs. Tobin; Sullivan and Carrie Webber; Mazie King; Jessie Padgham; Biograph.

Reserved Seats 25c.; Balcony 10c.; Opera Chairs and Box Seats 50c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.

Columbia Theatre

BEGINNING MONDAY NIGHT, JULY 30th.
Fifth week Charles Frohman presents
HENRY MILLER
and a special company
Six nights, matinees Wed. and Sat.
The London, New York and San Francisco Success

BROTHER OFFICERS.

A comedy drama in three acts by Lee Trever.
Henry Miller as Lieut. John Hinds. "Comrade, I want you to make a gentleman of me."
Aug. 6.—"Heartsease."
Thursday afternoons and Sunday nights Burton Holmes Lectures.

California THE POPULAR HOUSE

H. FRIEDLANDER & Co., Lessees and Managers.
[Tele. Main 1731

Week Commencing Sun. Night, July 29th
Matinees Saturday Only.

Last week but one
Matthews & Bulger in conjunction with
DUNNE & RYLEY'S ALL STAR CAST.
In a Rag-Time Opera

By the Sad Sea Waves.

Introducing 30 specialties including, by request "Money in the Bank."
Week of Aug. 5th, farewell of Dunne & Ryley's all star cast. Play to be announced.
Our Never Changing Popular Prices.

Alcazar Theatre.

BELASCO & THALL, Managers. Phone 254

Week of July 30th.
A brilliant revival of Shakespeare's immortal poem of love

ROMEO AND JULIET.

The play born into the world under the paternal wings of purity and holy love. A magnificant array of gowns to dress a series of artists; stage settings more beautiful than ever attempted before on the Alcazar stage.
Frou Frou following.
Matinee Saturday only.
Alcazar Prices, 15c, 25c, 35c, 50c.

Columbia Theatre,

Burton Holmes Lectures

Direction of Henry Miller.

Illustrations in colors and appropriate Motion Pictures. Two courses exactly alike.

Six Thursday matinees at 2:30
Six Sunday evenings at 8:30.

Japan revisited, July 26 and 29.
Round About Paris, Aug. 2 and 5.
Grand Canon, Aug. 9 and 12.
Moki Land, Aug. 16 and 19.
Hawaiian Islands, 23 and 26.
Reserved seats $1, 75c., and 50c., ready Mon.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.—The Continental Building and Loan Association, corner of California and Sansome streets, for the half year ending June 30th, 1900, has declared a dividend of 5 per cent per annum on Ordinary Deposits; 6 per cent on Term Deposits; 10 per cent to class "F" stock; and 12 per cent to class "A."
CAPT. OLIVER ELDRIDGE, President.
WILLIAM CORBIN, Secretary.

At the Theatres.

A good play is a good play always, but some good plays outgrow the fashion of their times. It took Augustin Daly, with his genius for adaptation, to make the prettiest and most popular of the Restoration Comedies—Wycherlie's "Country Wife"—into a play acceptable to modern taste. A lesser adapter would have overdone his work, but Daly was enough of an artist to bring his production down to the fun of our own time while keeping the subtle antique flavor of the original. "The Country Girl" is genuinely, in some places uproariously, funny. Shakespeare's comedies, to the modern taste, are funny only by courtesy, after all. We appreciate them for their beauty of language and sentiment, their appeal to the universal, their insight—for all the literary qualities of the great master—but their power of provoking laughter is worn away by the changing of time. Reverence forbids anyone doing for Shakespeare what Daly has done for Wycherlie, but it is not an impertinence to say that it might be done to advantage. For "The Country Girl" kept the Alcazar audience laughing as no other play has done this whole year long.

* *

At the Columbia Theatre during the coming week Henry Miller and the members of his special company will appear in a fine production of Lee Trever's comedy drama "Brother Officers," which was so well received here last season when it received its initial American production at the hands of Henry Miller. The play deals with English army life and it will be interpreted by an unusually strong caste inasmuch as the the list of players will include besides Henry Miller, E. J. Morgan, Charles Walcot, Edwin Stevens, Frank E. Lamb, E. Y. Backus, William Courtney, Harry Spear, Margaret Anglin, Margaret Dale, Mrs. Thomas Whiffen and Lillian Thurgate. The play is one of the strongest of the Miller repertoire. "Heartsease" follows.

* *

Florence Roberts as an ingenue takes a long jump from "Sapho," yet that capable and intelligent actress carried everything with her. The part—it is the original ingenue role on the English stage by-the-way—calls for boys' clothes. Miss Roberts proved her art by making the heroine "gawky," awkward and ill-at-ease in the unaccustomed garb. She carried the audience with her from beginning to end, and richly earned her curtain calls. Whittlesey had little to do except look well, which he performed with ease. Theodore Roberts played an old man with fair success, and Emery overacted what might have been a pleasing role. Mr. Montaine was amusing and natural as Sparkish until the third act, when he scored a failure in a dismal drunken scene.

* *

Dunne and Ryley's comedy company will play for the next but the last week of a most successful engagement at the California Theater, "Ay the Sad Sea Waves", the "rag-time opera" in which Mathews and Bulger starred so sucessfully for the last two seasons. They will appear in their original roles, Mary Marble will be the Sis Hopkins, John W. Divine. will play Judge Grace who runs the Finishville Habit Cure Sanitarium, and Tony Hart will have another of his favorite parts, Prof. Wagner Flat, a German musician,

* *

"His Excellency the Governor," is perhaps the weakest play of the Miller repertoire, being only a slight and very whimsical comedy, which would fall to the ground in less capable hands. The best parts this week fell to Sadie Martinot and Frank Worthing, vice Miss Anglin and Miller, who are taking a rest. In her acting of the whimsical Stella, a part which must be handled with great delicacy, she was reminiscent of "My Official Wife," her old favorite. Next week in "Brother Officers" and the week following in "The Only Way," the cast will be seen at its strongest.

* *

The ladies are having all the best of it at the Orpheum this week—Eita Butler's imitations, Lillian Burkhart's acting and Jessie Padgham's singing are more than worth the price of admission. Of the others, Mazie Kings toe work is nothing short of marvelous and the young dancer has made herself very popular. Williamson and Stone in gag and step are a good team while Gilbert and Goldie always were and always will be as rollicking jolly a pair as ever walked the Orpheum boards.

* *

Mr. and Mrs. John Mason head the new Orpheum bill in "A Loving Legacy," a clever little legitimate comedy. Mason has been leading comedian of Frohman's Daly forces for some time; Mrs. Mason is better known as Katherine Grey and was the first Roxine in Mansfield's production of "Cyrano de Bergerac." This is their first appearance in vaudeville.

* *

"Wang" is filling in at the Tivoli pending the opening of the Grand Opera season, which promises to have merit beyond the ordinary this year. Avedano and Salassa, who electrified San Francisco last year, are re-engaged, and the company is filled out with several old favorites and some new people who come highly recommended from Europe. This year, as last "Aida" is the opening bill.

* *

The second series of the Burton Holmes lectures are being given Thursday afternoon and Sunday night of this week. "Japan Revisted" is the theme. "Round About Paris" is the subject for Thursday and Sunday of next week.

MOORE' POISON OAK REMEDY
Cures Poison Oak and All Skin Diseases. Sold by All Druggists.

The All-star Specialty Company at the California presented "At Gay Coney Island" this week with the usual success and to the usual good houses.

* *

Following the run of "The Country Girl," the Alcazar company will present Shakespere's "Romeo and Juliet."

* *

"The Great Ruby" continues to draw at the Grand Opera House. It seems to be in for a sun.

BUYERS' GUIDE

SAN FRANCISCO.
RELIABLE BUSINESS HOUSES.
City or Country Orders promptly filled. Catalogues and Price Lists sent on application. Correspondence solicited.
Mention The Wave.

ATTORNEYS AT LAW.

MILTON J. GREEN, Attorney at Law. Referee in Bankruptcy in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Office room 94, Chronicle bldg.

A. K. DAGGETT, Drawing of deeds and all legal papers a specialty. Notary Public, 14 Montgomery St., S. F. Telephone, 3 5.

DENTIST.

DR C. W. DECKER, Dentist, 806 Market Street, Phelan Building.

HOMŒOPATHIC REMEDIES

WESTERN HOMŒOPATHIC PHARMACY—139 Powell St. S. F. W.W. Stocker. Tel. Bush 23.

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.

ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU, Main Office 510 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Dealers in all kinds of Newspaper Information. Advance Reports on all Contract Work. Phone Main 1042.

RESTAURANT.

POODLE DOG RESTAURANT, northeast corner of Eddy and Mason streets. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone main 429. Blanco & Brun, Proprietors.

PRETTY WORK
NICE PRESS COPIES

Use Smith Type-Writer

The telegraph department of the Southern Pacific Co. dispensed with all other makes and now use the SMITH PREMIER EXCLUSIVELY.
Also more than 200 banks use the
SMITH PREMIER Type-Writer
We Rent New Typewriters
Art Catalogue
L. & M. ALEXANDER & CO.
110 Montgomery St., S. F.
Branches: Portland, Seattle, Los Angeles.

HAVE YOU EVER THOUGHT
WHAT A GAS RANGE WILL DO?

It will do everything any other cooking apparatus will do, but it will do it BETTER QUICKER, EASIER and CHEAPER!

IT WILL DO AWAY WITH

Dirt, Worry and Ashes
Your Kitchen will be Clean,
Your working hours shorter.
Your Food will be better Cooked,
Your Life Prolonged, and
Your Happiness assured.

STOVE DEPARTMENT,
415 POST ST., SAN FRANCISCO.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES in and for the Northern District of California
IN THE MATTER OF CHARLES MONTGOMERY, Bankrupt.
Take notice that, Charles Montgomery, Bankrupt, above named has been duly adjudicated bankrupt under the Act of Congress of July 1, 1898, and that the first meeting of the creditors has been called to meet at the office of the undersigned at room 94, Chronicle building, San Francisco, California, on Monday, the 6th day of August, 1900, at the hour of 11 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of proving their claims against the estate of said bankrupt; and that at the same time and place all creditors whose claims have been duly proven and allowed shall appoint one or three trustees of said estate.
Dated San Francisco, July 24th, 1900.
MILTON J. Green,
Referee in Bankruptcy,
In and for the City and County of San Francisco.

HOTEL VENDOME.

At San Jose is one of Central California's most beautiful hostelries. In the midst of its own twelve-acre park; two blocks from the railroad station where almost hourly trains connect with the outside; the starting point for Lick Observatory; the center of a greater number and variety of attractions than any other place on the Coast; furnished finely, graded and watered roads for driving and cycling lead in every direction; with over 250 elegantly furnished rooms, and suites with bath and toilet; perfect in appointment, service and all the accessories of comfort, and one of the most attractive features of San Jose, the metropolis of the world renowned Santa Clara Valley.

GEO P. SNELL,
Manager

LAKE COUNTY.

New 19-passenger Yosemite Stages, all outside seats, direct to the most picturesque portion of California. Best equipped stage line in the state. Leaves Calistoga daily (Sunday excepted) at 11:30 a. m., direct to Harbin, Seigler, Adams, Howard, Anderson, Astorgo, and Glenbrook; half an hour for lunch at Calistoga; also to Middletown, Lower Lake, Kelseyville and Lakeport. Wm. Spiers, Proprietor.
Calistoga, Cal.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.—MEXICAN GOLD and Silver Mining Company. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Storey County, Nevada.
Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the tenth day of July 1900, an assessment [No. 64] of fifteen [15] cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, Room 79, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.
Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the fourteenth day of August 1900, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Wednesday the 5th day of September 1900 to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale.
By order of the Board of Directors.
CHAS. E. ELLIOT, Secretary.
Office—Room 79, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.—Sierra Nevada Silver Mining Company.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, Cal. Location of works Virginia Mining District, Storey County, Nevada.
Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 9th day of July, 190 ,an assessment (No. 19) of Fifteen (15) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room No 14, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street San Francisco, Cal.
Any stock upon which this assessment shal, remain unpaid on the 14th day of Aug., 1900, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on MONDAY, the 3rd day of Sept, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the cost of advertisng and expenses of sale.
By order of the Board of Directors.
R. L. PARKER, Secretary
Office: Room No. 14, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

IF YOU WANT THE
BEST COAL OIL.
BUY

Brushes for barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bath-houses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.
BUCHANAN BROS., Brush Mfrs.
TEL. 5810 609 SACRAMENTO STREET

A GLOWING HIGHWAY TO HAPPINESS
.....IS THE ROAD THAT LEADS TO DEL MONTE

Added to the many pleasures afforded by its enchanting surroundings are FINE GOLF LINKS

✠ THIS SEASON'S ✠

HOMES OF PLEASURE

THE PEERLESS CALIFORNIA RESORT

SantaFeRoute

OVERLAND EXPRESS

Every day in the year. Pullman Palace and Upholstered Tourist Cars leave for Denver, Kansas City, Chicago and the East. Take Market Street Ferry at 9:00 a. m.

Personally Conducted Tourist Excursions leave three times each week in Pullman Vestibuled Tourist Cars and are exceedingly popular with the traveling public. The principal cities of the East are reached by them and the service in all that counts for comfort and convenience is almost equal to the Palace cars. The cars are finished in mahogany, lightened with Pintsch gas and a Porter is in charge to attend to the wants of passengers. Plenty of clean linen is provided and the beds are very comfortable. A handsome folder, describing this service in detail, may be had for the asking at the Company's Office. 641 Market St.

VALLEY ROAD

Between Stockton, Fresno, Hanford, Visalia Tulare and Bakersfield, furnishes a good local train service.

SAN FRANCISCO TICKET OFFICE,
628 Market Street. Telephone Main 1531

The O. R. & N. Co.

DISPATCH FAST STEAMERS

TO PORTLAND

From Spear-St. Wharf at 10 a.m.

FARE $12 First Class, $8 Second Class } Including Berth and Meals

State of California sails June 2, 12, 22; July 2.
Columbia sails June 7, 17, 27; July 7.

Short Line to Walla Walla, Spokane, Butte, Helena and all points in the Northwest.
Through tickets to all points East.

E. C. WARD, General Agent, 630 Market St.
GOODALL, PERKINS & CO., Superintendents.

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. Alameda for Aurtralia Wednesday Aug. 8, at 8 p.m.

S. S. Australia, for Honolulu only, Wednesday, Aug. 22 at 2 p.m.

Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.
J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf San Francisco.

For Alaskan ports, 11 a. m. July 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, August 4, change to company's steamers at Seattle.

For B. C. and Puget Sound ports 11 a.m. July 5, 10, 15 20, 25 30, Aug. 4, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, 2 p. m. July 2, 7, 12, 17, 22, 27, Aug 1, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Newport (Los Angeles) and Way Ports, 9 a. m. July 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 2630, Aug. 3, and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Harford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, and Redondo (Los Angeles), 11 a.m. July 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28, Aug. 1, and every fourth day thereafter.

For Mexican ports, 10 a. m. seventh of each month.

For further information, obtain Company's folder.

The company reserves the right to change steamers sailing dates, and hours of sailing without previous notice.

Ticket Office: 4 New Montgomery St (Palace Hotel)
GOODALL, PERKINS & CO., Gen. Agts.
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

NOTICE OF ASSESSMENT—ANDES SILVER MINING COMPANY.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California Location of works, Virginia City, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 13th day of June 1900, an assessment (No. 51) of five (5) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary at the office of the Company, Room No. 22 Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery street San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 6th day of August, 1900, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Monday, the 27th day of August, 1900, at 1 p. m. o'clock, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.
JOHN W. TWIGGS, Secretary.
Office—Room No. 22 Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

CALIFORNIA BOOKS

A Handsome Series of New and Useful Publications

The Southern Pacific Company has published for free distribution the following books and folders which may be obtained from any Southern Pacific agent, or T. H. Goodman, general passenger agent at San Francisco. If you apply by mail inclose a stamp for each publication.

Resorts and Attractions Along the Coast Line is a handsomely illustrated folder giving a description of the health and pleasure resorts of the coast between San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Shasta Resorts embelished with beautiful halftone engravings, describes the scenic and outing attractions of the vast and wonderful Shasta region, the grandest of pleasure grounds.

California South of Tehachapi tells all about the charms of that remarkably favored semi-trophic garden spot, Southern Pacific.

A Handsome Map of California, complete in detail, reliable, skillfully indexed, and full of information about the State's resources. It is the only publication of its kind conveniently folded for pocket use.

Summer Outings is a 32-page folder devoted to the camping retreats in the Shasta region and Santa Cruz mountains It appeals more directly to that large and growing class of recreation seekers who prefer this populor form of outing

Pacific Grove is the Chautauqua of the West, and this folder not only describes the pretty place itself, but gives a program of the religsous and educational meetings, conventions, schools etc., to be held there this summer.

Other publications are Lake Tahoe, Geysers and Lake County. Yosemite, Hotel del Monte, Castle Crags, each brimful of information about the places named, and printed in the highest style of the art.

Go and see

T. H. GOODMAN, Gen. Pass. Agt.

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention
A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED
Occidental Hotel
SAN FRANCISCO
WM. B. HOOPER, Manager.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers Medium, Soft and Hard
ALSO
Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide
Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks
Manufactured by Mount Vernon Co. Baltimore.
MURPHY, GRANT & CO Pacific Coast Sole Agents

BAJA CALIFORNIA
Damiana Bitters

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. Send for Circular.

NABER, ALPS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

TO CHICAGO

IN 3 DAYS

From San Francisco at 10 a. m.
Chicago Union Pacific
AND
Northwestern Line

Double Drawing-Room Sleeping Cars, Buffet Smoking and Library Cars, with barber. Dining Cars—meals a la carte. Daily Tourist Car Service and Personally Conducted Excursions every week from San Francisco at 6 p. m. The best of everything.

R. R. RITCHIE,
General Agent Pacific Coast
617 Market Street (Palace Hotel)
San Francisco, Cal.

Telephone Main 199.
Blake, Moffit & Towne
Dealers in PAPER
55, 57, 59, 61, First St., San Francisco.
Blake, Moffit & Towne, Los Angeles. Blake, McFall Co., Portland, Or.

ELECTRIC

SUPPLIES
CONSTRUCTION
REPAIRS

California Electrical Works
409 MARKET STREET

Sturtevant House
Broadway and 29th Sts., New York.
WILLIAM T. BANG, PROP.
American and European Plan.

Don't Borrow a Home!
BUY IT Your rent payments for the borrowed home will do it through the aid of the CONTINENTAL Building and Loan Ass'n of California
WM. CORBIN, Secretary and Gen. Manager.
Home Office, 222 Sansome St., San Francisco

Irving Institute Select Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies
2126 California Street, San Francisco
Next season will begin August 6th. Accredited to the Universities. Seminary and Full Conservatory of Music. Primary Department for Children. Carriage will call. For futher information, address he principal. REV. EDWARD B. CHURCH, A. M.

Alfred Cane, Luther A. Teague
Frederick Teague.
Teague, Cane & Teague
DENTISTS.
Claus Spreckels Bldg. Third and Market Sts
hone Main 1459. Sixth Floor, S.F., Cal

Thuringia Insurance Co.
OF ERFURT, GERMANY
Capital, $2,250,000 Assets, $10,984,248
PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT
204-208 Sansome Street, San Francisco
VOSS, CONRAD & CO., General Managers

A. O. LINDSTROM AL. JOHNSON
Phone Main 5178
Sutter Street Hammam
TURKISH AND RUSSIAN BATHS
415 Sutter Street, between Stockton and Powell
Open Day and Night for Gentlemen
For Ladies, from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m.

New Stories Re-Told.

KNEW WHEN SHE'D HAD ENOUGH.—After a recent Hardshell Baptist camp-meeting in Sillville, Ga., a batch of new converts were baptized in a convenient creek. The last one to go through the ceremony was an old colored woman who had driven to the place in a ricketty buggy drawn by a mule who must have gone through the civil war. On her way back, the mule grew refractory and overturned her at a ford, where she was found, hanging to a footlog and swearing vigorously, by the negro parson who had performed the ceremony. "Sister Ca'line," he said, "you hez done los' all de salvation what come ter you by de fust baptism; so you must stop right heah en be baptized over ergin." "No, suh!" was the reply, "I ain't gwine in dat water no mo! Didn't dat ol' mule baptize me de secon' time?"

EASY.—A young Roman Catholic priest, preaching on the miracle of the loaves and fishes, made a mistake in his text, announcing it:—"And they fed ten people with ten thousand fishes." "That's no miracle, I could do it myself," said an old Irishman, aloud. The next Sunday the curate used the same text, but got it right. "And they fed ten thousand people on ten loaves of bread and ten fishes," he said, then added, looking at his former interrupter, "could you do that, Mr. Murphy?" "Sure, I could," replied Murphy. "And how could you do it?" queried the priest, hoping to nonpluss him. "Sure, yer Riverence," he answered, "I could do it with what was left over from last Sunday."

WHY BRYAN HOLDS HIS FAITH.—Two ministers, a Baptist and a Methodist, met at the Kansas City Convention and fell to joking. Said the Baptist preacher to the Methodist: "I suppose you know that Bryan has turned Baptist?" "No," gasped the Methodist preacher, "that can't be." "Nevertheless, that's true," said the Baptist. "Oh, no," said the Methodist preacher, recovering himself, "no, that can't be true. Why to be a Baptist, you have got to be totally immersed, haven't you?" "Certainly," said the Baptist. "Well, then, it can't be true," said the Methodist, "do you suppose that Mr. Bryan would consent to disappear from the popular view so long as that?"

COULDN'T SAY AS TO THE OTHER.—A certain doctor, when only a beginner in practice, had occasion to attend a trial as a witness. The opposing counsel, in cross-examining the young doctor, made several sarcastic remarks, doubting the ability of so young a man to understand the profession. "Do you know the symptoms of concussion of the brain?" "I do," replied the doctor. "Well," continued the attorney, "suppose my learned friend, Mr. Baging, and myself were to bang our heads together, should we get concussion of the brain?" "Your learned friend, Mr. Baging, might," was the reply.

SELF SACRIFICE.—An Irish landlord was taking his departure for London, in command of an Irish regiment. On the quay were gathered many of his tenants. "For heaven's sake, yer honor," said one of these men, accosting him with great earnestness, "don't go and be massacread by the Boers!" "But I am not going to South Africa," the Colonel explained, "only to England. Besides if I were going to be shot I'd give the preference to my own tenants." "Sure, and that shows a rale friendly feeling between us!" said the delighted tenant, gripping htm by the hand.

TOO FAR FOR THE CALEDONIAN.—A porter on the Caledonian Railway went to Edinburgh to get married. Before his departure to the latter place he secured a pass from the head of his department. On his return he found a new ticket-collector on duty, and, when asked for his pass or ticket, he produced by mistake his marriage certificate. The strange collector glanced through it, and then said gravely, "Eh, eh, mon! Ye have got a ticket for a long journey, but no one on the Caledonian Railway."

PALACE HOTEL
The high standard of excellence maintained by this hotel is recognized and appreciated by a fastidious and discriminating clientele who regularly make it their headquarters when visiting San Francisco.
The GRAND HOTEL is operated in conjunction with the Palace to which it is joined by a covered passageway, placing under one management 1400 rooms, more than half of which have baths attached.
AMERICAN PLAN. EUROPEAN PLAN.

Famous FOR ITS Purity!

Seattle U. S. A.

WHEN LEAVING THE CITY PLACE YOUR VALUABLES IN THE Safe Deposit Vaults
OF THE
First National Bank
N. W. Corner Bush and Sansome Sts.
Office Hours: 8 a. m. to 6 p m.
EVERY POSSIBLE SAFEGUARD TO PROPERTY
REASONABLE RATES
PROMPT ATTENTION

REPSOLD
REGISTERED BRAND
SELECT VINTAGE
Select Vinta Wines
For Your Home Dinner
This brand of wine is served at all first class clubs, hotels and restaurants
A. REPSOLD & CO. Office, 416 Pine Street

THE
White Pass and Yukon Route
The Pacific & Arctic Railway and Navigation Co.
British Columbia Yukon Railway Co., British Yukon M, T. & T. Co.
and Canadian Development Company, Ltd.
THROUGH LINE TO DAWSON.
Two first-class trains daily between Skaguay and Bennett, B. C. Ten first-class steamers operating between White Horse and Dawson. Through Telegraph Service Skaguay to Dawson and Intermediate Points.
SKAGUAY IS THE GATEWAY
—TO—
KLONDIKE AND CAPE NOME GOLD FIELDS.
FOR RATES AND PARTICULARS APPLY TO
S. M. IRWIN, Traffic Manager, Skaguay, Alaska, and Seattle, Wash
Phone Main 574
S. P. BROWN General Agent 116 Yesler Way, Seattle Wash

W. C. ACHI & CO.
Real Estate Brokers
We will buy or sell real estate in any part of the group. We will also buy or sell Stocks in any corporation in the Hawaiian Islands.
Office, 10 West King Street, Honolulu, H. I.

a Perfect Complexion
Strawberry Cold Cream
Mede from the pure fruit juice at
GREENBAUM'S
200 POST STREET Corner Grant Ave.
Sent anywhere on receipt of 25 cents.

From Admiral George Dewey:
Mr. George Mayerle, German Expert Optician, 1071½ Market street, San Francisco: Dear Sir—I am still using with much satisfaction the glasses you sent me at Manila; also, the new ones suit my eyes perfectly.
Very truly yours,
George Dewey.

A GRADUATE
George Mayerle
German Expert Optician
Consultation, Examination and advice free.

OPTICIAN HONORED
1071½ Market St.
near Seventh
Telephone Mint 257
German Eye Wate 50 cents.

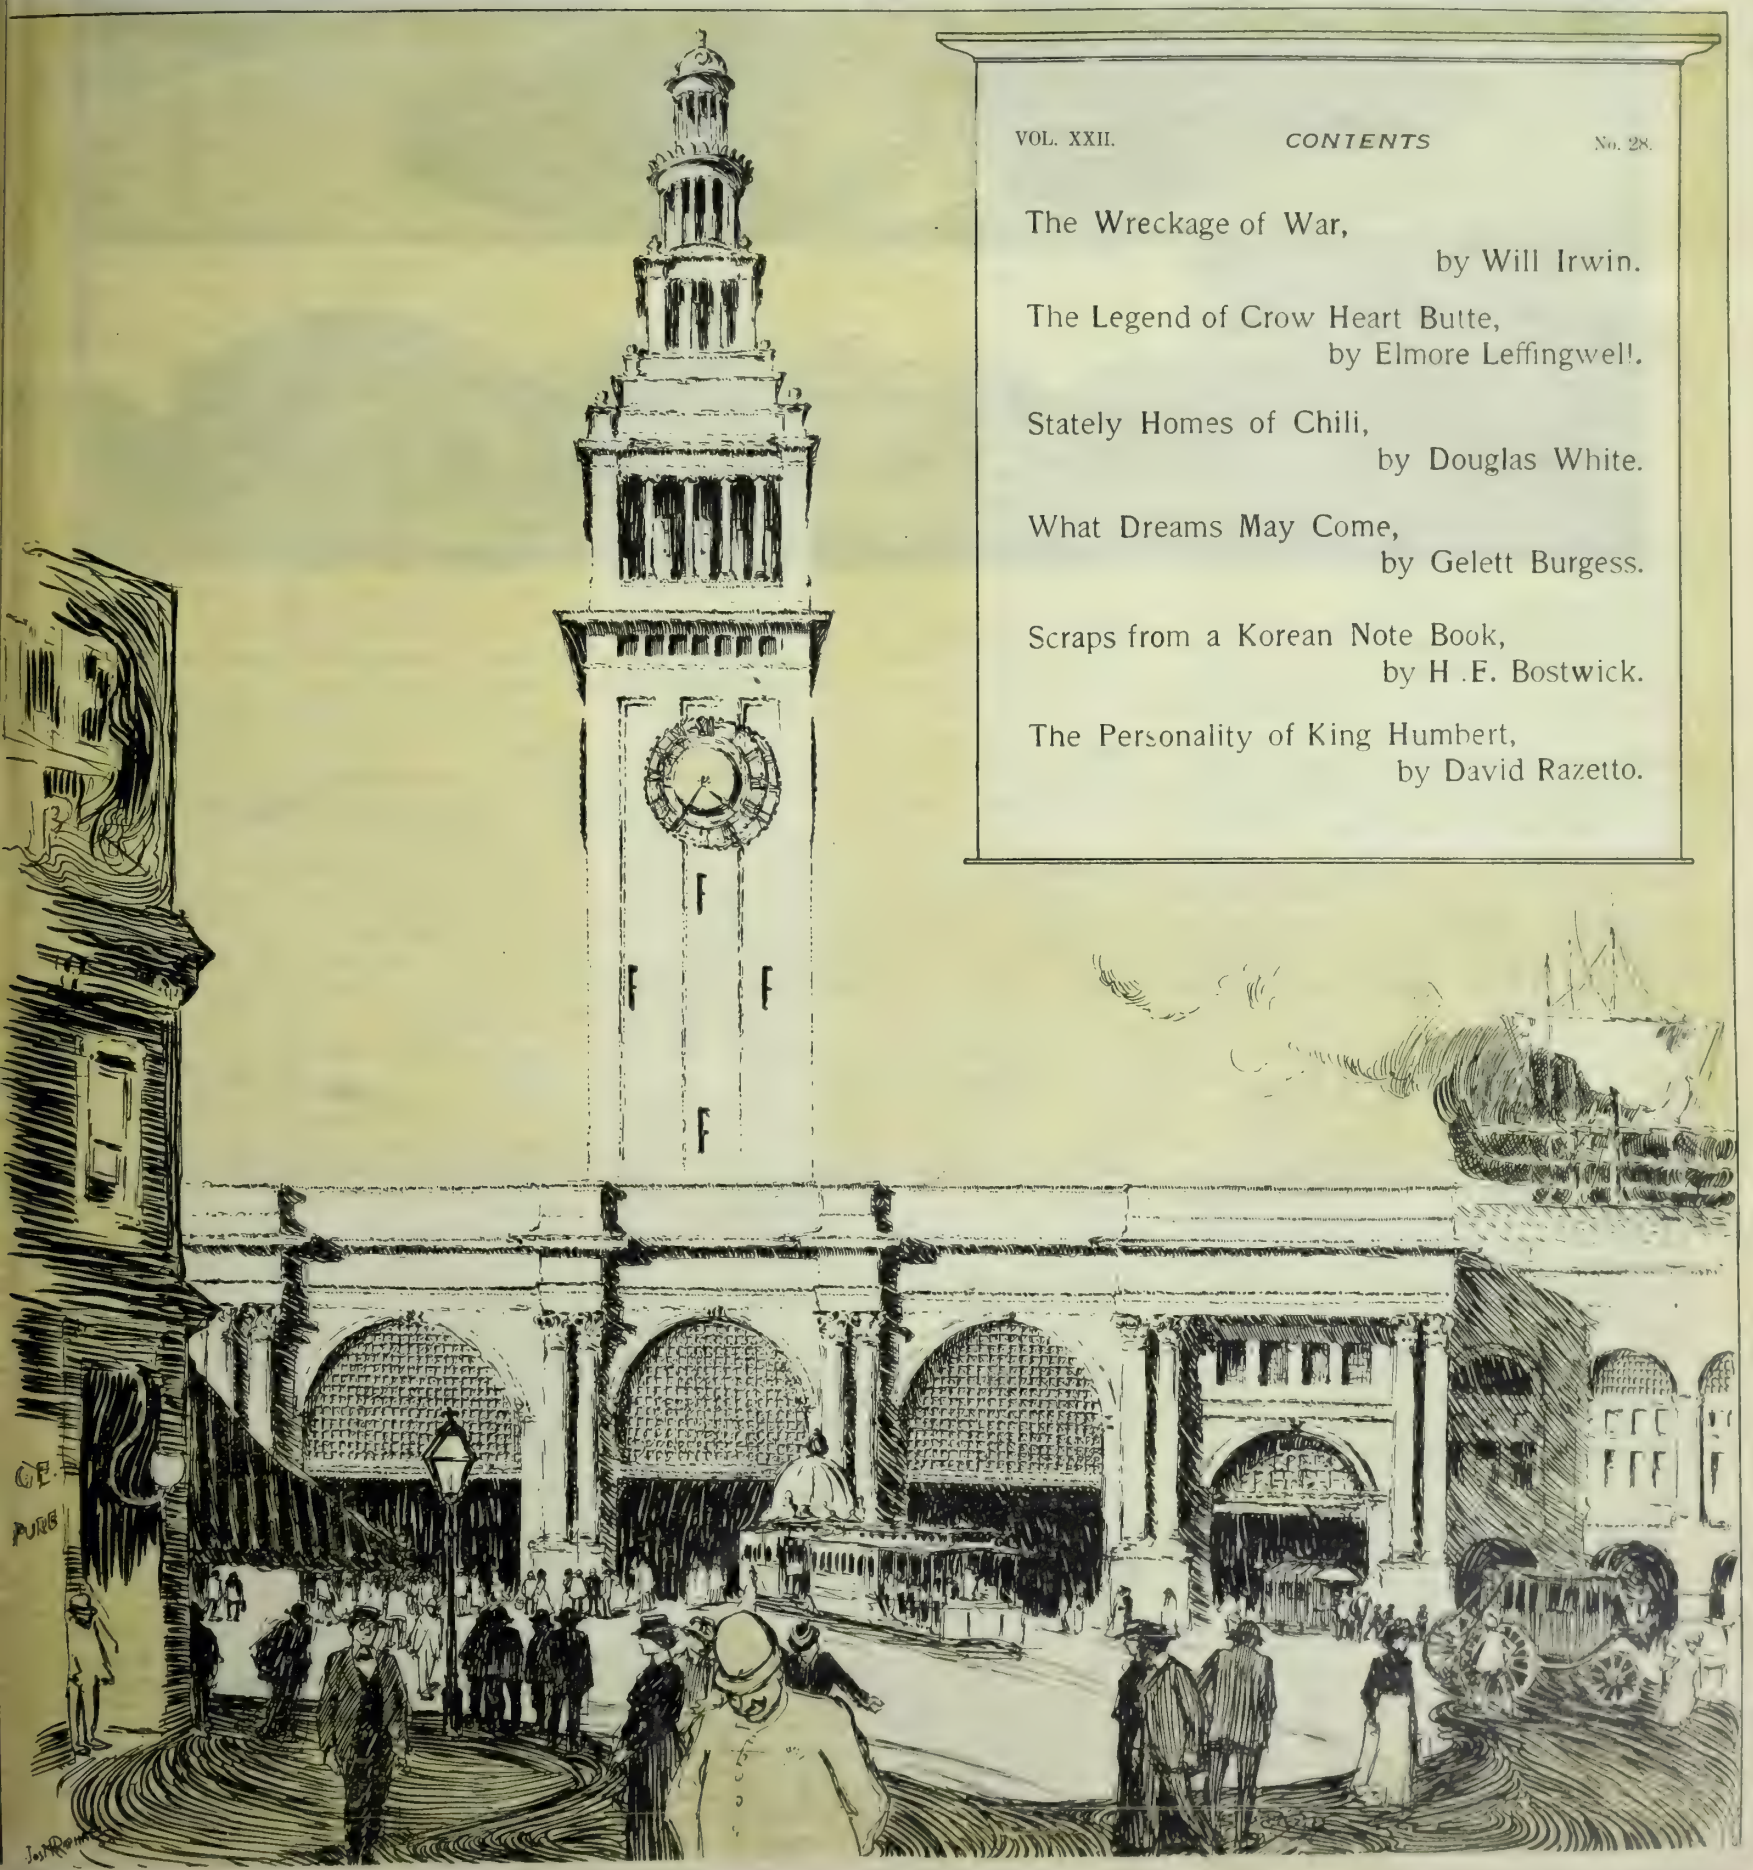
From General Wm. R. Shafter:
Mr. George Mayerle, San Francisco
Dear Sir—The glasses made by you received yesterday. I have never been better fitted than with this pair.
Very truly yours,
Wm. R. Shafter,
Major-General U. S. V.

Reduced To 5 Cents A Copy.

SATURDAY WAVE

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY
This Paper may be taken from the Library.

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY
AND JOURNAL OF EVENTS CURRENT.



VOL. XXII. CONTENTS No. 28.

The Wreckage of War,
by Will Irwin.

The Legend of Crow Heart Butte,
by Elmore Leffingwell.

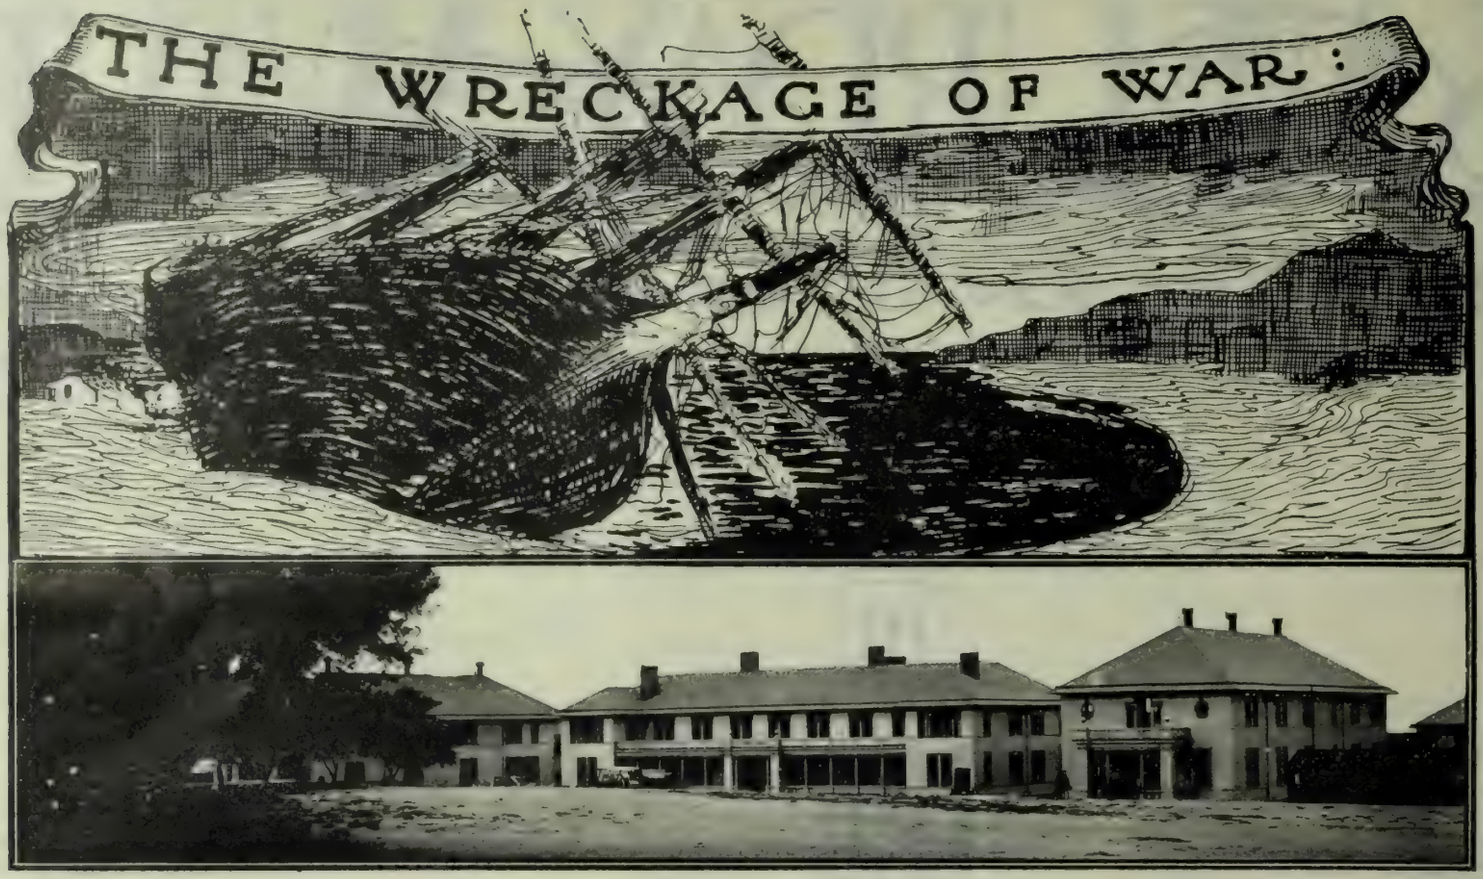
Stately Homes of Chili,
by Douglas White.

What Dreams May Come,
by Gelett Burgess.

Scraps from a Korean Note Book,
by H .F. Bostwick.

The Personality of King Humbert,
by David Razetto.

THE WRECKAGE OF WAR:



The Remembrance of San Francisco.

GOD forgive us, we are a people of short memory. We have forgotten the war.

Two years ago, we were full of the glory and flash and glitter of our new military clothes. The war authorities were grumbling because the city was spoiling the soldiers with kindness. No soldier, officer or private, volunteer or regular, went away without a bunch of flowers on his hat and a half a dozen women to coddle him and give him Godspeed. It was new, it was a sensation, it appealed to the emotions. At the sound of a band on Market street on the sailing days of the transports, the most staid and sober business man rushed out of his office to cheer along the curb-stones. And when the first transports came back with the wreckage of the war, there was nothing in the way of Red Cross lunches and free drinks and hospitality which the city did not do for the returning soldiers. I remember how hard it used to be, even for a newspaperman, to obtain a general permit to visit the wards, so great was the desire of the feminine portion of San Francisco to pet the sick and wounded. "I can't have the whole of San Francisco disturbing my patients," the surgeon-general used to say.

A year has gone by since that historic summer; we are still fighting, and the transports are still unloading a burden of sick and wounded every two weeks, but few, very few, take the trouble to remember it. Twice within a fortnight, consignments of troops have left the port for a war beside which, in its possibility of slaughter, the Spanish war is as a dress-parade, but there was no cheering, no booming Call cannon, no Red Cross luncheons. It is not hard to get into the Presidio Hospital now; the authorities rather welcome visitors. Only a few devoted women whose philanthrophy is deeper than patriotic thrill and a few people who have friends in the wards have remembered that men are dying here in San Francisco, for the country and for the love of brave adventure, with a death a worldless merciful than the swift death of battle. Good-natured, mercurial, short-minded San Francisco has let her mercy pass with her emotion.

They were holding a military funeral on the day of my visit to the Hospital. Nine bodies, some brought from the hospitals of Manila, some a part of the daily harvest of the wards, were buried in the Presidio tract above the bay. Perhaps someone will recall the pomp and parade, the flowers and mourners that marked the burial of the meanest private who died in Camp Merritt during the war fever period. This funeral was different. There was a band, a bugle blowing "taps," a volley over the graves, "as required in the regulations"—but nothing more. No flowers, no service; everything done in a hurry and in a business-like way by men who have grown used to death in these two years. Nine friendless privates gone to lie with the Kings and princes of the earth, and laid away with alien hands because there was no one of their own to know or to care. Yet if the men of '98 were heroes, as we were fond of calling them, these, who have done and suffered and given all, were doubly heroes. They cannot know—only the hopeless sick, waiting patient-eyed in the wards for the inevitable end—they heard the music and the rolling caissons, and knew what it meant for them.

* * *

In the Wards.

The one general characteristic of the four hundred odd men in the Presidio Hospital, outside of a readiness to talk about their individual complaints, is the refinement which suffering has brought into their features and their manners. Whatever else may be said of the American soldier, regular or volunteer, refinement is not generally his chief characteristic. Speak to one of these thin, bloodless sufferers, with a face all eyes and pathos, and he is more than likely to answer in a Bowery accent and with the blood-curdling oaths engrafted on his vocabulary in the days when he had the full, coarse vigor of his body; but in repose they seem all that the most sentimental feminine visitor could paint them. The body is the grosser part of man; when this is wasted and nearly gone, the soul has its chance.

This generality is true of the men for whom there is hope, but there is another class—the company of the doomed. Worn to a shred, their hands like those of an anæmic woman, save for the thick knuckles which tell of muscles once big and brawny, their lips drawn back from the teeth, their closed eyes mere holes in the skull, they lie still, never moving, never speaking, only a dimming spark of life in a burned-out shell. There is one man in the consumptive ward—or was, because he must be gone before this is read—to look at whom took all the pity I could muster. He resembled nothing so much as the pictures one sees of India famine victims. The whole skeleton showed through his bloodless skin; he might have been dead already except for the faint suspicion of a breath now and then. He could not have been suffering, for the merciful anathæsia of approaching death was upon him, and the capacity for suffering was dead with the greater part of his body. But the agony which must have gone before—it was a stern footnote to the pages of our annals of war.

* * *

Why he Doesn't Get Well.

More things get into the Presidio Hospital, I find, and into the systems of the patients, than are ever mentioned in the regulations.

This one was of the complaining sort which makes the most trouble, I fancy, for the government's housekeepers. Nothing suited him. He didn't like the "female"—by which name the army calls the trained nurses—he didn't like the ward surgeon, the name of the surgeon-general was anathema to him. But the head and front of his hatred was the diet.

"I could git well if they ever gave me any medicine or any solid grub. All they give you here is their durned diet. Diet, Hell! If you don't git any solid grub, how kin you git strong? If they ain't any medicine goes into your stummick how kin you git well inside? I've had milk till I feel like a cow an' enough soup to float the Hancock. Don't you give me away if I show you somethin'?"

I promised secrecy. Taking a surreptitious glance at the female," he drew a yellow circular from the bed-clothes and unfolded it.

"This piece is about some stuff that did a lot for a bunkie of mine. 'Seaman's Stomatic Tablets.' He's out now, and he's going to sneak some in. If I can only git that and some more solid grub——"

A flash of blue and white shot in between us; the watchful "female" was down on him.

"What have you got there? Some more patent medicine circulars? Give it to me."

"If I don't git any medicine"—he began, with weak defiance.

"Give it here."

He handed it over.

"What's that under your pillow?"

"Nothin'."

She raised his head, reached under the pillow, and brought out a pink bag of peppermint drops.

"Some of the convalescents have been up to their tricks again," she said, with the air of one chiding a naughty child.

"What else have you got about you?"

"Nothin'."

Deftly and quickly she ran through the clothes, bottles, and boxes in the stand beside him. Under a fatigue cap, hidden below his regulation woolen wrapper, were six Frankfurter sausages in a brown paper. Two Bartlett pears were wrapped up in an old pair of pajamas. She rolled these contraband supplies in her apron.

"Anything else?"

"No'm"—resignedly.

"I've a great mind to report you."

"Yes'm.

She hurried away carrying her loot, and he lay watching with the patience of despair in his sick eyes until she vanished through the door.

"Well, I'm glad I et that mince pie before the female caught me," he said.

* * *

Where Bravado Failed.

There had just been two operations in the surgical ward. The subjects were lying quiet behind white cloth screens; a third was in his cot just beyond them, a rosy-cheeked German-looking boy, who could not have been over nineteen and who did not seem to be particularly ill.

"You look as though there wasn't much the matter with you!"

"Naw, I'm all right now. They're going to rip me open again to-morrow. Want to see the operating-room?"

"You'd better stay in bed, hadn't you!"

"Aw, I'm all right. Just resting up. Wait till the female gets outside."

The nurse slipped through the door, and the patient got into his wrapper and his slippers.

"They cut me up once before. Didn't work right, and when I told the old man"—this, I suppose, referred to Surgeon-General Girard—"that I didn't want 'em to try it again, he said he'd keep me in bed for six months if I didn't let 'em."

"Hurt?"

"Naw, but it's risky." We were in the operating-room by this time. He wandered easily from one instrument of torture to another, explaining with the certainty of one who has been there how each appliance works. "This here is the place where they lay you out. They use these surcingles when you kick. That's the muzzle where they pour in the chloroform. Want to see it work?" He slipped it on, threw his head back and illustrated the motion. "There's the knives in them cases. There's the hooks they used on me."

I had been waiting, while this extraordinary prisoner of fate showed the workings of his gallows, to see the point where his bravado would break down; I had expected that it would come when he faced the knife which was to do the work. But no, he never flinched as he pointed out one glittering blade and another and held forth on its uses in the most matter-of-fact way.

"Want to see the hole?" He slipped his pajamas open and displayed an angry red scar down his abdomen.

"The old man says that it was just about the hardest job—cheese it, here comes the female!" we sneaked through one door as she entered by the other, and fled guiltily down the ward. He crawled into bed and tried to look innocent, like a cat who has been in the cream. The nurse, on her way back, glanced at us with a glance of accusation, but said nothing.

An old man in clericals was seated at the next bed but one.

"That's a Catholic priest," said the boy when the nurse was out of the way. "He runs the Gospel joint here. He comes and talks to the boys. He says he prays for them twice a day. Came to see me the other day. Didn't like it when I said I was a Protestant, but he said he'd pray for me just the same."

A pause, while he pretended to study the landscape outside. Then, more slowly.

"Well, I may need it to-morrow."

There is a vulnerable joint in every armor.

* * *

Two Surgical Cases

There are two cases in the surgical ward which are of exceptional interest to the layman, however they may be regarded by the expert on surgery. One is a trooper of the Eleventh Cavalry who was shot clean through the brain, losing part of the gray matter, who is yet both alive and sane. It occurred on January 21, in the same chase after Aguinaldo in which Lawton lost his life. The man was shot from a tree and dropped from his horse. "It felt just like someone had hit me hard with a rock. I fell off and then tried to crawl up to my horse to get my gun, but couldn't make it. The surgeon came along and began to take care of the other men. He left me alone because he thought I was sure to die. When he got to me I asked him if I would live and he said, 'There's no hope.' He wanted to give me something to kill me easy, but the Colonel wouldn't let him. I was conscious for an hour and then the next I knew it was the seventh of February. I was crazy for three months after that, and when I came to both legs were paralyzed. The doctor says it was my grit pulled me through"—this with a glow of pride.

He is going to Washington in a few weeks to have his skull trepanned for the splinters which are pressing on his brain and keeping his legs useless, after which he has every chance of recovery.

Incidentally this trooper has a theory about Aguinaldo that is shared by most of the other men who participated in Lawton's chase. He believes that the slippery insurgent is right in Manila, being concealed by his followers. "All Filipinos look alike; I've followed twenty that looked like Aggie's pictures."

The other is a Pennsylvanian and shows in speech and manner, even before he tells you, that he is an old railroad man. He has two bullet-wounds in the right leg, one of which went a devious course and splintered the hip bone, and another in the arm. The left leg has been impaled by a spear, which was struck down through the thigh and came out in the calf. A sunken scar at least a foot in length marks the two points. It is a terrible wound in appearance, but the shattered hip is the thing that will put him on the permanently disabled pension-list. It occurred down in Mindanao, when over a thousand natives rushed thirteen Americans and killed or wounded all of them before a company of volunteers effected a rescue. This man was shot three times in as many seconds; then an insurgent with a shovel-shaped spear rushed him and struck the weapon down into his leg as he knelt on one knee.

"The shooting didn't hurt at all. It was just as though you should hit me on the leg with your flat hand. Only a slap, but I fell over. Then the nigger stuck the spear into me. That didn't hurt so much either, until they pulled it out."

"What happened to the man with the spear?"

"We didn't do a thing to him!"

"You yourself?"

"No, my bayonet was busted. My first sargant 'tended to him."

A large splinter has been taken from the wounded hip-bone.

"They sent it to Washington. I'm going to see it when I go to the Incurable Hospital there. Say, it's as fine a piece of bone as I ever saw!"

* * *

Despair and Hope.

It does not require the skill of a physician to tell a consumption case. There was one in the first ward, a regular, sitting huddled up near the stove. The afternoon fever was on him, and his cheeks were red with a mockery of health.

"What seems to be the matter?" I said. This is the conventional way of addressing one's self to a patient.

"Consumption."

"Doing well?"

"No. There ain't no hope."

Nevertheless, when I began to tell of cases which had seemed hopeless and had recovered in the air of Colorado or Arizona, he appeared to take an interest and asked eagerly for details. He had relatives in New Mexico, he said, and if he could only get his discharge he might go down to see them. They were thinking of going to Mexico next year—

Here he was taken with a fit of coughing. When he had his voice again, he said:—

"But they won't be no next year."

A little further down, there was another man, evidently a New England Yankee, lying on his back gazing at the white mosquito-net above him. He, too, bore the mark of his race's most potent enemy.

"Just generally run down," he said in a whisper, in answer to my inquiry.

"Nothing special?"

"No, run down. All I need's a rest and a little feeding."

A Red Cross man was standing two cots down as I passed on.

"What's wrong with your man in cot 5?" I asked.

"Tuberculosis. Plain Con."

We had spoken too loud. "You're a liar!" said cot 5. "Just run down."

* * *

Finis.

When they die out there, it is in the wards, with a movable screen set between them and others who may follow. It had been ten years since I saw anyone die, and I would have thought, before that visit, that it would be the last thing which I would linger to see. But in every ward there had been some so close to the line, so marked with the imprint of death, that the natural shrinking of my flesh from the visible marks of dissolution was somewhat allayed before I came to a ward where one was just reaching the end.

He was not of that old faith which carries its ministrations to the last moment, and only the surgeon and the nurse were there. The convalescents who generally hang around the wards had gone outside; the bedridden men were lying quiet. He was unconscious to the end, and, except that I had been told, I would not have known the moment when the spark went out. Just one full breath, a little loosening of the muscles of the face, a sort of release of tension; the nurse reached over very gently and laid his hands across his breast; the surgeon tiptoed away; it was over. No passage in his entire life had been more quiet and commonplace.

Three cots down, lay another, apparently near to his own death. He questioned me with his eyes as I slipped away from the screen, and I answered "yes" with mine. There was no change in his expression. He only turned his head a little toward the window and the wide expanse of the bay, where a great ship under sail was gliding from the harbor into the Pacific. Did he, with his own soul straining at its moorings, think how the one represented the other? I think not. The merciful numbness was already on him. Only I, alone in the flush of my youth, with the dead and dying, thought of the vessel that had hoisted sail and passed into the Peaceful Ocean of the unnumbered souls.

WILL H. IRWIN.

The Road to Peking.

THE hardships of the route to Peking over which the allies must travel in the effort to relieve the legations is portrayed in a letter received from a naval officer, and describing a visit to Minister Conger early last December.

"We reached the terminus of the railroad at 4 P. M., to learn that our telegram of notification to Minister Conger evidently had not reached him, for there was no one present from the legation to meet us. In the ordinary course of events, when the Minister is expecting visitors, he sends his 'mafoo,' or outside head man, with cart or pony to convey them to the legation. As it was, we stepped onto the station platform into two or three inches of mud, and I struggled with a howling mob of Peking cart drivers, all bent on conveying us to the capitol. I engaged four carts, one for each of us and one for our 'boys' and our baggage. A Peking cart is a hut on heavy wooden wheels. This hut is wide enough for one passenger, and so low that the passenger, sitting on the floor with his legs extended, can just keep his body erect without thrusting his head into the hooded top. The cart is covered with blue cloth and completely inclosed save in front, so that a passenger has a view of nothing save the roadway as seen over the back of the mule that pulls him.

"I have seen what they are pleased to call roads in Africa, and have traveled many miles in Korea, but I never saw a worse piece of public highway than that which leads from the railway station to the capital of the Chinese Empire. There is but one track, and that worn into ruts always fully a foot deep, some sometimes six or eight inches deeper. If going in these ruts is bad, going across them is worse, and they must be crossed many times, in fact as often as one meets a cart coming in the other direction.

"As I had intimated to the driver that our party was royal and the pour boire would be princely in proportion to speed, all four of the Chinamen did their best to make haste. My man worked his arms like a jumping-jack, and yelled and beat his mule all the way without an instant's intermission to Peking.

"Half way to our destination we reached a gate in the city wall and entered the capital of China. Thence our journey took us over a paved way twenty-five feet wide. The pavement was made of great blocks three feet long by eighteen inches wide and perhaps eight inches thick. There is a Chinese proverb which says that such a road is good for ten years and deuced bad for 10,000 years. This particular road must be several thousand years old, for it is as bad as the proverb indicates. The edges of the stones have been worn away by much use, and between the stones are deep ruts. As the stones break joints, these ruts alternate with bits of stone somewhere near the original level of the street surface, so that progress is one of sudden and violent jolts. To make matters worse, every third or fourth stone is missing and in its place is a 'cling-hole' deep enough to wreck any vehicle save a springless Peking cart. On the day of our journey this highway was overspread with a smooth and deceptive surface of semi-liquid mud which concealed ruts and cling-holes. They were there all the same, however, and our wheels found them. So rough was the journey, indeed, that the Captain, who is a heavy man, was nearly done up when I helped to drag him out at the embassy.

"But once inside that comfortable abode a hearty American welcome, a hearth fire and sundry other warm and cheering things made amends for the discomforts of the journey. Our legation fronts on Legation street. The compound is inclosed by a high wall, which on one side is very near the city wall. Just across the street is the Russian Legation. All the houses within the compound are of one story with thatched roofs, plain without, but rich and luxurious within. The compound has clean gravelled walks in pleasing contrast with the muddy street outside.

"When the ladies of the legation go to the elaborate dinners, receptions and balls of the foreign official colony they must pass through the muddy, ill-smelling Chinese streets in sedan chairs or in the springless carts. Luckily some of the carts are high enough to enable the occupants to sit in an armchair. It is odd to see a woman in full dress thus enthroned passing from one brilliant social scene to another through the narrow, muddy streets of this most foreign of foreign capitals.

"When the people of the legation need exercise they take it in the compound or on the city wall. This wall is forty feet high, and rather more than forty feet wide at the top, with a rampart more than shoulder high on each side, and within and without a deep moat, that is little better than a muddy ditch. Once on the wall one escapes the discomforts of the city streets. There is no mud, and even the assorted evil smells that assail the nose at the street level are hardly noticeable. As one walks on the wall, one's eyes take in upon one side the picturesque variety of the huddled city and on the other the undulating country tretching about the capital outside the wall."

The Stately Homes of Chili.

Panquehue, the Estate of the Errazuriz Family.

IF there is one thing in which the Chileno excels, it is in the construction of comfortable and beautiful residences. When their purses permit, they are a people who go in for all the creature comfort. There is, to be sure, a strong mixture of the gaudy and glittering in the type of decorations they favor, but this is to be expected from a race tracing its origin back to old Castile. The palaces of Santiago, then, should not be expected to be always correct or logical in their style of architecture. They are not even apt to be original, many being constructed in such a way as to clearly convict the designer of plagiarism from many sources. However, there are some very beautiful and pleasing exceptions.

Now and then an interior will present such a mingling of ancient and modern ornamentation as to offend the artistic eye, and the Chileno is often severely criticised by Anglo-Saxon observers for this system of conglomerate construction and decoration, but for my own part, I see in their oddly designed and sometimes extravagently adorned residences something that must give their owners satisfaction and comfort. And when they also give an artistic effect, pleasing to the foreigner as well, the "pesos" have certainly been well invested. They are all, of course, peculiarly arrranged to suit climatic conditions.

In one respect, however, the comfort-loving Chileno is not yet successful. This is in the matter of artificial heat. In houses now being constructed fire places are included, but among the older homes, there is no arrangement for protection against the chilly damp of the rainy season.

By far the best known Chilean Palace is the Cousino house, located on the Calle Diez Yocho at Santiago. This magnificent mansion was the property of the late Senora Cousino, by all odds the wealthiest woman in Chili if not in South America. Her properties were scattered throughout the Republic, the chief source of her wealth being the coal deposits and manufacturing plants at Lota, in the Province of Conception. This home of hers, built at the Capital, represented with its furnishings and art works an investment of nearly two million pesos, and during the Senora's life-time was looked upon as Santiago's show place, and was open to visitors on certain days. In this regard the Chilenos are very liberal, all of them being pleased to give the public an opportunity to admire the grandeur of their establishments. The Cousino house is still an asset of the vast estate, but most of the bric-a-brac and art works with which its salas were filled have passed out to alien owners through the medium of an administrator's sale.

Another residence in the suburbs of Santiago is rather freakish in some of its architectural effects. It was originally constructed by Claudio Vicuna, and intended as a pure example of Moorish architecture. Unfortunately its designer had too much fancy to be consistent and now and then got away from his subject. The patio, however, is correctly Moresque, and in spite of its peculiarities, it is a home wherein there is much Chileno comfort and luxury. During one of the late revolutions this mansion suffered so severely, that it was long regarded as a ruin. But one Julio Garrida purchased it, and has been at great pains and expense to restore its original eccentricities.

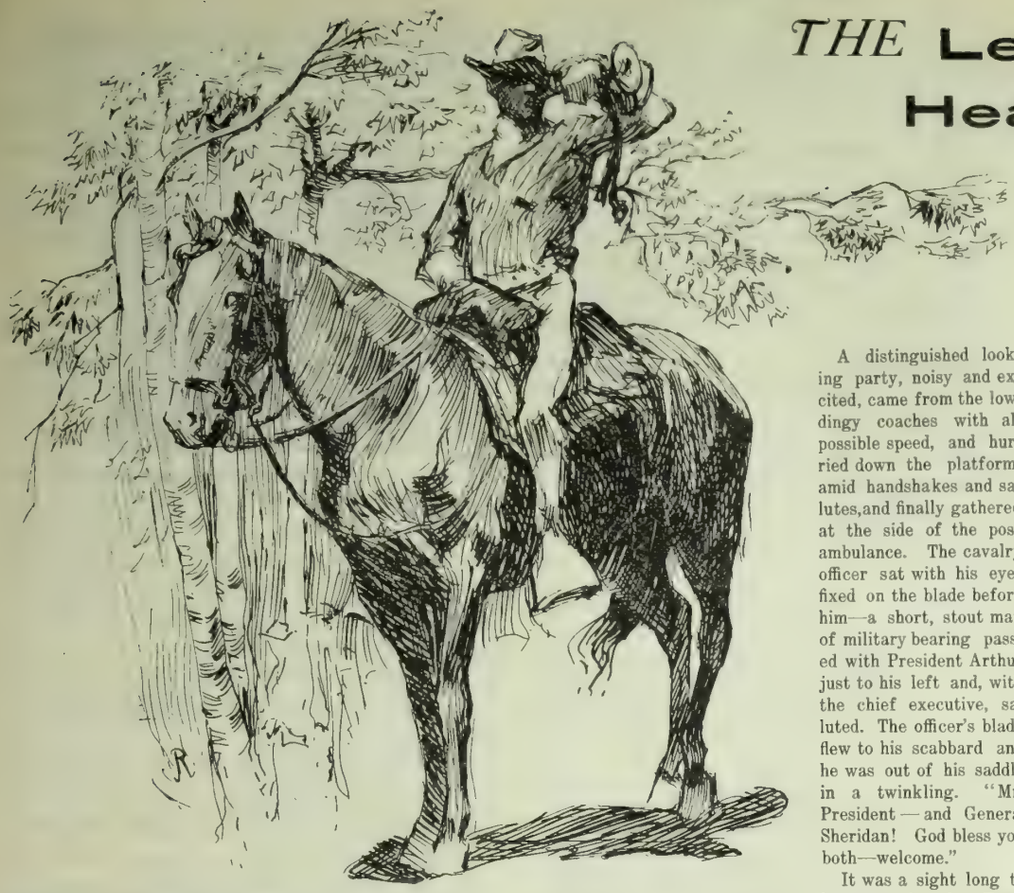
In quite a different key is the Palacio de la Moneda, the official resident of the President of the Republic. It is severe of outline, but correct and elegant. Indeed it would be a

Continued on page 15.

The Estate of La Hermida two Miles from Santiago.

THE Legend OF Crow Heart Butte.

By Elmore Leffingwell.



THE army ambulance from Fort Washakie, drawn by eight plodding mules toiled over the trail which skirted knolls and twisted through petty canyons into the town of Caspar, and drew up suddenly near the lone, ramshackle station, which alone suggested that the spot might have some indirect connection with civilization. Close behind, travelling at an easy gait was strung out a troop of cavalrymen, colored, and as the head of the straggling column came up to the station a bugle sounded but two brief notes when the heated and travel-sore troopcrs eagerly dismounted and mingled in comfortable disorder. It was May and the oldest rancher about Caspar could not recall a warmer day in those parts.

A tall, ruddy-faced fellow, in leather "chaps" and a broad-brimmed hat, lounged out of the station and to the spot where the dust-dimmed coach and panting mules had come to a standstill.

"Company comin', Dick?" said he, as he thumbed his belt away from his hips and stretched his arms in the sunshine.

"Yep." The driver wearily locked the brakes of the ambulance with his booted feet, and clambered from his lofty perch.

"Got ter carry many?"

"Only kin take a sartin number."

"I hear that President Arthur with a lot of women and outsiders is a comin' in," resumed the tall resident languidly. "They wired it up from below—and they're almost due now."

"Well, our orders are to fetch the President and his staff ter Washakie. I can't help it if too many come!"

"Is the horse escort for the President?"

"Yep."

"Then I reckon you'll pack all that get here—if the President wants it."

"President be hanged—I can't overload!"

The piping voice of a whistle far to the south and west drew all eyes to the spot on the horizon where a sluggish creek lost itself to view. The sun-baked station was at once a scene of animation. Cowboys and half-breed Indians who had been seeking shelter from the sun's burning rays came out of the rude waiting room and busied themselves about the spot, as the train popped into view a mile or more away and came screaming down the two streaks of rust stretched out before it.

The ambulance driver remounted his high box and cracked a long lash over the heads of the refractory government mules, taking then a better position near the abbreviated station platform.

A cavalry officer swung the troop of colored soldiers into line near the army conveyance and took up his post as the train pulled up to the spot and stopped.

"There's the President!" said a cowboy standing near the ambulance.

The cavalry officer raised his sword. A score of bright sabers were drawn and held in salute, and as many troopers sat straight and still in their saddles.

A distinguished looking party, noisy and excited, came from the low, dingy coaches with all possible speed, and hurried down the platform, amid handshakes and salutes, and finally gathered at the side of the post ambulance. The cavalry officer sat with his eyes fixed on the blade before him—a short, stout man of military bearing passed with President Arthur just to his left and, with the chief executive, saluted. The officer's blade flew to his scabbard and he was out of his saddle in a twinkling. "Mr. President—and General Sheridan! God bless you both—welcome."

It was a sight long to be remembered. From Washington this party had come—made up of the foremost men of the nation at that time. It was in 1883 and their mission was one of business and pleasure combined. President Chester A. Arthur, fatigued with the trying routine of his official life, had come with General Phil Sheridan, McCook and others, together with members of his cabinet, into the wilds of Wyoming to confer with old Washakie, chief of all the Shoshones, as to the framing of a fresh treaty with his people and to view the scenic grandeur of Yellowstone Park and the Wind River Valley. It was a notable gathering on a notable jaunt.

In the aggregation there were three ladies who came to Caspar that day in May. Two of them were army officers' wives, the third was a young woman of twenty years, sent by an enterprising newspaper of Chicago to report the incidents of the trip. She was neither handsome of countenance nor strikingly gowned, but her bright, intelligent face held one's attention in an odd way, and it was easy to figure out that she was attractive for what she really was—rather than for what she merely seemed to be.

Miss Terry had been educated at Willard Hall in Massachusetts, and had taken up the life of a journalist when necessity had required her to make a living for herself and her mother, now suddenly widowed and left penniless.

Her extreme originality and great energy had brought her to the front, and her first great commission had come when the managing editor had sent for her and detailed her on this trip. Her genial nature had won for her a place in the hearts of everyone in the party—and if the truth had been told—a fixed place in the heart of a rival paper's correspondent, Martin Dunn. But that is still another story.

"We have eighteen here," said General Phil Sheridan, as he beamed about him on his travel worn companions. "How are we all to get in this stage?"

"The ambulance, General," said the cavalry officer as he pulled on his gauntlets again and adjusted a handkerchief about his neck, "will accommodate President Arthur and three, while the double field conveyance we have just behind here, will carry twelve. You see we did not understand there would be so many of you."

"That leaves two of us behind," said the President.

"I fear it does," said the officer in a puzzled way.

"Then," said General Sheridan, "I will ask my aid to kindly relinquish his seat to Miss Terry here, who had doubtless best remain with the other ladies. He can follow on tomorrow."

"With pleasure, sir!" A dignified looking fellow doffed his cap and stepped forward. "I will follow on tomorrow with Mr. Dunn!"

The matter was thus settled. Dunn was for hiring horses and riding the 150 miles over the Great Divide and to Washakie, but horses were not to be had on the instant, and a prompt start was necessary.

The situation distracted Dunn for more reasons than one. He did not fancy losing two days or more with Miss Terry—and aside from this sentiment, he did not wholly relish the idea of having his clever and interesting rival gathering up and wiring back exclusive matter for publication, which would "scoop" him in the Chicago press.

There was nothing for it, however, but to give in gracefully, and this he did with a showing of good cheer that was largely feigned.

"But remember, Miss Terry," said he as he leaned over to the army conveyance and clung to one of her hands until she pulled it away a bit abashed and possibly annoyed, "no scoops until I can catch up to you."

"That's your own lookout, sir!" she merrily replied, and the crowd laughed—as it had had occasion to on many similar occasions. "All is fair in war——"

Dunn wanted to supplement, "And love!"

The bugler brought the colored troopers into line. The stage moved up to the government trail, and Dunn was still running after it.

"Remember," he shouted, red-faced and panting, "No scoops!"

"What's your loss is my gain, the President says," was the unsatisfactory retort, and the stage crept over a rise of ground and soon after passed from view.

* * *

The cosy little post in the Wind River Valley had never known quite such a gala day as that upon which the President and his party came into the lower canyons from the east, with the escort of horse, and trailed up to the colonel's quarters at the end of the parade ground. The band was out in force, the garrison was under arms and the flags of the post were flying in the breeze. Thousands of Indians, in their gayest attire, dotted the hills, and crowded the bounds which had been laid out for them.

About the post-trader's store were gathered an aggregation of cowboys and frontiersmen, such as had rarely been assembled there before. The first day of a week's love-feast was at hand, and the heart of every man, woman and child in the valley was light and full of cheer. Never had the applauding masses of a great city pleased the chief executive of the land, more than this. The simple but earnest welcome he received, did not pass unappreciated.

Miss Terry got down from the ambulance as it stopped before the colonel's quarters, and waited for the President to alight. "Will you dictate an interview for me tonight?" she asked as she timidly laid her hand upon his arm. "You know I must telephone it to Caspar and get it through for the morning's edition."

"Anything you ask, my little Miss," said President Arthur, as he took her by the hand playfully and led her on to the crowd of officers waiting there to greet them. "You represent the terrible press, but you are such a redeeming feature of the evil that we are forced to be lenient. And I will have a bit of important news for you, at that!"

"Oh thanks—and may I see you before dark?"

"You may. I will send for you."

The greetings over, the President retired to the Colonel's quarters with a few of his companions, and the rest of the party were distributed along officers' row. The ladies were taken to the home of Major Charles McLean, and the day passed as only such a day could—crowded full of talk and comment, and very little else.

The dinner hour had passed. An infantry officer came to Major McLean's quarters and enquired for Miss Terry. The President wanted to see her. With a military cape thrown about her shoulders, the hopeful, happy girl passed down the parade ground while envious eyes followed the young officer, and the sentries stood at attention longer than need be. Miss Terry was popular from the start.

"Not for the sake of journalism, but for your own sake," said the President, with a merry twinkle in his eye, as Miss Terry sat down beside him on the Colonel's veranda, "I an going to give you some news. I presume it is important."

"Oh, you're so kind, sir!" and Miss Terry produced her note book which she rested in her lap.

"Not at all -but the fact is, General Sheridan and I are going up to Crow Heart Butte in the morning, to look for the heart and dirk which gave the place its name! We then will try some Shoshone for murder - "

"You don't say so!"

"Yes, that's right. You have heard the legend of Crow Heart Butte, haven't you? You know the Crow Indians and the Shoshones fought here for twenty years, and finally, quite like the Kilkenny cats of modern lore, they all but exterminated each other!

"Yes," said General Sheridan who sat close by, "and after the Shoshones had wiped the Crow band out of existence, their chief carved out the heart of a dead rival and pinned it to the mountain top on which the battle was fought. He then drew a circle about this spot with a stick, and it is said that no Indian ever set foot within it since. That's how it came to be named 'Crow Heart Butte.' "

"But what did you say about a murderer?" The young woman looked puzzled but extremely interested.

The President beamed on the General, and the latter lighted a cigar as he replied:

"Just this. It's a scoop! We are really here to trace the murderer and punish him. We will visit the spot tomorrow and if the circumstances warrant, will arrest the whole Shoshone tribe and hold the people in bondage until they give up the fellow who did the cutting!"

"But everything is so peaceful—and that was so very long ago!" The young woman looked suspicious, and she eyed her two austere informers with a half-amused smile.

"Yes, but those are the facts. That's the real object of this trip!" The General puffed very hard at his cigar and the President put his hand over his face to hide a smile.

"Is it a crime to doubt the word of a President and of an army's leader?" Pretty Miss Terry looked up at them with one of the smiles which had melted their severity long ago. Their barricades were broken down and a nation's leader with an unconquered war hero, were vanquished by a mere girl!

The President laughed heartily. "We must have thought you were green, I will admit!"

"No, no! Not that!" interposed Sheridan. "The idea is this. Our friend Dunn is still back there in Caspar because the stage is two days late in getting to him. We want to play a joke on him. Now can't you get that story back to him and let him print it for one of those 'scoops' he is always talking about?"

"Oh, not for the world! It wouldn't be true."

"Nonsense! Let him judge of that."

When the moon came up that night, the crowd on the Colonel's front porch was still laughing itself sick over the joke on Dunn. The lone telephone wire to Caspar had been reached, and the wierd tale had been dictated to the operator at the other end for the newspaperman. "And you can add to the message," said General Sheridan to the lad from the Post Trader's store who did the telephoning, "that the story is a 'scoop.' "

And then the crowd laughed again. When great men jest they spring great jokes—or at least, they think they do.

* * *

It was four days later when Dunn came into Washakie. A more discouraged, disgusted looking fellow could not well be imagined. His dispatches to Chicago each day had been based upon hearsay and wild guessing, he said, because of his separation from the party, and all that time one thing and another had conspired to keep him in "the infernal town of Caspar!"

Did he get the telephone messages sent him all right? Oh, yes—he had received them, and officers and their wives snickered and smiled and thought Dunn did not see! Miss Terry told some of the party she felt guilty for having let the "story" go out, as she knew that it would compromise Mr. Dunn with his paper in Chicago—but the crowd had talked her out of it. Dunn was left alone in his density and trouble, while the crowd feasted on the jest and abided the time. And then fresh complications arose to make the visitors forget the incident for the moment.

A young cavalryman at the post was paying decided attention to Miss Terry. They were inseparable, and Dunn's discomfort was something maddening to witness. He managed to keep within sight of her about two-thirds of the time, and when they each went to the telephone office with their dispatches for the wire that day, Dunn tried to be there when the young woman came in, while the admiring cavalryman conspired to keep her away from the journalist, and monopolized her every moment.

Two rival papers in Chicago were printing their respective letters every day. It was hard to be placed in the position of ardently admiring the woman who was opposing him in business, and on the most important detail of his life at that, but Dunn could have stood that if the advent of the admiring officer had been stricken from the calendar. That was too much, and the last straw was laid upon the camel's back. Something had to be done!

The entire party headed for Yellowstone one afternoon at the close of that week, to be gone for a month perhaps, and Dunn and Miss Terry were getting their parting messages filed on the wire. They took couriers with them to the first day's camp, and it was there that the sensation started which all but broke up the party and sent it flying back to civilization.

Miss Terry had scarcely spoken to Dunn for days—so little chance did he have to see her. But now the offending officer was held back at Washakie, and Dunn was in the field once more.

An improvised hammock had been built by Dunn near their first camp fire on their way to Yellowstone. Miss Terry was swinging to and fro within it and caressing an arm full of wild flowers she had gathered. The gloaming had deepened to night, and the cavalry escort had spread its sheltering line about the camp.

"We have not seen much of each other lately," said Dunn to Miss Terry.

"Not much. I have been so busy."

"Yes, and I have been busy also. Not so busy writing exclusive stuff, however," and he rested on the word "exclusive" for a time, "as I have been trying to figure you out."

"Out of what?" she asked merrily.

"Nothing funny in it Miss Terry. 'Out of mind,' if you want to know." She looked up quickly, with the expression of one who had been hurt. Dunn pretended not to see it.

"I want to confide in you as a friend," he went on, "something which you have not suspected. I had the misfortune to fall in love with you."

"Mr. Dunn!"

"Don't interrupt, please; I won't offend you, really. Hear me through, won't you?" She sat as if transfixed, watching his face which was partly turned away from her own.

"I say misfortune—because it was vain. I love you now, and I think you know it. But that is merely in explanation of my leaving you to-morrow."

"To-morrow?"

"Yes, I go back to Chicago to-morrow—that is, I start back then. I am going to resign and leave the business."

"What do you mean?"

"I mean that I am in love with you, and that this cannot go on. In a few days more we will be back to Washakie. That cavalry gentleman will monopolize you again, and make me miserable. I cannot shirk this detail and keep my position, I am going to resign."

"True love is willing to suffer," she said as she looked down at her arm full of flowers.

"Yes—if there is any goal in sight! '

"Well, isn't there?"

"Not when a man loves a girl who ignores him. Not when a man worships a woman who does not care an atom for him!"

"Has—she told him so?" She was tearing the fair blossoms to pieces now in her nervousness. Dunn came nearer.

"Oh, but understand me," she said as she raised her hand and held him back. "I do not admire a man who shirks his work. And, too, I could not give myself to a man who was not above me in the business world."

"Above newspaper work?"

"Yes, above it. You must be something besides a newspaper man."

"Then I will be that very thing to-night!"

"You will be—what?"

"I don't know what, but something."

"What do you mean?"

Dunn drew a yellow dispatch from his pocket and handed it to Miss Terry. He lighted a match for her while she read:—

CHICAGO, ILL., May 10th, 1883.

TERRY-CORRESPONDENT SENTINEL,
Washakie, Wyoming.

Send no more fakes or gibberish. Wire news or quit. President will be mobbed on return.

DAVIS, Managing Editor.

The young woman read the dispatch again and again, and turned it over in her hands. Amazement mingled with horror was depicted on her face.

"Why——what does that mean? Where did you get it? Why——"

"Oh, I was in Caspar when it came over the wire. I hated to have you get it and pocketed it before it could get further."

"Bnt you had no right to——"

"Yes I did. I was the cause of it!"

"Indeed!"

"Yes, I was. You sent me a story about the President going up to Crow Heart Butte to trace a murderer of twenty years ago. I thought if you cared enough for it to wire it down to me, you'd like to have it for your own paper, but as for myself——well, I didn't like the stand it took against the President's sanity! So I just wired it on to your paper, over your signature, and in the form of an interview with the President. The result is that Congress has met to enquire into the President's mental state, his party has gone back on him, flags are at half mast, mass meetings are being held, and another election will be held before we can get back. So I guess we quit together."

"Oh! Oh! Oh! This is terrible! Let me get the General!"

The main party was not far away. Miss Terry soon had the Chief Executive and his party arrayed about her at the hammock. Dunn recited his story even as he had told it to the young woman. The President was speechless. He could not repudiate his own statements. He never thought of doubting Dunn.

For the first time in his life, General Sheridan was flustered. First he ridiculed the idea, and then as Dunn assured him that every English-speaking community in America, and doubtless England, had read of his own and the President's insane plan, only to marvel at their imbecility and sudden mental collapse, he waxed excited and even remonstrative Dunn held them well pinned to their positions. For a solid hour the party was in arms, and volumes were handed back and forth in the discussion. It only made matters worse.

"Young man," said President Arthur sternly, when he had fully collected himself, "whatever there is in this, you will be kind enough to straighten it out. The jest has gone far enough."

"It is no jest with me, sir. The interview was O. K.'d by you, and although I understand that you merely aimed to have some fun with me, the story was sent on in good faith and is now far beyond my control."

"But you have got to straighten it out."

"I cannot!"

"You must!"

"Impossible!"

"You straighten this hoax out for us," said the President in a conciliatory tone, finally, "and I'll make you the war-board secretary that you said you wanted to be."

"You mean that? Shake hands on it!" Dunn leaped up from his seat.

"Certainly!" The newspaper man shook hands with the President of the United States.

"Thank you, sir. Then I'll straighten it out in ten words, and here and now. I am a liar upon this rare and joyous occasion. You tried to work off a joke on me at Caspar. I knew it the minute I saw that dispatch from the President and my fair contemporary here. I tore up the dispatch!"

"What—never sent it?" shouted Sheridan.

"Never sent anything like that!"

"And the fake never got into print?"

"Never!"

"And that dispatch from my managing editor?" asked Miss Terry in opened-eyed amazement.

"Was written by myself, thank you. You got back what you thought you were giving me. I am sorry to have alarmed you——but, Mr. President, your promise——"

"Will be kept. I will write out the appointment here, if you wish."

"Not necessary——when we get back will do."

"You have outgeneraled the statesmen and generals of your country, young man," said the good-natured nobleman from the President's chair, as he laid his hand on Dunn's shoulder, "and you well deserve the position you have won by it."

"And that is not all that is won, either," said Dunn.

The sentry's call of "all's well" reminded the camp that it was high time to retire.

"Am I sufficiently out of the newspaper field?" said Dunn to Miss Terry as they parted near the President's tent.

"You are—and there's the reward!"

He stooped down and kissed the hand held out to him.

Four Victoria Crosses have been awarded to Battery Two of the Royal Horse Artillery which saved its guns at the surprise at Korn Spruit. Lord Roberts decided that one should go to the commissioned officers, one to the non-commissioned and two to the men, and left to each rank to decide what individuals should be nominated. The only trouble arose over the commissioned officers, of whom but two were left unwounded to save the battery—a Major and a Captain. The Major voted for the Captain and the Captain for the Major and Lord Roberts settled the matter by letting seniority of rank decide.

It has been discovered that the crystalline lens of the human eye is slightly diamagnetic, or subject to magnetic repulsion. As astigmatism—the commonest cause of defective vision and the most frequent excuse for spectacles—is merely a slight distortion of this lens, it has been suggested that treatment with a powerfnl magnet properly applied may result in forcing the lens into proper shape, or at least in greatly remedying the distortion.

Henrik Sienkiewicz has lost his mother-in-law, Madame Sophie de Wolodkowicz of Krakow, in a dramatic manner. She was murdered while traveling alone in a first-class railroad carriage near Odessa, her maid being in the second-class. She had a large sum of money with her and had probably been followed by her assassins from the bank where she had drawn it.

It appears that the lifetime of the mosquito is three months. Mosquitos hsve been kept alive in captivity for eighty days. It is said that the ordinary minnow, which feeds upon the larvæ of mosquitos, is highly efficient as a means for keeping down their numbers.

Apparently, "coatless" men will not be tolerated in Philadelphia, in spite of the recent movement in their favor. Two respectable men in their shirtsleeves were prevented from entering Chestnut Hill Park the other day.

The Johnsons number 5,750 in the new Chicago City Directory, having a clear majority of 1,350 over the Smiths.

is published every Saturday at The Wave Building, 24 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal., and Colman Building, Seattle, Wash. Entered at the Post Office as second-class matter. Subscription: Per year, $2.00; six months, $1.25; three months, 75 cents. Foreign subscription (countries in postal union) $1 per year additional. Sample copies free.

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY
PROPRIETORS

San Francisco — August 4, 1900 — Seattle

There are some things it is just as well to bear in mind when discussing politics.

In 1892 the Democrats urged the people to defeat the Republican ticket because of the high prices brought about by the protective tariff.

In 1896 the Democrats claimed the support of the people because the gold standard had brought low prices.

In 1900 Democracy is preparing to declare the Republicans unfit, because high prices have been brought about by combination.

How under the canopy are you going to please such a crowd?

The Expert Patriot and Statesman.

THERE is an assumption, peculiarly Bryanistic, in the Democratic boast that the German-Americans propose to vote for Bryan and against Mr. McKinley on account of Expansion. A German-American a few days ago expressed himself with some warmth upon the subject. He said:

"I bitterly resent the claim of Mr. Bryan that the Germans are voted as a flock of sheep. I am an American citizen and will vote for the party of my choice the same as any other American. I am a Republican and will vote that ticket—so will a great majority of Germans. There are a great many men who pretend to control the political affiliation of their fellow countrymen. They appeal to the ignorant alone and I have the utmost contempt for any man who would so demean and belittle his own race as to charge up against them such unfitness for citizenship."

The gentleman in question was hotly indignant, and not without good reason. Of course, among German Democrats it is perfectly natural to insist that victory is theirs, and there is nothing to prevent them appropriating everything in sight in the shape of votes; but the non-German Democratic papers have laid so much stress on "the solid German vote' being for Bryan, that resentment has been awakened among the intelligent who are not slow to discover the evil lurking behind such a movement. The weight of this claim of Democracy rests upon the assumption "that most of the Germans in America quit the Fatherland to escape compulsory service,' and for this reason it is urged that they are unlikely to vote for Mr. McKinley because his Expansion policy might fasten upon the country the evils of militarism.

* * *

So shallow a claim ought not to deceive anyone. The Democratic platform says:

"We oppose militarism. It means conquest abroad and oppression at home. It means the strong arm which has ever been fatal to free institutions. It is what millions of our citizens have fled from in Europe [this refers to the Germans.] It will impose upon our peace-loving people a large standing army, an unnecessary burden of taxation and a constant menace to their liberties."

In brief, if Mr. McKinley is re-elected, "intimidation and oppression at home" will follow, and "our peace loving people' will have "imposed upon them a large standing army and an unnecessary burden of taxation." But what will the "peace-loving people" be doing all this time? Will they cower in unfrequented corners to dodge the press gang? Will they go in hiding or submissively walk up to the recruiting officer and submit their bodies as targets for rifle practice? What will the taxpayer be doing? Will his "unnecessary burden of taxation" so weaken him that he will turn his purse and his stomach inside out at the sight of a tax collector? It is with this sort of stuff that Democracy attempts to deceive. Every German-American in this land knows that compulsory military service would not last in free America for twenty-four hours. No administration would dream of attempting such a policy or anything that ever squinted that way. Bryan knows this. Everyone knows it. But Bryan's reputation as a prophet is fixed. During the last campaign he prophesied that prosperity would never again bless us unless silver were remonetized. A long list of doleful and depressing things were to be ladled out to us if he was defeated. Yet a microscopic society charged with the duty would not be able to discover a single one of these portentous evils. We prophesied that Mr. McKinley's election would bring prosperity, and it came. Now the ingenious Mr. Bryan has conjured up another "rags-bottle-and-sacks-man" who will eat bad little boys, if we don't vote against Expansion and elect him President. Not one of his dreadful calamities overtook us during the past four years, and not one of them will come browsing around during Mr. McKinley's next four years of office. The German-Americans are as a class level-headed, conservative men. Mere noise is not likely to frighten them nor lead them to lose sight of the promise of a debased currency held out by Democracy. Whenever militarism makes its appearance in the United States, you may depend upon it that every level-headed man in the country, be he German or native-born, will vote to depose the party responsible for it. But as neither the Louisiana purchase, nor the acquisition of California, nor the purchase of Alaska with its colonial form of government, has brought the slightest sign of militarism, it would seem to be borrowing trouble to assume that the attitude toward the Philippines is going to bring it about.

* * *

Democracy's substitute for the Expansion policy that "threatens" militarism is this: It proposes to abandon the Philippines entirely, give the Filipinos a form of government, independence, and then exercise a species of protectorate over them. The Filipinos are unfit for citizenship, yet they urge giving them a free and independent government and favor holding ourselves ready to protect them in all cases. This policy would probably get us into a war that would require a standing army greater than would be required to govern a dozen Philippine archipelagoes.

It is worth while to investigate the ingenious, not to say contemptible, manner in which Bryan has manufactured the "issues" of the coming campaign. During the past three years he has devoted himself exclusively to the task of trapping the administration. We all remember during the exciting hours pre leading democrats publicly announced that they favored the war because it would hurt the administration and help the Democrats. The party has been busy attempting to "cash" this hope. When the treaty of Paris, that ceded Porto Rico and the Philippines, came up before the Senate for ratification, the Republican senators were by no means unanimous in its favor. The opposition to the treaty, led by Senator Hoar, might easily have defeated it had it not been for the strenuous efforts of Mr. Bryan. A two-thirds vote was necessary for a ratification. There were not enough Republican votes to ratify. Bryan already saw that there was "politics" in having the treaty ratified. He became a radical "imperialist" and with secret but insistent zeal urged the Democratic senators to sustain expansion and vote for the treaty. Seventeen Democratic votes in favor of the treaty are credited to the personal influence of the "peerless statesman." The treaty carried, and now William Jennings is declaring its pernicious and damnable operations to be the "paramount issue of the campaign." Senator Hoar of Massachusetts charges this duplicity up against Mr. Bryan, in good round English, and Mr. Bryan had not denied it. Senator Hoar says he will vote for Mr. McKinley because he "would rather vote for the man who supported the treaty believing it to be good, than to vote for the man who supported the treaty believing it to be bad." This is pretty hard on that "peerless statesman" and "most American American" who very modestly has twenty-two portraits of himself hung in his own sitting room at home.

* * *

Then take the question of trusts. The Republicans introduced a proposed constitutional amendment for the regulation of trusts, during the last session. Again it was necessary to secure a two-thirds in the Senate. But the Democrats refused to support the measure and it was defeated. They did not antagonize the amendment because they thought it bad or inefficient, for it would have been most effective, but they refused to pass it "because they thought its author insincere."

Mr. Bryan was not in favor of the anti-trust amendment. He opposed it because he wanted to use it in the campaign, just as he wanted to use the treaty of Paris and expansion. So here we have the two paramount issues over which democracy shrieks and froths, both manufactured by democracy itself. Bryan did not want these issues settled; he would not have them settled. He would not permit the Democrats in the Senate to assist in their settlement. So whenever you hear the gentleman denounce "imperialism" remember his part in it; and whenever he denounces trusts remember the constitutional amendment he defeated.

The Court and the Primary Law.

THE decision of the Supreme Court declaring the Stratton primary law unconstitutional, scarcely dovetails with popular desire; but popular desire, like the daily press, is frequently out of tune with the law. The judges who joined in the majority opinion know—if they gave the matter any thought—that a decision against the act would very likely be unpopular, and it required some courage and an absence of demagogic tendencies to deny its constitutionality. The vice of the law viewed from a practical—rather than a political—point of view, lay in the fact that no party test was to be applied to voters at the primaries. This may not convey any fresh impression to the run of men whose participation in politics consists of merely voting on occasions, but it was full of vicious possibilities, and once understood, the public will be grateful for the court's opinion.

* * *

Primaries, as every schoolboy knows, are held for the purpose of choosing delegates to party conventions, and the majority of these delegates make the party nominations on state, city and county tickets. Heretofore the Democrats held their primaries on a day set by the party managers and the Republicans upon a day set by theirs. To participate in a Democratic primary, the voter was compelled to satisfy the judges of election that he was a Democrat, and the same rule obtained among Republicans.

We are going into the A. B. C. of this matter for the enlightenment of some of our "leading citizens." Under the Stratton law, the primaries of both parties were held on the same day, during the same hours, in the same booth, exactly as general elections are now held. No party test was excted. Democrats might vote for Republican delegates and vice versa. Under this scheme of things, it would have been possible for a combination of Democrats to have named a majority of the delegates to a Republican convention, and so have nominated an entire Republican ticket, made up of weak men. We will say that in a given hopelessly Republican Congressional district, the Democrats had no contest. In the Republican ranks, there might be a contest. We will say Jones, a Republican, opposed White, a Republican, for the Congressional nomination. White is popular, Jones unpopular. Left to a decision of Republicans, the delegates favoring White would naturally be chosen, and White nominated. Jones being ambitious and unscrupulous might easily make a combination with the Democratic leaders who had no contest on their hands, and procure their Democratic followers to vote for his delegates to the Republican convention. And so Mr. White's delegates, who were really the choice of the Republican voters would be defeated by Democrats who had no moral right to participate in determining who should serve as delegates to a Republican convention. Such performances in San Francisco woul bring about unending complications, and constant political surprises. The party test is of paramount importance. A constitutional amendment will be necessary to legalize a perfect primary law. Politics can suffer a few more years to ecure that end, but when the remedy does come it will bes effective.

EVENTS CURRENT.

Assassination of the King of Italy. King Humbert of Italy was murdered by an anarchist, Angeli Bressi, on July 29, being the sixth of the world's rulers to die by violence in as many years. The king was attending a festival at Monza and was proceeding in his carriage through a closely packed crowd, when Bressi stepped out and shot him three times. Death ensued within three-quarters of an hour. There was no private excuse for the crime; the assassin himself stating that he had shot his victim "not as Humbert, but as the king." Unfortunately for our own reputation for good order, the crime was hatched in this country. Bressi was a silk-weaver in Paterson, N. J., for several years, and left his employ only recently and probably for the express purpose of murdering the king. It is alleged by the Italian police that the crime was part of a plot hatched up at Paterson, and that the assassin did his work as a chosen instrument. For a time, it was feared that there was a political plot on foot, of which this was only a part, but this was proved unfounded by the events of the following twenty-four hours. Italy, which really loved Humbert as no other king has been loved in this century, remains quiet. The Crown Prince of Naples succeeds as King Victor Emmanuel III. He is described as a weakling in body; of his intellectual power it is impossible to speak, as he has never yet taken part in active affairs. Marion Crawford, the novelist, who has an intimate acquaintance with Italian politics and personalities, is of the opinion that the young king, while lacking the courage and personality of his father and grandfather, has yet greater ability for government. His queen, Helene, was formerly a princess of Montenegro, is a strong character and likely to make herself felt in the kingdom. They have no children.

The character and personality of King Humbert is treated in another department in this issue; a brief summary of his life will be sufficient here. He was born at Turin in 1844, while his father, old Victor Emmanuel, was only King of Savoy. He took part in the Italian war for liberation, commanding a division with distinction. On his parent's accession to the throne, he became the first Crown Prince of United Italy, under the title of Prince of Naples. Shortly after, he was married to his cousin, Marguerite of Savoy, by whom he had one son, now succeeding him. In 1878 Humbert came to the throne. He at once set about remedying the private wrongs done to the state by his father, and went on with the task of building up the new state. The fact that he was even moderately successful in this was due to a wise choice of counsellors rather than to his own personal abilities, which were limited—a fact of which he was well aware. His hold on the Italians lay in his courage, his honesty, his charity, and his undoubted devotion to his people.

News from the Peking Ministers. The silence of Peking has been broken; we know that the foreigners in the capital are mostly alive, or were at a comparatively recent date, and that the stories of massacre emanating from Shanghai were pure lies. The tension is not much relieved, however, because the despairing belief that the Europeans were dead has been succeeded by the fear that they are held as hostages, their lives to be forfeited in case the Powers do not come to the Chinese terms. The first move of the relieving army toward Peking is likely to be met with this barbarous alternative. This is more than conjecture. Li Hung Chang has already made the threat frankly and openly, and several other signs point in the same way. For example, the attack on the legations ceased on July 16, at just about the date when Earl Li first broached his proposal. No further fighting had occurred at the time of the latest news, but a cordon of Chinese troops surrounded the foreigners, as though holding themselves in readiness for orders to advance. Reports from all sections of the Empire show that the massacre of foreigners has nearly stopped, but that all strangers now caught are being held, apparently with the same sinister purpose.

The proof that the foreigners were alive came gradually during the past week. From July 4 being the last date, it came up to July 16 and then to July 22, where it now stands. The Italian, Japanese, English, and American governments respectively have heard from their representatives. A meager story of the awful month since June 13, when the fighting began may be patched together from their laconic dispatches. After the Chinese closed in and began the attack, the foreigners, mostly gathered in the British legation and on the city wall near by, were for a month under almost continuous fire which must have been badly aimed or it would have done more damage, since the casualities are given as only sixty killed and an uncertain number wounded. All the ministers except, of course, Baron Von Kettler, killed early in the outbreak, seem to have escaped without harm. On at least two occasions the little band—there cannot be over three hundred and fifty fighting men among them—repulsed a general attack. It has been a month of continual vigilance and hard work, so that many are sick. Nothing is said of a shortage of ammunition or supplies, although Conger's latest letter says that ammunition is scarce, but the appeal for relief and the assurance that the position cannot be held much longer are repeated. The detailed American loss up to July 22 was eight killed, anc twentyseven wounded., seven seriously, and twenty slightly. It remains to be said that there are many points of discrepancy between the various dispatches,but that they agree in general.

The Powers Hesitate in China. What the course of the Powers is to be rests wholly on conjecture. There is no doubt that the appeals of the ministers for relief and the revelation of their desperate straits have inspired all the governments concerned to action. But the changed situation has not yet brought them to the point where they are willing to give Japan a free hand. If the Peking foreigners die in the end, the record of this diplomatic crime will forever disgrace the European nations All this week, the gossip of the capitals had it that the United States and England were eager for an advance with the troops at hand but were not seconded by the other Powers. It is logical for the Anglo-Saxon nations, who are noted for their protection of citizens abroad, to take the initiative in this matter, but neither of them are in a position to do anything which would call for a large force. The standing army of England is comparatively small and ours is insignificant. Both, moreover, have private wars on hand. The nation that takes the lead in relieving Peking must be ready to back up possible reverses with a large force. It is not likely that the advance will be made until the Powers agree to it. The force at Tien-Tsin numbers twenty thousand, in poor condition—two hundred and fifty are sick in the Ninth Infantry alone—the number would be needed just to hold the line of communications. The fighting temper of the Chinese is shown by the fact that they are gradually pushing back the Russians on the Manchurian border. The horrible possibility that the Chinese are holding the Peking foreigners as hostages and will close in and massacre them as soon as the capital is placed in peril further complicates the affair. If the simple proposition, "withdraw or we kill our hostages," were placed before the Powers, it is doubtful whether they would withdraw or go on and leave the representatives to their fate. Certainly, the Chinese hold the cards in that game, and are in a position to gain many concessions through the humane sentiment of Europe.

Collapse of the Revolution in Colombia. The Central American State of Colombia seems to have effectually settled the Liberal revolution which has been going on there since early Spring. The uprising was, like most Latin-American civil wars, purely a political one, caused by the assumption of power by one party and the despair of the other at being unable to take possession by ordinary political means. The insurgents, with headquarters at Cucuta on the Venezuelan boundary, are said to have mustered in their best days about 20,000 men. Against them was an available government army of 80,000. The first blow was struck by the government July 16, and resulted in an easy victory. Over 1,600 men and valuable munitions were taken. July 22, the decisive battle occurred near Panama. About 1,000 federal troops closed with 1,200 insurgents. So fierce was the onset that each side lost about 400 killed and wounded. The rebels had the best of the first day's fighting, but the arrival of strong government reinforcements on the second day effectually turned the tide. Driven into a hopeless position, the insurgents surrendered, and their cause collapsed. Their leaders have signed articles of submission and a general amnesty has been proclaimed. While the war was short, it was a bloody one. The final conflict was fought in the very streets of Panama, and the city is plunged into mourning for the loss of some of the republic's foremost men.

A British Success in South Africa. One of the main bodies of armed Orange River Boers has given up the fight against the British, and the war in that section seems to be near to an end. It is true that General De Wet, President Steyn, and the main body of Transvaal troops are still at large, but the surrender of a force under General Prinsloo which has been dodging Roberts' cordon for two months indicates the forlorn nature of their position. So far, one thousand of them have come in, handed over their arms and horses, and become prisoners. Other bands are surrendering daily, and English correspondents claim that it is only a question of time until Steyn and De Wet, if not made prisoners, will be left without followers or support. The final establishment of an unbreakable cordon brought about this rather unexpected consummation. Two weeks ago, the efforts of the trapped Boers to slip through the lines, as they had done continually in the preceding month, began to prove unavailing. For the next few days, they tried several points, moving from one to the other with their wonderful shiftiness, but falling back from each after feeling it and finding that it was held in force. A strong attempt was finally made by Prinsloo at Naauport Nek, but General Hunter and his cavalry, after fighting a brisk action, succeeded in blocking the pass to the Boer wagons. Thereupon, the Dutch commanders opened the negotiations which ended in the surrender. The last actions of this campaign reversed the general rule in the South African war, the Boers and not the British being the heaviest losers.

On the Transvaal side of the war there is little change in the situation. The British do not seem to know where their opponents are, or if they do, it has not passed the press censor. Roberts has apparently waited to end organized opposition in the Orange River State before beginning the final clean up in the Transvaal. Probably he relies upon the effect of the capture or surrender of Steyn and his counsellors in discouraging the Transvaal forces proper. The British are in touch with the Boer outposts near Watervalhoven, and only lately succeeded in capturing the leader of the Pretoria commands, but there is a practical armistice. United States Consul-General Stowe has gone from Cape Town to Pretoria; South African rumor has it that he will confer with Kruger regarding peace proposals as soon as the Orange River leaders are taken or surrender.

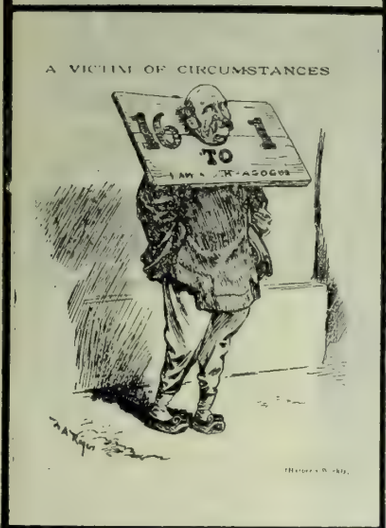
Famine and Plague in India. The famine situation in India is by no means as hopeful as was promised by the coming of the monsoon. That rain-bringing wind has been light and dry so far, and the greatest anxiety is felt over the prospects for next year. In three districts, no sowing at all has been done, owing partly to the lack of seed and partly to the lightness of the rains. Sown crops are also in imminent danger from the drought. Viceroy Lord Curzon reports that good crops are only possible in case the monsoon improves. Everywhere, there is the need of plow-oxen, of seeds and of still more provisions for immediate relief. Over six and a quarter millions are applicants for help.

The gravest feature is the spread of cholera, which finds the reduced and emaciated natives easy prey. In Bombay, there were over 8000 cases up to June 21, with 5000 deaths —a mortality of nearly two-thirds. The total number of deaths in the relief works of the British district was 6753, or about 425 per thousand. To make matters worse, the percentage of sickness increases weekly. From all India, native and British, comes a demand that Parliament shall remit the taxes and appropriate a relief fund large enough for practical use. The public and private relief given so far has been inadequate. In the House of Commons, on July 26, the Secretary of State of India, announced the government's intention of affording ample relief. This year's balance of revenue, amounting to nearly £300,000, would be applied to relief, he said, and if that was not enough the Imperial Treasury would be drawn upon.

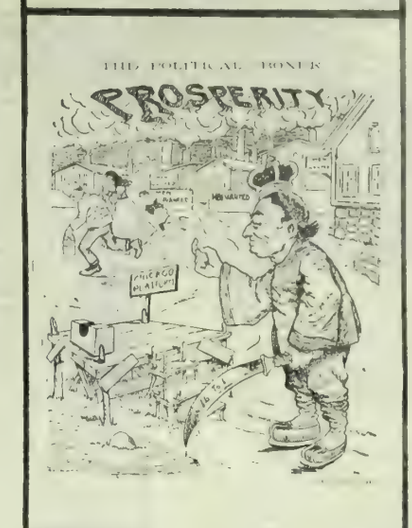
A Financial Stringency in the British Money Market. The British government is called upon just now to meet a very serious financial crisis. The Boer War, the Chinese tangle and the appeal for Indian famine relief have made the actual and prospective need for funds greater than can be met by the resources at hand. The cost of the South African War already exceeds $305,000,000, and the initial expenditure for the Chinese expedition has been $15,000,000, a mere bagatelle, however, as compared with the drain which will ensue should the Oriental crisis result in a big war. The appeals for government relief in India are becoming too strong to be ignored. The rates of taxation which have prevailed since the Transvaal drain began have been kept at a point as high as the average tax-payer will stand without serious opposition. It is against all traditional British policy to increase the revenues by tariff rates; the most probable course is another raise in the income tax. The financial policy of keeping no reserve for war is coming in for severe criticism. The first immediate effect is dearer money. The Bank of England has enforced an official minimum of 4 per cent. Experts agree that since the Chancellor of the Exchequer must soon call on the market for big war loans, a reduction of the reserve must be presented by bigger rates and a large amount of gold must be drawn from some other quarter. The directors are now trying to devise a means of attracting money from America; it is expected that they will raise the rate of interest point by point until this is accomplished.

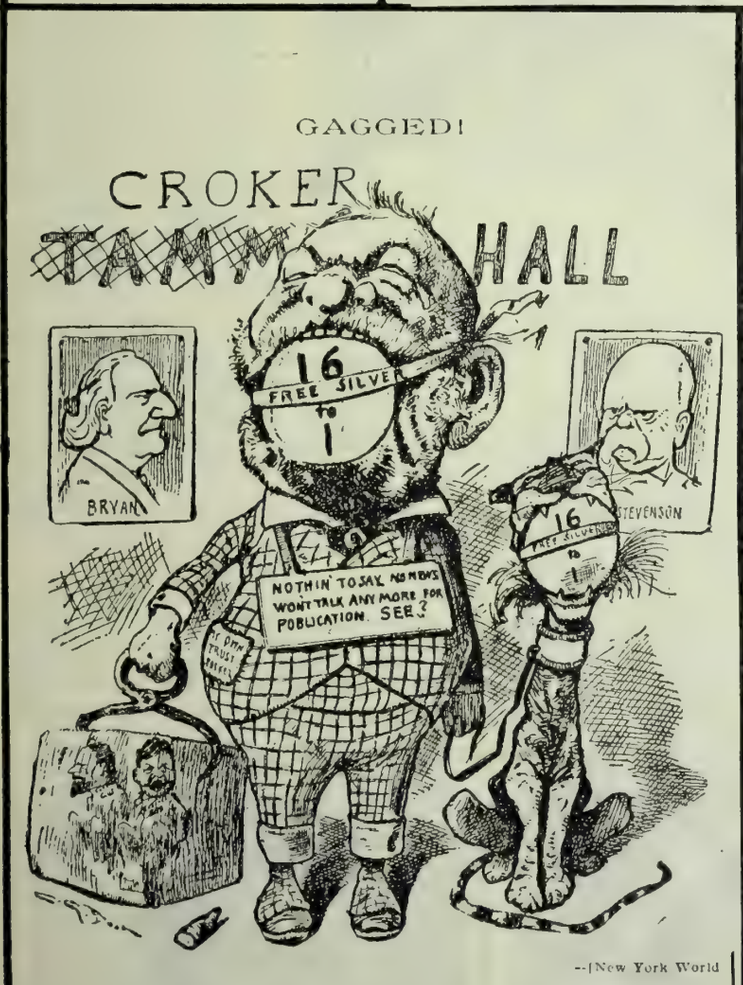
Baron Imbert de Saint-Amand, author of countless semi-historical books on French women, is dead. He followed a diplomatic career for a while. In recent years he was repeatedly an applicant for a seat in the French Academy, and occasionally received a few votes.

London now has girl district messengers as well as boys. Those employed are from 16 to 18 years of age and are said to be efficient.



"HELLO, CENTRAL! I WANT TO TALK TO THE AMERICAN WORKINGMAN."
"HE'S AT WORK AND VERY BUSY, MR. BRYAN; RING OFF, PLEASE."





"WILL THEY BE CAUGHT?"

THE PARAMOUNT ISSUE

Bush in New York World. Kemble in New York Herald. Bush in New York World.

CURRENT CARTOONS.

KING HUMBERT: THE MAN

Another ruler has fallen before that terror which has followed all the kings and princes of Europe in this century. King Humbert of Italy is a victim of the pistol of an anarchist. In this age when life is incomparably better safeguarded than in any other of the world's history, the rulers alone seem to be without protection from the lawless and the vicious. In no other century, not even in the Dark Ages, has there been a record anything like this one. No royal house of Europe but numbers the attempts at assassination by the score; no single ruler but has had more than one escape, and no nation but has lost its ruler or some one near to him. Humbert's death closes in blood a century which has proved how uneasy he rests who wears a crown.

The mourning over Humbert in Italy will be sincere, because he was genuinely respected by his entourage and loved by his subjects.

He reversed in this way the rule among the general run of popular men who are loved by those who immediately surround them, and merely respected by the public. For Humbert was rather brusque, unbending and stern, although always just to his intimates, while the uprightness of his physical career, the long fight which he had made for Italy, his courage, his record as a soldier, his discriminating public charity, made his name blessed in every shop and hovel of Italy. There was nothing perfunctory in the salutations of the Italian people when Humbert and Margherita went abroad. Their loyalty to the head of the house of Savoy was as unswerving as was the hatred of the Papal party.

Royal Lovers.

King Humbert probably deserved better of Fate than any other King of the century, having a private character and a record which would have made him admired and respected in any grade of society. The unhappiness which seems to be the lot of all kings was, in fact, tempered to him. He had weathered many storms and suffered much anxiety; had seen his kingdom in hard straits and his throne in peril, and had wrestled for a quarter of a century against a hostile element in his own dominion, yet private sorrow and domestic trouble, the chief misery of so many other European sovereigns, was spared him. Humbert was happily married to a woman whom he really loved, and his private life, after the first few years, was very happy. So well known was the devotion of the King and Queen of Italy, that they were rather a joke in other European courts.

Whether or no the marriage was a love-match is a disputed point. Much romance has been woven about the subject, but truthful Italian historians seem to favor the belief that it was strictly a marriage of convenience. When old King Victor Emmanuel was firmly seated on the throne of United Italy, he looked around for a match for his son, then in the early twenties. The diplomats arranged a marriage with the Archduchess Matilda of Austria. This was prevented by the sudden death of that royal lady. It is claimed by the sentimentalists that Humbert thereupon demanded his own right to be heard and asked for the hand of his cousin, Marguerita of Savoy, whom he had known as a child and with whom he was in love. If this is true, then love chimed well with diplomacy, because a connection in his own House of Savoy was then advisable and politic. At any rate, they were married, being then respectively twenty-four and seventeen, and came to the Royal Court where old King Victor Emmanuel, in the lascivious period which marked his later days, was holding high revel with the newly-made noblewomen, his mistresses. It is said that both young Humbert and his bride had a great influence in purifying the old king's life in his later days. And for a time they were a most devoted couple, known throughout Europe as the "royal lovers." In the course of two years a son was born, their only child; he now succeeds the murdered king Emmanuel III.

It remains to be said that there was later a serious break in the domestic happiness of this royal pair, caused by the liaisons of Humbert, who, for a time, went in the ways of his licentious father. An affair with one of the Queen's waiting-women and later with the notorious Duchess of Litta caused Margherita to withdraw, at one time, to her country estates, where it was given out at court that she was resting owing to delicate health. In the end, Humbert settled down became reconciled to his spouse, and from that time until the day of his death they were devoted and apparently happy with one another. At the time of their silver wedding in 1893, the old Roman nobles, haters of the House of Savoy, used to say: "He has the plebeian habit of being in love with his wife."

Financial Straits.

The only other cloud on their married life was a financial one. Owing to his honorable assumption of his father's debts, Humbert was forced to economize in every possible way. Margherita is naturally extravagant and loved the surroundings and circumstance of royalty. Therefore, like many a humbler husband, the king had to keep a constant watch on his consort's finances. For years, she had her dresses made by Roman modistes of moderate prices; many a rich Italian merchant dressed his wife better than did the King. And when she contracted surreptitiously for a Worth dress, there was a storm in the palace. The time since their silver wedding, which was celebrated in 1893, seems to be the happiest of their lives. Humbert's early unfaithfulness was past and forgiven, and Margherita had outlived her expensive tastes, or, at least, learned to curb them. In these later days, they have often been seen driving through the palace grounds holding hands like young lovers.

King Victor Emmanuel III. Queen Margherita. The New Queen of Italy.

Above all else, Humbert was an honest man. The most prejudiced adherent of the Papal party never denied that. When he came to the throne, he found that his father's private debts came to fifteen million francs. For most European sovereigns, this would not be considered a specially large liability. The British Parliament has paid off much more than that for the Prince of Wales. But poor little Italy, struggling under private poverty and public obligation, would have found it a hard matter. Nevertheless, the Italian Chamber of Deputies offered to assume the burden. Humbert refused. For the honor of the house of Savoy he decided to meet its private liabilities out of his own revenues. His first step was to clear out the army of pensioned sycophants and retainers who had hung on his father's corrupt court. The Countesses and Duchesses raised from the kitchen and the laundry because they pleased the whims of old Emanuel, were cut off with a month's stipend. The notorious Countess Montifiore, the dead king's morganatic wife, received the same treatment. Then, Humbert went to work to dispense with all unnecessary court millinery. The country estates, all but one, were sold. The Queen's household was cut down to a dozen" companions." When this was done, and the proceeds applied to the debt, which was mostly held at ruinous rates of interest, by Roman usurers, it was found that the throne still owed 11,000,000 francs. Humbert went to a bank, like a private citizen, and contracted a loan for the amount, agreeing to pay the interest and 50,000 francs a month on the principal. This promise he kept faithfully, and his death finds the House of Savoy out of debt. His economies went farther than that, for his private charities were extensive. Other monarchs in Europe probably gave away more money in charity than he, but none gave more liberally in proportion to his private means and none was so discriminating. There was no handing out of funds in the lump, or with undue formality; he studied scientific charity and gave where it was needed, and would do the most good. This was one cause of his popularity.

* * *

Humbert's Personal Courage.

Another thing which endeared him to the common people of Italy was his undoubted personal courage. He was the only king of his time of Europe who had been personally on the battlefield. He commanded a battalion of his Savoyards all through the war with Austria and carried himself with distinction. His presence at Naples during the cholera epidemic displayed a rarer sort of personal courage. A story, possibly apocryphal, is told of his conduct at this time. They were preparing a military festival at Pordenone at the time when the news of the epidemic arrived, and he was invited to attend. "At Pordenone there is merrymaking, at Naples there is death," he said. "I will go to Naples." There he staid until after the disease was checked, personally visiting the hospitals, directing the work and paying for necessaries. The summer of the plague is said to have been the only period when he failed to pay the regular monthly installments on his father's debts, all his spare money going to the relief fund.

In spite of this, the attempted assassination of 1878 produced an impression never effaced. From that time on, his rather cold nature turned to suspicion, and he was haunted by fears of anarchists; more especially, he feared for the Queen and Crown Prince. It was many years before he would allow Margherita to drive out with him, for fear that a knife or bullet meant for him would harm her. Only after their silver wedding, when the people of Italy were so genuinely demonstrative, did he resume the regular drives with the Queen. The experience of 1878 was a rather harrowing one, as he was only saved by the devotion of his Prime Minister, who thrust himself between the murderer and the king and took the fatal thrust himself.

Among only one class, except the rabid Papal supporters, was Humbert unpopular. That one was the old Italian nobility, who hated him as an upstart, partly because his ancestry can be dated back only eight hundred years, while theirs goes back to the Ceasars; partly because of his bourgeoise virtues. His love of his wife and his domestic tastes came in for a share of their scorn, while his instalment deal with the savings-banks —in reality one of the most honorable deeds ever done by a king—was regarded as plebeian and below the dignity of a monarch. So it chanced that they avoided his official receptions, "cut" him publicly and showed their scorn on every occasion. It cannot be said that it worried him; like most popular men, Humbert appeared indifferent to popularity.

DAVID RAZETTO.

A Russian Diplomat.---Career of Count Muravieff.

THE power behind the throne in Rnssia, the virtual ruler of the Empire, is dead, and dead at a crisis when the Czar could ill afford to spare him. The sudden passing of Count Muravieff, who has been responsible for every turn of Russian affairs since the present Czar came to the rule, has left Russia virtually without a diplomatic head, just when the great, unquiet Empire is embroiled with its enemies in two directions and stands at a turning-point in its history. That few persons outside of diplomatic circles knew of Muriaveff and his position in Russia until his death is not at all strange, considering the character of the man and his surroundings. Russia being an absolute monarchy, all things are done through and by the Czar, and all the glory accrues to him. Individual fame and glory in a subject—outside the army—is only a means to his downfall. He is the wise statesman in Russia who sinks his personality, deprecates his own influence, and lets his work seem to be the work of the Emperor. Moreover, Muriaveff was naturally the sort of man of affairs who prefers to work beneath the surface, and who takes to Machiavellian diplomacy and manipulation easily and naturally.

This is the sort of statesman most successful in Russia; and Muriaveff was eminently successful. That Russia has opened up a new national domain in Siberia, that she has paved the way for seizing a liberal slice of China, has found an open Pacific port, has been able to crowd and alarm England on the Turkish and Indian borders, are mainly due to this submerged, hidden Bismark.

I saw Muriaveff two years ago in St. Petersburg, just when he had pushed the British diplomats—whom he hated—to the wall, and had proved to the few who knew the workings of the Russian government, the strength of his position. At that time, I had not met Dr. Leyds, the astute and unscrupulous Transvaal agent, but when I had that pleasure this year, I recalled the Russian at once. Differing totally in physical appearance—for the Russian was a big fellow and blonde as an Anglo Saxon while the Boer is a little, dark man with Maylay crescents in his finger-nails—they were yet remarkably alike in manner, in appearance, in external method, so that, in thinking of one, I always think of the other. Indeed, there was more than a superficial resemblance. Muriaveff was a polished, genial-seeming man of the world, as is the Transvaal Machiavelli. Again, he had the same air of humble, meek, Uriah heep piety and smooth deference. Socially, he was charming, a man of the world with high conversational powers. His smooth-shaven face was round, unwrinkled, and even child-like in appearance. His head at the time when I saw him—he was then fifty-three—was as bald as a billiard-ball, and of a blonde pink. Behind his glasses, he carried a small, keen eye with a squint.

Under all this affability of exterior lay a character cold, hard, remorseless, an untiring personal ambition, and one point of conscience—loyalty. This was the single scruple which he possessed; no one ever accused him of any other. Russia being the land of lies, no one lays deceit against the account of anyone, most of all a diplomat, and with the deceitful Count lying was an art. He correlated, he interwove his lies, dodging their consequences, and avoiding the points where they crossed with consummate skill. He may have told the truth to the Czar, but to everyone else—for, in spite of his apparent genialty, he had no intimates—he was a Mephistopheles, with a lie on his heart and a smile on his lips.

Although Muriaveff's real influence extends over many years, his actual accession to power dates from four years back, when he was sent to Denmark as minister. Denmark is the nucleus of the petticoat diplomacy of Europe, owing to favorable marriages made for the family of sisters to which the Princess of Wales belongs; it was here that he fell in with the Dowager Empress of Russia, the head of the conservative faction and at that time the absolute dictator of her son's attitude and opinion on things. She was away from the rivalry of the home court and from any special Moscovite influence except Muriaveff's. He improved the opportunity to worm himself into her confidence. How he did it is, of course, a secret, but it is presumed that he worked on her conservative prejudices and made her believe that his accession to power wonld mean a reactionary movement. Luck favored him; Lebanoff, the Foreign Minister, died just at that juncture; the Empress threw her influence into the opening and placed her favorite. From that moment dates the forward movement in Russian affairs, the extension of the Transiberian Railway, the opening of Port Arthur, all the great expansion in Russian national policy. It is known that Muriaveff was the power back of all these changes. The Transiberian Railway, indeed, was not especially his plan; it was launched long before his time, but he steered it through. All the anxiety caused England by the Russian movements on the Indian and Afghan border was traceable to him, for hatred of the English, Chamberlain in especial, was with him a passion. The British diplomats, accustomed to more direct methods, were no match for him with his Russian way of conducting affairs; he simply wound them around his finger, played with them. Now that his personality has been removed from the foreign situation, a heart-felt sigh of relief has gone up from the English Diplomatic Corps.

AMOS SHELDON.

The Japanese Minister.

THROUGH San Francisco the other day, there passed on his way to Washington—Kogoro Takahira, the new Minister Plenipotentiary of Japan to the United States. Minister Takahira is not a stranger in this country. As member of the Japanese legation from 1879 to 1883, he framed the babyhood of his diplomatic career in Washington. He is now one of Japan's most distinguished diplomats, having filled the office of Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs in Tokio for the past year. He has been Consul-General at New York, Minister to Holland, Minister to Italy and Embassador to the court of Vienna. He expresses himself as delighted with his new post, which, especially in view of the present complications in the Orient, is a most important one. Minister Takahira seems in the prime of life, although he calls himself fifty years old. Short, thick-set, powerful of body, he has a keen eye, a kindly and intelligent face, and manners that are courtesy itself. He travels with his wife, who has accompanied him throughout his diplomatic tribulations.

Kogoro Takahira,
The New Minister Plenipotentiary of Japan to the United States.
Photo by Vaughan & Keith.

The Pope's Day.

THIS is the way in which Pope Leo XIII, passes the summer days. As soon as the birds begin to twitter in the Vatican gardens, and the great bell of St. Peter's strikes six o'clock, His Holiness arises and is assisted in his toilet by Pio Centra, who is his grand and dignified valet. After celebrating mass, and assisting at a second by one of his chaplains, the Pope breakfasts, and then sits down to his pastime of reading the classics or composing Latin poetry, for which he has rare talent. At 9:15 Cardinal Rampolla, the Pontifical Secretary of State is admitted, and the two are frequently transacting church business together until 12 o'clock. A frugal luncheon is then served, and afterwards the aged Pontiff takes an hour's rest. But then Leo XIII immediately resumes his work, remaining at his desk till nearly six o'clock, when he walks, or drives about the beautiful Vatican grounds accompanied by a Cardinal or prelate of his Court and escorted by two of the Pontifical Palace guards. The day closes with rosary and evening prayers, at which a of his immediate entourage assists.

Native Life in Korea.

A School Teacher.

Playing Checkers.

A Lady of Quality.

The Scavenger.

Laundresses Ironing Linen.

"Jiggy Man." Kite-Flying.

Scraps From a Korean Note Book.

BY H. E. BOSTWICK.

The Native Costume.

In leaving the foreign settlement of Seoul for the native quarter proper, there is the greatest contrast between the hurrying energy of the white man and the dead-weight immobility of the brown. The hats, belonging to officials of different grades and their attaches, quite baffle description. Here you see an ugly plum-colored thing, something like one fez upside down and on top of another; or a glazed black structure higher in front than behind, something of the helmet order; or a cloth hat, dark green, which has lost all its stiffness and whose rim is turned up too much and stuck to the crown; or a flat faded velvet affair, embroidered in any color you choose: or a two peaked turban, suggesting a pack saddle but of a flaming scarlet, crusted with a golden wing at one side. This last man, very grand in all his upper garments, as he sits, shines untarnished, but were he to stand, up, you would see he wears someone's cast-off elastic Congress gaiters, all frayed out, and no socks. Splendor and shabbiness go hand in hand in Seoul, and for that matter all over Asia!

* * *

The Deserted Palace.

Early in my visit I went with a party of friends to see one of the four deserted Palace Grounds. This one includes hundreds of acres, beautifully diversified with little lakes, and one of these surrounds a magnificent pavilion, supported on immense stone pillars with a great paved court yard in the front and a long double row of stone columns about two feet in height, each indicating the rank of the persons seeking audience with the King. The largest of the almost numberless buildings is the Audience Hall, with its mast-like pillars supporting a ceiling at an elevation of nearly one hundred feet above a beautiful tiled floor. The dwelling houses of the Royal Family were built upon the banks of the smaller lakes and surrounded by walls for still greater seclusion.

Walls within walls, gates within gates, All now deserted and in ruins. Lovely wild flowers and the exquisite amphilopilis vines growing everywhere, nature weaving a funeral covering for this scene of desolation The white heron, the sacred bird of the Korean mind, were flying in hundreds over our heads in perfect security, no one ever molesting them, they, the Koreans, regarding this bird as a especial friend of man. There are two legends concerning it and firmly believed by the natives. One is that one of these birds once pecked off its bill in frantic effort to ring a temple bell to save a man who was in danger. Another one tells how a hunter shot an arrow through the head of a snake that was about to devour some newly-hatched herons. He, in turn, was saved by the mother bird, who pecked to death a snake that had gotten into the man's stomach while he was drinking from a spring, and the man was not injured. The legend of the "wild goose" and why it is used at marriage ceremonies is equally interesting. No Korean would think himself properly married had he not been presented by his bride with a wild goose, even if it be hired for the occasion. Two deserving people are said to have noticed a goose, whose mate wos killed, return to the place year after year to mourn her loss, and such constancy they seek to commend to their wives. They further pledge each other at this time with these words: "Black is the hair that now crowns our heads; yet when it has become as white as the fibre of the onion root, we shall still be found faithful to each other.

* * *

The Dwellings of the People.

The Korean houses are little straw-thatched huts encircled by mud walls; they look like a bed of thriving mush rooms, these low one-storied houses, with their sloping roofs, some tiled, some turfed, and all a neutral tint. With us, the practical question is: By what labor-saving devices one man may be enabled to accomplish the work of ten? In Korea and China as well, the opposite question is the subject of constant and anxious study: with an excessive population, how may any given piece of work be so divided and subdivided as to furnish the largest sustenance to the largest possible nnmber of persons? With both these people, nothing, absolutely nothing, is lost or wasted. The smallest rags and shreds of cloth are saved-was told that half the houses in Peking are built of fragments of brick that have been in use for centuries. In the country in Korea the weeds and grass by the wayside are carefully gathered by women and children, the entire surface being scratched over and over again and this refuse dried for fuel. When I inquired if the Korean paper was made from rags, the reply was, "No, there are no rags." In many of these lines it is cheaper for us to waste than to save—it is just the opposite with these people.

The wall of Seoul is punctured by eight gates of enormous size, adorned with figures in bronze or iron of demons of various sizes, and are closed at night fall. Their greyness and solidity seem more like the work of nature than of man. This wall, always an interesting study to me, defines the city wtih a strange outline; now and then, it drops down into a tiny valley, but generally it pulls itself up to the very top of the rugged mountains. I took many an evening walk along this wall and enjoyed the gorgeous sunsets.

* * *

Swing Day, and the Valley of Lillies.

The streets of Seoul are narrow and tortuous. I was sure to get lost without a guide. On each side is an open gutter (called Gatchen in the Korean) into which the refuse and sewarage of the houses and every other useless thing is thrown.

Now and then a street has not even a gutter. In this case the roadway is the receptacle of every species of filth. On every hand there is an atmosphere of age and moldering memories. In all well-to-do Korean homes you will find the gilt and black tablets inscribed with the names of the departed. Before these tablets the smoke of incense and sacrifice arise daily. In the homes of the poor the evil spirits are their constant dread, and often, over the little doors to the house, I saw little heaps of offensive matter placed to keep them out.

Each day almost, I saw great gaudy paper fishes hanging here and there about the city and learned their meaning to be that a male child had been born in the house over which this fish was hung!

June 12th was "Swing Day." Towards evening a little party of us went out to the Great South Gate to a Buddhist Temple far up on the hillside and, on our way, saw hundreds of swings and crowds of people, old and young, going and coming and swinging. They do not swing as we do. Usually two men or two boys stand in the swing, face to face, and as they go up and come down their long outside gown floats in the air, making a picturesque appearance among the foliage and green trees. Our walk back was for a long way just outside the wall, threading our way along the narrow streets filled with the odd people, who have an unpleasant way of following or crowding around foreigners. The city has long since outgrown its walls and nearly as many lives outside as inside them.

I had one interesting day with friends in a beautiful valley, out and beyond the noted Peking Pass, a narrow natural cut through the mountain range. This valley is rightly named the "Lilly of the Valley" valley, as this delicate, sweet flower grows wild there in great profusion and the atmosphere is filled with its subtle fragrance.

* * *

A Korean Social Affair.

I was invited to the birthday party of an old Korean woman, 61 years of age, this particular number being of traditional importance with this peculiar people. She was a Christian, and all her household—being members of the Chong Dong church. There were perhaps twenty women and girls in the little court and house and as many men and boys in quite another part, for not even a birthday party can break in on their social laws, which decree the separation of the sexes. Being a friend of her friends the missionaries, I was admitted into full communion in the affair, even to going into the little eight by eight room or "Kang" occupied by the old lady, where a little table was spread with the Korean feast. Miss Wambold sitting on the floor on one side and I on the other, and the open door and window was filled with the curious crowd. Now, I really made a strong effort to eat, but not one mouthful would my untrained stomach receive. The missionary who was with me explained to them that I had had my tiffin; but she really did eat a little, though she confessed to me on the way home that her stomach "burned within her." The chief dish, and the dish on all occasions, is called "kim che," and is composed of onions, dried fish, and red and green peppers.

* * *

The Sacred Mountains.

"Nam San" mountain is situated in the heart of the city and is heavily wooded and regarded as sacred. The view from the top, 800 feet above the city and rising directly out of it, of the gleaming grey pinnacles of the nearby mountain ranges and the beautiful river Han, hurrying to the sea, with its broad and shining coils, is simply magnificent. The background of Fuson itself is formed by wild and desolate hills with a fringe of firs bristling on the sky line and bright red terraces of cultivated soil below. To the imaginative Oriental people mountains mean much more than they do to us; they are the abodes of the divinities—the Fire God, the God of War, both live near Seoul in the mountains. I was reminded of the Syrians when they were beaten by the Children of Israel—"Their Gods are Gods of the Hills, therefore they were stronger than we." These mountains about Seoul rise, in many places, like almost perpendicular battlements or huge rock-bound fortresses.

The Personality of Sir Robert Hart.

AMID the uncertainty, alarm and despair caused by the obscure news from China, men that know place whatever hope there remains a-glimmering in the influence of one man—Sir Robert Hart, Inspector-General of the Chinese Imperial Maritime Customs. He alone, it is felt, of all foreigners, has gained sufficient confidence and respect from the Chinese Mandarins to make them understand the terrible consequences that would recoil upon them from the massacre of the envoys of the Powers. He alone can give them an idea of the implacable vengeance—the vengeance of the whole white race—that they would call down upon themselves. He alone can do this, for he is the only white man who has ever gained the confidence of the Chinese Government.

* * *

For forty years Sir Robert Hart has controlled the Chinese Foreign Customs service. He is one of the greatest mandarins in China. From the standing-desk in his little office in Pekin, he collects the revenues of the largest empire on earth, governs the municipalities of thirty or forty ports over a coast-line of 4000 miles, protects the shipping of that coast by a fleet of gunboats and a splendid system of light-houses, regulates the going and coming of great freight carriers, issues monthly, quarterly and yearly yellow books of statistics and reports, and controls a staff of over 500 Europeans and 2000 natives of the most efficient civil service known. Besides, he finds time to negotiate the big Chinese loans, to advise the Tsung-li-Yamen on foreign relations, and to fish the latter body out of the hot water in which it is perpetually hurling itself.

* * *

The man who does this is now seventy years old. He is a self-centered unassuming person, of gracious manners and manifest strength of will. He is spare of figure and his hair and beard are iron-gray. Although hospitable, his official residence being a social center for the white colony of Peking who attend religiously his weekly dinner and dance, yet he lives very much alone. In the service, he is merely "the I. G.," a mysterious, never-seen, all-seeing "something" which is hardly thought of as a man, but a mere mystical abstraction that understands and directs. Not ten per-cent of his employees have ever seen their chief, and yet it is a common saying that in the service, you cannot flirt with a woman, buy a pony, or play a game of cards without a little bird at once carrying the tale to the "I. G." at Peking and probably bringing down one of the famous "threatening letters."

* * *

Sir Robert receives no fixed salary. From the immense revenue which he collects and turns into the Imperial coffers, he takes what sum he pleases for the expenses of the service and his own renumeration. Because of the appalling corruption of Chinese officialdom, the receipts from the Maritime Customs are the one sure source of revenue of the Celestial government, so that Sir Robert may well be said to hold the purse of the Empire.

The analogy between the present situation in China and others in the past is shown strikingly by an adventure that happened to Hart thirty years ago. It was in 1860, in the midst of the Anglo-Franco-Chinese war. France and Great Britain had joined hands in an endeavor to chastize the great yellow dragon for some massacre of Christians. Tien-Tsin was taken by the allies after a bombardment of the Taku forts, and a march was begun toward Peking (Does not this seem a reporting of present events?) Then the wily Chinese began to temporize. They wanted to negotiate. The allies sent commissioners under small escorts to Peking. The commissioners and their escorts were taken by the Celestials, placed in iron-cages too low to allow of standing, too narrow to allow of lying down, and they were perambulated in these for the amusement of the populace. At each stopping place little momentoes (ears, finger-tips, toes, pieces of nose or tongue) of the foreign devils were distributed to the mobs. This lasted for weeks and few lived to see the capture of Peking, which freed them. Among those who survived, however, was Hart, then a young financial agent.

Notwithstanding his early experiences, Sir Robert Hart has faith in the Chinese. No people, according to him, are easier to deal with. "I would rather," he once said, "walk through China with a baby in my arms than with a revolver."

PEOPLE and THINGS

Dusty San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, we must agree, is a windy city. There is no use trying to hide the fact, no use prevaricating to ourselves—in San Francisco the wind does blow. Take a stroll along the streets. It is windy. Everything proclaims the fact—the dust and pulverization of the great city's refuse strikes your face like sand-blast, enters your nose, your mouth, your eyes; you must tack carefully to round the corners; women's skirts flap up against your legs with buzzing violence. The fact is imprinted in the mannerisms of the citizens. A San Francisco man's habitual expression is a puckered-up resistance, a closing as far as possible of all facial interstices. His habitual fashion of wearing his hat is screwed down upon his ears and nose; his habitual walk to tack along with body tilted toward one side or the other at an angle of 45 degrees. When he stands, it is with legs spread out like a compass. When he laughs it is with teeth tightly clenched. When he runs after a hat it is with the grace of a skilled energy. We can no more hide the fact that he is from a windy city, than a Chinaman can hide the fact that he comes from China.

Now why should not everybody admit that fact and act accordingly? Why should not the Board of Public Works admit the fact and act accordingly?

***

The Remedy.

THE streets of San Francisco are really almost unbearable on account of the dust. If the dust was pure, pulverized, mineral deposit, he would not mind so much. But to have one's ears and nose and eyes and mouth constantly filled with powdered and concentrated animal and vegetable detritus is unpleasant and unhealthy. The only remedy for this is sprinkling. San Francisco is, from its topography, in an exceptional situation. Exceptional measures should be taken to meet this situation. Exceptional street-sprinkling should be done. Otherwise, San Francisco will always be an exceptionally unpleasant and dirty city. All cities try to neutralize their natural advantages. The natural disadvantage of San Francisco is dust. Let us lay the dust.

***

President Wheeler's Conservatism.

I HAD expected that after his eastern trip President Wheeler of the University of California would begin the long-expected pruning of his faculty. But the conservative head of the institution at Berkeley has disappointed us again. A lot of studious young fellows, most of them graduates of the University, have been appointed instructors and a retired United States army officer has been selected for the head of the Military Department; that is all. Of course, Dr. Wheeler must know his own business better than I, and must have his reason for leaving affairs in statuo quo. We are aware of his aversion to noise and notoriety—wherein he is in pleasing contrast to the head of the rival institution—and, perhaps, he believes in evolution rather than in revolution, but the evolution strikes me as somewhat slow.

Dr. Wheeler has the love and the enthusiastic support of his students and the confidence of the Regents, which means more than most people would believe. Nevertheless, I am driven to wonder if Professor Wheeler knows all that is going on in some departments of his university. If he does, he must share in the general opinion that a cleaning-out is necessary. Not only are certain professors superannuated and notoriously incapable, but some departments are shams all the way through.

***

Incompetent Professors.

For instance there is a Modern Language Department where eighteen lauguages are spoken with jargonic effect and none worse than the one supposed to be taught. There, the student learns a sort of Volapuk-hash which, in the innocence of his heart, he thinks one of the great modern tongues. In another Modern Language Department, a course in a sonorous, southern language is given by a man those only safety lies in a handicap of a few pages which he has gained on his class and which he holds diligently, while another sonorous and no less southern language is taught by a person who learns in Oakland in the morning what he teaches in Berkeley in the afternoon. A third dialect, a polite and a refined tongue, is represented by two good professors, who, however, are seconded by three instructors who could not glide through the intricacies of a dinner menu. In some other departments, although in lesser degree, similar conditions prevail. One of the technical schools has for head a gentleman whose chief prestige lies in an immaculate frock-coat incasing a most splendid physical form. Another—but enough. President Wheeler is probably aware of all this. I hope that, since his mills grind exceedingly slow, they also grind exceedingly fine.

***

The Departure of the Third Artillery.

DEPARTURE of the Third Artillery for China, last week, measured the reduction of our patriotic hysterics. When the Spanish War was new, the First Infantry was the first regiment ordered out of San Francisco. It had been quartered here for many years, the men had married San Francisco women, the officers were figures in local society. Consequently, the personal feeling was added to our enthusiasm at their departure. No greater crowd gathered that year, even when our own volunteers went away. There was little cheering, and little visible enthusiasm, but it was from excess rather than lack of feeling. People were literally afraid to trust their voices. And now, the Third Artillery, which has also been at San Francisco so long that it is part of the city, gets away for a war which the United States army considers sure death, and not a living soul save their own families and friends, goes a half block to watch them march away. The departure of the Hancock was watched by only a very small crowd, and there was no decoration on the proceeding. If the women cried, it was for grief over their own, not from sentimental hysteria, and they did it quietly and in the corners. Business it was, not glory; the regular has indeed displaced the volunteer.

***

The Nome Liar Changes His Tune.

WHEN the Nome craze was new, the papers of this grand and glorious country could not say too much in praise of the northern gold camp. Now that the reaction has set in and the failures are drifting back on the return steamers, the papers, as is their wont, have gone to the opposite extremes and are denouncing the whole stampede as a hoax. There seems to be as little ground for the late "roasts" of the camp as for the over-drawn and excessive praise in which certain sensational papers indulged last spring. No one with any common sense expected that everyone of the thousands who rushed north in June last were going to get rich. There were bound to be people unprepared with the necessities for living and mining, people who could not see a business chance if it walked up to them, people who would be incompetent in any business whatsoever. Nothing else was to be expected. It is these very failures who come back first and it is they who do the talking just now. The successful miners and business men are staying, and they have too much work on hand to take time to write letters to the press. The camp is overcrowded, I grant that, and it is not all that it was said to be by correspondents who were making copy last spring—else the world,s gold supply would be doubled—by now—but the wealth is there, just the same, as will be proved when the summer clean-up comes out.

***

The Despair of Prof. Jaffa.

With a regularity that might be called punctuality, one finds displays in the Sunday supplements of Professor Jaffa's babies. They are the favorite subject of the Sabbath editor. Whenever there is a vacant space among the blanket pages—a space the filling of which has defied the ingenuity of the staff, a man is detailed to go forth to Berkeley and obtain the latest tales about the Jaffa nursery. This Jaffa is assistant professor of——— at the University of California, and his wife is a physician of unusual intelligence. By reason of the parents' professions, it was assumed by the busy university world that the latest practices of medicine would be expressed in the upbringing of their offspring. This was quite enough for the purpose. For Sabbath supplement usages, a theory with names is ever so much more flexible than a fact. In thinking up extraordinary things to be done to the Jaffa babes, much ingenuity has been exercised—in local editorial rooms. We have had them figuring as the victims of stern dietary systems (illustrated); we have had them exercising their infantile muscles (illustrated); we have been told of the eccentric manner in which their brains and memories have been developed (illustrated). Yet there is a man over in Berkeley who persists in denying that he entertains any undue theories about infant culture, who declares that his little ones are reared just as are the offspring of all other intelligent parents—his name is Professor Jaffa

LORD ROBERTS:

***

Two Tales on W. R. Hearst.

IT grieves my artistic soul that W. R. Hearst did not go on with his vice-presidential campaign and secure the nomination. The crusade to follow would have been one to give joy to the heart. Without doubt, he would have taught us a new way of electing or defeating a vice-president, as he has taught us a new way of running a sensational newspaper. Which reminds me of two good stories they are telling in New York about the vaudeville methods of journalism trained into his staff. It appears that during the equinoctial storms of this spring news came into the Journal office that a party was shipwrecked on a little island down the coast. A tug was fitted out and loaded with provisions and the most vivid space-writers to be spared; the engraving department got ready for rush orders and the business office made preparations to open a subscription for the needy subscribers. When the tug reached the island, they found a happy party of campers having the best time of their lives. "Shipwrecked!" they said, "why, you're crazy." But the Journal men had come to rescue, and refused to depart empty-handed at the risk of their situations. A compromise was finally effected; half of the party agreed to be "rescued" and carried off to New York, while the other half stayed. Thus the reporters saved their positions and the paper had its sensation.

* * *

Later on, it occurred to Mr. Hearst that a little charity to the sweltering children of the tenements would look well on the front page. So he packed a squad of the dirtiest little boys and girls available, and sent them down to Coney Island to splash in the surf and dig on the beach for a week. They were put in charge of a "cub" reporter from the country who had orders to "take them out, keep them going, and get in a column a day, top-head." The weather changed in the night, and the week turned out to be the coldest known in New York for many a summer. Nevertheless, the "bright young man" had his orders. He dragged his victims out, carted them to the island, handed around pails and set them to digging and wading. All that week the farmhouses of Coney Island were besieged by barefoot children with pails and shovels begging a chance to come in and get warm. Before they were comfortably settled at the fire, the Journal man would rush in and drag them off to the water. "Here, here," he would say, "you've come to dig in the sand and splash in the water and you've got to do it." At the end of the week, when he returned his squad, and started to get a new supply, the inhabitants of the "sweltering tenements" rose en masse, laid him out with clubs and rocks, and defied philanthropy. Worst of all, the Journal had to pay the resulting doctor-bills in order to hush up the story.

BOSWELL, JR.

Baccaret is now prohibitited in Russia, even in private houses, by a ukase of the Czar. For a first offence the punishment will be a heavy fine, for a second a long term of imprisonment.

What Dreams May Come.

BY GELETT BURGESS.

(Copyrighted in the United States and England by Gelett Burgess.)

AY, there's the rub! If we could but forecast our dreams, who would care to keep awake? In that we are no further advanced than in the time of Pythagoras, still clumsy, ignorant amateurs in this fascinating and mysterious game, played by every race and condition of men under the moon. There are some, may be, who do not dream, poor half-made men and women, to whom a waking, literal prosaic life is the whole of existence. They stay idly at home, while you and I take ship upon the Unknown Sea, and navigate unchartered waters every night. Then we are poets, dunces, philosophers, clowns or madcaps of sorts in a secret carnival, changing not only our costumes, but often our very selves, doffing conscience, habit and taste, to play a new part at each performance.

If we could but manage this rare show, and not be mere marionettes, wired to the finger of the magician, what tremendous adventures might we not undertake! We have rare glimpses of the Lesser Mysteries, but the inner secrets of that inconsequent empire are still undiscovered. The revels confound us; we are whirled, intoxicated or drugged, into a realm of confusion, and, out of touch with senses, reason, and will, we cannot quite keep our heads clear. How many of us have tried to "dream true" like Peter Ibbetson, even to obeying the foolish formula he described, lying hands under head, foot upon foot, murmuring his magic words.

Try as we may, those of us who are true dreamers can never quite accept the psychologist's explanation of dreams. Some cases may be easily understood, perhaps, such as the physiological influence of a Welsh rarebit, a superabundance of covers, or suggestive noises. We may account, too, for those absurd visions that appear so often on awakening, when one sense after another comes breaking into our consciousness, and when the mind, summoned suddenly to construct some reasonable incongruous relation between floating pictures, seizes upon any explanation, however ridiculous. But of deeper dreams, dreams logical or meaningful, dreams that recur or are shared by others, modern science does not give any satisfactory theory and we are forced, willingly enough, no doubt, to apply the hypotheses of mysticism.

There are dreams, too, so progressive and educational, that they seem to involve a new science unknown in this workaday world. So many of us have had experiences with levitation in our dream life, that we are, so to speak, a cult. I began by jumping, timing each spring with the exact moment of alighting from a previous leap, profiting by the rebound, and, after many experiments, I am now able to float in the air, even accomplishing that most difficult of all feats, rising from in the air by a deliberate concentrated effort of will, even while lying on my back. Yet all of us, jumpers, flyers or floaters, must wait till that wonderful dream comes to us, after months may be, to indulge in that most exhilarating pastime.

Children's dreams are (until they are cruelly undeceived) quite as real as their waking moments, and it may be that we shall, in time, learn the forgotten art from them. It is dependent, no doubt, upon their power of visualizing imagined objects, but this ability to call up the images of anything they think of is as soon lost as their belief in dreams. Though the habit fades and is forgotten in the growing reality of our outward life, it may not be impossible, with practise, to regain the proficiency, for, at times of great physical fatigue the power comes back, often intensified almost to the point of hallucination. If we could train our imagination, then, and learn to see pictures when our eyes are shut, these might become more accurate and real so that, at the moment of sinking into unconsciousness, as we lose hold on tangible things, the vision would become one with the reality, and, still imagining and creating, we might pass over the footlights and dream true. To most of us there comes a recognizable moment when we know we are just at the border of sleep; if we could then with our last effort of will keep control of the moving pictures, we might go wherever we wished.

We might learn, too, to remember more of what happens in the night. We usually give what has passed in dream no more than an indulgent smile, and forget the strangeness of it all as soon as we are well awake. It is as if we had hurriedly turned the pages of an illustrative book. We recall, here and there, a few striking pictures, beautiful or comic, and the volume is replaced upon the shelves, not to be taken down till the next evening. It is a book from which we learn little; its contents are not even amusing to any one else, who has as fanciful tales in his own dreamland library. If we could, upon first awakening, impress our minds with the reality of our dreams, we might be able to recall more and more, and find that, in spite of their incongruity there was some law which governed their visitation and some meaning in their grotesque patterns.

To one who dreams frequently, bed-time cannot fail to be something to look forward to, to hope and to prepare for with efforts to capture in the net of sleep some beautiful dream. May we not, sometime, find the proper bait, and lie down confident that we shall be duly enchanted in some delightful way according to our desires? Till then, we must each buy our nightly ticket in Sleep's lottery, and draw a blank or a prize, as Morpheus wills. Some say that the most refreshing sleep is absolute unconsciousness of time—that one should shut one's eyes, only to open them in the morning, with the night all unaccounted for. But no true dreamer will assent to this; he knows it is not so. And, for my part, I would have the fiercest nightmare that ever raged, rather than no dream at all!

Stately Homes of Chili.

Continued from page four.

notable structure in any city. The interior is nobly spacious its salas superbly furnished. The palace of the Archbishop of Chili has all the air of a public edifice. It, too, is finely proportioned, with an elaborately pillared facade and adjoins the cathedral on the Plaza de Armis.

Many of Santiago's palaces are located on the Alameda. Each of them is lavish of expenditure in furnishings and decoration, but has not always character. The homes of Rafael Casanovia, Quesney MacKenna and Ramon Cruz, are three notable structures adjoining each other. Their facades are identical, but their interiors materially differ. In the house of Ramon Cruz is one of the most noted rooms in Chili. It is a grand "sala" or public reception room cut off at one end by a stage for musicians, and almost its entire wall space covered by immense mirrors mounted in stucco. The effect is striking, and the hall when illuminated, presents a dazzling glitter.

On the country estates of the Chilenos, however, are by far the most interesting mansions. These grand areas have been developed to a high degree of productiveness, and there is scarcely an estate which has not its picturesque residence with flower gardens, well kept lawns, fountains, and whatever else can charm the eye. Here then, is the true home of the Chileno, where, uncramped by the city's confines, he lives among the beauties of nature which have been so well developed by the hand of man as to render the "Lone Star" Republic one of the most prolific regions of the earth.

A splendid example of this class of Chilean homes is the estate known as Lo Hermida, a short distance outside the limits of Santiago. The rancho has been under cultivation for generations, and is the oldest, as well as best known property in this section of the Republic. It was originally a portion of the Errazuriz estates but has lately passed into the hands of Belisario Espinola. He paid over half a million pesos for it. The palatial residence, though effective, in its charming surroundings, seems a strange architectural fancy here, as it follows the idea of an old European feudal castle.

Panquehue, another estate belonging still to the Errazuriz family, is located in the Province of Los Andes. Its broad acres are exceedingly fertile and produce some of the best wines grown in the Republic. The residence at Panquehue is not so elaborate or costly as some of the others, but the Errazuriz homestead is both pretty and picturesque. The house, large in the beginning, has been added to frequently, until it covers a large area, while still maintaining a symmetry of architecture that is admirably suited to its environment. This house for years, has been famed for its hospitality and the richness of its furnishings. The noted family, producing two Chilean Presidents, has for more than a century been a byword in Chili for lavish entertaining.

Near the estates of Panquehue are the Cousino Country properties. They are also noted for the lavish hospitality offered strangers, for their wines, and natural beauties. On all of these places there are hundreds of natives who, while only employed intermittently, manage to secure during the year, sufficient work to supply their needs, and pass the rest of their time amusing themselves, in lazy, Latin fashion. The Chileno in his native state regards labor as a discipline that should only be undergone to provide the absolute necessities of life. He dwells, his whole existence through, close by the homestead of his employers, the son following the father in tilling of the soil for the great land owners, considering himself a part of the estate.

It is an almost Arcadian existence, this dreamy life on the fertile mesas of Chili, where nature herself furnishes almost everything that is necessary to man's subsistence. Here, the wealthy Chileno dreams away his allotted years, adding the spice of change by an annual sojourn at the Capital during the fashionable season, or varying this with a few weeks of summer pleasuring at the seaside. DOUGLAS WHITE.

The Transport Hancock at the Dock.

Lieut. H. C. Evans, Jr.

Captain Humphreys, Commanding the Battalion.

Departure of the Third Artillery for China.

IN THE SWIM.

International Polo.

The international-match bee is buzzing in the bonnets of the eastern polo players, and this fact has revived interest in the game the country over, even in this remote fastness of the Pacific Coast. The tournament at Burlingame this month will probably be one of the best held in years, the players being inspired by the hope that in some season not far distant they will have a chance to meet the Rockaways or some other Eastern club, with a view to sending the winners to England.

The proposed international match was made possible by Foxhall Keene and a few other polo enthusiasts, who went to England on their own responsibility early in the summer and were beaten after a hard struggle. The American four were not a representative lot, however, and the Englishmen, in a spirit of fairness, proposed to take steps for a return match on American soil. The arrangements are well under way, and when Keene left England last month the polo men of that country were in expectation of bringing off the match either this summer or next. If they come, their appearance will not be confined to one series of games; they will play a circuit, taking in the larger Eastern cities and possibly Chicago.

If this is brought about, the American Polo Association will try to make the international match a regular thing, like the yacht-race. There was such an arrangement at one time, but the matches were dropped after the English carried away the trophy in 1886

The chief bar to the project is the great cost of English polo ponies and the consequent aversion of their owners to chancing a sea-voyage with them. A good specimen brings about £700 or £800, and £1000 is often paid for an especially fine one. A really great pony is held beyond all value. Therefore, each member of a visiting team would risk horseflesh worth nearly $20,000 in his string of four or five. Then again, polo is an expensive game, standing next to yachting in that respect, and an international match is very costly.

Lawn Tennis Champions.

The Hardys went down rather easily in the eastern tennis tournament, proving that we are farther behind the East than the results at Del Monte seemed to show. It is true that the Whitneys are probably better individual players than the Hardys, but they are not enough better to have gone much further up in the eastern rankings. We are still pretty far to the rear in amateur athletics, as the University of California track team learned in May.

Now comes one Miles, the English court tennis champion and a professional expert in all kinds of racket games, and tells us that the best Eastern cracks are behind the best Englishmen, lacking their form and knowledge of the game. He admits that our men are more alert and have possibly more native ability, but believes that the finished, easy playing of the Dohertys, Mahoney, Nesbit, or Eaves would be too much for the best Americans.

His comment that "tennis is a game for a man of leisure" explains the difference. The best English experts have practically nothing to do bu play tennis. They keep in practice all the year round and are at the top notch rather late than early in life, at a time when the American player has put up his rackets and gone to work at something. This may explain, also, our inferiority on the Coast. We have not quite so much leisure lying around loose as they have in the East.

Decline of the Frock Coat.

Now that the London Times has announced on authority that the tall hat and frock coat, which hitherto has been recognized as the costume for Sandowne Park on the occasion of the royal visit, might be dispensed with during the very warm weather of last week in favor of the straw hat and cooler clothes, an opportunity presents itself for an enterprising leader of men's fashion to suggest a proper substitute for the frock coat during the summer season. The Englishman has clung to his frock and his high hat in all seasons and Americans who went to London have been forced to follow his example if they did not want to be unpleasantly conspicuous. The resulting discomforts were charged up to conventionality. The frock coat has lost favor here during the warm season and for the past two years when society has been mustered for country weddings and similar gatherings, a noticeable number of men have had the courage to dress for comfort and discard the frock coat and high hat. Undoubtedly the London Times had royal authority for its announcement of last week, and before it was published several well-known Englishmen had written letters to that paper condemning the high hat for summer, If the hot weather has made unbearable this traditional head covering of Englishmen it has served a good purpose.

Extortionate Parisians.

The robbery of strangers in Paris continues. From the boy who demands a pourboire for signaling an omnibus or cab to stop, to the maitre-d'hotel at the Cafe de Paris, Paillard's and the Cafe d'Ilena, which are the three most noted robber-dens in the gay city, and who turn up their noses at less than a twenty-franc fee, extortion meets even the experienced visitor at every turn. A friend tells me that he paid four dollars for a portion of asparagus for himself and wife at the Cafe d'Ilena on a recent evening, and another friend, who gave a dinner there for which he was charged eight hundred francs, handed the waiter a thousand-franc note in payment. When the change was returned to him it was in loose silver. As the waiter departed with a liberal fee, an idea occurred to him. He called him back and took up the reckoning from the plate, to find under it four louis, or sixteen dollars, in gold, which should have been given him in the change. The only satisfaction he obtained was to call the proprietor a robber.

It is curious that visitors to Paris will patronize such thieving resorts as the Cafe de Paris, Pallard's, the Cafe d'Ilena and other resorts where no prices are placed on the bills of fare. They simply place themselves at the mercy of highwaymen in dress suits. I have never seen money so recklessly and foolishly spent in Paris as during this year, and I regret to say that the Americans lead in this "bloomin' nonsense."

The Yacht as a Home.

A fad recently developed among certain members of Gotham's millionairedom is to pass nights on their yachts. Every morning from nine to ten a flotilla bears down upon the city front from up the sound, the Hudson, down the Bay, from Westchester, Long Island and Jersey. The white-hulled vessels drop anchor off the Battery, and a swarm of dingies, and whitehalls, and launches dart out from their sides and deposit upon land the men that do and undo Wall-street. From two to five, the reverse process takes place. The little dingies scurry back to the white-flanked ships; these weigh anchor and soon scatter in the distance toward the Sound, up the Hudson, down the Bay, towards Westchester, Long Island, and Jersey.

These floating homes of millionaires and multimillionaires are sumptuous palaces. Steel-hulled, fine-lined, they cut through the water at twenty knots. Saloons and state-rooms of magnificence, private suites and elaborate bath-rooms, billiard-rooms, side-boards glistening with silver and crystal, satisfy the taste for comfort and ease of the master. Private theatricals, dances, and dinners are frequently on board, and many a gigantic speculation game is planned over an evening smoke. Night comes and the man with a dozen irons in the financial fire forgets them to sleep a few cool hours on the water, lulled by the quiet rocking of his palatial cradle.

Politics as well as pleasure is played aboard these craft. The Wild Duck, property of Gen. Francis Greene, Chairman of the New York County Committee, is frequently used for political conferences. J. Pierpont Morgan's Corsair does duty for financial plotting besides bringing the Morgan family down from their country home to do town-shopping. The Kanawha of John B. Duncan is one of the speeds of the fleet, her twin screws humming her along twenty-one knots with ease. The Loando is chartered by Charles R. Flint, the nitrate king who makes her his country home. A. L. Barber, of asphalt fame, passes his nights on the Juanita. The Lucille, the baby of the fleet takes H. Hoxer to and from his home at Huntington. Mr. Lydenberg, the lace manufacturer travels on the Theresa, while the Union runs to West Brigton, with the Hortons, bankers. Many of the New Yorkers, who cannot afford a boat of their own, club together and form parties of five or ten to hire one, and the flotilla is growing every day.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Mackay.

Mrs. Mackay has felt so terribly the death of her elder son that she has scarcely entertained since that dreadful epoch in her life. But she has now in London her son Clarence and his bride; and the door is once more open at Carlton House Terrace to her friends. She recently gave a concert to a small party—some hundred and fifty of her friends, and there her son and his bride were welcomed to this country. Mrs. Clarence Mackay is a tall brunette, with a beautiful and exquisitely graceful figure, has fine, regular features, beautiful large brown eyes, and an expression at once of amiability and of perfect frankness and simplicity that made every one take to her at once. She was very tastefully dressed; her one ornament was a large tiara of diamonds with large turquoise model. This simplicity brought into relief the beauty of the tiara, and was considered by everybody as far more graceful and striking than if she had spread a quantity of jewellery over her dress, as so many ladies are foolish enough to do.

MEDITATIONS OF A MATRON.

BY MRS. CRICKET.

NEVER before have I realized how difficult it is to hurry dressmakers, my dear Diary. Owing to the fire at Castle Crags I am in view of a new wardrobe. I hate to get things between seasons still one cannot be at Del Monte and not dress. I spent the beginning of last week at San Rafael, but going to town daily made me so tired I decided to remain here until I was ready to go away. Mama was at Del Monte so I telegraphed her to come up to help her child buy some clothes. It so flattened her that she has been amiable ever since.

All the resorts are pretty quiet now, and a great many people, especially those who have children at school, are returning to town. I shall be glad to be at Del Monte during August for it is always gay and jolly and the weather so perfect. Everyone I know is to be there for the six day's sports. In fact, a number of people are coming up from Los Angeles and Santa Barbara to have some fun that is fun. Mr. Henry Scott is giving a cup for the golf champion. There will be baseball and races, and what I like best of all, Polo. Arthur is simply mad about polo. Robert is supplying him with horses, much to my chagrin, for I do not approve of Arthur taking that attitude towards my husband. Robert has been up at the County Club deer hunting this last week having a fine time. I am delighted he likes hunting and fishing for I think a man gets a better rest that way than any other. He wanted Arthur to accompany him but Arthur could not leave his ponies. The Santa Barbara polo players insist that their team is infinitely stronger this year than last, and they are going to give the Burlingamites a harder time in the fight for the trophy.

I went to the matinee on Wednesday to see "His Excellency the Governor." I did not specially enjoy the piece, but a great many of the girls were there and we had a nice time together. The Hopkins, Morgans, and Helen Dean and I went and had tea afterwards at the "Sign of the Peacock." I like that place, it is so different from any other out here.

Most of the more enlightened girls, in other words, Leila's friends, are quite enthusiastic about Burton Holmes' lectures. Besides the talks the pictures are simply superb. I have been to the Tivoli, too, to hear the opera. I think it exceedingly good. I am so fond of opera for itself. Mama says she really only cares for opera when it is a fashionable event and she can wear her stunningest gowns and sit be-diamoned out of all recognition in a box. I, however, really care for music, so Arthur and I went to hear 'Aida' Monday night. He has never yet missed a performance of Aida. It is one of his favorite operas. I do not think the music of any but of "Tristram" appeals to me as much. The Tivoli was packed on Monday and the audience most enthusiastic. I think I saw every musical person in town enjoying it.

In a letter from Leila I hear that the great event of her life is to take place in September. She will be married at Del Monte. There is a dear little church there just outside of the grounds. She will invite her guests from town and have a special train return with them in the evening. She will remain there as Mr. Taunton wishes to spend some months on this coast. I was quite surprised at Leila's letter, for both Robert and I thought she had entirely forgotten her fiance's very existence. Leila is a very queer girl, and one I think not apt to make an ordinary man particularly happy. She has broken off this engagement now three times, but he told me when I saw him in New York he was determined on marrying Leila and I am glad she has at last consented to set the date. He will not arrive in California until after the sports at Del Monte, as he is very averse to forming new friends. Reggie Taunton is the most versatile man I have ever met. He is witty and merry and sings delightfully all sorts of songs. He paints, and makes smart after-dinner speeches. Now what more could one desire in a man? He neither drinks nor smokes and does not know what it means to be moody. Fancy Leila even thinking of breaking off an engagement to a man like that. Leila's friends are all so anxious to see him. She is going to have the six of her girl friends who are not yet married, for bridesmaids, and all her married friends at her table afterwards. The best man and six other fellows will come out here with Reggie. One of them, by the way, at one time was himself engaged to Leila. Arthur will not be at the wedding as he and Mr. Taunton are really old fashioned deadly enemies. I think it is Arthur's fault but Leila says Reggie is equally to blame. As it is all about a horse deal there is no possible chance of a reconciliation.

Now Diary dear, except that Caro Crockett is staying at the Hotel Rafael with the McBeans and Ella Bender with Katherine Dillon and that Molly Thomas is the very prettiest girl over in Marin County, I think I have told you all the news of this week.

HANDICAPPED - Told in Two Letters.

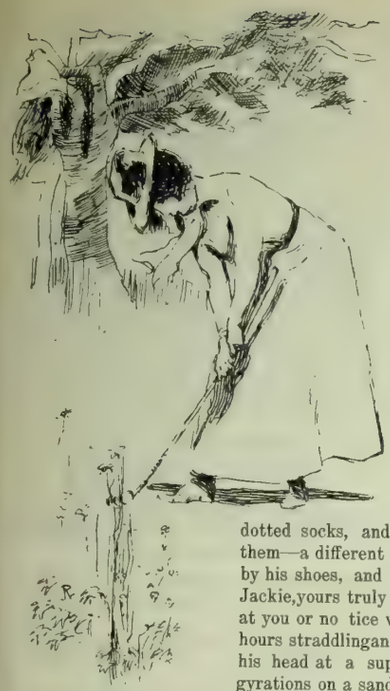
BY GRACE A. LUCE



GLADYS TO JACK.

MY dear Jackie—I suppose I am a summer girl. Everyone seems to think so, and I'm sure I'm having a perfectly lovely time. My new bathing suit is too sweet for anything, and my golf skirt hangs like a dream. I wear my red coat wherever I go and a sailor with a red pugaree. As to flirting—you know I must just keep my hand in, and I'm practicing on two college kids, somebody's grandpapa and the hotel entertainer. I get around to each about once a day. One of the college boys wears the dearest polka dotted socks, and somebody's grandpapa's vests—I do admire them—a different color for every day. I always judge a man by his shoes, and the entertainer wears such sweet ones. But Jackie,yours truly is disappointed in golf. How can a man look at you or no tice what you have on (I mean me) when he spends hours straddlingan imaginary line, with his eyes staring out of his head at a supercilious ball, squatting undisturbed by his gyrations on a sand pedestal—such dirty, wet sand. Pretty soon the ball whizzes, and I jump, and the man strides after it with a lope like a kangaroo's, making passes at his caddy,and bellowing "Fore," in a terribly loud,rude manner. I quake in my black ties, and trot along after him, with my sleeves rolled up as if I knew it all—but it's a bluff. You see, Jackie, he's the only man here, handsomer than you, and if you speak to him on the golf course, he growls. I asked if he thought I looked best in a sailor or a sombrero, and he said, "I chuck." This evening, after dinner, (he came in wearing his knickers) he was so tired he snored in the office. There's a new girl here with a fat mama. She sat down next to him. She has a face that looks as if she had a chronic case of poison oak The sort that a man says is "n. g." Mr. Ashton, that's his name, suddenly woke up, glared at her, said "Fore!" and limped off to bed. I saw her and her mother whispering together for eight and a half minutes. But he's really worth looking at—such fine shoulders. By the way, Jackie, I don't think I can marry you under any consideration, because—will finish this to-morrow night. I'm sleepy.

Well, to-day—this is to-morrow—the new girl appeared on the links in a hastily thrown together blue suit and the wrong kind of shoes. Her mama was in a dress with a train. They roamed around the Club house watching me for hours. Her name is Nettie Darling and her mama's is Mrs. T. Van Lauderdale Smith.

"Good mornin'," said Nettie Darling, looking out from under her green tam-o'-shanter, "do you play gowf?"

"I never allow Nettie Darling to go on the links unchaperoned," said Mrs. S., shaking the dust out of the black tail of her gown, which she whacked against the railing.

"Don't you like her to have any fun?" I asked.

"If a strange man should speak to me," said Nettie Darling, "I should be awfully disturbed."

"She has never accepted an invitation from a man in which I was not included," said Mrs. Smith.

"It is so nice of mama to always go with me," said Nettie Darling. "It makes it so much easier for me to think of something to say. I am so afraid of men," she added, so innocently. "Aren't you?"

Oh, Jack, she made me feel so bold and bad.

At that minute Mr. Ashton came riding awfully fast down from the hotel on his wheel, pedaling "pigeon-toed," (I can't do it.) He swung himself off ever so gracefully, kicked the thing over with an awful racket, dashed past us (without bowing even) pulling off his red coat. Just think, Jack, he had yelled "caddy" fearfully loud before he got across the veranda, plunged into the men's dressing room, and three minutes later was streaking past us for the first green, with his collar off, his hair flying in the breeze, his shirt sleeves rolled way up to his shoulders and carrying three bags of clubs.

But what do you think? I was so surprised. Mrs. Smith picked up her dress, gave Nettie Darling a glance, seized a caddy, and went for the green, just like a college boy sprinting. I saw her introducing the new girl, and both of them talking to him, and I just returned to the hotel. They didn't get back until six o'clock, and they were still with him.

About my marrying you, why I thought we were Platonic friends. If you only played golf! Don't you think you could join the Y. M. C. A. Gymnasium and try to work up a more athletic build? I am getting freckled. I don't believe you'll like me when you see me.

Your devoted chum,

GLADYS.

ASHTON TO JACK.

Jack, old boy—Hope you'll come down soon; the golf-links are in fine condition. Went around eight times yesterday. Girls are as thick as flies. Some of them have got mothers, too. I went around in fifty yesterday, went over the hazards like a bird, but fell down in the last hole. There's a h—— of a canyon that if you get into, you're lost, and if you send your caddy down you never see him again. Real sporty.

One of these damsels played with me the other day. Don't ask me. I don't know how. A sporty looking young party named Gladys wears mannish things and square-toed shoes—you know 'em—muscular development, and looks as if she'd played golf all her life. But she hasn't. It is a case of stiff collar and no back bone. She wears the right sort of tie, but it takes the whole d—— day to get around once with her, and then you miss dinner.

"Oh, Mistah Ashton," she piped, as she teetered about watching me drive off. "Don't you enjoy yachting?"

"Um."

"What do you wiggle that way foh when you use your drivah?"

"Um."

"Do you believe women ought to be in politics?"

"Um."

"Oh, Mistah Ashton, do you prefeh caramels or candied violets?"

"Damn!"

She jumped about three feet. But I was feeling "candied" myself then, and had missed that ball once a minute. Every time I addressed the ball she addressed me, and I was handicapped.

"Oh, Mistah Ashton," (this was when she had to drive off) "do I look behind the ball, or right at it?"

"At it."

"Taking this as a command she took off her coat and rolled up her sleeves.

"Oh, Mistah Ashton, should my thumb be on top or underneath?"

"Um."

"Now where am I to aim for?"

"Um."

"Oh, yes, thank you." (Pause in which she pulled her skirt down all around and retied her necktie.) "You know so many men have told me I am too womanly to play golf well."

"Um."

"How far should I stand from the ball? Will you measure for me?"

"Um."

She stood back as if she were about to chop off a chicken's head at a block, swung around three times, fanned the air wildly, looked scared and stopped as suddenly as if a cow had come on the field.

"Oh, Mistah Ashton, my sand-tee has tumbled down."

I'm not saying there isn't something rather attractive about her. She reminds me of a painting (not belonging to the impressionest school)—a smooth, pretty little thing, but I'm afraid her colors might run.

But there's another girl here. She doesn't dress much. You know real athletes don't. I expected her to talk about church music and the weather. She never opened her mouth. When she struck the ball, it hummed through the air as straight and pretty as a peach. We played two balls; when we stopped I was only four holes up. Gad, I'd marry that girl to-morrow if she'd have me. Who cares that she has a mother? On the golf-course the old lady ambles along, yards behind. She usually cross cuts to the Club house, when no one's looking. You'd better come down, and jolly up Gladys what's her name. For God's sake, keep her away from the golf course. She's handicapped. She's too good looking. It's a foozle for her. We have a tournament to-morrow. Am "putting" in my bathrobe evenings. Fore!

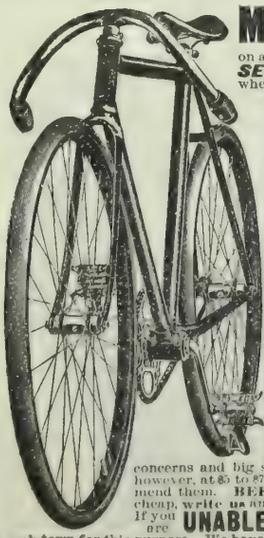
ASHTON.

BYRON MAUZY PIANOS

308-314 POST STREET

SATISFACTORY TO THE EYE AND EAR

All the Latest Books in Our Sheet Music Department.



MONTROSE BICYCLE SENT FREE

on approval to your address WITHOUT A CENT IN ADVANCE. SEND US YOUR ORDER, state whether you wish lady's or man's wheel; give color, height of frame and gear wanted and WE WILL SHIP THE WHEEL C. O. D. on approval, allowing you to uncrate and examine it fully before you accept it. If it is not all and more than we claim for it, and a better wheel than you can get for any where near the price from any one else, refuse it and we will pay all express charges ourselves. The "MONTROSE" Bicycle at our Special Agent's sample price of $16.50 is the greatest bargain in a bicycle ever offered. We guarantee it equal to any $40 wheel on the market, and you need not accept it nor pay a cent if you do not find it as we represent. We are EXCLUSIVE BICYCLE MANUFACTURERS and take this method of quickly introducing our 1900 MODELS. This offer of a sample wheel at this low price is made to secure a RIDER AGENT in each town to represent us and take orders. Our agents make money fast.

SPECIFICATIONS. Frame, 22, 24 or 26 inch; ladies, 22 inch. Best Shelby seamless tubing with forged connections, flush joints, improved expander device to fasten seat post and handle bar; Royal Arch crown; the celebrated Mavis hubs and hanger—the easiest running known; Record "A" tires, the best and one of the most expensive tires on the market. The genuine $4 Mesinger Hygienic saddle; pedals, tools and accessories the best obtainable. Enameled in black, maroon or coach green, highly finished and ornamented; special finished nickeling on all bright parts. We thoroughly test every piece of material that goes into this machine. Our binding year's guarantee bond with each bicycle.

FREE to any one sending the $16.50 cash in full with order we will send free a genuine Burdick 10,000 mile barred pattern cyclometer; or a high grade floor pump. Your money all back if you are not perfectly satisfied.

CHEAP WHEELS. We do not manufacture the cheap department store kind of wheels, such as many new concerns and big supply houses advertise and sell as high grade. We can furnish them however, at $5 to $7 stripped; or $9.75 to $12.50 complete. We do not guarantee nor recommend them. BEFORE ORDERING a bicycle of any one else, no matter who or how cheap, write us and let us tell you how much we can save you on the same machine.

If you are UNABLE to BUY a wheel we can assist you to EARN A BICYCLE by distributing catalogues for us a few days. We need one person in each town for this purpose. We have several hundred SECOND HAND WHEELS taken in trade which we will close out at $3 to $10 each; also some shopworn samples and '99 models very cheap. Send for Bargain List. OUR RELIABILITY is unquestioned. We refer to any bank or business house in Chicago or any express or railroad company. We will send you letters of reference direct from the largest banks in Chicago if you wish it.

SEND YOUR ORDER today. This low price and these special terms of shipment without deposit will be withdrawn very soon. ☞ Give name of this paper.

J. L. MEAD CYCLE COMPANY, Chicago, Ill.

Affection

Exhales from children as fragrance from flowers. The little lips are always puckered to give or take a kiss. In homes where there are children, love reaches its fairest and sweetest proportions. In childless homes the kiss of wife and husband grows formal, and presently is neglected; the springs of love in the heart become choked for want of use and exercise. Childlessness is a great sorrow to many women. It is like a curse from Nature, who bids all creatures to be fruitful. It is not a curse but a misfortune. Often the conditions which cause childlessness are removable. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has brought joy to many a woman by giving her the happiness of motherhood. It gives to the womanly organs vigor and vitality, removes local obstructions, and practically does away with the pains and pangs of maternity.

There is no alcohol or narcotic in "Favorite Prescription."

"I have never written you how grateful I am to you for your help in securing good health and one of the sweetest, dearest, thirteen pound girls that ever came into a home," writes Mrs. M. Vastine, of 647 South Liberty St., Galesburg, Ill. "I took six bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, four of the 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and four vials of 'Pleasant Pellets.' Before I had taken four bottles of the 'Favorite Prescription' I was a new woman. I cannot make pen describe my heart-felt gratitude."

To keep the bowels regular use Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets.

HOTEL VENDOME

At San Jose is one of Central California's most beautiful hostelries; in the midst of its own twelve-acre park; two blocks from the railroad station where almost hourly trains connect with the outside; the starting point for Lick Observatory; the center of a greater number and variety of attractions than any other place on the Coast; furnished finely, graded and watered roads for driving and cycling lead in every direction; with over 250 elegantly furnished rooms, and suits with bath and toilet; perfect in appointment, service and all the accessories of comfort, and one of the most attractive features of San Jose, the metropolis of the world-renowned Santa Clara Valley.

GEO. P. SNELL,
Manager.

For those who appreciate
Comfort and Attention
A Quiet Home . . . . .
Centrally Located . . .

Occidental Hotel

SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, Manager

Sturtevant House

Broadway and 29th Sts,, New York.

American and European Plan.

WILLIAM T. BANG, Proprietor.

Chips From the Scientific Workshop.

Telegraphy by Typewriter.

Those ruthless inventors have evidently made up their mind to deprive us of all the romance of life. Here come two of them, Zalmon G. Sholes and Alfred C. Gilmore, both of Chicago, with a new transmitting and receiving telegraphic apparatus. It consists in a typewriting arrangement at both ends. Do you want to transmit a message? You calmly sit down before an ordinary typewriting machine, touch off what you have to say on the keys (provided you can typewrite), and, a few hundred miles away, an operator draws out of another innocent-looking typewriter your whole message, reproduced faithfully down to your most insignificant mistakes. The old receivers, with their charming, mysterious click-a-tee-click, are to be things of the past.

THE INVENTORS.

The men who are responsible for this revolution are both from Chicago. Mr. Sholes is the inventor of the Remington-Sholes typewriter, and Mr. Gilmore, who is his nephew, is an electrician. The idea was suggested to the former by W. R. Hooligan, chief operator for the Western Union in Chicago at the time when the typewriting system for receiving messages was first inaugurated in telegraph offices. Soon afterwards he went to work on it, having, called to his assistance Mr. Gilmore, at that time engaged in the factory of the Remington Typewriter Company. By January, 1896, the first machine was finished. This, however, proved impracticable, the transmission being strongly affected by atmospheric disturbances. The inventors, discouraged, gave up for a while but came back to the problem irresistibly and by January of this year succeeded in perfecting the present machine which has stood all experimental tests successfully.

THE FEATURE OF THE INVENTION.

The great feature of the invention is that while it receives and delivers its messages in the ordinary alphabet spelling, it transmits them by the use of the Morse telegraphic alphabet of dots and dashes. The transmitter turns each letter, figure or punctuation point into dots and dashes, and the receiver, which contains an instrument called a "selector," turns the dots and dashes back into the ordinary signs.

In appearance the transmitting instrument is much like an ordinary typewriter. It contains, however, a shaft along which raised brass points corresponding to dots and dashes are grouped, and which is the center of the whole device. Each letter or sign has its own place on the shaft, the dots and dashes which compose it running around the shaft in a circle.

When one of the keys of the instrument is pressed, a contact brush, such as is common in other electric instruments, is brought into touch with the shaft at the point where the corresponding letter is located.

The shaft revolves once, thus causing the brush to touch one after the other the dots and dashes that make up the letter. The connections thus made flash the letter along the wire, and if there were an ordinary receiving instrument at the far end the operator would hear the sounds just as in the ordinary system of transmission.

At the receiving end of the wire there are two magnets, one intended for the dots and one for the dashes. These are connected directly with the "selector," the instrument that does the delicate work. It gets its name because it selects a letter that corresponds to the dots and dashes and makes the writing machine record it in its proper place.

The moment one letter is recorded an arm breaks the contact, sends the selector back to its original position and leaves the instrument ready for the next letter in the word that is being telegraphed.

YOUTHFUL GENIUS.

Both inventors are convinced that there remains now nothing between them and success. Mr. Gilmore is not yet 24 years old. At the age of 16 he devised and promoted a scheme for an underground trolley system in New York, but, through unfortunate circumstances, never realized any profit out of his work. He is not a college man, having gained all of his electrical knowledge from the shop. He is almost boyish in appearance and thoroughly unassuming. Mr. Sholes is thirty-five years old, is married and has two children, who could typewrite before they could talk. He is the inventor of the original Remington-Sholes typewriter. His father was the inventor of the standard Remington machine.

A New Form of Train.

The part played by atmospheric resistance in impeding the motion of railway trains has always been known to be large, but just how large has only recently been determined. A number of experiments have been made on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad with a train consisting of an engine and tender and six ordinary passenger cars. All external projections and obstructions were removed from the cars, their roofs were arched, their windows set flush and the sheathing put on lengthwise instead of up and down as is usual. The sheathing was also extended downward to within eight inches of the track, covering the trucks. When the cars were coupled two diaphragms met and enclosed the space from edge to edge of the roof line. Flexible spring curtains completed the vestibule from the roofs to the bottoms of the cars. To give entrance to the platforms roller curtains were used. When the train was completed it presented the appearance of one long sinuous and flexible car. The tender was arched over and vestibuled to the forward end of the baggage car. While the plans called for a sheathing for the engine also the tests were made without this. The locomotive used was an ordinary 57-ton engine with four 78-inch drivers and 20x24-inch cylinders. In the trials the train ran the forty miles from Baltimore to Washington in thirty-seven minutes and thirty seconds. Five miles, between Alexander Junction and Trinidad, was covered in two minutes and fifty seconds, at a speed of 102.8 miles an hour. A distance of twenty and one-tenth miles, part of which was up grade, was covered in fifteen minutes and twenty seconds, or an average of seventy-eight and six-tenths miles an hour. This is believed to be the world's record of railway speed.

An Anti Alcohol Serum.

Drs. Sapelier, Thebault and Broca have advised the French Academy of Medicine of the discovery of an anti-alcohol serum. They state that their experiments prove that a horse fed for a certain time on doses of alcohol and food mixed with alcohol furnished a serum antiethyline which, injected into victims of the alcohol habit, gave them an absolute distaste for the liquor. Dr. Sapelier has sent a second communication to the Academy stating his methods and results obtained. He cited fifty-seven cases of drunkards treated by antiethyline; thirty-two cases were successful, or sixty per cent; fifteen per cent had their condition improved, and the failures amounted to twenty-five per cent which were caused by irregularity in following the treatment, or from physical defects considered as unfavorable. It has been stated that success obtained by the injection of anti-alcohol serum is due to imagination or auto-suggestion, but this is refuted by Dr. Sapelier who claims that the hysterical and impressionable patients figure among the failures, or those who are merely improved in condition. The three doctors have deduced an ingenious theory from their system. They say that the action of anti-alcohol serum awakens reflex acts which, as a whole, constitute originally the instinctive distaste of man for alcohol, thus re-establishing a natural habit in place of the induced habit.

The Bank of California

SAN FRANCISCO

Capital, $2,000,000. Surplus, $1,000,000
Profit and Loss Account Jan 1st, 1900, $2,321,242

William Alvord, President. Charles R. Bishop, Vice President; Thomas Brown, Cashier; S. Prentiss Smith, Assistant Cashier; Irving F. Moulton, Second Assistant Cashier; Allen M. Clay, Secretary.

CORRESPONDENTS

New York, Messrs. Laidlaw & Co., The Bank of New York, N. B. A.; Baltimore, The National Exchange Bank; Boston, The Tremont National Bank. Chicago, Illinois Trust and Savings Bank, Union National Bank; Philadelphia, Philadelphia National Bank; St. Louis, Boatmen's Bank, Virginia City, Nev., Agency of the Bank of California; London, Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons; Paris, Messrs. De Rothschild Freres; Berlin, Direction der Disconto Gesellschaft; China Japan and East Indies, Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China; Australia and New Zealand, The Union Bank of Australia, Ltd., and Bank of New Zealand.

LETTERS OF CREDIT ISSUED AVAILABLE IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD

THE GERMAN Savings and Loan Society

526 California Street

Guaranteed Capital and Surplus $2,238,372.45
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash..... 1,000,000.00
Deposits, July 30, 1900 ..... 28,938,395.02

OFFICERS

President.....B. A. Becker
First Vice-President.....Daniel Meyer
Second Vice-President....H. Horstmann
Cashier..... A. H. R. Schmidt
Assistant Cashier.....Wm. Hermann
Secretary ..... George Tourney
Assistant Secretary .....A. H. Muller

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann
Ign. Steinhart, Emil. Hohte, I. N. Walker,
H. B. Russ, N. Ohlandt, John Lloyd,

General Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 California Street

Deposits, July 1, 1900.....$26,952,875
Paid Up Capital 1,000,000
Reserve Fund 218,033
Contingent Fund 139,608

E. P. Pond, Pres.; W. C. B. de Premery, Vice-Pres.; Lovell White, Cashier; R. M. Welch, Asst. Cashier.

DIRECTORS

Henry F. Allen, Robert Watt, Thomas Magee, George C. Boardman, W. C. B. de Premery, Daniel E. Martin, C. O. G. Miller, Jacob Barth, E. B. Pond.

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.

Receives deposits. Country remittances may be made in checks payable in San Francisco, Postoffice or Wells, Fargo & Co's Money Orders, or coin by Express, but the responsibility of this bank commences only with the receipt of the money.

No charge is made for pass books or entrance fee.

Office Hours: 9 a. m. to 3 p. m. and Saturday evenings, for receipt of deposits only, 6:30 to 8 o'clock.

MUTUAL SAVINGS BANK OF SAN FRANCISCO

33 Post Street
Below Kearny Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital $1,000,000
Paid Up Capital 300,000

James D. Phelan, President; S. G. Murphy, Vice-Pres.; John A. Hooper, Vice-Pres.; George A. Story, Cashier; C. B. Hobson, Asst. Cashier.

DIRECTORS:—James D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, Frank J. Sullivan, Robert McElroy, Chas. S. Neal and James McDonald.

Interest paid on deposits.

Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co. or Exchange on City Banks.

When opening accounts, send signature.

PRETTY WORK

NICE PRESS COPIES

Use Smith Type-Writer

The telegraph department of the Southern Pacific Co dispensed with all other makes and now use the SMITH PREMIER EXCLUSIVELY.

Also more than 200 banks use the

SMITH PREMIER Type-Writer

We Rent New Typewriters
Art Catalogue

L. & M. ALEXANDER & CO.
110 Montgomery St., S. F.
Branches: Portland, Seattle, Los Angeles.

Buyers' Guide.

San Francisco Reliable Business Houses

City and Country Orders promptly filled. Catalogues and Price Lists sent on application. Correspondence solicited. MENTION THE WAVE.

ATTORNEYS AT LAW.

MILTON J. GREEN, Attorney at Law.—Referee in Bankruptcy in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Office, Room 94 Chronicle bldg.

A. K. DAGGETT.—Drawing of deeds and all legal papers a specialty; Notary Public. 14 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Telephone 3[illegible]5.

BUSINESS PERSONALS.

Baldness and Dandruff positively cured; Shampooing and Bleaching. Prudential Hair Physicians. Glascow Block, 105 Ellis Street, Room 6.

DENTIST.

DR. C. W. DECKER, Dentist. 806 Market street, Phelan Building.

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.

ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU. Main office, 510 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Dealers in all kinds of Newspaper information. Advance Reports on all Contract Work. Phone, Main 1042.

RESTAURANT.

POODLE DOG RESTAURANT.—Northeast corner of Eddy and Mason streets. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone, Main 429. BLANCO & BRUN, Proprietors.

A TOILET NECESSITY

Wakelee's

Cold Cream of Roses

MADE WITH

Pure Almond Oil and Distilled Water of Roses

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.—SIERRA NEVADA SILver Mining Company.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, Cal. Location of works, Virginia Mining District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 9th day of July, 1900, an assessment (No. [illegible]19) of Fifteen (15) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the company, Room No. 14, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 14th day of August, 1900, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before will be sold on MONDAY, the 3rd day of September, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the cost of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.

R. L. PARKER, Secretary.

Office: Room No. 14, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.—MEXICAN GOLD AND Silver Mining Company. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Storey county, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the tenth day of July, 1900, an assessment [No. 64] of fifteen [15] cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, Room 79, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the fourteenth day of August, 1900, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before will be sold on Wednesday, the 5th day of September, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.

CHAS. E. ELLIOT, Secretary.

Office—Room 79, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

NOTICE OF ASSESSMENT.—OCCIDENTAL CONsolidated Mining Company.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California; location of works, Silver Star Mining District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the fourteenth (14th) day of July, 1900, an assessment (No. 35) of five (5) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 69, Nevada block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the seventeenth (17th) day of August 1900, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Tuesday, the eleventh (11th) day of Sept., 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors,

ALFRED K. DURBROW, Secretary.

Office: Room 69, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Men, Women and Books.

The "Absent-Minded Beggar" in Italian.

The danger of translations is aptly illustrated by what happened to "The Absent-Minded Beggar" of Kipling. Beggar, on this occasion, is used in its pure Kipling-English meaning, as a near synonym of "cuss." The "Absent-Minded Beggar," as everybody knows, is nothing else than Tommy Atkins. An Italian translator, however, lately evolved out of the dictionary the following pompous equivalent: "The Abstracted Mendicant."

* *

Archibald Forbes' "Scooping" Methods.

The death of Archibald Forbes, the great war correspondent, has brought out a new crop of anecdotes about him. Here is the way that some of his brother correspondents describe his methods of work and explain some of his grand "scoops":

Time, near midnight, after a hard day's work; everybody done up. "Hullo, Jones," says Smith, "there's Forbes already asleep, like brass." "By Jove, yes," quoth Jones (incipient snore from Forbes); "it would take ten horses to wake him up. I'll turn in," says Jones; "time enough to get our stuff off tomorrow, eh?" "Right you are," responds Smith. In ten minutes the wearied warrior scribes are asleep. Forbes rises cautiously, passing out like a ghost; sits him down in a hidden corner with the stump of a candle; writes like a whirlwind for a couple of hours; finishes with the last flicker of his dip; saddles a horse; off he goes, helter-skelter, across country; gallops back; is in bed by four; sleeps this time "like brass," and no mistake. "Hullo, lazy bones," exclaims Smith at 7 a. m., shaking the sleeper. "Time to be up, old man," adds Jones. "What are you up to?" quoth Forbes drowsily. "We are thinking of getting our stuff off." "The devil, you are! Why hurry? Let's have another snooze."

* *

Dramatizing Dooley.

Imagine "Mr. Dooley" dramatized. That is what is about to happen and Charles Hopper, who first enacted "Chimmie Fadden," has undertaken to portray the sage of Archery Road. It seems that Ed. Townshend and Peter Finley Dunne are to collaborate in constructing the play and have contracted to have it ready for production by November. 'Mr. Dooley" is today the chief humorous figure in current literature and it behooves the man who would be like him to possess certain essential characteristics. Here is where Hopper plumes himself. He says that Edward Kemble, who is now engaged in illustrating a new edition of "Dooley," asked him to pose, saying he was exactly his ideal of the sage.

It is difficult to see how the material put forth by Peter Dunne each week can be converted to stage purposes. It will be necessary to create a set of incidents in which he may be the central figure, and for the dialogue glean witticisms from the several volumes of his utterances. However, with Dnnne at the helm, there will be no need of reverting to older writings. He is capable of fitting his wit to any situation Mr. Townshend may devise.

* *

D'Annunzio and Duse.

D'Annunzio, the gifted Italian novelist, whose late "Fuoco," an alleged betrayal of Eleonora Duse's heart secrets has made famous or notorious, as people may choose to put it, is said to be a most fascinating man. His face is of a peculiar pallor, like ivory that is just beginning to yellow with age. He has wondrous eyes—great, black orbs that have a glint of sunset in them. His genius is very susceptible to feminine attraction.

When his name and that of the Duse were associated together, nobody wondered. He was the greatest writer of Italy; she was its greatest actress, and it seemed fitting. Their project of founding a National Theater, in which d'Annunzio should be the principal writer and the Duse the principal actress, never advanced beyond the talking stage, but the names of the actress and writer were associated for several years—it seems to the greater disadvantage of Duse. Then came the estrangement and the "Fuoco."

D'Annunzio has always refused to speak of his relations with Duse, but the accusation that he had availed himself of her most sacred heart-secrets for his work brought from him an impassioned denial.

* *

Robert Grant as Fisherman.

Judge Robert Grant, author of Unleavened Bread, which has made a sensation, is not only a writer but also, as his title indicates, a lawyer and, which his name does not particularly indicate, an enthusiastic angler. Robert Grant began his literary work on the Harvard Lampoon while still at college, his "Little-Tin-God-on-Wheels" having remained a classic there. On graduating, he started writing books, each better than the other. He is Judge of the Probate Court of Massachusetts. His friends say that while the Court sits, he writes novels, and while it is not sitting, he goes fishing.

* *

Stephen Crane's Late Home.

Karl Edwin Harriman of Ann Arbor, Michigan, a close friend of Stephen Crane, says of the death of his friend, "Crane's dwelling was his death. His home killed him. The old mansion in which he lived the past two years was loaned to him by Mr. Freuen. It was built in the thirteenth century of almost porous stone. The chill damp and draughts of the old house were terrible. The floors were of flagging. There were great decorative fireplaces in the rooms and the wind whistled through the casements every moment of the day and night. Crane's study was in the tower, the draughtiest place of all. He would shut himself up in that tower and write 12,000 words at one sitting."

* *

A Blackmore Letter.

In October, 1889, the novelist fruit-raiser, author of Lorna Doone, began a correspondence with Charles Ballard of Middletown Springs, Vermont, which lasted until his death. Jan. 20th, of the present year.

These letters are delightful in their spontaneity. Here is one which shows that the aged and old-fashioned novelist kept all his life the youthfulness of his heart:—

"Instead of a noble field of snow, this year we have green,—inconstant green everywhere, flecked with snow-flakes, unmeaning, unpronounced, more likely to produce young birds than pears; and three broods of blackbirds and thrushes are already preparing for the fruit they were born to eat: and soon there will be another score of nests discharging. They know me as well as possible, although they never beheld me before. Their fathers and mothers must have let them know that my mother was taken away as soon as I was hatched; and therefore I am sorry for all unfledged things. But never a strawberry the less will they gobble, of the first few early ones that still pay for the picking. Here comes the rain after three dry days; but as yet no harm from an April shower, more like the visions of the poet than any I have known for thirty years."

573-579 Market Street, San Francisco | R. H. PEASE, President and Manager. | 73 and 75 First Street, Portland, Ore.

What Are Club Cocktails?

"A MODERN ECSTASY" is a Shakespearian definition for a "Cocktail." "Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings."

Wherever good livers are found, wherever conviviality exists, even to the most remote corners of the earth, the "CLUB COCKTAIL" reigns supreme as a fashionable drink.

The "CLUB COCKTAILS" never vary; they are always the same. The secret of their perfect blend is that they are kept six months before being drawn off and bottled.

"Cocktails" that are served over the bar do not contain these indispensable qualities.

Seven Varieties: Manhattan, Martini, Vermouth, Holland Gin, York, Tom Gin, Whisky.

For sale by all first class dealers.

G. F. HEUBLEIN & BRO., Sole Proprietors.

29 Broadway, New York, N. Y. Hartford, Conn. London.

PACIFIC COAST AGENTS

SHERWOOD & SHERWOOD,

Los Angeles San Francisco Portland

Pleasure Trips

A New Era Brought About by Transportation Companies.

It may be justly said of the present season that it marks an era in pleasure travel in nearly all parts of California, on account of the cheap rates which have been made by the transportation companies.

TO SEE OTHER WORLDS

The very latest move is in behalf of the Mt. Hamilton trip. The combined managements of the Mt. Hamilton Stage Co. and Hotel Vendome in San Jose have placed on sale in the Southern Pacific ticket offices of San Francisco, Oakland, Alameda and Berkeley, two round-trip tickets from these points, which include transportation and all expenses. One is a Saturday-Sunday ticket, for $8.90, which entitles the purchaser to a day and a quarter at Hotel Vendome in addition to the trip; and the other is good any day, gives a half day more at the hotel, and costs $8.50. This rate is really about one-third less than the regular cost, and should easily place Mt. Hamilton in the front rank of famous trips.

LAKE TAHOE FAVORED

The Southern Pacific has recently added an attraction to Lake Tahoe by establishing a ten-day rate from the Bay Cities of $13.30, a reduction of twenty per cent of the regular season rate. It is also giving Saturday to Monday excursions for $10, which is indeed absurdly cheap.

VAMOS A MEXICO

Something new and quite out of the ordinary in the way of tours is an excursion to Mexico in a special train, which has just been announced by the Southern Pacific for November 14th. The rate from San Francisco will be $80, and from Los Angeles, $70. Other points along the line will enjoy proportionate rates. This excursion will be under the management of Wm. H. Menton, the Southern Pacific's well-known excursion agent, who is well acquainted in Mexico, speaks the language, and has arranged many incidental attractions.

Any Southern Pacific agent will cheerfully give all desired information about these trips. Call on them.

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

STEAMERS LEAVE BROADway wharf, San Francisco:

For Alaskan ports, 11 a. m., August 4, 9, 14, 19, 24, 29, Sept. 3, change to company's steamers at Seattle.

For B. C. and Puget Sound ports, 11 a. m. August 4, 9, 14, 19, 24, 29, Sept. 3, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka (Humboldt Bay): 2 p. m. August 1, 6, 11, 16, 21, 26, 31, Sept. 5, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Newport (Los Angeles) and way ports: 9 a. m. August 3, 7, 11, 15, 19, 23, 27, 31, Sept. 4, and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford (San Luis Obispo), Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles and Redondo (Los Angeles): 11 a. m. August 1, 5, 9, 13, 17, 21, 25, 29, Sept. 2, and every fourth day thereafter.

For Mexican ports, 10 a. m. 7th of each month.

For further information obtain company's folder.

The company reserves the right to change steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing, without previous notice.

TICKET OFFICE—4 New Montgomery street (Palace Hotel).

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO., General Agents.
10 Market street, San Francisco.

TO CHICAGO IN THREE DAYS.

From San Francisco at 10 A. M.

Chicago Union Pacific and Northwestern Line.

DOUBLE DRAWING-ROOM SLEEPING CARS, Buffet, Smoking and Library Cars, with Barber, Dining-Cars; meals a la carte. Daily Tourist Car Service and Personally Conducted Excursions every week from San Francisco at 6 p. m.

THE BEST OF EVERYTHING

R. R. RITCHIE,
General Agent Pacific Coast.

617 Market Street (Palace Hotel), San Francisco, Cal.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. Alameda for AUSTRALIA, Wednesday August 8, at 8 p. m.

S. S. Australia, for HONOLULU only, Wednesday, August 22, at 2 p. m.

Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

TICKET OFFICE, 114 MONTGOMERY ST.
FREIGHT OFFICE, 327 MARKET STREET

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO.
GENERAL AGENTS

The Century Type.

The new "dress" of type in which the Saturday Wave appears this week is the latest product of artistic type-cutting. It is the Century face, which is likely to revolutionize book-types, and was designed by Theodore L. De Vinne, the Dean of American printers, for the American Type Founders Company. It owed its introduction to the Century Magazine, which was the first to appreciate the beauty of the new type and to adopt it, from which the new style is known conventionally as the "Century" pattern. It has been before the public about four years now, and has already had great influence on printers and publishers and received the sincere flattery of imitation. This is, however, the first publication on the Pacific Coast to adopt the Century dress.

Mr. De Vinne made his patterns only after years of study and experiment. A careful perusal of the individual letters on this page will show two pronounced points of difference between this style and those generally seen now-a-days. In the first place, it is "compressed," that is, it is high in proportion to its width. More letters, for the same height and width, can be crowded into a line of this make than into a line of type such as that just discarded by this paper. This change was made as the result of careful experiment on the eyes and the reading-power of all classes of readers. Mr. De Vinne demonstrated that it is height rather than width which makes easy reading possible. It was proved conclusively that a letter three inches high by two inches wide could be distinguished as far away as one three inches square. Therefore, he reasoned that the problem of crowding as many letters as possible on a page while preventing eye-strain could be most easily solved by compression, and made his designs accordingly. There were also artistic reasons, not so easily explained, in favor of the compressed pattern.

THICK HAIR-LINES.

The other point of difference lies in the thickening of what is known as the "hair-lines." Take a copy of Scribner's, put it beside one of the Century or beside this page, and compare the small n or m of the two styles. In the old form it will be noticed that at the point where the loop of the letter meets the upright, the line is thinned almost to a vanishing point. This is a hair-line, and is a feature of nearly all small letters in the thin, delicate face of type just now passing out of favor. Mr. De Vinne believed that this fashion errs to much on the side of delicacy; while it had a "refined" look, it prints gray and is hard for reading by imperfect eyes. He therefore set about devising a plan whereby the hair-lines could be strengthened without making the face seem clumsy. In his study, he was guided partly by the book-types of William Morris, and by those of some of the old masters of printing back of him. The study and planning necessary to the designing of this new style, the removal or addition of a thousandth part of an inch in the case of certain letters in order to harmonize them with the general scheme—all these and a thousand other minutiae which type-founders know and the public does not understand had to be debated before the designs for the new face were delivered into the hands of the American Type Founders to come back from them as the Century's new dress.

The corporation which was chosen to give to the printers of America this type, which has cast all the best new faces for many years past, is the largest and best equipped in the world. In this country The American Type Founders' Association is without a competitor in the higher lines of work and has distanced all competition in general commercial work. Abroad, this American institution is fast crowding into the front rank. The old conservative Scotch and English founders are finding themselves displaced in some of the best British offices by the American Type Founders' Association.

Part of this is due to business methods and a part to the attention paid to printing as an art. For not only has the American Type Founders' Company revived the best of the classic faces and improved the finer modern ones, but it keeps the ablest type-designers obtainable, men of world-wide reputation in their art, continually devising new styles and improving old ones. This company has done more to advance artistic printing than any other institution of recent years.

The Pacific Coast branch, with offices at San Francisco, fully represents this distinguished house. Its advertised boast, "everything for the printer," is literally made good. Investigation will prove that they can furnish everything needed in an office, from a cylinder press to a hair space. This local house is just getting out a type-book of its own of 1000 pages, showing not only its great stock of type faces but its variety of other goods used in the trade.

The plant for local work is equipped with the latest automatic machinery, where rivals are still using old hand machines. The advantage of automatic machinery is that its work is more clear, more durable, more nearly perfect in every way than that of the old machines. These are the only machines of their class in the West.

In the Green Room.

Farce Comedy is an expensive form of enterprise. The average man who sees the flippant aggregation of fun-makers now performing at the California theatre has no idea of what their services cost Dunne and Riley each Saturday night. They are the best people in the profession, these gentlemen and ladies with whom we have been laughing these eight weeks past. In winter months they are stars of individual combinations. Mathews and Bulger, Mary Marble, Tony Hart et al. For the summer they don't demand such a large compensation, but for all that, the aggregate of their salaries is about $2500 per week. For instance the eight dancing girls receive $300 per week among them, and the others in proportion.

Yet fun-making, however easy and pleasant it seems from before the footlights, is mighty hard work for those whose business it is. Take the performance of "By the Sad Sea Waves"—a knock-about song and dance extravaganza. Surely such pieces run themselves. The truth is, "By the Sad Sea Waves" was in active rehearsal from 10 o'clock in the morning until 5 every afternoon the week preceding its production, and between the final preparations and the raising of the curtain but half an hour elapsed. Yes, these jolly, easy-going fun-makers labored all Sunday until 7:30 o'clock. Half after eight, they were at it again with such abandon as to persuade their auditors that the actor's life of leisure is the ideal existence.

* * *

A fair proportion of San Franciscans have seen Matthews and Bulger, seen them dance, heard their patter songs and watched their grimaces. Happy, gifted fellows. "I wish I had their talent" I've heard a dozen men say—men who think life full of bitter hardship because they must be at their desks at 9 a. m., and must not leave before 5 o'clock. Well, Matthews is invalided from over-work. These jolly, easy-going chaps often put in an hour or two after the performance practicing the step dances which they execute with so much nicety and grace. Someone beside me the other night remarked, "those fellows must be double-jointed to be able to twist their legs and feet about so glibly." No, it is not because of double joints, but because of incessant practice, not because of extraordinary talent, but on account of infinite repetitions. There must be aptitude to begin with, but it counts little in obtaining results in stage work. Do you imagine that the extraordinary skill of the vaudeville gymnast—the fellow who does incredible things on the horizontal bar or who outrages the probabilities in the style of his tumbling obtains his effects by mere expression of a wish? No, one is shown the finished product, the cut and polished diamond. One forgets the laborious days and the dreary nights of rehearsal before the trick was perfected. And those patter songs—where are they gathered from? Matthews schemes them out—hammers them out at hours when the rest of the world is slumbering. Bulger sets them to music. Investigate any success, and you will find genius only the seed, and that application stands for the kindly influences of soil, air and sun that have developed the towering tree.

$100 Reward $100

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreadful disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Address, F. J. CHENEY & CO., Teledo, O.
☞Sold by Druggists, 75c.
Hall's Family Pills are the best.

For home use, for bar use, for physicians' use, for everybody's use, Jesse Moore Whiskey is always the best and is in most general demand.

All bon vivants will be pleased to learn that genial "John" Heinkee supersedes Mr. Justin Ladagnous as proprietor of the famous Maison Riche, so happily named by dainty Aimee in her golden days. Epicures the world over know the Riche. "John" will maintain the high standard that this restaurant has always held in this city.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

The name is a guaranty of its purity—Jesse Moore Whiskey is always all right.

Santa Fe Trains

GO TO

Antioch	9 a m	4:10 p m	8 p m
Bakersfield	9 a m		8 p m
Chicago	9 a m
Denver	9 a m
Fresno	9 a m		8 p m
Hanford	9 a m		8 p m
Joliet	9 a m
Kansas City	9 a m
Leavenworth	9 a m
Merced	9 a m		8 p m
Newton	9 a m
Phoenix	9 a m
Stockton	9 a m	4:10 p m	8 p m
Tulare	9 a m		8 p m
Visalia	9 a m		8 p m
Williams	9 a m

Personally conducted Excursions to Kansas City, Chicago and Boston every MONDAY, THURSDAY AND SATURDAY in Pullman's Best Tourist Sleeping Cars. Try this NEW ROUTE.

Get full information and handsome folder at

628 MARKET STREET
or at Santa Fe Ticket Office
Ferry Building, Foot of Market Street

LAKE COUNTY.

New 19-passenger Yosemite Stages, all outside seats, direct to most picturesque portion of California. Best equipped stage line in the State. Leaves Calistoga daily (Sunday excepted) at 11:30 a. m., direct to Harbin, Seigler, Adams, Howard, Anderson, Astorgo, and Glenbrook; half an hour for lunch at Calistoga; also to Middletown, Lower Lake, Kelseyville and Lakeport.

WM. SPIERS, Proprietor,
Calistoga, Cal.

Alfred Crane Luther A. Teague Frederick Teague

TEAGUE, CRANE & TEAGUE

Dentists

Claus Spreckels Building
Tel. Main 1459 Third and Market Sts., 6th Floor
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

A Costume Competition at the Paris Exposition.

PARIS.

Gowns, chiffons, laces and brilliants—are they not merely amusing? But no, this week all Paris has taken them au serieux, and I, have struggled, ramped and admired with the rest. What is the shrine at present of every woman's pilgrimage, to the Exposition? I follow the crowd, I am borne along with it and find myself taken into the "fils tissues et vetments," department. The Petit Palais, picture gallery, mining exhibit—in scorn pass them all by, or leave them to the old and decipt, while the young and strong tread on each other's toes, tear the chiffon from each other's backs, to gaze at the amalgamated display of the great dressmakers of Europe. It is a great sight, to see stalwart men, gracious women, and innocent children, fight for places before the enchanting visions of loveliness in the cases. And to see victims come forth afterward triumphant from the dense crowd, not red but pale because of the intense heat—ah, it gives one new ideas on the importance of the philosophie of clothes.

I noticed with interest the men, there. They seemed on the whole to admire most the quieter gowns. They incline more toward the costume which adorns but does not extinguish the wearer. I could see that they were particularly attracted by a gown sent in by the modistes, Sara Mayer and Morleauge. It is in black lace festoons, appliqued on white mousseline de soie, over a white lining, and elaborately trimmed with narrow black lace insertions. The waist and sleeves are festooned with the effective black lace set in between two rows of eight tiny tucks. The sprays on the sleeves taper to the wrist, which is edged with the appliqued black lace. From the bust falls one of those flounces, (in this case of filmy black lace,) which are always recurring in the fashions because they give anyone who wears them the effect of a full figure. There is a small yoke and collar of tiny tucks over pink chiffon, furnishing a very Parisian contrast, to the dainty bit of color, in the belt of light blue velvet. The skirt gives a rounded effect to the hips. The narrow black insertion begins at he belt in front and forms a plastron about twelve inches down, where it begins to square off and runs about the skirt in ever widening intervals. In the show case the gown gives this effect of being worn on a fascinatingly rounded little figure, with curves in every line.

The Worth gowns,—especially his gorgeous court dresses to be worn at a presentation, seem designed for stage queens, but a woman seeking the becoming, as most of us do, would prefer a dazzling gown of Felix which glowed its way into my covetous fancy the other day. A stately brunette would carry it off best. It is a ball gown of green, covered with heavy white lace, and made princess style. It is daringly plain, save for a wide lace belt, fitting into the figure above each hip. The lace becomes much heavier at the low-cut neck, and is heavily set with diamonds and emeralds. The front of the dress falls straight from the bust in front, and reminded me of stately Gibson figures of a year or so ago. At the back, green accordian-pleated chiffon hangs from a soft bow at the shoulders to the foot of the train.

A matter of special interest were the gowns to be worn next winter. One gray gown by Bonnaire is of satin finish cloth. It has five small box pleats, beginning at the broad collar which terminates the bust, narrowing at the waist and widening ever so little as they descend to about six inches from the foot of the skirt, when they open, and make a nice flare and frou--frou with silk skirts about the feet. In these days of fragile effects, a woman is scarcely feminine in her appearance unless there is a certain frou-frou about her. The severe tailor-made model is no longer a novelty. It is only at times a necessary evil. But to return—the waist of this very feminine little gown has the same small tucks, rounding up over the bust under the flat collar, softened by a narrow underfrill of gray, accordion-pleated chiffon. The collar opens in front to show a small yoke of light blue satin, folding in front in pleats, and a standing collar of the same material over which black velvet bebe ribbon is crossed in diamonds.

The discussion whether or not low necked gowns should be worn at the summer restaurant dinners, now in vogue, is a lively one among fashionables here at present, owing to the part taken in the millinerial controversy by American women. It began at a dinner given by Mrs. Howell Payne,not long ago,at D'Armonville, the popular resort. Mrs. Potter Palmer appeared in a high necked costume of pure white nun's veiling, exquisitely trimmed with black lace and lace insertion. Her head was covered by a large black hat trimmed with white roses and white feathers. Miss May followed her lead and was simply attired in white and black lace as well, with a large ecru hat with black velvet bows. The French women, on the contrary, wore decollete dresses with hats, the good taste of which is beginning to be questioned.

Worth says:—"Low bodices and hats are bad form."

Mme. Thellier—"By all means low necked bodices and hats are not appropriate for restaurants."

Doucet—"Anything is a la mode if the right person wears it."

Jeanne Hallee, another millinerial authority seems to settle the matter when she says—"For summer restaurants and resorts, low bodices and hats are not good form. Only in private houses can decollete gowns be worn, and then, of course without hats."

The Americans appear to be winning out.

META HOLDENIS.

Ways of the Roof Gardens.

NEW YORK

With the thermometer crawling up about as near to the boiling point as it can get, in a way it has had here lately, one can't enjoy life much before ten o'clock p. m. Living along until evening is the favorite day time amusement, and after dark "doing" the roof-gardens in as good company as you can manage. The sight-seer par excellence who has been exiled for some time from the delights of the metropolis likes to do the rounds with an "other fellow," or two, but girls go everywhere now, and the New Yorker detained in town on business usually can find some pretty maid of his acquaintance to accompany him. You go up, up, to one or another of those amusement resorts perched on top of the New York, the Casino, the Victoria, and Koster and Bial's Theatres, and you leave the heat of the pavements behind, and are met by cooling winds, which frisk like infant tornados. And you feel just as frisky as every body else. The vaudeville star frisks when she sings her little song about "The Man I Can't Forget," the yeung collegian frisks after his 'teenth stein of beer, and the girl you're with sometimes frisks to disguise the fact that she's shocked. The general vulgarity of these roof garden entertainments is the least cooling part of the outfit, though even the tenderloin gains through the altitude and the frisky baby tornados.

Ar oof garden is a law unto itself. But it rather surprises you when the shrewd young damsel with you—whispers—"This is all right here. We pay our money to get cooled off, and we'll stand anything, but if it was in a concert hall, I'd leave, and in the same block where I live, I'd move out."

So vaudeville supplants drama through the dog-days and the dog-goned nights. I have found out that it even boasts of matinee idols for the girls, except that these performances are not in the afternoon. Going around among the roof gardens, I picked out easily enough young gentlemen, who are the extravagantly admired of the enthusiastic sex. There are two of them in particular. Neither of them speaks a word during his act, but both are strikingly handsome with an air of refinement, and of being somewhat above their surroundings—although these are rather high up. It is perhaps just as well that they don't open their mouths. One is a bicycle rider of the Johnstone brothers, at the Venetian Terrace. His name is not printed on the bills, but probably a letter addressed to pretty Johnstone would be delivered to him without hesitation—at least on his part. The real magnificence of his self-esteem shines in his bearing. Johnstone, in a way, is a professional beauty, and he knows it. He goes through with a lot of really difficult feats in bicycle riding, which go far to make up to the masculine part of the audience for his looks. He strikes an attitude afterward in his pink tights, and you rather expect him to back off, kissing his hands to the ladies. But he only looks it. The girls are quite sure he is a gentleman, don't you know.

The second idol of the roof-gardens is a banjo player at the Cherry Blossom Grove. Bnt the team is down as Polk and Collins, and which his name is I don't know. Both look like college students, but one is the beauty and one isn't. They are exceptionally fine banjoists to my way of thinking, but while feminine ears listen impartially, I notice feminine eyes are fixed on the one with fine features, fresh complexion, thick hair and cultured expression. He is not so conceited as the pink Mr. Johnstone, but probably a bouquet sent to the firm, would be passed to him without his making any "rough house" about it. He has a way of selecting some girl down near the front to gaze at during his touching banjo gymnastics, and she sits fasinated and quite the envy of the rest. Conspicuousness won in this way seems to have quite a different effect from that with which Nat Wills at one of the Procter theatres victimizes some innocent every night. He is called before the curtain, a few times, with what seems to be uncontrollable admiration on the part of the claque. A large bouquet of giddy looking flowers is handed him. With great care and tenderness, and some "This is so sudden," airs, he unpins a note from the ribbon that holds the flowers, and opens it. He shakes it to see if money or a ckeck will drop out. To his disapointment, all in expressive pantomime, neither does, but as he reads, a complacent smile rivaling Johnstone's comes over his face. He glances up frequently and finally counts back a few rows of seats in the auditorium. Then he refers to the note again and counts across the rows of seats. When he has located a certain person he nods and goes off, making a gesture significantly toward the stage door. At such guilefulness we laugh, in a Broadway audience in midsummer. It is perhaps because the sides of the glass-covered garden are open in such a way that the frisky breezes can be coaxed in. After sizzling all day, one can laugh at anything.

KATHARINE LEE.

The Great Remedy of the day is unquestionably PAIN-KILLER, for the instant relief of all burns, scalds, bruises, etc., and for pains in the stomach and bowels as well as in sudden attacks of cholera morbus. No family should pretend to keep house without it always by them. Avoid substitutes, there is but one Pain-Killer, Perry Davis'. Price 25c. and 50c.

PASSING CHEAP. It costs the government about $1000 to buy a good mule and ship him over here," writes a regular from Manila, "Filipino horses are worth $25, the same price as Filipino women; but I think that the price of women will go up here, because on the other islands they sell for from $10 to $40."

IF YOU WANT
The Best Coal Oil
BUY

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE Tel. Main 1[illegible]
DEALERS IN Paper
55, 57, 59, 61 First Street
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
Blake, Moffitt & Towne Los Angeles — Blake, McFall Co. Portland, Or.

A. O. LINDSTROM [Phone Main 5178] AL. JOHNSON
Sutter Street Hammam
TURKISH RUSSIAN BATHS
415 Sutter St., bet. Stockton and Powell
Open Day and Night for Gentlemen
For Ladies from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m.

Don't Borrow a Home!
BUY IT. Your rent payments for the borrowed home will do it through the aid of the
CONTINENTAL BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION OF CALIFORNIA.
WM. CORBIN, Secretary and General Manager.
Home Office, 222 Sansome St., San Francisco

STRAWBERRY COLD CREAM
A Perfect Complexion
Made from the pure fruit juice at
GREENBAUM'S,
200 Post Street, Corner Grant Ave.
Sent anywhere on receipt of 25 cents

COTTON SAIL DUCKS
Twenty-two-inch, in all numbers: Medium, Soft and Hard; also Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks from 30 to 120 inches wide. Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks, Manufactured by Mount Vernon Co., Baltimore,
MURPHY, GRANT & CO.,
Pacific Coast Agents.

Brushes for barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bath-houses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candy-makers dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paper hangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.
BUCHANAN BROS, Brush Mfrs.,
TEL. 5610. 609 Sacramento Street.

HAVE YOU EVER THOUGHT
What a Gas Range Will Do?
It will do everything any other cooking apparatus will do, but it will do it BETTER, QUICKER, EASIER and CHEAPER
IT WILL DO AWAY WITH
Dirt, Worry and Ashes.
Your kitchen will be clean.
Your working hours shorter.
Your food will be better cooked;
Your life prolonged, and
Your happiness increased.
Stove Department,
415 Post Street, - - San Francisco

THEATRICALS.

Orpheum

Laura Bennett and Sallie Stembler. Meeker Baker Trio. Jolly John Nash. Hooper and Davies. Mr. and Mrs. John Mason. Nichols Sisters. St. Croix Brothers. Zelina Keatون. Bioscraph.

Reserved Seats 25c. Balcony 50c. Orchestra Chairs and Box Seats 75c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.

Columbia Theatre

ONE WEEK, BEGINNING NEXT MONDAY
Matinees Wednesday and Saturday
CHARLES FROHMAN presents
HENRY MILLER
and a Special Company
in the popular romantic success
"HEARTSEASE"
HENRY MILLER AS ERIC TEMPLE
Magnificent Costumes and Stage Settings

Every Thursday Afternoon and Sunday Night
THE BURTON HOLMES LECTURES
Next: "The Adventures of the Lady Ursula"

California THE POPULAR HOUSE

H. FRIEDLANDER & Co., Lessees and Managers
Telephone Main 1731

FAREWELL WEEK
Dunn & Riley's All-Star Cast
PRESENTING MATHEWS & BULGER
in their latest Farce Comedy Success
"The Night of the Fourth"
Reappearance of Walter Jones and Maud Courtney

Sunday afternoon and the week commencing Monday, August 13th
"The Brownies in Fairyland"
SPECIAL SUNDAY NIGHT PERFORMANCE
Grand Farewell of Dunn & Ryley's All Star Cast in
"RUSH CITY"

Alcazar Theatre

Fred Belasco and Mark Thall, Managers
Phone Main 254

Week of Monday, August 6th
FLORENCE ROBERTS
Supported by
White Whittlesey
In a revival for one week only by special request of
The Country Girl
Only Matinee, Saturday. In preparation—Frou Frou

The Saturday Wave
Is Printed by
THE MYSELL-ROLLINS CO.
32 CLAY STREET, S. F.

Stylish Suits $15.50

Dressy Suits $20.00
Pants 4.50

My $25.00 Suits are the Best in America.

25 Per Cent Saved by getting your suit made by

JOE POHEIM
THE TAILOR
1110-1112 Market Street
201-203 Montgomery St., S.F.

SAMPLES SENT FREE

Trusts add combinations do not affect Jesse Moore Whiskey. Its fame is established; its quality is the finest and it is always the best.

Mary Marble's Mobility.

Mary Marble is fully four feet ten inches in height and her great-grandfather was an actor. So was her father for that matter and her mother—besides intermediate relatives and connections. Heredity explains a great deal, though I have known ladies with a generation or so of illustrious ancestors who were as wooden Indians on the stage.

Miss Marble, however, is all mobility—in spite of her name. She is a creature of "nods and becks and wreathed smiles." Her eyes and lips have a volubility past all power of utterance. Should she say all she looks, no one else could get a word in edge-ways. But whoever listens is allowed to interpret her expressions according to his individual fancy—which, while it teases one's imagination, is neither a strain on the mind or on the ear.

Miss Marble (she is Mrs. Dunne off the programme) has views on a variety of subjects, but is embarassed in stating them by an implacable sense of humor. It is really dreadful, she thinks, the way the Chinese are acting. "Those poor missionaries," she says with a shudder, which is meant to convey the horror, sympathy, regret and other sentiments appropriate to the occasion. But it did not. It suggested innumerable roguish possibilities in connection with missionaries. The eyes suggested an appreciation of the Chinese point of view; the nose, that missionaries are much better than they are amusing, and the lips, all those naughty jokes which funny papers from time immemorial have turned on the way of the missionary with the heathen. Yet I know that Miss Marble has a heart full of love and tenderness for anyone in distress. She admits it herself.

So it was over half a dozen other subjects. What Miss Marble asserted most positively, her disobedient features denied most explicitly. She narrated with much feeling the hardships of the farce comedy life, and her eyes laughed the whole story to scorn. She declared she was afraid of interviewers. The joyous vivacity of her lips assured me she did not mean a word of it. Her ambition is a country house, far removed from the busy haunts of men, or the "madding crowd," she confided; but her droll little nose proclaimed the statement an affectation. The idea of a Mary Marble, born, reared, and married in Stageland, going a-ranching! The very idea of it!

MARY MARBLE
Photo by Thors

Why Do We Laugh?

Why do people laugh? What is a joke? Go to the Orpheum and try to analyze your hilarity, or rather your neighbor's hilarity, if your own will let you. Is laughter spontaneous, or is it contagious? Is it sporadic or is it epidemic? Grave questions, these.

At the Orpheum Joe J. Sullivanand Carrie Webber convulse the audience with laughter with a specialty called "The Coal Man." As I think coldly now I wonder what I laughed at. "The Coal Man" was inane in action; broad and heavy in jocular dialogue. Yet I know I laughed to pain. At the first glimpse of Sullivan's red nose peeping from behind the scene in advance of his red-wigged, Irish-bedecked, rotund body, the whole audience broke into a spontaneous laugh. Before he opened his mouth the laugh was a prolonged roar. This roar lasted throughout the performance in cyclone-like crescendos and plaintive diminuendos. At each of the cavernous chuckles with which Sullivan punctuates his remarks the roar became shrieks, and I confess fool tears ran down my nose.

My present theory is that laughter is infectious. I laughed because my neighbor laughed, and he laughed because the others did.

But who began, who started the contagious disease?

Well, in this case, the answer is easy. Sullivan himself did that. He chuckled. Some fool in the orchestra laughed. The orchestra laughed; the parterre laughed, the gallery laughed, and I laughed.

So that for the present my theory is a working one.

"Brother Officers."

Henry Miller has given us the opportunity to see many a good thing in the way of modern plays, but nothing better has been seen in this far province than "Brother Officers." Refined, well drawn, written in exceptional English, the play is a work of art. The idea is the old one, that there is no such thing as a gentleman except him who is born of those who call themselves the aristocracy. Of course the play proves that the real gentleman is one of lowly birth, although stiff English respectability wouldn't allow him to carry off My Lady, and drives him into exile with a broken heart. Its all very false from an American standpoint, but a first-class English picture. Of the players naught but praise can be said. Miss Anglin once again gave reason to believe she will soon be the foremost of American actresses.

* * *

For the seventh week of the engagement at the Columbia, the Columbia will produce "Heartsease," the biggest hit of their last engagement. This pretty costume play is alwaysa drawing card, and should crowd the house during its eight performances. "The Adventure of the Lady Ursula" follows. Tuesday is the fiftieth night of the Miller engagement.

For the tenth and last week of the Dunne & Ryley season at the California theater, Mathews and Bulger will present "The Night of the Fourth," the farce in which they will star the coming season. The last appearane of the Dunne and Ryley aggregation will be on Sunday night, August 12th, when "Rush City" will be presented. "The Brownies in Fairyland" will follow.

Florence Roberts and White Whittlesey finish their "Romeo and Juliet" engagement Sunday night, after which "The Country Girl" will be revived for one week in compliance with popular request. This is one of the best productions ever given by the Alcazar and shows Florence Roberts to advantage in a new line. In passing it may be said that her work this season has showed wonderful development and promises a front-rank success for this California actress.

"Frou-Frou" follows. The regular Alcazar stock season opens September 3d.

A Cohan sketch presented by Laura Bennett and Sallie Stembler is at the head of the next Orpheum bill. The Meeker-Baker trio have a clown act. Jolly John Nash presents a clever monologue. Hooper and Davies with a song and dance act complete the list of new people.

MOORE' POISON OAK REMEDY
Cures Poison Oak and All Skin Diseases
Sold by All Druggists.

Zaza in London.

The London run on all American theatrical attractions continues. The latest sensation is "Zaza," under the management of Belasco, who has quite captured the British metropolis. His stage management is described by professionals and critics as next to Henry Irving's for art and taste. Indeed, the highest honor won by the performance is the continual attendance of theatrical people, who have come in crowds. It is an honor not appreciated by the management, since actors expect "the courtesies of the house," and come in on "paper." If there were plenty of spare seats, the business office would not mind, but there are not, the house being crowded at every performance. Consequently, many are called and few are chosen; the man who does the choosing, Mr. Mathews, is rapidly becoming unpopular in his profession.

* * *

Saharet, Dancer.

Another London stage celebrity, indeed the celebrity of the present moment, owes her introduction to the United States, although she is a colonist by birth and as British as roast beef. This is Saharet, a whirlwind dancer, who was born in Melbourne, learning to dance there, was picked up and exploited by an American manager, finished her art on the Continent, and now, at the age of twenty-one, is the reigning vaudeville sensation, having crowded the American Zouaves from front place.

She gives a dance which is all her own and unclassified. It is a combination of a ballet, a skirt-dance, a contortion-dance and gymnastic tumbling, and is leavened by a beauty, grace and personality all her own. For she is a very beautiful woman—tall, willowy, with much dark hair, and features which have the rare combination of classic beauty and warm expression. She has been compared to Otero, from whom she differs in being younger, more magnetic, and not at all suggestive.

Saharet is the daughter of a showman and a circus rider, began to dance and tumble before she was out of baby clothes, and has never known what it is to be away from the atmosphere of the circus and the theatre. On her European tour, she was in great demand as an artist's model, owing to her grace, beauty and intelligence. Von Lenbach, the painter of princes, has used her for several of his figure-paintings. The enormous fees paid for this service and her large salary have given her the foundation of a fortune already, for she is a saving body and realizes that she will lose her power of earning with her youth.

Germea
THE IDEAL BREAKFAST DISH

Electric Supplies
CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIRS
California Electrical Works
409 MARKET STREET

The Sign of the Peacock
229 GEARY ST.
Theatre Suppers
Luncheon Ice Cream Breakfast
ORDERS DELIVERED

A Glowing Highway to Happiness is the Road that leads to . . .

DEL MONTE

Added to the many pleasures afforded by its enchanting surroundings are FINE GOLF LINKS

THIS SEASON'S

HOMES OF PLEASURE

. . . THE PEERLESS CALIFORNIA RESORT . . .

Spider Web vs. Electricity.

A peculiar but very serious difficulty besets the operation of telegraph lines in the Argentine Republic. The small spider, of the variety that spins a long cobweb and floats on it in the air, is so plentiful there that the floating webs settle on the wires in enormous quantities. As soon as dew falls, or a shower of rain comes up, every microscopic thread becomes wet and establishes a minute leak. The effect of thousands and millions of such leaks is practically to stop the operation of the lines, and the government telegraph department, especially in Buenos Ayres, has been put to vast inconvenience by the cob-webs. A number of expedients have been tried, but to no avail. On the important line between Buenos Ayres and Rosario the effect of the spider web is to cut down the speed of working from 300 or 400 to 30 messages an hour. The government has just determined, as a last resort, to connect the two points by an underground cable about one hundred and fifty miles long.

An Australian's Memoirs.

However much we may be disposed to laugh at the comments of the average Britisher who puts forth reminiscences of the States after a trip 'cross continent, there are certain exceptions whose expressions have the charm of interest. The memorials of Charles Henry Pearson, an Australian statesman, who "did" the Americas in the good days of Boston's intellectual supremacy, seem rather worth while. He was at a free-thinking seance in which Emerson appeared to him "like a prophet in a mad house." He remarks on Longfellow's "patriarchal grace," and praises Ticknor and Agassiz as among "the most charming old men he had ever known." He noted that the bitterness left by the Civil War was so keen that one Southern lady felt constrained to explain to him that she declined to tell her boy it was wrong to steal, because she knew if she so taught him 'it would only unfit him for society in the North when he grew up."

However, these "Memoirs" are not exclusively American. Pearson was at Oxford and met an eccentric genius whom he styles "L." It was one of "L's" troubles that he was afflicted with self-consciousness. One day he confided to a friend that he had determined to try getting drunk as a possible cure. The friend argued against the plan, but attached no particular importance to the matter, and presently forgot all about it. Late that night he was startled by a noise as of someone stumbling upstairs and falling against his door. He peoned his oak, and "L" staggered in and threw himself on a chair, very drunk, and muttering, "Self-conscious still, self-conscious still!"

There is only one reason why you shouldn't drink Jesse Moore "AA" Whiskey that's because you have signed the pledge.

Moet and Chandon

The Largest and Oldest Champagne House in the world.

White Seal (Grand Cuvee), of exceptional bouquet and dryness.—Court Journal.

MILLS College and Seminary

Seminary course accredited to College and Universities. Ideal surroundings. Thirty-fifth year. Write for catalogue to

Fall Term Opens Aug. 8, 1900

MRS. C. T. MILLS, Pres., Mills College P. O., Cal.

BAJA CALIFORNIA

Damiana Bitters

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes, and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. ☞ Send for Circular.

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 MARKET STREET, S. F.

HAVE YOU A PIANO THAT YOU DO NOT USE?

Is the piano in your home a musical instrument, and do you enjoy it as such, or does it remain unused for months at a time and become practically nothing more than an article of furniture.

The Pianola

Is Bringing into use thousands of pianos that have been silent for many years.

It is bringing music into homes where it has long been a stranger.

It is making players of people who, lacking musical training, had never expected to experience the pleasure of producing music for themselves.

It is increasing the repertoire of amateur and professional pianists by making the entire literature of the piano instantly available without study and without practice.

The Pianola looks like a small cabinet. It has small felt-covered fingers that rest on the keys of the piano and, operated by pneumatic power, strike the keys with a pliant, yielding and remarkably sympathetic touch that is almost identical with that of the human fingers.

When not in use the Pianola may be easily detached from the piano and moved to another part of the room.

The Pianola can be used in connection with any Grand or Upright piano, and does not in any way mar or disfigure the instrument. It can be easily and quickly adjusted by any one.

The action of the Pianola is so simple that even a child can readily learn to play it; at the same time it is capable of so much expression that its greatest admirers are those who best understand and appreciate good music.

Price $250 Upward.

The Pianola can be bought by monthly payments. Our instruments are gladly shown to the merely curious as well as to intending purchasers.

Kohler & Chase, Sole Agents.

26, 28 and 30 O'FARRELL STREET.

W. C. ACHI & CO.

Real Estate Brokers

We buy or sell real estate in any part of the Group. We will also buy or sell Stocks in any corporation in Hawaiian Islands.

Office, 10 W. King St., HONOLULU, H. I.

Thuringia Insurance Co.

OF ERFURT, GERMANY

Capital, $2,250,000 Assets, $10,984,248

PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT 204-208 Sansome St., S. F.

VOSS, CONRAD & CO.

General Agents.

Irving Institute

Select Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies

2126 CALIFORNIA ST., San Francisco, Cal.

Next season will begin August 6th. Accredited to the Universities. Seminary and Full Conservatory of Music. Primary Department for Children. Carriage will call. For further information address the Principal, REV. EDWARD B. CHURCH, A. M.

Eighty-five Fine Sunny Rooms Elevator Service
Excellent Cuisine References Requrred
FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL

THE BRADBURY

J. A. FERSON, PROP.

N.W. Cor. Polk and California Sts., San Francisco

Transient trade solicited. Rates $2.00 and upwards. Reasonable by the month. Tel. Hyde 2771.

1875 1900

Safe Deposit and Trust Co.

Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.

PHONE BUSH 165.

Safe-Deposit Boxes from $5.00 per year up. Trunks and Valuables of every Description Stored in Fire and Burglar-Proof Vaults at $1.00 per month.

Office Hours 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.

New Stories Re-Told.

HENRY PAINE'S REPARTEE.—The late Henry W. Paine of the Massachusetts bar was once defending a charity case in which a boy of fifteen was charged with arson. He made out a strong case to prove the defendant an idiot. After a charge from the judge which was practically an order for aquital the jury brought in a verdict of guilty. The judge asked Paine if he would move for a new trial. "I thank you for your suggestion, was the answer, "but I am oppressed with the gravest doubts whether I have the right to move for a new trial. Your Honor, I have already asked for and have received for my idiot client the most precious heritage of our English and American common law—A trial by a jury of his peers." Paine had an old quarrel with the Supreme Court and never lost an opportunity of showing his contempt for that body. Once, riding from Boston to Cambridge with a load of law books, he was accosted by a young Harvard man with the remark:, "You have quite a load, Mr. Paine. Law books, I suppose. "Oh, no." was the answer, "Only Supreme Court reports."

A CHEAP REPUTATION.—A number of youths were practicing pistol shooting in an English town, when an American tourist strolled up to watch the sport. A native, catching his accent and supposing, probably, that all Yankees are wild west shots, asked the stranger to have a trial. The latter who had never shot a pistol a dozen times in his life, nevertheless stepped up and, by a fortunate shot, hit the bull's-eye square in the centre. One of the party offered to bet that he could not do it again. The American took him up and tried another shot, giving an imperceptible turn of his wrist at the moment of firing so that the bullet flew clear of target and bank. "You will find that I have hit the hole made by the other shot." He said. No trace of the missle being discovered, and it being held impossible that such a marksman should score a clean miss' the Englishmen took him at his word. He clinched the matter by offering to bet two to one that he could do it again. There were no takers, and he went away a hero.

COULDN'T EXPRESS HIMSELF.—A candidate for the position of district school-teacher in the farming region of Vermont was found sadly deficient in spelling, grammar and mathematics, but excused it by declaring geography to be his strong point. 'Where is Chi ago?" asked the examiner. "Well, t's out West," was the answer. "In what part of the West?" "Well, now'" said the young man, with an ingenious but fleeting smile, "I know whereabouts in the States Chicago is, just as well as anybody. I could go right there if I had a ticket, but I haven't got the flow of language to make it clear, that's the only trouble!"

A PALPABLE FOUL.—The small son of a Chicago parson came home one day with a badly disfigured face. His father called him up for the usual heart-to-heart talk. "What have you been doing?' "Fighting." "Son, have you forgotten what I have said about fighting?" "He hit me on the cheek." "How often have I told you that the Good Book tells us to turn the other cheek?" "I did, pa—honest—but he smashed me on the nose and I called that a foul and went in and licked the stuffin' out of him. And pa, he's been to Sunday School as much as I have, and ought to know the rules!"

DISTRUSTED THE BISHOPS.—Lord Salisbury invariably lunches at the Athnaeum, the most soleumn of London clubs, the membership of which consists of eminent doctors, judges, lawyers, and, above all, bishops. One rainy day as the premier was starting out to his noonday meal one of his secretaries observed that he had no umbrella. He rushed after the chief with his own, a silver mounted one. "No, no," said Lord Salisbury; "I've lost too many in the Athnaeum. I cannot trust the bishops!"

The PALACE HOTEL

The high standard of excellence maintained by this hotel is recognized and appreciated by a fastidious and discriminating clientele who regularly make it their headquarters when visiting San Francisco.

The GRAND HOTEL

is operated in conjunction with the Palace to which it is joined by a covered passageway, placing under one management 1400 rooms, more than half of which have baths attached.

AMERICAN PLAN. EUROPEAN PLAN.

Famous FOR ITS Purity

SEATTLE, U. S. A.

WHEN LEAVING THE CITY PLACE YOUR VALUABLES IN THE

Safe Deposit Vaults

OF THE First National Bank

N. W Corner Bush and Sansome Sts.

EVERY POSSIBLE SAFEGUARD TO PROPERTY

REASONABLE RATES
PROMPT ATTENTION

Office Hours: 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.

REPSOLD SELECT VINTAGE REGISTERED BRAND

Repsold Select Vintage Wines

FOR YOUR HOME DINNER

This brand of Wine is served at all first-class clubs, hotels and restaurants

Office, 416 Pine St. A. REPSOLD & CO.

THE

White Pass and Yukon Route

The Pacific & Arctic Railway and Navigation Co.

British Columbia Yukon Railway Co., British Yukon M, T. & T. Co.

AND Canadian Development Company, Ltd.

THROUGH LINE TO DAWSON.

Two first-class trains daily between Skaguay and Bennett, B. C. Ten first-class steamers operating between White Horse and Dawson. Through Telegraph Service Skaguay to Dawson and Intermediate Points.

SKAGUAY IS THE GATEWAY

—TO—

KLONDIKE AND CAPE NOME GOLD FIELDS.

FOR RATES AND PARTICULARS APPLY TO

S. M. IRWIN
TRAFFIC MANAGER
Skaguay, Alaska, and Seattle, Wash. [Phone Main 574]

S. P. BROWN
GENERAL AGENT
116 Yesler Way, Seattle, Wash

From Admiral George Dewey:

Mr. George Mayerle, German Expert Optician, 1071½ Market street, San Francisco—Dear Sir: I am still using with much satisfaction the glasses you sent at Manila; also, the new ones suit my eyes perfectly. Very truly yours,
GEORGE DEWEY.

A GRADUATE

George Mayerle

German Expert Optician

Consultation, Examination and advice free.

OPTICIAN HONORED

1071½ Market St.

near Seventh

Telephone Mint 257

German Eye Wate 50 cents.

From General Wm. R. Shafter:

Mr. George Mayerle, San Francisco—Dear Sir: The glasses made by you received yesterday. I have never been better fitted than with this pair.
Very truly yours,
WM. R. SHAFTER.
Major-General, U. S. V.

Reduced To 5 Cents a Copy.

STATE LIBRARY
This Paper not to be taken from the Library.

THE SATURDAY WAVE

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY
AND JOURNAL OF EVENTS CURRENT

WHICH?

CHINESE PERSONALITIES

Li Hung Chang.

THE Chinese crisis has brought about the downfall of a cherished idol. Li Hung Chang, whom we of the Western world have been accustomed to look upon as the best influence at work in China, old Earl Li, ranked by General Grant among the three greatest men whom he met in his tour around the world, is about the most unpopular of his race just now with Europeans. It is unfair indeed to judge Li just now. Little reliance can be placed in any of the so-called "news" emanating from China, and especially Shanghai, City of Distinguished Liars. The apparent double-dealing of the old diplomat may be explained away when the whole matter is understood more fully. In the meantime it can be said in his defense that he, as a Chinese, is under continual pressure from the Chinese side, and that he could favor the Europeans only at the expense of his life and property, that, as a Chinese, he would be an undoubted traitor if he turned against his people and aided the designs of the Europeans, embodying as is suspected the partition of the Empire; that to occupy a position on the fence between two savagely hostile elements is a difficult diplomatic position, not to be held without the help of a few lies. There is one sentiment common to all Chinamen: it is hatred of the foreign devils. Despite his protestations, Li is as intensely anti-foreign as his brethren. He resents just as bitterly the encroachments of Germany, England, Russia, and France, and however he may protest, his sympathies are with the Boxers. What attitude save that which he has taken could be expected of the man, Were even the accomplished Count Cassini, to whose malignant influence much of the present trouble is attributed, forced to show his hand as Li Hung Chang has been forced to do in the past month, it would be found that he held just as many false cards. Moreover, diplomacy is made up pretty largely of lies. Were any accomplished diplomat of Europe forced to show his hand, as Li Hung Chang has been forced to do in the past month, it might be found that nydehhel just as ma false cards.

Li Hung Chang's Ability.

However that may be, Li is certainly a remarkable statesman. His success in affairs of government and finance has been gained mostly by his understanding of the Caucasian character. In this, he has a parallel on the other side, in the person of Sir Robert Hart, who gained his position through his comprehension of the Chinese mind. Li began life in rather humble circumstances, but rose rapidly. His first meeting with Westerners and his bound to fame came simultaneously in connection with the Tai-Ping rebellion. There, he commanded the column of native troops which co-operated with Chinese Gordon's Englishmen in suppressing the rebels. It is said that he first attracted Gordon's notice by his coolness and personal courage. When his men were hard pressed in their trenches, Li used to encourage them by walking along the barricade twirling his thumb-rings while the "long-haired robbers" took shots at him. Gordon used every possible means to advance him, and the entrance of the European powers into Chinese affairs gave him his opportunity. Wherever the two civilizations have touched, Earl Li, "The hinge of the open door,„ has been the go-between. His fortunes have risen or fallen according as the government of China has been conservative or progressive; in the few spasmodic reform movements, he has stood closest to the throne. Hated by the conservative faction which is the cause of the great outbreak, he has nevertheless made himself indispensable at all times, so that the native powers that be have never dared to hint at his absolute removal.

It remains to be said that the old diplomat has never advanced the interests of his country at the expense of his private fortunes. On the contrary, he is probably the richest man in all China. Nor have his methods been over-scrupulous. Ugly stories are told of his bribe-taking and extortion. Perhaps he is not to be held to special blame for that. A man must be judged by his native standards; strict honor and faith in office is nearly unkown in the administration of Chinese governmental affairs. Herein lies a great paradox. In ordinary commercial matters, there are none so honest. Throughout the East, traders require no bonds or notes from a Chinaman, whereas they hold a Japanese or a Korean to the strictest accounting. No debt is so overwhelming but that a Chinese will discharge it to the last farthing of his ability. But give a Celestial power, and he always uses it to corrupt ends. Old Li has been no exception; indeed, his very genius for active affairs has rendered his peculations the greater.

Chang-Chih-Tung

There is one honest official in China, however. He is a sort of an opera-bouffe character and a vast deal of a solemn ass, but he is honest. This is Chang-Chih-Tung, viceroy of the Liang Hu provinces, poet, philosopher, rabid Confucian and would-be-man of affairs. He is said to hold greater power than Li Hung Chang, owing Chinese Policemen armed with the Three Hooked Spears they Carry on Parade.

t o his greater honesty. Like John Hay, our present Secretary of State, he first came before the public as a poet, but unlike Hay his literary work was a direct entrance to political eminence. This is possibie and common in China, where all civil service examinations are entirely literary in character. He has been high in the empire for at least a quarter of a century, and has had a varied career. His position in Chinese affairs is peculiar and is, theoretically, a good one. He is opposed to the foreigners and in favor of their ways. He sees the advisability for China of keeping the strangers out of political control, but he is for improvement on all the most enlightened western lines.

The point where Chang stumbles is practical application of his principles, and it is here that he becomes amusing. It is reminiscent of the ridiculous social theories of Balzac, this spectacle of a poet boggling private affairs. Chang's chief pride is his iron-foundry and arsenal at Wuchang-Fu, where he once hoped to turn out the material for railroads to be built, run and operated by Chinese. When the project was launched and the material, brought from England, was delivered, Chang was approached by his subordinates.

"What are we to do with it?" they said.

"Put it up!" said Chang.

"But we don't know how," they said.

"Never mind, put it up."

It was consequently put together, most of it wrong, and had to be straightened out by hated foreigners. When this was done, it was found that the furnaces needed coal. The thought of putting the plant near to China's great coal supply had never occurred to Chang. Nevertheless, he issued his sublime orders. "Get coal!" he said, and the coal was brought overland, by ox-cart and at enormous expense. The result was, of course, failure. The plant has never yielded one-quarter of the value for expense that would have been taken out by European management, and the product was comparatively worthlesss.

Reminiscences of Chang

He was the author of a characteristic stratagem in the Japanese war. When it became known that the invaders were to land on the shores of the Gulf of Perhili, he conceived the idea of digging along the shore a long, deep trench, into which the Japanese were to fall as they left the ships. The Chinese were to lurk in ambush and kill their enemies as they struggled in this gulf. It never seemed to occur to him that the Japanese would look ahead and see the hole. At any rate, the Chinese general in command used his whole available forces in carrying out the plan and was surprised when the Japanese scouts found the ditch and bridged it.

Personally, this poet-reformer is a little, old, dried-up man with an ugly, underhung face, rather a full beard for a Chinaman. His appearance is said to be strikingly reminiscent of the extant portraits of Voltaire. Outside of his aversion for foreigners and his reform theories, he has a hobby for Confuscianism, and hates equally the Buddhists, the Tooists and the Christians. His position in the present crisis is uncertain, but it is doubtful if he is strongly for the Boxers, as his rule in the central provinces has been singularly humane.

Shen Tatai

Sheng Taotai is the viceroy who was suspected of juggling dates in the first Conger cablegram to the State Department. At his door is laid most of the suspicious work which has occurred in the communications between Europe and the ministers. Sheng is strikingly like the ultra-Democratic portraits of Mark Hanna.. He is neither a statesman like Li nor an honest man like Chang—only an all-round unqualified scoundrel of the most malignant Chinese type. He has won his great wealth by flagrant corruption and extortion. He is in favor of foreigners, of Chinese, of Japanese, of Boxers, of anybody and anything that can be squeezed. When necessary, he can exhibit great talent for practical affairs. It is recorded that he has led Li Hung Chang around by the nose on questions of mining concessions. For he is a prime mover in the attempt to exploit the mining wealth of the Empire, believing that there is almost as much wealth in gold and coal as in bribery and extortion.

In his mining deal with Li, both men won out in the end. The story is interesting. The venture, which proved a heavy failure, was capitalized by Li, who had lent on Sheng's promssory note. The old viceroy held his debtor strictly to, account, but the latter professed inability to pay unless given some lucrative government position. Li saw the point, and put Sheng into one rich pasture after another until the debt was paid and the debtor had a good margin for himself. Afterward when the Empress was in power and Li in disfavor, Sheng secured his own position by betraying his former associate.

"The handsomest man in all China" he is called, being a big, fine specimen of physical manhood with a virile, fine, Tartar head appealing to the sense of beauty in both Europeans and Chinese. The prospects of his losing that head are exceptionally brilliant in case of the return of a liberal regime.

Less is heard in Europe of Chang-Yin-Huan and Kang-Yu-Wei, reform leaders now in banishment. This is becaus adherence to the reform party has always constituted a bar to preferment at Peking. The reformers strove to work from the ground up, and therefore were never put in contact with Europeans as representatives of the Empire. Chang Yin-Huan was, indeed, once ambassador to Washington, where he gained his admiration for Caucasian ways, but his open adherence to the reform policy ended his preferment several years ago. He is now under banishment in Turkestan. Kang-Yu-Wei is highly educated in both European and Celestial learning and taught for ten years in the native colleges at Canton. At Peking he was junior secretary of the Board of Public Works, and from that position gained access to the Emperor, causing the latter to make some of the reforms ending in his own downfall. If, when the war is over, the allies restore the former government, Kang may be its first Prime Minister.

Prince Tuan.

Prince Tuan, the reputed leader of the Boxers, and heavy villain in the Chinese drama, is a character of another type He has long been the empress' confidant and adviser, and his son has been selected as heir to the Celestial throne. The real name of this leader is Tuo Lo Tsai Y, and he is prince of Toan or Tuan. No greater mistake could be made than to set him down as an ignorant savage. On the contrary, he is one of the cleverest men in Peking, and is possessed of an extensive acquaintance with foreign affairs. He ls fully informed in regard to armaments. and undoubtedly advised the empress in the immense purchase of of modern weapons made during the last twelve months. But by the members of the legations he was not suspected of such a bold design as boding a bloody insurrection. Of Count Cossini the Russian embassador, he was an intimate friend, and secured for him the unique privilege of traveling from the capital to Kiakhta by the route which is reserved exclusively for members of the imperial family and for mandarins of the first class. Mr. Eli Sheppard, now of San Francisco, met him in Peking in the early eighties while the United States and China were sparring over trade concessions. He saw something of Tuan then,and marked him especially as a "good fellow"—what college boys would call a "josher." Perhaps it is this faculty which has given him his power, for he is known to have been very popular with the young men of the Manchus long before the Boxers were heard of in Europe. His movement is a young men s uprising, and his personality must carry weight. But who would have thought it of Tuan, the Prince Hal of the Forbidden City!

Antipathies—The Chines Hatred of Foreigners.

IN Washington, recently, I was talking to a member of the Diplomatic Corps of one of the great nations of Europe. The conversation naturally enough, turned upon the Chinese troubles. "You,who have been in China, your excelltncy," I said,"how do you explain that formidable hate that the Chinese bear toward us Caucasians? Is it really a matter of offended seclusiveness? Is it the mere barbarian hate for what is new?"

"You ask me," he answered, "what I have asked myself often. Yes, I have pondered long and deep on this question, and have evolved an answer of my own. No, I do not think their hate is that dislike men bear for everything that is unlike themselves. It is not a revolt at our insolent assumption of superiority. It is much more than that. The Chinese hatred is something of which you have no conception."

He paused for a moment, evidently seeking the phrase that would impress me with his own idea

"Their aversion to us is more than mental," he finally said. "It is physical. It is a physical repugnance, totally unreasoning, and as insurmountable as it is unreasoning."

"I do not think I catch your idea."

"I'll express it in another way," he said. "I will give you some history,medieval history—I have always been keenly interested in this subject. Napoleon, you know, great man, indomitable will as he had, fainted at the sight of a cat. Anne of Austria could not bear the odor of roses. The Duke of Muscovy became ill whenever he looked upon a woman. The Duke of Schomberg carried his dislike of cats further than Napoleon; he could not pass under a sign-board on which one was painted."

"I think I understand," I said.

"Let us pursue the subject a lttle further."

He answered with a smile. "Vladislaus, King of Poland, bled from the nose at the sight of an apple. Pennant, the great traveler, had such an aversion to wigs that he once pulled off the monumental periwig of the Mayor of Chester in a moment of ungovernable frenzy. King James fainted at the touch of cold steel. I, myself, knew a young lady who became unconscious at the sight of a uniform."

"Poor girl! I hope she was not in San Francisco in '98."

"O, she was not. She is my wife now, and has conquered her dislike—at least as far as diplomatic uniforms go. But there are many other such instances. My father could not bear the sound of a piano, and my sister had to have a special pavilion made for her musical practice. Lamartine underwent tortures when Delphine Gray laughed. Peter the Great could not endure the sound of running water."

"To go further—Princess Lamballe looked with horror on the wiolet; Tycho Brahe fainted at the sight of a fox; the Bishop of Langres, Charles Escara, became unconscious every lunar eclipse. To go further back, Augustus and Caligula forgot all about their dignity at the sound of thunder. But I might adduce a hundred more instances.

"And you think?"

"I think the Chinese hatred of us Caucasians is as physical and deep-fibred as the examples of insurmountable antipathies that I have given you. We are queer creatures, we men. Our bodies command our minds after all. Why should not a whole race, one which has developed in seclusion along its own peculiar lines as the Chinese has, develope an antipathy to the ruthless invaders who endeavor to unset their religion and their cherished habits of life? Moreover a strange odor attaches to our bodies,they say an odor of sheep. They believe the missionaries gouge out the eyes of children to make a magic potion. Ignorance, superstition, fatuity, you say, but its the fact."

"Heaven knows, cleanliness is no attribute of godliness among Celestials I have met," I answered. "It is possible there is a rare odor undistinguished by our organs. Perhaps that accounts for the physical antipathy. It is surmountable, however. There is your wife.—"

"Yes," he interrupted.

"Love of one thing neutralized her dislike for another, But can you make China love? Can you?"

He paused a while, then went on.

"Because, if you can, you have the only solution of this world's great political problem."

Julian Ralph, the well-known war correspondent,is at Kensington, London, recovering from the effect of injuries received in South Africa. In this situation of enforced idleness, he takes occasion to explain why his reports all had so strong an anti-Boer tone. He denies that this was because he was writing for an English paper, and rushed to please Englishmen. On the contrary, he claims to be a frank and conscientious critic of the faults on the English side, and one of the few who dared speak the truth to them. He went to South Africa strongly under the influence of that magnetic force of sympathy which move men of Republican countries toward one another. But as he became acquainted with "Brother Boer" he found that his chief hope and best efforts were toward winning American sympathy by fooling the Americans. As Ralph expresses it—"I did my best to upset his apple cart because the only sound apples he had to offer were a very few on top of a heavy load of rotten ones."

Mr. Arthur Evans, who dug up the palace at Gnossus in Crete, gave some interesting details about his discovery to the Hellenic society recently. A large paved area he spoke of as "the original dancing ground of Ariadne." In one corner of the palace was a throne room, the throne having "crockets" and other details that anticipate Gothic designs. There are frescoes of flowers, water, fishes, and crowds of men and women, the former with red faces the latter with white. The headdresses and costumes of the women are "truly Parisian." The figure of a bull in painted plaster, found there, may be intended to represent the Minotaur. The most important discoveries, however, are the clay tablets and the remarkable alphabet already announced by Mr. Evans.

According to Mr. Leslie Stephen in the "National Dictionary of Biography," Wordsworth as Poet Laureate wore the same coat to levees that Samuel Rogers had worn, and the coat passed subsequently to Tennyson, when he became Poet Laureate.

Giacomo Puccini, the composer, is the fifth representative in the direct line of a family of musicians. His great-great-grandfather, born in 1712, was conductor at Lucca and the teacher of Guglielmi. Descendants of his in each generation have been composers.

IMPRESSIONS OF NOME

Scene on Nome Beach.

Whatever Nome is or is not in the way of wealth, I suppose that it is the most dreary, barren, desert spot that nature ever chose for a treasury. This is saying a good deal, for the site of a mining camp is not generally favored as a garden-spot. Yet Leadville, where even common lawn-grass cannot be made to grow, is set in the midst of great mountains; the same is true of Butte. Nevada City is surrounded with considerable grand scenery of a tamer sort; Randsburg, with the sun beating the life out of the sand, has the mysterious desert air, and the striped bluffs in the distance. Nome alone is utterly lacking in picturesqueness. The sea beats on a dreary beach, from which stretches a bare, brown, level rise of sand and tundra. There is not even the relief of distant mountains, only a few brown hills, against a pitiless Northern sky.

It is a coast that carries suggestions of shipwreck and hardship. For the last few miles of your voyage, you roll along an open treacherous ocean within sight of shores which look as though they had never seen ships or men. This impression is intensified rather than lessened by the perpetual Arctic day.

CONFUSION AND LAWLESSNESS.

I doubt if any other mining camp was ever half so interesting, probably because no other ever leaped to its full size so suddenly. The most crabbed and cynical old miner admits that. Should a town in the warm and civilized parts of the earth spring from two or three hundred inhabitants to twenty thousand in a single year, there would be much hurry and confusion, much disorder and lawlessness. What, then, could be expected of Nome City, a thousand miles of Arctic desert away from a railroad, a whole hemisphere's distance from a brick block? The whole twenty thousand have flung themselves together in the craziest fashion possible, every one for himself and only Uncle Sam's insufficient force of soldiery for all. There are two streets as a nucleus for the chaos; outside stretches a wilderness of shanties, tents, stores, claims, huts, all set as though some high power had picked them up and sown them broadcast; beyond is the beach, piled high with merchandise, with boats, with all those miscellaneous belongings of mankind which are kept out of sight in storehouses, in attics, in cellars throughout the settled world of civilization. For space and shelter are so precious here that the newcomer is lucky if he finds a place to rest his head on the first day of his sojourn—or on the second or third, for that matter. When the newcomer hears one miner ask another, "Got located yet?"—he imagines that the location referred to is a mining claim. It is not; the interlocutor is asking pleasantly about a residence. Most of the habitable tents and shanties are run on a "Box and Cox" arrangement, two or three men sleeping by relays in each bunk throughout the twenty-four hours. It makes little difference, all nights being days here now, and time existing only by courtesy of clocks.

PRECIOUS SPACE AND SHELTER.

I cannot see why we are not all dead of fever, malaria and pneumonia. Certainly, the climate of Nome must be the most salubrious in the world to prevent such a consummation. The homeless and houseless are camping on the wet tundra, which seeps through their blankets at night and sends them out moist and shivering to the long day. There is no drinkable water unless it be boiled. A few do this, but the majority take chances with water that must be alive with bacteria. There are no sewers—there is no provision at all, not even surface drainage, for disposal of the refuse from twenty thousand crowded men and women. The few typhoid cases reported last week must be the forerunner of a general epidemic. Heaven help the camp when it comes.

This is not the only danger to life at Cape Nome, however. There is a lawless element of unknown strength waiting its opportunity to make trouble. Were it not for the iron hand of the United States Army, it would have made trouble already. The gamblers, sharpers, claim-jumpers, all the Dead-Sea fruit of the lawless Alaskan soil, were rushing to Cape Nome before the season was fairly opened; when the Alpha, the advance-guard of the fleet, was righted off the harbor, they were waiting to give the voyagers a warm reception. "Do they bring any money?" was the first question asked when the travelers began to come ashore from the lighters. They did; they also brought some more gamblers and sharpers,

A CRIMINAL ELEMENT.

and each succeeding vessel had still more. I suppose there must be a thousand men in camp who have committed every crime against law, who are here not to mine but to defraud and steal, to usurp locations, to swindle the unwary. The soldiers do their best, considering that they are few and that their hands are tied by the existence of another and conflicting constituted authority, but that best is very little. There have been twelve murders already, and not one arrest for murder. When the excitement of getting located and starting the summer work is passed, when the real owners of claims located and re-located a half dozen times begin to assert their rights, there are sure to be many more. Some very, very weird work on the part of the recorder has helped to make the location of claims a perfect jumble. For every claim recorded, he gets a fee of $250. If, therefore, he assigns the same location to several different men, he is just so much the gainer. Only this can explain the tangle existing on beach and tundra—everywhere, in fact, except on the claims staked, recorded, and worked last fall. Further, many of these overlapping locations were placed originally by sharpers, who proceeded to sell them at huge prices to new comers. The owners of these "sight unseen" properties found some one else

Scene on Front Street.

The Beach Piled High with Merchandise

Sluicing.

in possession of their purchases, and have not the slightest chance of recovering, the other holder having both law and possession on his side. Enough violations of law have been committed to keep a court busy for ten years.

* * *

Murders and Funerals.

One of the spring crop of murders was that of Henry Lucas, shot in a dispute over the claim to his shanty. His funeral, which occurred June 20th was generally attended, having been heralded by a placard distributed around the camp and by a notice in the paper. His slayer was lying wounded in another shanty only a few feet away. It was a scene which recalled Bret Harte. The corpse lay in a board coffin on a bench. At the foot were three tallow candles, at the head a wreath of paper roses. A service was read by a miner who had been a clergyman, while a hundred of the floating population who had nothing else to do stood about and tried to look impressed.

Only one person shed real tears. This was a woman with bleached hair, floating disarranged about her face, who sat at the head of the coffin and wept into an over-scented handkerchief. She and three more like her followed the impromptu hearse—a truck hired at ten dollars an hour—to a hole in the tundra. The four women wept hysterically over the grave in the tundra, as is the fashion of their kind when moved, and then went back to the dance-hall where they had met the dead man. Had this incident been put into a mining camp novel, it would have been called unreal and strained, but this is a faithful description.

Stephen Crane's Influence With Cubans.

THE late Stephen Crane with his mercurial temperament was no where more idolized than in Havana, during the revolutionary times, by the mercurial Cubans. A dozen episodes might be cited to prove his influence over them. An instance of this occurred in an American cafe into which Crane had come, with a Cuban Lieutenant-Colonel in citizen's clothes, and another newspaper correspondent. A bloody riot had taken place at the Hotel Ingleterre only the night before, and things were still on the hair trigger. The three were there to kill time and had scarcely taken their seats, when they were joined by a fiery Spanish Captain who knew the Americans, but did not recognize the Cuban. He took him for a Havana business man in his mufti, and soon launched out on a diatribe against the "army of liberty." Spanish officers and their unbearable insolence was common enough but the Cuban's eyes began to blaze, and his right hand started for his pistol. There were dozens of women in the cafe, and a fight seemed about to be precipitated, perhaps a general outbreak with dire consequences. Crane came to the rescue. "Be quiet," he said peremptorily (in French) to the Cuban, "this man is at present our guest, and I forbid you to notice his remarks." The Spaniard did not understand French.

To the surprise of onlookers, the native obeyed, but he sat writing and grinding his teeth with suppressed rage, while the two Americans steered the Spaniard safely, but with difficulties, on to other topics. No other man in Havana could have held the patriot in leash.

very light supper is then served in the summer house after which his Holiness is escorted back to his apartments for the night. This quiet daily routine is varied occasionally by the visit of some Cardinal or Bishop, or the granting of a special audiance to some privileged personage.

Murder Will Out.

LAST year a gray-headed old man, a prisoner in the town jail of Tecumseh, in Oklahama Territory, was identified as the unconvicted murderer of a young boy named Gilbert Gates over thirty years ago. The prisoner was enrolled as W. H. Hill, but under this alias was discovered to be Alexander Jester, who thirty years before had been something of a travelling fakir, and the companion of the murdered Gilbert Gates, on a westward bound "prairie schooner." The boy mysteriously disappeared from Jester's company, and the latter was at the time arrested on a charge of robbing and murdering him. He had, however, escaped from jail, and was not again apprehended until last year.

Probably at that time he would not have been brought to trial for the crime of his younger manhood, had it not been, that a brother of Gilbert Gates, while reading a newspaper, came across the item telling of the identification of Alexander Jester. This John Gates, head of the wire trust, a millionaire several times over, took the first train for Oklahoma, and since that time has spared neither time or money in an effort to convict his brother's murderer. He has ransacked the whole West for people who remember the crime and who could bring any testimony to bear upon it. Over fifty witnesses have been found in this way, who recall Jester, and can, it is said, produce damaging evidence against him. The story reads like the closing chapter of a dime novel, based on the old adage that "murder will out."

Government Cipher and Diplomatic Correspondence

THERE is a deal of puerility in the affectation of machiavelism which characterizes the dealings of governments with one another. Diplomats of then ineteenth century are too apt to cling to methods of the sixteenth. They are much like children. They "play." They love mystery, labyrinthine negotiations, breathless secrets, although they know at the bottom of their consciousness that it is all a sham, that secrets, subtle schemes, mephistophelian cunning are clear as crystal to the very beings for whose benefit they are used. They "play."

The best example of this is in the ciphers in which they correspond with their government. The cipher is an amusing toy; it is almost as ingenious as some of the mechanical contrivances invented now-a-days for the amusement of our blase, nineteenth century children. It beats charades and puzzles. It amuses and edifies all in one. It exercises the mind and keeps us out of trouble. Nobody but diplomats and children take it seriously. Everybody knows that nothing is more decipherable than a cipher. Nobody knows better the solution of these cryptograms than the government against which they are used. A Frenchman is always adept in German cryptography. Nobody can decipher a French "confidential communication" as well as a German official.

In Russia it happens often that a cipher dispatch addressed by the English foreign office to its ambassador is held a sufficient time to admit of the Czar's minister of foreign affairs availing himself of the contents thereof. It has happened several times that he will take advantage of its contents in an interview with the English ambassador who receives his copy of the message only after the meeting is over and after he has committed both himself and hisgovernment to obligations against which the dispatch expressly warned him.

On a certain occasion old Prince Gortchakoff—then chancellor and minister of foreign affairs—inadvertently mentioned in the course of a conversation with the British ambassador, Lord Augustus Loftus, if I remember right—a piece of information which he could only have acquired through the diligent perusal of a cipher dispatch which Lord Augustus had received from London an hour before. Lord Augustus could not refrain from congratulating the prince on being so well informed. The prince, not the least disconcerted, laughed genially, admitted that he was rather bright as a cryptographer and then proceeded to demonstrate to the ambassador the reasons why he should not carry out the instructions contained in the dispatch in question.

On another occasion Prince Gortchakoff, the Russian chancellor, asked Lord Napier to communicate from St. Petersburg some information to the British government. This he promised to do. "But how are you going to send it?" asked the chancellor. Lord Napier had an inkling that the Russian foreign office was already able to read his cipher,so he said: "I will send it by telegraph." Prince Gortchakoff on this began to fidget, and then said, "I do not wish my colleagues to know what I am communicating to you." "Certainly," replied Lord Napier; "but you have nothing to fear, as I will send it in my cipher." Still more did the Prince fidget. At last he said: "We are old friends, and we understand the necessity of diplomacy. The truth is that we can decipher the code that you usually use."

This is how the Russians discovered the British cipher. Whenever a foreign representative (at St. Petersburg) received a telegram in cipher from his government a copy of it is taken at the ministry of the interior. If the representative receiving the telegram communicates to the Russian minister of foreign affairs anything a day or two later, this, too, is sent to the ministry of the interior. The communication and the telegram are then compared. Supposing the cipher to be a series of numbers, as is usual, a few words would thus be made out. The clews thus obtained would increase according to the frequency of the telegrams received, and in a very short time it is possible to read the whole cipher.

DECEPTIVE DISPATCHES.

The late Dreyfus trial was an eloquent give-away on cryptographic futility. Among the evidence were bucketfuls of intercepted "secret" messages meant for the German government. Some of the documents, in fact, were "fake" offers of treason sent to the German war office in the approved cipher of the latter, and greedily accepted by them.

During the late American-Spanish war, the secret service men of the United States government found no trouble in possessing themselves of the cipher used by the Spanish secret agents in this country. The communications of these gentlemen were easily altered and thus the Spanish government found itself throughout the war furnished with a liberal supply of false information. An attempt, in fact, was made to draw Camara's fleet into the maw of the Sampson-Schley combination by a pretended disclosure of a sudden revolution in the south with Charleston as its hot-bed. It was fondly hoped that the Spanish admiral would bravely steam across the pond and offer his services to the rebellious city. The war ended too soon, however, to try the limit of Spanish credulity.

At the present day it is strongly suspected that the benighted Chinese government is using its acquired knowledge of Caucasian cryptography to flood the world with cipher messages from Conger, McDonald, De Giers and other beleaguered diplomats. For my part, I expect any day to see the allied governments receive a joint petition, in the most approved cipher, from the ambassadors at Peking, beseeching the powers please not to come to Peking, where they are very well treated, thank you, with free champagne and the freedom of the Imperial palace, and a body guard of 10,000 stalwart, faithful soldiers of the empire preserving them from all harm.

ETIENNE MARCEL.

The End of a West Point Custom.

THE cadets at West Point have just finished a peculiar controversy with their superiors, victory resting, as is usual in such cases, with the authorities. In the Military Academy a strict hand is held over the students, military discipline being added to a rigorous scholastic system. It is particularly hard for them to show disapproval of an unpopular instructor or officer, as any open offence of the sort brings about heavy punishment. Some time ago, accident revealed a method which seemed flawless. A woman visiting the mess-hall while the cadets were at dinner dropped a very slurring remark about their table manners. The speech was heard and passed on, and general indignation brought a wave of silence over the noisy mess-room. Not only was the hum of conversation stopped, but the clatter of knives and dishes as well. The confusion of the offender was so great that the cadets adopted silence as a custom. Thereafter, when any officer who had made himself unpopular entered the mess-room, he caused a great and sudden stillness. The matter was brought to the attention of the commandant, and he was a whole summer long in devising a remedy. It seemed impossible and beyond regulations to stand over the cadets and order them to eat and talk. Finally, he hit upon the plan of declaring the meal finished when a "silence" was proclaimed, alleging that when they all stopped eating it was a sign that they had finished their meal. This was sprung on the hungry cadets in the middle of dinner, and stopped the custom for a time. But after a while, they learned to keep inside the rules by stopping the buzz of talk when a "silence" was proclaimed, while keeping their knives and forks going as busily as ever. This form of ostracism was employed during this summer's encampment, the victim being a lieutenant who had reported three cadets for mild hazing. Commandant Mills rose to the occasion by ordering an officer stationed in every mess-tent with discretionary power to declare the meal finished "whenever the table manners shall become unseemly." On some pretext or other, the unpopular lieutenant was then sent into each mess-tent successively just after soup was served. The silence followed, and the meal was promptly cut short. Hunger, which tames lions, conquered the cadets; by dinner time there was one custom the less at West Point.

* * *

The hazing scrape which the unpopular lieutenant reported was not a particularly bad one, considering the affairs which used to disgrace the Academy some ten years ago. Two "plebs" or first-year men were made to clean out the tents of three upper classmen after the manner of fags at Rugby. The punishment was most severe. A month was cut off from the furlough of the offenders, and heavy extra duty was imposed. The reason why this form of hazing was treated so severely while like offences involving bodily injury are overlooked, lies in the policy of the American army, which is democratic in theory, if not in practice. The officer, while requiring the necessary discipline, must respect all the rights and feelings of his subordinates. It is felt that if a sentiment of aristocratic uppishness is fostered at the Point, it will be carried from there into the army. This being the point of view, Commandant Mills seems justified in his course. If he could only instil into the cadets some sentiment which would cause them in after years to look at officers elevated from the ranks as their own social equals, he would be doing double service.

One of the largest publishers of books in the East said lately that many of his special editions were now bound for him by young women who were allowed to develop their own ideas. It is profitable work for them and the results are novel, individual, aud generally artistic.

THE Filipino-Bryan Club indulged in its usual weekly meeting last night. A large attendance greeted the eye of the President as he mounted the platform and rapped for order.

There was a scuffle in the rear of the room and the President ordered the offenders brought to the desk.

"What's the matter?" he demanded sternly.

"Bryanisto has got my locket," declared one.

"It's a lie," cried Bryanisto.

"Let me look at it," said the President.

It was a gold locket, tied with a faded blue ribbon. Opening it, the President discovered two portraits—one of a curlyheaded little chap of six or eight, who at that moment was probably wondering where papa was. The other was the portrait of a young woman, fair to look upon, about whose mouth hovered a sweet smile. The President demanded.

"Where did this come from?"

"Off an American soldier," said one.

"I shot him," cried Bryanisto.

"I was at his body first," shouted the other.

The President pried the pictures out of the locket with his knife. Putting the locket in his pocket, he said:

"He're; each one of you take a picture. I'll keep the locket."

There was some show of protest from the lovers of liberty. But the President shut them up in short order and bade them take their seats.

"Are there any communications, Mr. Secretary," asked the President. "One sir," answered the Secretary.

"This communication," explained the Secretary, "is signed by the leading merchants and professional men of one hundred and fifty of our cities having a population of over ten thousand voters."

"I'll bet it is d——d nonsense," said the President. "You need not read it."

Here a tall well-formed man of thoughtful face arose and begged permission to speak.

"Who are you?" asked the President.

"A native of these Islands, Sir, who asks to be heard."

"Well, don't be too long," snapped the President.

"Mr. President and Gentlemen," said the stranger, "Let us demonstrate to all the world that we are a civilized people. Let us demonstrate that we are fit to govern ourselves, if that blessing comes to us, and if it does not, let us demonstrate to these Americans, that we are fit to become American citizens."

"Do you deny that we are?" asked the President sternly.

"I neither deny or affirm, Sir. Your friends the Democrats of America say you are unfit."

"Bah," said a fat man in the corner.

"I represent the sentiment of millions of natives who want peace."

"Piece of what?" asked the President, his mind naturally reverting to loot.

"They want no more wars. They want to embrace the opportunity offered by the American government to enjoy the freedom that satisfies seventy million of intelligent free men."

"Sit down! Sit down!" came from every portion of the hall.

"You do not represent the wishes of the great majority of our citizens," exclaimed the speaker, flushed with anger.

A short man with a sand-bag came up behind the stranger and after rapping for order several times on the back of his head, his body was dragged out of the room.

The Secretary reported the capture of a prisoner, who wanted to address the meeting.

"Bring him in," said the President.

A man was brought into the room between the guards.

"Boys," he said, cunningly and confidentially, "I'm a Bryan Democrat."

"Good for you," shouted some of the crowd.

"Our party," continued he, "the grand party of Bryanism is for you; and we are going to give you more kinds of liberty than any people have ever had before."

"May we take from the hated Spaniard?" asked the President.

"Take from him!" exclaimed the prisoner. "Why you can strip him to the bone, and sell his marrow for axle grease."

"And then," continued the prisoner, "we are going to give you 16 to 1."

"And what is that?" was asked.

"Why every dollar you bring to our mints we are going to give you 16 dollars back."

There was a cheer went up that would have done the heart of a Populist good.

"But you must help us," declared the prisoner.

"And how?" asked the President.

"You must keep up your resistance. You must show the people of America that you will not submit, and just before election gather all of your available forces together and make a grand sortie and kill off as many troops as possible."

"We'll do it," they shouted.

"And pass resolutions," continued the speaker. "There's nothing like resolutions. I have one here and I ask you to adopt it and wire it to New York. It will do good."

One of the members took the resolution and read it to the club.

"Whereas, we are inspired with the same love of liberty that moved the immortal Washington and his army at Valley Forge,

"And Whereas, our homes, our firesides, and our liberties are as dear to us as they were to the American Revolutiontionary soldier,

"And Whereas, while we recognize that the United States is the grandest Republic in the world, yet the noble people of that nation must also recognize that a government, no matter how just, without the consent of the governed, is a tyranny.

"Now, Therefore, we appeal to the just and earnest minded men of America to vote for William Jennings Bryan, who promises to restore order in our country, put down murder and brigandage, and then withdraw the American troops, leaving us a free and grateful people."

The President suggested striking out the words "to restore order in our country, put down murder and brigandage, and then"

The nmendment carried and the resolution as amended went through unanimously.

The Secretary here said that all the members were in arrears in their dues, and demanded immediate payment, as the landlord was after his rent.

The members filed up to the Secretary's desk. There was little money in the crowd, but plenty of loot which must be taken in lieu of money, at a fair valuation. There was much haggling over the value of a silver cross that one member presented, and it was finally compromised by cutting off one of the arms. There were rings and watches and jewelry and chains, mostly of American and Spanish make.

The Secretary finally announced that all dues were paid, except that of Bryanist, who was in arrears for three months.

The Chair read Bryan a severe lecture. That worthy slipped out of the hall and returned in a few minutes with several articles of jewelry very much resembling some that was worn by the stranger who addressed the club. Presenting himself at the Secretary's desk, one of the members shouted:

"He has taken all the stuff off the corpse outside."

"Not all," denied Bryan.

"Not all?" cried many voices, and there was a general scramble for the door, for it is against the sacred law of the followers of Aguinaldo to neglect details. But it broke up the meeting, for the swearing outside mingled with the groans of the man who was not quite dead yet, rather chafed against the harmony of further proceedings, and besides, the President was inclined to quarrel with the Secretary for holding out a ring in dividing the spoils that came in for membership dues.

PALMER BROWNE.

EXPANSION— By Jack London.

THE anti-expansionist does not want the United States adventuring abroad, He insists that the old territorial limits are sufficient for present and future growth. And now that the war with Spain has become history, the presence of the United States in the Philippines stands for much that is objectionable and unjust in human relations. This, divested of rhetoric, is the position taken by the anti-expansionist. No matter what constitutional authority he brings forward to enforce his contention, the fact remains that he does not oppose expansion primarily because it might happen to be unconstitutional; for he knows that an amendment at any time can make legal what was illegal. No, his opposition rests on deeper foundations than that. He cannot countenance expansion because he considers it wrong—not constitutionally, but ethically.

It is wrong, he contends, for a strong nation to impose its strength upon a weak nation. It is wrong for a large people to force a government upon a small people, when that small people has occupied its land for centuries. With the continued occupancy of such land go certain possessory rights,—the right to develop the land or the right not to develop it, the right of stable self-government or the right of unstable self-government—and it is wrong for a large people to usurp these rights. This position of the anti-expansionist is a peculiar one, and all his philosophy of every-day existence gives it the lie.

A man of his own community, through inheritance, comes into possession of certain farms and ranches. This land belonged to the man's father, and father's father, before him. By good management, they retained possession, and only by good management. The present owner holds the land in a sort of trust. So long as he can make it pay, it is his; but as soon as he cannot it must pass out of his hands and into the hands of some one who can make it pay. But he is slipshod in business, a poor organizer, and a worse manager. He runs behind, places mortgage upon mortgage, and with the inevitable crash surrenders up all right to it. Perhaps the anti-expansionist, if he be a good business man, holds a mortgage or two.

Again, his next door neighbor in like manner becomes possessed of a large factory, which he holds in like trust. But he is a poor business man. Competition is keen. He cannot eliminate waste and reduce the cost of production so well as can his competitors. He fails in buying his raw material at the lowest possible price, and in selling his finished article at the highest possible. He is not a hustler. He is crowded to the wall and his possessions pass from him. And his neighbor, the anti-expansionist, affirms the verdict of the community when it says that all is well. The terms of the tacit trust, by which the man held possession, were that he should guarantee a management adequate enough to meet and survive the pressure of his competitors.

Such are the every-day domestic ethics of the anti-expansionist; but when he turns his attention abroad, he calls upon quite a different set of ethics. In short, he denies to his blood brother what he would grant the Filipino. What difference whether it be a man who possesses a bit of soil, or a people that possess the whole soil? Within the social organism the individual who is slothful or improvident is thrust from the soil. Why not within the social organism? And if so between members of the social organism, why not between the social organisms themselves? The slothful give way to the energetic, the improvident to the thrifty; if right in one case, why not in all?

A people possess a land. To develop it they must first be

Continued on page 15.

"THE BRITISH TAKE THEIR PLEASURES SADLY."

An Illustration of the Open but Joyless Love-Making of the Cockney Costermonger and his Donah, Returning from a Bank-Holiday Merry-Making at the Crystal Palace. Sketched in a Third Class Smoking Compartment of the Underground Railway. —By Gelett Burgess.

UNCLE SAM—"No, John, I don't b'leeve she's fudded, but folks do get all shot up sometimes a meddlin' with empty weepons.

Stevenson—Bill, don't you notice that this machine bumps a good deal?
Bryan—Not a bit, it's your imagination
—Minneapolis Tribune

The World:—"Talk is all right in some cases, but unless you open that gate afraid I cannot hold these critters."

A LEGACY OF DISCORD.

Chinaman—You allee chop-chop me now, but welly soon forrin devil chop-chop forrin devil
—Punch

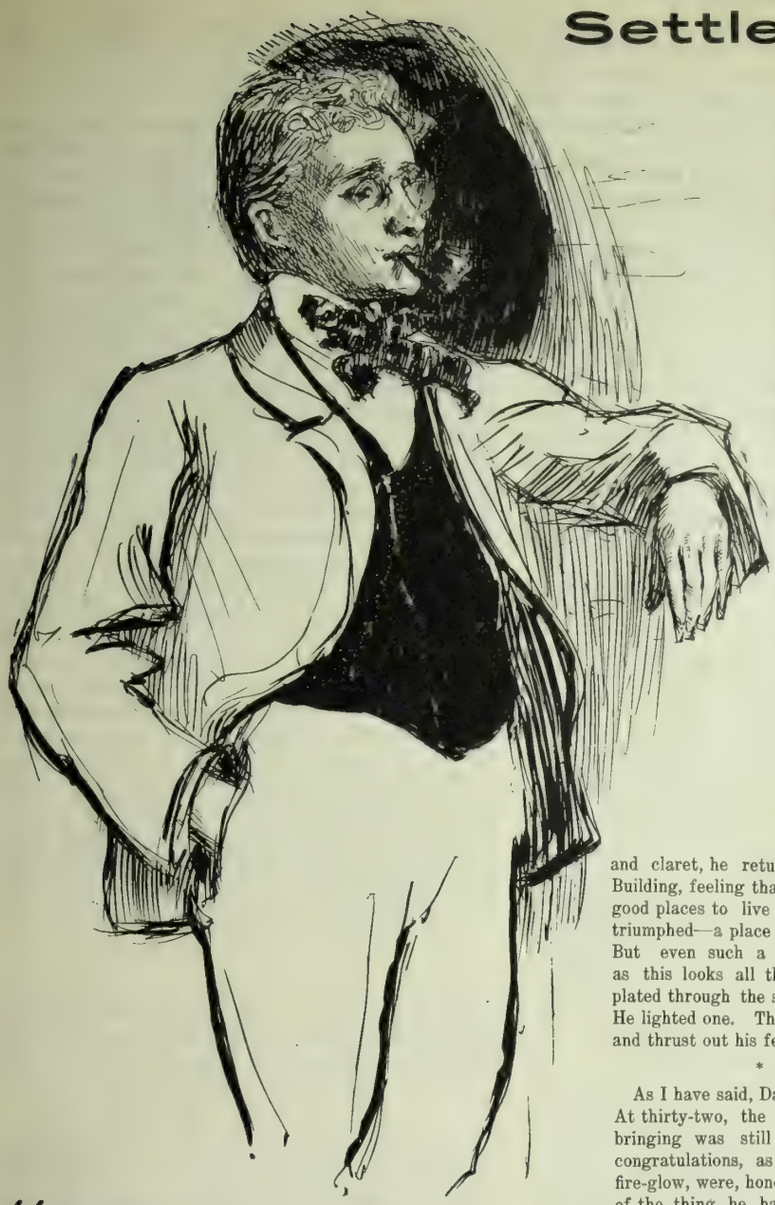
HOME SWEET HOME

FOOLING THE OLD MAN

CURRENT CARTOONS.

Settled Out of Court,

By George Vincent.



"NOT guilty!"

The tense silence of the crowded court broke in a wave of noise, a noise made up of approval, of dissidence, of surprise.

A half-amused, half-supercilious smile flickered across the thin lips of the prisoner in the dock as he bowed to the judge and then turned to say something to his counsel. But Darrel didn't look at his client. He hastily gathered up his papers and elbowed his way out of the court to robing-room.

Before he left thecourt room, Alderton, the district attorney, who had been prosecuting for the state, came in.

"I congratulate you, Mr. Darrel," he said, heartily.

"It was that cross-examination of yours did it, even more than your speech, although I admit a point or two in it that almost convinced even me. Your client's a lucky man."

"It's a sort of luck I shouldn't care for, myself," Darrel replied, "to be tried, innocently, for murder, with you against me and Hook on the Bench."

"Innocently!" the other echoed. "Innocently! Oh, well. Yes, of course."

"Oh! come now!" Darrel exclaimed.

"Oh, yes, yes. It's all right, of course," said the district attorney.

* * *

As Darrel walked down Kearny street on his way to dine at the "Cock," he felt not a little elated. This was his first notable triumph. He had had several minor victories, but so far nothing that would attract the eyes of the public, or of the more important part of it—the solicitors. This was another matter. He felt this to be a personal, as well as a professional achievement. Ever since his consultation with his client, he had believed that client to be innocent. But, at the same time, he had seen clearly in what deadly peril the man stood.

Of direct evidence there was none. The analyst could find no trace of any poison, although that some poison had been at work the doctors had expressed no doubt whatever. Until to-day that was, when, under a clever cross-examination, an eminent physician had wavered in his expressions of certainty. But the prisoner had benefited enormously by his wife's death; the possible motives were clear enough. In short, circumstantially, the case for the prosecution was overwhelming.

Darrel's conscience was keen and finely tempered. Hehad not been long at the bar. The sense of duty still burnt in him like a flame. If this man were condemned, Darrel had felt that he would have been guilty of something very like his murder. And so he must do more than his best; and he had done it. He had put every ounce of brains and of heart that was in him into the case. In that speech of his to the jury, passion and intellect were at white heat. And the speech had done its work. The semi-hostile summing up of the judge had been impotent to undo the effect of so convincing an appeal. To have snatched a prisoner from out the very claws of Judge Hook was indeed a forensic record. That would be talked about,Darrel knew.

After his broiled chicken and claret, he returned to his offices in the Mills Building, feeling that the world was the best of good places to live in—a place wherein justice triumphed—a place in which the best men won. But even such a superlatively excellent world as this looks all the better for being contemplated through the smoke wreaths ofa good cigar. He lighted one. Then he sank into his arm-chair and thrust out his feet towards the fire.

* * *

As I have said, Darrel had a quick conscience. At thirty-two, the effect of his puritanical upbringing was still strong upon him. His self-congratulations, as he sat comfortably in the fire-glow, were, honestly, much more on account of the thing he had done then of the way in which he had accomplished it. It was because he had rescued a drowning man, as it were, more than because he had proved himself a consummate swimmer, that he was so joyfully satisfied at the result of the trial that day. He didn't care for criminal practice. He accepted criminal engagements only because an insufficiency of the other sort came his way. It always went against the moral grain of him to plead the cause of a prisoner about whose innocence he felt a doubt. He knew, of course, that such weakness might be overcome. But he didn't think it weakness, and he didn't want to overcome it.

Before the cigar was half smoked there was a knock at his door. He rose to open it, a little impatiently. It was Brown, no doubt, come to congratulate him; and he was not in the humor for Brown. He opened the door. It was not Brown. It was his client of the murder trial, the man on whose neck, when the court had adjourned for lunch that day, the shadow of the rope seemed almost visible.

"Mr. Darrel," he began, in that pleasant, velvety voice which had so attracted his counsel at their one previous interview, "I have come to thank you and to felicitate you. I know it's not the usual thing to do," he went on, when he had got into the room, "not etiquette, perhaps; but the circumstances were unusual, weren't they?"

"Yes," said Darrell. "One doesn't get tried for murder every day in the week, I suppose. Won't you sit down? You'll find that chair the most comfortable, I think. Let me take your hat."

"It wasn't quite that I meant," the man returned, throwing himself back gracefully as a graceful woman in the long, low arm-chair and clasping a pair of finely-shaped white hands behind his head. "I meant that it was unusual for a jury to be turned so completely off the track as you turned our twelve friends to-day. Right up to your cross-examination of that last witness they were against me to a man. That shook them. Your speech did the rest. After that, our friend, the judge, was quite futile. By Jove! I don't believe those fellows would credit me now if I were to go and confess straight out."

"I don't suppose they would," Darrell said; "they'd merely think you were mad. By the way, have you dined?"

"Thanks, yes. I drove straight down to the Palace when I left the court," the other replied. "I hug myself, too," he went on, "at having secured you for the case. Several of my friends were strong on my getting Barker; but I was determined to have you. I gave peremptory orders."

"Oh, you did! How on earth did you know anything about me?"

"I was by chance in court at San Jose one day last August and watched you handle that forgery case, you may remember. I made up my mind that if ever I got into a tight place you were the man to get me out."

"Really?" Darrel said, with a faint blush at the compliment; "but you never expected to be where—you were to-day, though?"

"Well, one has to look ahead. I say," rising and crossing the room, "these are two very nice etchings! Whistler's, eh?"

Then the talk turned on art for a while; and Darrel's visitor talked well. There was a charm about the man; in his voice, in his gesture, a sort of feminine charm. Yet he was distinctly not effeminate.

Half an hour later, after a brief silence, he said suddenly

"Mr. Darrell, I suppose if I were to say I was guilty now, nothing would come of it, eh?" The voice was so ordinary that Darrel was not startled at the words.

"No," he replied, slowly, "except a little sensation. As you said, no one believe you. At any rate, very few would. But it would be a bit mad, wouldn't it?"

"But you knew from the first that I did it, of course? I can't be mistaken in that?"

Darrel's amazement was too great for speech. He stared at the man with started eyes. He thought his client had gone suddenly off his head.

"If you had not known it," the other continued, "I should be in the condemned cell to-night. A man of your temperament could never have fought like that in a safe case, I know. I saw, from the first, that you guessed the whole truth. You and I take the same views of life. You tried with all your might, because you believed me justified in what I did."

Darrel's heart thumped hard at his side. His mouth went dry. But he kept his head. He felt that he was on the edge of some new and strange experience.

"Justified in killing your wife?" he asked, in a hard, level voice.

"A wife who was a fool; who shared none of my tastes; and, with all her money, hated to gratify one of them. Yes."

Darrel made an immense effort at self-restraint; an effort that made him physically weaker. He wanted to hear more of this; although he cursed himself for what he had already heard. He had saved the life of as foul a murderer as ever sinned, it seemed.

"Yes, I suppose I did," he said; and there was not a trace of emotion in his voice; "but I should like to hear the details. It wouldn't have done for me to have known them before; but now, it's all right, of course."

The other man glanced apprehensively round the room.

"These walls are thick, I suppose?" he asked.

"There is no one else on this floor," Darrel replied.

"Well," the man said, "there is only one detail—the drug. I am an amateur in toxicology; and I know more than the professionals. I took it up for fun. Now it has brought me $25,000 a year and freedom—freedom and a happy life!"

"A happy life?" Darrel repeated.

"I am the master of a drug," the other continued, "which disappears, vanishes and leaves no trace—within two hours its work is done. Some day, perhaps, some one may hit upon a test that will discover its traces. At present no such test is known, not even to me. It was that drug which rid me of Teresa Praed and gave me—everything." There was two minutes' dead silence. Darrel was trying desperately to arrange his thoughts. His visitor picked up a little bronze lizard from the mantelpiece and examined it curiously.

Presently he spoke again

"But even that drug would have been useless and worse, if it hadn't been for you. That fool of a nurse let out the soup business at the inquest; and that did for me with the jury. And so I want to make you some return. Look!" he took from his breast pocketa small, flattish, stoppered bottle containing a colorless liquid. "I make you a present of that," he said. "There are two doses, each dose a life. Some day, who knows, this stuff may serve you as well as it—and you—have served me."

Darrel put out his hand mechanically and took the bottle. He had arranged his thoughts; he had decided. He twisted out the stopper, wetted his forefinger with the stuff and touched his tongue.

"No taste," he said, smacking his lips.

"Scarcely any," the other returned, "and no smell. Oh, a drop won't hurt you. A tablespoonful will kill—just about is published every Saturday at The Wave Building, 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal., and Colman Building, Seattle, Wash. Entered at the Post Office as second-class matter. Subscription: Per year, $2.00; six months, $1.25; three months, 75 cents. Foreign subscription (countries in postal union) $1 per year additional. Sample copies free.

Continued on page 15

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY
PROPRIETORS

Chinese Personalities, by George Francis..... 2
Impressions of Nome, Robert Bruer..... 4
Diplomatic Ciphers, Etienne Marcel..... 5
The Filipino Bryan Club..... 6
Expansion, by Jack London..... 6
The British take their Pleasures Sadly. by Gelett Burgess 7
Current Cartoons..... 8
Settled out of Court, by George Vincent..... 9
Chinatown Festival, by Will Irwin 12
How they Went on the Stage 13
The Little Mademoiselle..... 16
The Queen's Garden Party, by Lady Francis..... 18
The Shirt-Waist Man, by Robert Johnston..... 20

San Francisco — August 11, 1900 — Seattle

Campaign Maxims.

NEVER make a martyr of the man you propose to defeat. Sympathy is the shadow of oppression, and attracts votes where oppression repels them.

Never take your political inspirations from the slanders of the enemy.

Partisan spirit is the boast of fools.

The professionally virtuous and patriotic candidate is more than often a masquerading scoundrel. Look for that particular vice in him who noisily claims a virtue that is commonly presumed to obtain among honorable men. An habitual liar is fond of testifying to his own veracity. A demagogue, to his love of country and affection for the common people.

The New District Courts.

THE San Francisco Call has unwisely declared editorial hostility to the proposed constitutional amendment providing for the creation of district courts of appeal. With more vigor than wisdom, it urges the defeat of the amendment. Everyone familiar with the delays of litigation in California concedes that the present system is lame and inadequate, and it is to mend these infirmities and put an end to tedious and irritating delays that the amendment is suggested. Our present supreme court consists of seven judges with an attachment of five court commissioners. The entire system is well calculated to create vexatious delays and multiply the labors of the jurists. Cases are heard in departments before their judges, and every defeated litigant in a petition for a hearing in bank, demands that the judges of one department review the decision of the other. Probably more time is consumed in considering these petitions than in the original hearing and determination of the case. The amendment creates a supreme court of five justices only, and it is presumed that all appeals will be heard by the full bench. Two justices and five supreme court commissioners are eliminated Then the state is divided into three districts. One court is located at Los Angeles, one at Sacramento and one at San Francisco. Perhaps in practical operation, these district courts may not meet the necessities of the occasion, but at least the amendment will have cut down the numbers on the supreme bench to a good working force. It is hoped that the district courts will insure litigants a speedy hearing and prompt decision on appeal cases and relieve the higher tribunal of much work. The expenses of the state are not materially increased, as only two additional judges are provided for.

The real opposition of the Call may be discovered in its hostility to Governor Gage, to whom will fall the appointment of the first district judges. It says, among other things, "We have had sufficient experience with the kind of men that Governor Gage appoints to office." This is not altogether fair. Governor Gage has already made several judicial appointments to the superior bench during his administration, none of which have been adversely criticised. One may only determine what a man is likely to do in the future by what he has done in the past. He appointed ex-Chief Justice A. L. Rhodes to the superior bench of Santa Clara county. There was a great scramble of political lawyers in the boss-ridden town of San Jose for the place. Judge Rhodes was not an active candidate for appointment, yet he was selected by the governor. Every lawyer in California knows Judge Rhodes and respects him, not only for his judicial knowledge, but for his high integrity. A better selection could not have been made.

A vacancy occurring on the superior bench of Los Angeles, Governor Gage appointed Judge Fitzgerald. This gentleman had been a justice of California's supreme court, a member of the supreme court commission, and had just served out a term as attorney general. No one ever questioned either the integrity or ability of the appointee, and no one ever charged that his appointment was inspired by Mr. Spreckels' enemies. If Governor Gage does as well in the matter of appointments on the new court of appeals, he will help—not hurt—the bench.

Bryan the Imperialist.

A PARTY name, and jingling phrases, dealing with "plutocracy" and the "common people," may be good enough stuff to conjure with among the ignorant and prejudiced, but among intelligent men it must prove a miserable failure. A party man, even though intelligent, may not object to the use of cheap methods to win the support of cheap minds, to his cause, but he does demand that sound principle shall not be subordinate to the unripe theories of ignorance.

Take a life long Democrat, who is also a man of intelligence,conservative in his views and anxious for the country's welfare,which way is such a man to turn at the coming election? Let us presume the reader to be such a man. With you the door is shut against arguments over the old fundamental doctrines of Democracy and Republicanism. You are a Democrat, because of those old time principles. You do not care to hear argument. The case has been submitted, and your decision favors Democracy. Not all Democrats have so carefully weighed the merits of each party—nor all Republicans for that matter. But your lot is cast. Suppose the party of your youth, through manipulation and the whirligig of time, falls into the hands of men who advocate and successfully fasten to it strange and pernicious doctrines that do not dovetail with your reason. Suppose your party's national convention was converted into a political brothel house wherein was illicitly conceived and born a mongrel, something that takes the name of Democracy, but looks like Populism, and smells like Socialism. What course should you follow to purify your own party?

* * *

Your common sense repels the spurious patriotism that shrieks from every line of its platform; protests against its empty expostulations and demurs to the flexible principles it enunciates, while your wisdom disapproves of the very things by which it sets the greatest store.

If original Democracy had been clothed in any such patched and disreputable garment, neither you nor yours would have ever embraced its princples or followed its flag. The last election demonstrated the futility of your refusing to vote, for it merely encouraged Mr. Bryan to maintain his grip upon the party. It demonstrated, too, that nothing short of unmistakable disapproval and overwhelming defeat would ever purge Democracy of the things that sit so heavy on its stomach and it pointed out to the true Democrat the course he should take to secure that end.

You may be an Anti-Imperialist—opposed to the retention of the Philippines and fear that the policy of expansion charged to the administration may lead to unfortunate results that will chafe severely against the welfare and peace of the nation. Let us assume that your convictions in this connection are unalterable. If you vote at all and your vote is to count, you must cast it for Mr. McKinley or Mr. Bryan. The platform upon which Mr. McKinley stands, declares for the kind of expansion which you regard as imperialism and the platform upon which Mr. Bryan depends declares a stout opposition thereto. So far as the two platforms go, that of the Democratic party, on the question of imperialism in the main, echoes your sentiments though, of course, your intelligence has long ago discovered it to be contradictory and insincere. But we do not vote for platforms, we cast our ballots for men, who are presumed to represent the principles enunciated by their platforms. No one is in doubt as to the principles for which Mr. McKinley stands. Any school boy will tell you they are protection and expansion. The same boy will tell you Mr. Bryan stands for free silver. Bryan and free silver are synonymous. But does his record on expansion tally with the Democratic platform? Every voter has the right to make an examination and ascertain for himself whether that record harmonizes with Mr. Bryan's loudest pretensions. Mr. McKinley's record is open to inspection. It has been one of continued advocacy of protection; and certainly, so far, he has shown a decided leaning towards sustaining the Treaty of Paris. Indeed that is the reason his defeat is sought by the Anti-Imperialists, and too, it is the reason Mr. Bryan demands Mr. McKinley's defeat. He is an Expansionist (you call it Imperialist) because he supported the Treaty of Paris and assisted toward securing its ratification by the Senate. Now measure Democracy's standard-bearer with the same yard-stick.

* * *

If you determine that Mr. McKinley has imperialistic tendencies because he supported the treaty, then to be anti-Imperialist Mr. Bryan must have opposed it, for surely if he favored the treaty he is as bad or worse than Mr. McKinley. No one can object to such a test. Examine the facts. To ratify a treaty requires a two-thirds vote of the Senate. The Republicans in the senate were divided upon the subject and the article of the treaty relating to the Philippines was practically beaten. When this became apparent the Democrats in the Senate came to the rescue and supplied all the votes necessary to secure ratification. Now comes Senator Hoar, who led the opposition to the treaty, and solemnly declares that Mr. Bryan used all of his personal influence by letter and by interviews to induce the Democratic senators to vote for the treaty. The victory of the treaty belongs to Bryan, and the moment it was ratified it passed beyond reconsideration. The time to have beaten "imperialism" was then, not now. Senator Hoar declares, and you cannot repeat the story too often, that he had "rather vote for the man who supported the treaty believing it to be right than to vote for the man who supported the treaty believing it to be wrong."

On this record Mr. Bryan cannot appeal to anti-Imperialists for support. He could have defeated the treaty by remaining silent, but he busied himself to secure its ratification. He favored the treaty to injure the administration, and now he opposes it to help himself. How any anti-Imperialist can take comfort from Mr. Bryan's record is beyond understanding. The old fashioned Democrat, and the anti-Imperialist have no representative in Mr. Bryan, they have a noisy exponent perhaps, but not a representative. With the Democratic standard bearer's insincerity on the question of expansion with his wide departure from honored Democratic principles and his undying loyalty of Free silver, it would appear as though there was but one road for the anti-Imperialist and old-fashioned Democrat to take, and that is against a depreciated currency.

A friend of candidate Bryan has written a review of his character. He says, "Mr. Bryan is a fatalist. He believes he will be elected president of the United States. His defeat in 1896 did not disturb him. If he is defeated in 1900, he will be a candidate in 1904. And again in 1908 if he is defeated." This is a pleasing prospect.

EVENTS CURRENT.

The Advance on Peking. The allies have begun the second advance for the relief of Peking and have beaten a Chinese force in one hard battle; the ministers are in desperate straits. This is the substance of the present situation in the world's center of disturbance. Never in the course of the uprising has there been more real cause to fear for the future. Even during the long period when all Europe believed that the ministers were dead, the belief was based upon their silence, upon the suspicious action of the Chinese officials and upon uncertain Shanghai reports. But now comes a message from the Japanese Legation dated Aug. 1 and another from Conger, not dated by him but sent some time between August 1 and 7, and both of an alarming tone. The Japanese dispatch states that the attack seems about to be renewed and that there are but six days' provisions and twenty-five cartridges apiece in their enclosure. That from Conger runs as follows: "Still besieged. Situation more precarious. Chinese Government insisting upon our leaving Peking, which would be certain death. Rifle firing upon us daily by imperial troops. Have abundant courage but little ammunition or provisions. Two progressive Yamen ministers beheaded. All connected with legation of the United States well at present moment." This throws new light on certain phases of the question. All the week, Li Hung Chang has been offering to send the ministers through to Tien-Tsin on a free pass and under guard of Imperial troops, and the Powers have one and all refused, believing that it was only a ruse to get the foreigners out of the city, murder them, and ay the blame on the Boxers. The "certain death" clause goes to confirm this. Either Conger has some special knowledge of the Chinese plans, or Li and his subordinates are deliberately lying when they assert that they have offered an Imperial guard. However, the advance has begun; how long it will take to cover the three hundred miles, how hard will be the resistance, no one can guess. If the Japanese report is true, starvation is now the main danger. The fear that the foreigners will be killed upon the approach of the relief is scarcely less imminent. If the Chinese Army could not take their position in the early part of July, they cannot be expected to take it now, unless ammunition runs out, but this scarcity of fighting material is an immediate probability. Besides, the force opposing the allied armies may be driven back on the city, and, maddened by defeat, may hurl itself on the foreign band in numbers so great as to be overwhelming. The chances are against the legations.

The Fighting Before Peking. The forward movement of the allied armies from Tien-Tsin began on August 1. The Japanese, who are making the greatest fighting record of all the civilized troops in China, had previously reconnoitered in the region, and discovered that, although the country on their immediate front was clear of the enemy, yet the Boxers had flooded the whole plain by cutting rivers, ditches and canals, and that resistance was to be expected near Peking. Color was lent to this by a report from the Belgian legation in the besieged capital to the effect that part of the force surrounding the legationaries had been drawn off in order to check the relief. The scouts located a body of the enemy at Peitsang, and there a battle was fought on August 5, the Chinese losing, after a brisk fight. As is usual with reports from China, accounts conflict. Nevertheless, it is known that both sides suffered rather severely, that the Japanese showed great courage, and that the flooded country prevented the allies from taking advantage of their victory. It is reported that the American troops were not actively engaged in this battle.

There are about 30,000 allies in this movement, of whom nearly two-thirds are Japanese, the Russians and British following in numbers and the Americans coming last with 2000 made up of marines and of the Ninth and Fifteenth Infantry. The next serious engagement, the decisive one of the campaign, will probably be fought outside the walls of Peking, as it was understood from the beginning that Pie-Tsang would be the point along the road where the resistance was to be made. With river transportation stopped by sunken dams and with the plain flooded, it becomes a question whether that battle will occur in time to help the legations.

Realizing how imminent is the present danger of their envoys, the Powers are assuming a threatening attitude. In our own country, the Secretary of State has transmitted a note to the Chinese minister reminding him that communication has not been restored with our Peking representatives as demanded and that this will be considered as an unfriendly act. An Imperial decree has promised that this will be done, but not enough time has elapsed to prove its faith. An ultimatum to China, even a declaration of war, is among the possibilities of next week. The temper of Great Britain in the matter is shown by an official declaration made last week in the House of Commons to the effect that the government would, in case of a general massacre, exact life for life and rank for rank—an emperor's life for an ambassador's, and so on down the list.

The King of Italy's Task. The new King of Italy, Victor Emmanuel III, has taken control of affairs peaceably. Contrary to sensational reports, at the time of Humbert's assassination, no general conspiracy has been made manifest. It is evident that the murderer acted as an anarchist, not as a revolutionist, and that if there was any plot, it was the work of the nest of anarchists discovered in this country at Paterson, N. J. The only approach to a disturbance in Italy was an outbreak of incrimination between the Republicans and the Loyalists in the National Chamber. The new king will take the oath of succession early next week.

The task which confronts Humbert's successor is not a light one. However good and able the old king was in his own person, he was nevertheless bound by a defective constitution which left the power neither in his hands nor his people's, but in the hands of his ministers. And their rule has been, on the whole, a bad one. Their greatest mistake was their ambition to make Italy a world-power before she was strong and united within. The direct result was an increase of taxation to a ruinous rate. Italy is rather a poor country; several of the cities, Naples in especial, are cursed by wide-spread misery, yet the development of the army and navy and the growth of a colonial system have raised the national debt until the interest-charge is now $3.38 per capita—as against 53 cents in the United States. Coupled therewith, perhaps a direct result has been an era of wide-spread political corruption. Besides this, the debts of the municipalities and of the cantons are very heavy. To meet them, there is an exorbitant system of local taxation. The income assessment is twenty per cent, and the government holds the monopoly on almost all luxuries and some necessities, and sells them at a high price. This has conduced to the emigration of the strongest element and to revolutionary discontent among those who remain. These conditions the new king must face. He has only one thing in his favor—the reactionary tendency of such a crime as that which carried off his father. He is said to be a liberal thinker, with rather a bias for socialism. Beyond that, little is known of him. The choice of his ministers, an important thing in Italy, cannot be even guessed.

The Shah's Life Attempted. Within a week of King Humbert's death at the hands of an anarchist, a similar attempt was made on the life of the Shah of Persia, now visiting the Paris Exposition as a guest of the nation. Thursday morning, August 2nd, as he was driving to the Exposition grounds, a man in working garb jumped to the steps of his carriage and pointed a pistol at him. The would-be murderer paused for a moment as though hesitating over a point for his aim; that hesitation saved the Shah, for his court physician seated in the same carriage, seized the man's wrist and wrenched the weapon away before any harm could be done. The criminal was seized at once. He proved to be a Frenchman and denied that he had any accomplices or was an agent of a plot. This is disproved by circumstantial evidence that he is an anarchist and by an anonymous letter of warning received by the Shah a few minutes before the attempt. Rumors reached the ears of the European police last month to the effect that the anarchists were to make a concerted attack on all the rulers of Europe during this summer; these two attempts in the same week tend to confirm the reports. The Shah's assailant may be guillotined—a mild fate in comparison with what would have happened to him had he made the assault in Persia.

Race Hatred in Louisiana. The riots of last week in New Orleans are over for the time, but the racial hatred of which they were a part is far from settled. Indeed, there is no assurance that the trouble will not break out again with fresh vigor at the next pretext. Trouble such as this had been expected by all students of the race question. The present racial bitterness is the product of industrial conditions, and far more serious and deep-rooted than that of the past, which was merely political. Of late years, the negro population of New Orleans has increased enormously, the city becoming their paradise. They find plenty of work there, better wages than in the country, good schools, and social enjoyments. Also it is the asylum of the "bad man," the objectionable refugee who has been driven in from the country by citizen committees; of the ex-convict who can lose himself in the mass of the black populations The result of this crowding of negroes into the city has been to drive the white men out of employment, while the concentration of the refugee element has added legitimate reason for the natural hate of the white workingman for his successful black competitor. The lower grades of labor are overcrowded with negroes. Contractors for heavy work seem to prefer negro labor. The black man works well, is tractable, and causes no trouble through labor organizations or strikes. The white workingman sees daily his field of employment lessened by the negro invasion, and his exasperation grows till an accidental provocation fans it into an uncontrollable fury. This, more than natural race-hatred, was responsible for the late riots.

Formal Opening of the Democratic Campaign. Charles A. Towne, nominated for vice-president by the Fusion Populists on a ticket headed by W. J. Bryan, has withdrawn in favor of Adlai Stevenson, the regular Democratic nominee. This action, although generally expected in advance, was not a certainty. While Mr. Towne's withdrawal is directly a help toward the election of Bryan and toward the cause which the Populist party profess to represent, it was held by some that the party ought to stand by its colors and its nominee in order to prevent complete absorption. This view did not carry with Towne or with the Populist Campaign Committee, his advisers, and withdrawal was decided upon. The formal notification of Bryan and Stevenson followed directly afterward. This function, held at Indianapolis, Indiana on August 8, may be said to have fairly opened the campaign. The speech of the Democratic leader proved the assertion made by the Republicans early in the year—that Bryan, after holding out to have free silver recognized as a matter of consistency, would put it to the background and make his campaign on Imperialism. So it proved. There were hardly three sentences about the money question in his whole address, the rest of the 7000 words being taken up with a review of the Republican Philippine policy and a statement of the Democratic attitude. His own attitude, he lays down as follows: "There is an easy, honest, honorable solution of the Philippine question. It is set forth in the Democratic platform, and is submitted with confidence to the American people. This plan I unreservedly endorse. If elected, I shall convene Congress in extraordinary session as soon as I am inaugurated and recommend an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose—first, to establish a stable form of government in the Philippine Islands, just as we are now establishing a stable form of government in the island of Cuba; second, to give independence to the Filipinos, just as we have promised to give independence to the Cubans; third, to protect the Filipinos from outside interference while they work out their destiny, just as we have protected the republics of Central and South America, and are, by the Monroe doctrine, pledged to protect Cuba."

Mr. Stevenson's speech was equally strong on Imperialism and equally weak on other issues.

Government Aid for Cape Nome. The presence at the Cape Nome of some four thousand indigent miners is disturbing the Treasury Department, which has all along viewed with alarm the rush of unprepared and incompetent people to the northern diggings. There is no provision outside the government for bringing these people away before the severe Arctic winter sets in, and no way of caring for them at Nome, except the charity of the other miners, which is hardly to be depended upon. The expense of feeding this indigent class through the winter and at Arctic prices will hardly be assumed by the government; general deportation, while hardly less expensive, seems preferable, as it prevents further demands on official charity and helps to clean out the surplus population. The indigent class at Nome has signed a petition which is now on its way to Washington; its arrival will be the occasion for definite action one way or the other. If anything is done, it must be at once. Winter is fairly on at Nome by October 1st, not much more than six weeks from the probable time of the receipt of the petition. There is a provision in the statutes of the United States covering this point. It is provided that an insolvent citizen stranded abroad may take an oath to the effect that he has no means of return, and that the captain or agent of any ship at hand may then furnish him with free transportation, collecting charges from the government. Many miners have taken this oath, but have been refused passage by the agents of the transportation companies, who consider that making collection from the government is too much trouble. There is nothing in the law to force them to assume the responsibility.

One consideration which makes the Treasury Department hesitate is a belief that many of these people have gone North without funds in the expectation of government return should they become distressed—a belief encouraged by the rescue of the Point Barrow whalers. The Treasury officials are afraid that if they foster this feeling, they will encourage rather than check the rush of unprepared persons to Arctic finds. Again, they are held back by the attitude of the transportation companies, who, while partly responsible for luring these people to Nome, are still expecting to reap a harvest from free government deportation, since they have the only steamers available for the removal of so large a body of men.

A Chinatown Festival.

By Will Irwin.

Three hundred and sixty three days of the year, the "foreign devil" is immaterial, unnoticed thing on the streets of Chinatown. Ordinarily, he is a convenience and a medium of commerce when he stops at the stores to buy, a meddler when he interferes with lotteries, fan-tan games, plague, high-binder wars and other things which are none of his business, a curse when he sweeps down on the settlement with uniforms and patrol wagons, but always a Thing—never a person. No self-re-specting Chinese is supposed to notice the white-faced foreigner except in the line of business. Pass a Chinaman on the streets,and he turns out for you, but he does it in a formal manner, as for a post; stop and stare at him, and he is in no wise disconcerted; he goes on with his business in the regular way, as though it were a cat which had wandered in to watch his private affairs. Contempt, absolute and entire contempt, sums up their attitude. Thus for all the days of the year but two. Then the foreign devil is a devil indeed and to be shunned as such. This is the Feast of Devils, when the righteous followers of the national cult make war upon the people of the air, the powers of darkness. On these two days, yellow folk take no chances with defilement from a ghostly power with which they are at war. A Chinese parent is generally somewhat flattered if a tourist stops to pay attention to one of the eternal children; it is the only ground upon which he grants social intercourse to the hated race. Not so on the Feast of Devils. Approach one of the children, and he is drawn sharply away; persist, and his bearer clatters off on his foolish, high-soled shoes, in a panicky, Chinese run. Pidgin-English will not draw out any answers to your politest enquiries. Indifference is changed to suspicion and distrust. The little people have learned it themselves; the omnipresent older brother or sister caring, with that mothering-sense which is the strongest sentiment of the race, for little Wu Ting or tiny Peach-Blossom, is even more fearful than the elders of the foreign touch. You are not wanted in Chinatown on that night, although your money is still good, because the Sons of Heaven are here to wring tribute out of the inferior race.

* * *

A Chinese "Drunk."

There is no Lent, no day of atonement in the Chinese calendar; all religious festivals are feast-days. And so, even on these nights when men are fighting devils, they make it occasion for a good time. The theatre, where they are just bringing a play to its end after six weeks of continuous performance, is crowded. The celestial manager has plainly timed his drama for the feast, this stage of the performance representing a fight between the fairies and the demons for possession of a healing charm. The famous Jackson-street restaurant, which every writer, who ever touched the city has taken a hand at describing, is packed—the young, gay bloods with their painted ladies in one apartment, the staid merchants, spectacled and long-robed, in another. When the night is far spent, and they have stuffed themselves with the innumerable courses of a Chinese menu, they will fall to playing their native after-dinner game of "counting out"—I know no other name for it. Tis a most pleasing game, and a great help to conviviality. It is run on the principle of "Simon says thumbs up" but it is much more noisy and strenuous, involving wild gesturing and loud shouting. At the end of each round, the man who loses must drink a cup of rice-brandy, poured out of a tea-pot. The one who goes under the table first is "it."

A Chinese "jag" is a beautiful one, a lesson to the western barbarian. They become mellow, they expand, they shine with love for all the world, after the fashion of the immortal Pickwick; I can even imagine a Chinese growing really cordial to a white man under the softening influence of rice brandy or Oriental gin. But it never goes further. Peep in at the Jackson street tea-house almost any night, and bribe the fat waiter to let you watch behind the screen if you would observe it. After an honr of "Simon says thumbs up," eye begins to speak to eye, and they chatter along like magpies, but there is nothing more. The polite Celestial reserve enforces the rule of hands off; never have I seen one touch another, even at the stage just preceding "dead to the world," the consummation of a really successful "drunk." When the game has been too much for one of the players, he staggers with dignity to a straw-covered couch set in the niches of the wall and lies down to sleep it off.

The Feast of Devils.
Photographed by Oscar Maurer.

Chinatown Life.

The grave elders in their stately robes stop before the limits of discretion are reached, draw on their quilted great-coats and depart, "quietly, reverently, as becomes a follower of Confucius," but the young bloods and their consorts in the other apartment linger on, playing the monotonous game without cessation. The painted ladies in flowering silks, sitting just back of the lords of creation, according to the Chinese custom, light cigarettes and join in the play. Even then, when three-fourths of the assembled company is just on the right side of the vanishing point, there is no coarseness, nothing unseemly. This in spite of the fact that these men are of a sort corresponding to our cocktail routers and the women of the class called "slave girls" by courtesy. Go down to the water-front restaurants any Sunday evening, when the after-picnic crowd is in possession, ye revilers of the Heathen, and notice the difference. The Chinaman may be bad on the surface and worse below, but he is decorous about it all.

* * *

Light and Color.

Along the curb-stones, the women are lighting red wax-candles from the little prayer-store away down on Dupont street and the children are dumping baskets of gaudy paper prayers on the bon-fires. The deep, picturesque alleys are canopied over for this great occasion, and the space beneath is one blaze of soft light from the fires, the candles, the lanterns. Priests in the glory of their regalia sit in an impromptu stand, playing the unearthly music of their people and singing in squeaky, affected voices. Within easy touch of their position are the doors of the "Chinese Merchants' Club" or the "Chinese Literary Club," or some other blind for highbinders and fan-tan gamblers. Yet this religious ceremony is set right here and no Chinaman sees anything incongruous. The most rapt followers of this litany of demonology being chanted through the two long days and nights by relays of priests, are the inmates of these very dens. For the Chinese religion has nothing to do with morality, or if it has, not with morality of our sort. The devils being driven out, it will be quite in order for that priest, tapping, solemn-faced, on his painted gong while he turns the pages of his ritual-book, to go out and mix in fan-tan.

Color, color everywhere. We are as infants beside them in our ideas on this. The most delicious tinting of our masters of painting seems hard and cold beside the soft hues of this common, ordinary Chinese alley, built, painted, and decorated by ordinary Chinese, who do not know that they are artists. Ross Alley is beautifully colored in a somber way on ordinary nights. It is a high, narrow street, just a slit in the block, with little windows and projections run out all along, and its principal effect on the eye is that of a deep, olive-brown, interspersed with splashes of soft, yellow light. High up and on to one side, just where a painter would put it in the composition of a picture, is a balcony of bright, bright green, blazing with light, so brilliant that it throws all the rest of the nooks and ways into shadow.

This on workaday occasions, but to-night the prevailing col or-scheme is soft yellow because of the multitude of glowing lights, hung from every balcony and every door-way. The Chinese men, packed on the pavement below to watch the service and listen to the music, are dressed all in green; on this the golden light beats with a softening effect. But there are splotches of red where some dignitary has come out in his dress-clothes and of purple where some slave-girl of high masters poses on a balcony and watches the spectacle. Purple and blue and green lie close together and harmonize; no occidental artist could manage that. How the Chinese manage it is one of the mysteries of that mysterious people.

WHILE their people are hacking at our people in the far East, the progressive Chinese of San Francisco are showing their intention to stay with the country by erecting one of the largest Chinese Temples in this country in the midst of Chinatown. It is backed by the Sam Yup Company, who build it to worship the patron spirits of their tong, the God of War in especial—quite an appropriate deity at the present time. As the Sam Yup Company is the richest organization in Chinatown, it follows that the opening and dedication of the new temple will be an elaborate ceremony. I hear that Consul-General Ho Yow, the head of the Chinese in California, is to have a prominent part. Besides the dignity which he will give the occasion, Ho should add ornamental effect, for he is probably the handsomest Chinaman, judged by our standards, in all the Western world.

Baker Alley.

Their Dramatic Debuts.

The Beginnings of Some Prominent Mummers.

Florence Robert's.

Florence Roberts was playing "Peggy" in the "Country Girl," when interrogated as to the inception of her stage career. She wore the short blue frock the role calls for and looked like a little girl—a little golden-haired, blue-eyed girl, whom it seemed ridiculous to ask about a "past." Her story is very simple. No "irrepressible impulses," no "irresistible longing," no "inspired call," about it. "I went upon the "stage," she declared,"just because I had to do something and could not do anything else. My father was dead; my mother was not strong. I did not know anything useful—couldn't typewrite, couldn't short-hand, couldn't sew, couldn't embroider, couldn't cook, couldn't do anything. Once I went to boil some water and the stove exploded. I was tormented with the desire of being independent and helping my mother. Friends who had noticed my talent for mimickry advised me to try the stage. One day I saw an advertisement in a paper 'Girls wanted at the Alcazar' I took my courage in both hands and applied. I was accepted as a ballet-girl. And here, right here in this room, Room 36, I dressed for the stage for the first time. It was twelve years ago."—The big blue eyes became vacant in reminiscence and a little sigh escaped the parted lips.

"The play was an extravaganza 'Little Jack Shepherd' and all I had to do was stand around and try to look good. For days and days, I dressed in this little room, went out upon the stage and returned without having opened my mouth. It was terribly discouraging."

But better days came. Mme. Modjeska came to San Francisco and Florence Roberts was given small parts.

"The first speaking part I had I will always remember. I was a page in "Twelfth Night" and my part consisted in saying to Duke Orsino, played by Morris Barromore, 'Will you hunt, my Lord?' When I was given the part, I went down to my dressing-room and danced a pas-seule of joy. How I rehearsed that part! I would repeat it to myself a thousand times a day, in all possible intonations. Never since have I studied a part so faithfully. At last the great day came. My excitement grew as the piece went on. Finally my scene comes. I hear my cue. I open my mouth, gurgle, gasp, and then stand there, stupid. I had forgotten the line!"

Morris Barrymore, however, saved the day. "We will go and hunt," he said. Then as he came out into the wings, he turned to the frightened little page. "Will you know your part next time?" he said, "or will I have to spend all night studying it?"

"And the next night I said my line," Miss Roberts concluded.

After that, progress was more rapid. In 1892, Al Hayman and Lewis Morrisson gave the grand production of "Clyto" at the Baldwin. Florence Roberts was juvenile woman. Kate Forsyth, who took the heavy part of Clyto, fell ill. The managers were in despair. None of the actresses approached would accept the role at such short notice. Finally, Florence Roberts volunteered. There was but one day to learn the lines and the business, but she achieved a success—her first one.

"But I tell you I toiled for it, and I toil yet to achieve more," she went on. "My life is passed entirely here in the theatre. Here it is that friends come to see me. Do you see the crockery on the shelf there? I also take part of my meals here. It is work, work, work!"

* * *

Katherine Gray's.

"MY crossing of the Rubicon was made almost without effort," Katherine Gray (Mrs. John Mason) explained. "Of course there were the usual premonitory symptoms. I acted, liked acting, longed to act; I played with Frank Mathieu, Dick Hotaling, and the other amateurs here in San Francisco, but such opportunities only whetted my desires. I determined really to go on the stage. At that time the greatest good that could befall a girl was to be in the Daly Company. Through the instrumentality of General Barnes, who was a friend of my father's, I secured an audience with the great manager and he engaged me at once. That was the beginning. There were no importunities, no long waits. I ventured and won without an incident. Perhaps," continued Miss Gray, looking retrospective, "I was a bit young to be able to take advantage of the association. Daly was the best manager in the country, but his time was devoted to the leading members of his company—one had to know something to imbibe anything. You see I was but sixteen years old and had little to do and less to say. I began really to learn when James Hearne took me into his company in "Shore Acres." I was Helen Berry in the original cast. There is no greater master of dramatic technic in America than Mr. Hearne, and he has the art of imparting his knowledge in such a manner as to enable anyone with a spark of dramatic intelligence to follow him. Some managers will state the effect they desire, but cannot explain how to get it. Mr. Hearne would define what he wanted and suggest just how to go about it. I have played with Charles Coghlan in 'The Royal Box' and with Mansfield in several plays, but it is to Mr. Hearne I owe most of my education.

You must not imagine I underrate Mr. Coghlan for the opportunity of acting with so fine an artist is in itself an education" she continued—"He would take great pains at rehearsal with the parts played opposite you. He would describe very clearly what you should do. If you did not get the effect at once, he would put the idea in a different way, so in time one could not miss it. Mr. Mansfield is sometimes the most admirable of teachers—so suggestive, so subtly intelligent. At other times he is absolutely oblivious of everyone but himself, and one cannot force an idea out of him. After all, however, 'the play's the thing,'," added Miss Gray. "A good actor can help a poor part but a good part makes the great actor. Of all my roles I like best that of Loy Sing in 'The First Born.'"

Wilton Lackaye
Norma Whalley
Florence Roberts
Katherine Gray
Henry Miller.

Henry Miller's.

Henry Miller, who is of English birth and Canadian breeding, by-the-way, was attracted to the stage by a magazine article on Sir Henry Irving's career which fell into his hands during his school-days. It fired his ambition, and he determined to go upon the stage. He became at the age of fifteen a pupil of that venerable old Shakesperian actor, G. W. Couldock, from whom he received nearly four years of thorough training. At the end of that time, his tutor secured him a professional chance in Toronto. His first part was that of the bleeding sergeant in "Macbeth," but the company being in financial straits and resignations being therefore frequent, he advanced speedily to leading juvenile roles in classic plays. After three years with travelling companions, he had the good fortune to secure a place in the Daly stock aggregation in New York, the country's greatest college for actors, and the rest is on the playbills.

These are the facts. Mr. Miller asserts, however, that he can hardly say just what made him take up the stage, his determination being a growth rather than an impulse. "But I suppose that you must lay it to that magazine article mostly," he says.

Wilton Lackaye's.

Wilton Lackaye intended, originally, to enter the Roman Catholic priesthood. He went through Georgetown university with that idea in view. Upon his graduation, he secured a coveted appointment to the Propaganda at Rome. On his way to Canada to arrange preliminaries, he was taken by his father to a theatre in New York and witnessed his first play. He went away fascinated, and immediately determined to be an actor. His father unsympathetically recommended a padded cell. The two finally compromised on the law, and young Lackaye was sent back to his alma mater to prepare himself for the bar. He joined the Lawrence Barrett dramatic club, a strong amateur organization at Washington, and came to be its stage-manager. As his interest in the stage grew, his ardor for the law diminished, until the university authorities hinted to his parents that his delicate health would prevent him from shining at the bar. At about that time, Lawrence Barrett opportunely attended a rehearsal of the club that bore his name, marked young Lackaye's talent, and offered him a place in his company. Lackaye's professional debut was in "Francesca de Rimini," and in a walking part so insignificant that he has now forgotten exactly which one it was. Eight years of hard, winter-and-summer work followed before success came.

Miss Stembler's.

Miss Sallie Stembler, the dark-eyed, vivacious young woman, who combines singing and facial contortion in the Cohan farce at the Orpheum, went on the stage because it runs in the family. "I have two sisters," she said,"who really can act, and it seemed up to me to do likewise. I was then singing in a choir in Baltimore and I plunged. Farce comedy was my first stunt. I joined a Hoyt company and learned the business that way, making up for such inexperience as I possessed with my singing. I can sing, you see. My first good part was in 'A Midnight Bell.' Mr. Hoyt handed me over a bunch of lines. 'These are your part, Sallie,' he said. They were, for a night or so. He was a regular tinker at the play business, was Hoyt, always patching and twisting your lines so every few weeks, half of the cast had to get to work memorizing again. I can't say he taught me anything. He always knew what he wanted but you had to find it out yourself. If you did not, something fell on you. However," continued Miss Stumbler, "I'm a misfit at farce comedy. Mother says so. I ought to be in opera. May be I will one of these days."

THINGS & PEOPLE

By BOSWELL Jr.

The Truth about Slot Machines.

THE Examiner expose of the slot machine fraud was a good sensational article, and true, I believe, all the way through, but I doubt just the same if it is going to paralyze the industry or even cause a temporary slow-down, The proprietor of a big down-town cafe tells me that there has been no appreciable diminution in the crops of nickels since the story appeared. The Examiner only stated facts which have been known on the cocktail route for many a day. The regular nickel-in-the-slot fiend is aware that he is being robbed, knows that a machine which can be as easily "fixed" as one of these little gambling devices is not likely to be run honestly, but he plays it just the same. Why? Partly because money is free in the West and people are rather ashamed of squeezing nickels, partly because it is fun to see the cards go round and the gambler's excitement of seeing what will come out is worth the money, and partly because nine men in ten believe in their own luck and expect to win, even at unequal odds. No man who goes into gambling of any sort figures out the chances between him and the management. So long as slot machines are features of the San Francisco saloon and cigar stores, just so long will they be played by the careless public.

* * *

The A. S. P. P. B.

MAN is a social animal, especially in the United States and in China,one hears of new associations formed every day. The latest is the A. S. P. P. B.—the American Society for the Prevention of Premature Burial. Its object, as its name may indicate, is rather useful than cheerful. The founders of the A. S. P. P. B. are not at a loss to explain the need of their society. They are,in faith,but too ready to expatiate upon that subject. They tell you things that send shivers down your spine. Do you know, for instance, that three per cent of the persons that die, or rather, are pronounced dead by physicians in haste for dinner, are buried alive? Well,that is the fact as told to me by an A. S. P. P. B. member who got it from the Regent of the Medical Faculty of Paris. Do you know that, in England and Wales two or three thousand persons are known to have been interred prematurely? Well such is the truth, as declared by M——, another of my A. S. P. P. B. friends. Have you heard of the story of the hunch-back and the undertaker? Well, I won't tell it to you, although Professor K—— of the A. S. P. P. B. vouches for it. The A. S. P. P. B. proposes to do away with all this. It has devised a series of tests to be applied to its members who may seem to have shuffled off this mortal coil. Here they are: 1. Two or more incisions of an artery; 2. Exposing the palm of the hand to the flame of a candle; 3. Holding a mirror to the lips for signs of respiration; 4. Placing a hot-iron or steel against the flesh. If all these blandishments be resisted the candidate will be regarded as duly dead and a diploma certifying as much issued by the organization.

* * *

The plan as a whole seems calculated to ensure all participants against the horror of premature burial but as a prospective member, I would suggest the addition of another test, one which would vary according to the nature of the experiments. For instance, a miser's gold might be juggled before him; an old maid's parrot be strangled in her sight; a collector's trinkets broken under his nose; a musician's composition played on a barrel organ. Such tests, well chosen according to circumstances, would reduce the possibility of mistake to a minimum.

* * *

The Man From Tien-Tsin.

AMONG the Tien-Tsin refugees on the Logan was a real man of blood. He landed with an unexploded Chinese shell under one arm, and an 88 calibre elephant-gun beneath the other. His name is McIntosh. He is a short, stocky, steel-eyed Scotchman. Everything is formidable about him, except his modesty. His steel-blue eyes send shivers down your back; his Scotch r's remind one of a gatling-gun. On landing in San Francisco he laid his Chinese shell down with infinite precautions, and leaned on his rifle in picturesque attitude; after pulling down a full cartridge-belt from below his vest so that it peeped forth unobtrusively.

A hundred reporters charged him with a whoop. He turned his steel eyes on them without a tremor. That man fears nothing. He does not fear Boxers. He does not fear unexploded Chinese shells. And, ecstasy of valor, he fears not reporters! He actually talks to reporters!

* * *

His story is a simple one, a tale unadorned. On the outskirts of Tien-Tsin, there are woolen mills. On the mills is a tower, on the tower was McIntosh, McIntosh and his deadly weapon. Against the foot of that tower, 100,000 Boxers dashed themselves in a frenzied endeavor to enter the city. Between them and the 30,000 defenseless Caucasian troops whom they longed to massacre, was one man, on a tower. For sixteen days and nights, that man kept them at bay. At regular intervals the elephant-gun boomed, ten Boxer heads dropped off ten Boxer shoulders, and 200,000 Boxer legs beat a precipitate retreat. At times, things looked rather bad. All the hordes of Asia seemed to be dashing themselves up against the lonely tower and the lonely man. Shells struck the turret in such quick succession that it vibrated and sang like a Straduarius, and music is excruciating to a Scotchman. For sixteen days and nights the terrible struggle was kept up. At last, the tower would stand it no longer. It caved in amidst the roar of flames. But Tien-Tsin had been saved.

This is the story of McIntosh's heroism. For further particulars see the daily papers of Tuesday last.

* * *

Another Lawyer Came to Town.

AMONG late accessions to the San Francisco bar is ex-Governor Budd of Stockton. He has an office adjoining his friends Campbell and Metson in the Crocker building and while not a member of the firm is to co-operate, I believe, in the handling of their affairs, the death of Mr. Reddy having left them shorthanded. The governor is a smart lawyer. It is generally admitted that his speech in the Craven case before Judge Troutt was the best forensic effort made on that occasion, but he is uneven. For two weeks he will display the greatest celerity and acumen in transacting legal business; then there will steal a numbness over his intellectual parts and for the time being he relapses into the second class. In spite of the errors committed during his incumbency, the gubernatorial experience has certainly broadened the Budd mind and solidified the Budd character. He is a formidable opponent in a law suit nowadays and has gained in reliability and conservatism in his personal relationships.

* * *

Apropos of the ex-governor and his erstwhile political opponent Gavin McNab—they met in the suit brought by the Pacific Debenture Company to enjoin Insurance Commissioner Clunie from interfering with the affairs of that corporation. The cause was tried in Judge Murasky's courtroom and the clerk's table was littered with exhibits of stocks and bonds, introduced in evidence. Budd was winding up a speech devoted to denunciations of the institution when a carafe of water on the table was overturned, its contents drenching the papers. "And now," he added, attracting the court's attention, to the blood, "they are actually watering their stock in your honor's courtroom." McNab interrupted.

"If your honor please," he said "these cow-county lawyers are always thinking of watering stock."

* * *

In Defense of Cigarettes.

THE ordinance of the Rock Island Railroad to the effect that all cigarette-smokers must give up the habit or hunt other employ proves conclusively that the anti-cigarette superstition still lingers, in spite of the bulk of evidence on the other side of the question. It will be remembered that a controversy over the subject raged about two years ago, and that it was then proven that the "villainous paper cylinders" were in themselves no more injurious in effect than tobacco taken in the form of a cigar or a pipe. This result was attained by medical and chemical experiment. It silenced the ancient idea for a time. Nevertheless, the anti-cigarette fiend has bobbed up again lately, wherefore, the London Lancet has been driven to make exhaustive investigations on its own account. This journal obtained cigarettes of ten brands and of different grades from the New York and London cigar-stores and gave them a most exhaustive test. Morphine, phosphorus, arsenic, mercury, copper, chlorine and an "unclassified alkaloid" were among the things looked for, all these having been numbered among the detrimental adulterants supposed to lurk in the cigarette. Not one was found. The chemists discovered only tobacco and rice-paper. The Lancet's report sums up: "There is not a single factor in these numerous results upon which can be fairly based any allegation of the presence of a health-injuring substance." This ought to end discussion, but it will not; you cannot argue with a prejudice. The chief harm done by cigarettes as compared with other forms of tobacco lies in the fact that old smokers generally inhale them. If this is avoided, they are no more injurious than a pipe. Indeed, there is much to be said in their favor. A cigarette is a clean smoke, comparatively agreeable to the non-smoker in the vicinity, and does not require an accompaniment of that bad American habit-spitting.

* * *

The Devilish Love of Evil.

ACCORDING to the Examiner and,more lately, the Call Colonel Long of the United States transport service and his subordinates must be just about on a level with Satan himself for pure, unadultered deviiment. Satan alone among all created things is supposed to be bad without motive and just simply to be cussed. That is what the U. S. army transport people are doing, if you believe our dailies. They are supplanting American workmen —who don't want the jobs, by-the-way—by Chinamen, they are refusing work to discharged volunteer soldiers and giving it to strangers and foreigners, and for no advantage that anyone can guess. Devilish, isn't it? The easy explanation that enough American fireman cannot be found to keep the transports running and the fact that most of the ex-volunteers who have been turned away from the docks are men who enlisted for want of something to eat and will now eat off the government all their lives—these explanations cannot be accepted for one moment, because everyone knows that the United States Transport people are bad, and have no human motives and would sooner do evil than good.

* * *

The New Course of Study.

AN educational expert is the latest professional specialty. When the San Francisco Board of Education decided to substitute a new study course for the patchwork system in vogue in this department, they sought the assistance of Professor Elwood P. Cubberly of Stanford, who has achieved high rank among educational authorities. The result is a thoroughly up-to-date curriculum which goes forth to the teacher with a species of guide to its use that makes as good an exposition of pedagogical principles as has ever been written. Professor Cubberly is deeply interested in his subject and put in a great deal of time on the task set him by the Board. The new course is really built up from the foundation. The subject matter so far as text books are concerned, has been changed but little, but it has been thoroughly vitalized and given what the teachers call "a good pedagogical setting." Professor Cubberly is one of the best equipped educationalists in the country. He has had nine years' experience as teacher and city superintendent, and for the past two years has been acting head of the Department of Education at Stanford.

* * *

Admiral Philip's Dilemma.

WHILE a familiar figure in naval circles, the country knew but little of "Jack" Philip until after the naval battle off Santiago. Then he became a hero, at one fell swoop. That solemn acknowledgment of his after the destruction of Cervera's fleet.—"I solemnly declare that there is a God, a just God whom I serve," made him a national figure The mental image of those who did not know the man was probably of a thin, pompous,nasal-tongued personage ready at texts. On the contrary Admiral Philip was an unassuming, soft-voiced, twinkling-eyed, rather rotund little man as rarely given to open religious expression as to personal eulogy. I met him soon after the Texas returned from Santiago. The battleship was crowded with visitors; the feminine fr-r-r of sweeping skirts buzzed throughout the giant structure. The captain's own cabin was bare except for a cot, a table and three chairs. A home-rigged portiere hid his bed, and that was his only refuge, for during the time I chatted with him, women came pouring in to stare in speechless admiration. The poor orderly outside sweated and fumed, but could not keep them out. Philip's explanation of their pressure, notwithstanding their grave breach of propriety was humorous.

"They undoubtedly know better," he confided to me, "but they can't help it. You see, they've got to see a hero and I suppose that's my role for the time being."

Endure it, he did, with the air of a patient little tin martyr. Only as it got towards five o'clock, I noticed that he grew nervous. Two or three times he opened the portiere of his cot as if to plunge himself behind their protective flaps. Perspiration began to pearl on his brow.

"I've got to go out to dinner," he whispered to me tragically; "six oclock, full-dress affair; how can I dress?"

That was a problem. The room was full of women. They stood about gazing at him in rapture. They had been doing it the whole afternoon until he was a nervous wreck. The "hero business" was becoming trying.

"Guess I'll have to dress for dinner," he said to me, loud enough to be heard by everybody.

A smile of infinite gratitude at being given the honor of the sound of his voice lit the whole assemblage. One young miss took out a little note-book and hurriedly wrote down the words of the great man. He repeated the remarks in louder tone. No sign of exit. He made a fake movement at taking off his coat.

"How graceful!" whispered some feminine voice audibly.

Our hero was thoroughly aroused by that time. He backed over to a corner of the cabin, got up on a foot-stool, and delivered the following oration:—

"Ladies, as I have intimated several times already, I regret that it becomes necessary for me to dress for a dinner engagement. I fear I shall be late and if you will kindly excuse me while I change my trousers, you may all come back into this room, and remain as long as you please."

With this he made a dive for behind the portieres, and an avalanche of rustling silk and flapping ribbons poured out of the gang-way.

* * *

The Growth of the "Bulletin."

In journalism fashions are changing. We are gradually coming into the era of the evening paper. Time was when one heard only of the morning dailies and they alone had circulation. That period has passed and gone and we are now witnessing the uprising of the evening journal. The future belongs to it. The development of the San Francisco Bulletin is a practical example of my theory. To-day the Bulletin claims to have as large a circulation in San Francisco as any of its morning competitors and offers doubting Thomases the privilege of inspecting its books. It boldly contests the news supremacy of its rivals and makes good the boast that its afternoon edition contains all the facts that they publish under heavy headlines the following morning. Which is true, though bitter. However, it must also be admitted that in the editorial direction of the Bulletin there's lots of judgment. It is generally right in its fights. Witness the Esola affair. Without the interposition of the Bulletin that infamous job would surely have been successful. Thus far, it has been on the winning side in both municipal and national political contests. Nothing helps a daily like winning a fight and the several victories this paper has achieved have aided it tremendously with its clientelle. Nor is it shortsighted in the matter of material. It puts forth a splendid five cents' worth particularly in its Sunday supplement which holds its own against all rivals and is steadily gaining in favor and circulation.

The Tivoli.

San Francisco is astonishingly fond of grand opera. I presume it is because of the cosmopolitan character of its population. They are playing grand opera at the Tivoli to such crowded houses that the box office is setting itself up against the Mint across the way on Fifrth street. Nor as the nights roll by, is there any diminution in attendance. Applicants for tickets are reminded of conditions in New York when they are politely informed that the house is sold out a week ahead. So fierce is the rush for admission to "Othello" and "Rigoletto," that the operas are to be repeated all next week.

The Outing at Del Monte.

The annual "outing" at Del Monte next week, cannot fail to be a great success. All the people interested in outdoor sports are to be there, the golfists, polo players, pony races and amateur baseballists. There will be golf every morning, an exciting polo tournament between Burlingame and a Southern team, which I am assured, will not be by any means a walk over for the San Mateo County players. However, the races will really be the feature of the meet. The best ponies in California are entered and the cleverest riders will have mounts. In addition to all this an excellent band will discourse music. Walter Hobart's coach "Del Monte" drive by its owner, Mr. Beylard, Mr. Raoul Duval and Mr. Carolan in turn will make daily trips round the seventeen mile drive. There will be dancing and feasting and moonlight—and all this under the serene skies of Monterey. It is highly probable, into the bargain, that during the week of festivities the Iowa may be found anchored in Monterey Bay.

The New School Courses.

IN line with the most modern educational thought are the new courses of study adopted by the Board of Education of San Francisco for the public schools under its control. They differ from the old curriculum rather in quality than in quantity, not so much in the matter of text-books as in arrangement of subject matter and methods of presentation. The method employed in this instance by the Board of Education was certainly dictated by an intelligent appreciation of the fact. Suggestions were invited from the teachers of various grades, from the superintendent and his deputies and from a special committee of teachers. These were submitted to an expert in school administration, Elwood P. Cubberly of Stanford University, who formulated the system just adopted. It may justly be described as a comprehensive, cohesive and logical curriculum. With the accumulation of information about children, gathered by the researches of the experimental psychologist, the neurologist, the child study specialist, and the student of abnormal and defective children, as well as the knowledge gained by experience in teaching and supervision, the work of making a course of study for children has come to demand the attention of the specialist. It is expert work as much as agriculture or engineering, and the layman is almost certain to blunder whenever he attempts it.

The new courses have a central idea. This is to develop the child naturally, not artificially; to give him broad, comprehensive views of things, instead of petty, disconnected, wooden notions; to electrify book-lore with the interest of life. In short, it is to make of the child a man, and not a magpie. The chief change, however, is one of method, rather than subject matter. Emphasis is laid upon what may be called the fundamentals of elementary education, but instead of a prolonged grind upon one or two essentially uninteresting text books, the work has been vitalized by the introduction of supplemental material, and by a close connection with the outdoor interests of the child. Instead of indicating, in two or three lines, certain pages of the State text to be worked over during the year, often merely memorized, the new course devotes pages to explaining to teachers how they should proceed to make these same pages mean something to the pupil, and how to connect what the text contains with what the child may see for himself. The change in method may be made by a few illustrations. In reading, for example, instead of spending three years on the State Fourth Reader, drilling over it until pupils have so memorized its 200 pages that they can read (or recite) the selections, "with the proper gestures and elocutionary effect," the new course lays down the dictum that "the aim of teaching reading is not to make elocutionists, but good, distinct readers, and that good reading should resemble good conversation"—as rapidly as possible the pupil passes from the reading of literary scraps to the reading of continuous pieces of literature and history.

In Language Study, the chief aim is to teach the use of good English, and parsing and analysis are regarded as tools, and not ends, in themselves. In Geography, a study of the "why" of trade, commerce and industries, and the interpretation of the map have been made to take the place of much memorizing of unimportant rivers, capes, towns and products. In Arithmetic, there has been a concentration upon rapid mental work in the use of the four fundamental operations with whole numbers and fractions, and upon percentage, interest and common measures. In History, the course begins as oral language and as literature, and throughout is closely connected with the work in Literature and Geography, while the method of instruction by topics will certainly make the history of our country much more interesting and inspiring than can be done by the usual chronological study of American annals.

The new courses for elementary schools are arranged on an eight years' basis instead of a nine years', as is the case in every other city in this State, and generally throughout the United States. The work for the Evening Schools has been revised so as to make these schools more nearly meet the needs of those who attend them. Particular emphasis has been thrown upon drill in the correct use of English, the cultivation of a love for reading good books, the history of the development of the nation, the principles of government and the responsibilities of citizens, together with geography, writing, spelling and arithmetic.

Settled Out of Court.

Continued from page 9

four hours after taking it; no pain to speak of. You might remember that."

"I won't forget it," Darrel said.

"Well, I've done what I came for." Praed made a movement towards the door. "I don't know why I've done it, why I've been so frank; but I felt I couldn't help myself. Fate, perhaps," he smiled.

"Fate, certainly, I should say," Darrell tried to smile, too; but the corners of his mouth seemed to stick. "But how remiss of me. You'll have a drink before you go—whisky and soda, or something. Wine?"

"Oh, yes, thanks; whisky. We'll drink a toast."

Darrel turned to go into the next room. At the door he stopped. "I suppose this isn't an elaborate joke of yours?" he asked.

"There are no jokes in that bottle," the man replied; "try it on a cur, or—something you want to get rid of."

"Yes, I'll try it on a cur I want to get rid of," and Darrel disappeared into the next room.

He opened a large bottle of soda and poured the contents into two long green glasses. Into one of them he put a little less than in the other. Into the one in which he had put less soda he poured half the white liquid from the little stoppered bottle. His hand didn't shake, his mouth didn't twitch. He put the two glasses and a decanter of whisky on a small brass tray and carried them into the next room.

"Help yourself to whisky," he said, taking up one of the glasses.

The man helped himself to whisky. So did Darrel. The man raised his glass.

"Here's life to those who ought to live and death to those who are better dead!" he cried.

"Death to those who are better dead," Darrel repeated, and each took a longish drink.

"Oh, finish your whisky, won't you?" Darrel said, as the other was once more making as if to go.

"Thanks, yes. I may as well," and he emptied his glass.

Darrel stood on the top of the stairs listening until his visitor's footfall could be no longer heard.

"I wonder," he said to himself, "if he was speaking the truth; then I've done the right thing. I cheated the hangman; now I've made up for it. If he wasn't, there's no harm done. Oh, but he was, the scoundrel!"

The next day, at lunch time, as Darrel was leaving the City Hall, Market street was ringing with the shrill cries of the newsboys. Darrel caught a glimpse of the poster one of them was flashing about in his hand. It had only one announcement, which had filled the whole sheet:—

STRANGE SEQUEL
TO THE
STREATHAM CASE.
SUDDEN DEATH
OF PRAED.

"It was true, then. Thank God, I believed him!" said Darrel, as he bought a paper.

On Expansion.

Continued from page 6.

able to guarantee law and order. If they cannot form a stable government, they cannot guarantee law and order, nor, hence, can they develop the land. Shall the land lie idle because the people have been false to the terms of their tacit trust? And shall they reproach the fruitful earth by remaining upon it to the exclusion of those who could develop it? When the individual is thus concerned, the anti-expansionist says: No. He must get hence and give his more energetic fellow a chance. And in consolation, he may add: If the original, lazy, mismanaging owner be at all reasonable, he can take service under his more strenuous brother.

But why cannot the anti-expansionist say likewise to a lazy, mismanaging people? The human ownership of land, whether individual or aggregate, involves a trust, and just as certain rights arise from possession, so also do certain penalties for wrong doing. Between individuals the penalty of mismanagement is dispossession; why not between peoples? Why does the anti-expansionist blow hot and cold? Since he feels impelled into the fight for ethical reasons, why does he use two codes of ethics in measuring the actions of men?

The Little Mademoiselle.

THUS it is that Mme. de Gouville—the wife of Captain Roger de Gouville—told me what she knew of little Lieutenant Yves Barnabe de Pelvin whose chum I had been at Saint-Cyr, and whom I had never seen after we left the college:—

It was in 1871. Our regiment was then at the village of F.,a few miles from the provisional frontier. The town lay in the midst of a forest, and had been partly destroyed during the war. We lived in wooden barracks that had been built by the Germans. Not far away was the line of black and white posts that marked the provisional frontier and it was one of our pasttimes to ride out to them. The young officers dreamed of nothing but the chance of provoking a frontier conflict. Some made targets of the pointed helmets found and brought in by the peasants, arranging matters so as to be seen by the German sentinels. Others galloped wildly across the line and back again.

One of them, however, Yves de Pelven de Kerdec, took no share in these pleasantries. When he was asked to join in, he would shrug his shouiders softly and murmur "childishness!" He was left to do as he pleased. No one cared. Only, after a while, we discovered that he was accustomed to take long solitary rides at night—and in a direction that did not lead to France! We began to watch him,more from curiosity than from suspicion. I myself, I confess, was drawn toward him by this original and mysterious mode of existence.

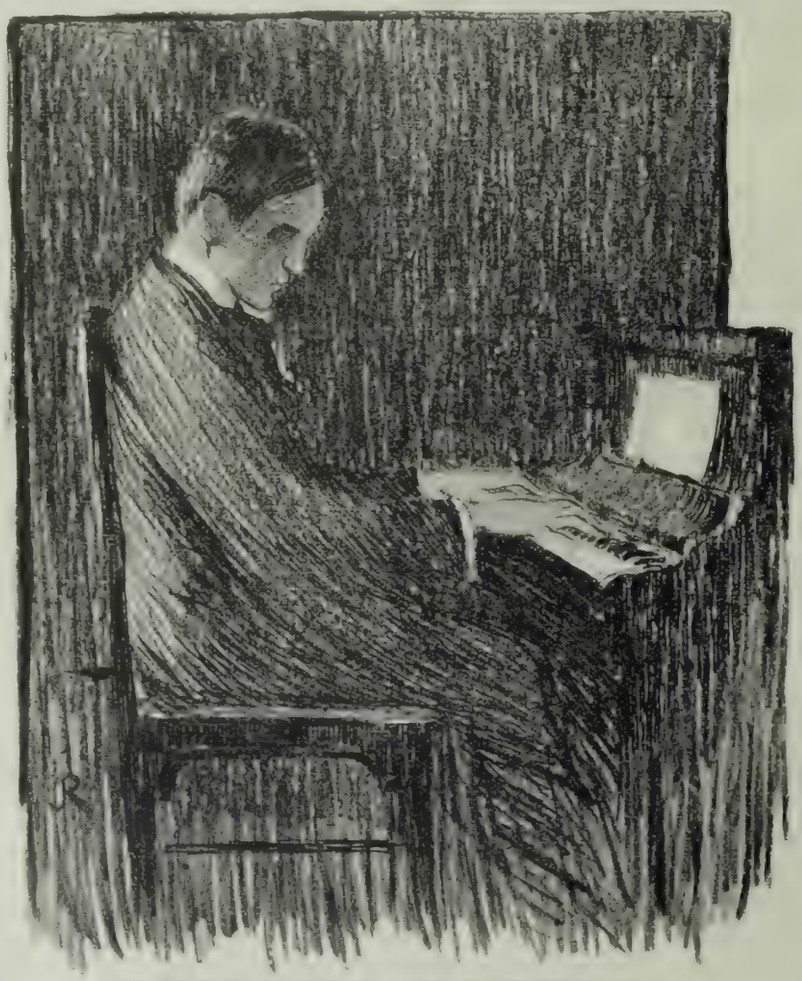
He was then a slight, blonde, pale youth, feminine of features, all nerve and muscle, tireless, fearless, silent. He was liked by the men, although they were a trifle jealous of that indefinable superiority which marked his breeding. Some of the old veterans of swarthy skin and voice loved him in spite of his refinement. They called him "Mademoiselle de Pelven" or "the little mademoiselle."

With five years of service to his credit, he had still the air of a young conscript; his voice was gentle; I never heard him yell or curse the men or horses. At nineteen he had received a decoration for distinguished bravery at Rezonville.

He had his lodgings, outside of town; in a solitary little cottage surrounded by rose-bushes and cedars—he and his dogs "Finaud" and "Tigresse"—a great Dane and a little striped bull-dog. His horses were two long, slender Anglo-Arabs.

We gossiped not a little about the lieutenant, his mode of life and his character; we discussed his fortune and the employment of his time outside of the service; for beside his regular appearance twice a day at mess, he took part in none of our entertainments. He was often seen, alone, galloping his horses over the green meadows of the Saone; he rode in some of the impromptu races, winning often, but without pride, without exultation, taking the thing as part of the trade. He never touched cards. His horses,his dogs,seemed his sole distraction. At times he disappeared for a week or so, and, on returning would say, "My father was down to see me." It was known that he had a father, an old man living in Bretagne. Yoes spoke of him only on those days.

The self-isolation of the boy was somewhat of a mystery to us. Each one explained in his own way the singular comrade, "the little mademoiselle." For some, Pelven was the son of a Galician princess and a knight of Malta; which was not impossible, it being the usage since the days of Louis XIV to accord that title to French gentlemen having contracted a marital alliance in Austria. In fact, Austrian decorations had been seen in his room. That, at least, was affirmed by some of the indiscreet ones who had penetrated the great chamber where he was wont to "dig" on his strategy during the warm hours of day. A singular room it was, at once salon, library and saddlery,the refuge of a thinker, and the handy-shop of a soldier; but its interior, in spite of the weapons, was rather feminine, and this struck the inferior officers who were accustomed to visit it with their reports. There were always fresh flowers in his room. And one day when some inquisitive spirit explored the pockets of his "dolman," which he had cast off during a fencing-bout, they discovered a golden locket on which sparkled a strange little diamond wing. They did not succeed in opening it.



ONE HEARS HIM PLAYING THE ADAGIO OF BETHOVEN'S SONATA

"He is a sentimentalist," Commandant St. Perle would say,"and the proof is that, when one passes his cottage in the evening,one hears him playing the adagio of Beethoven's sonata in A flat, the sonata of monks and priests."

* * *

One morning, my husband, the captain, came in very much worried. I questioned him. No answer. He drove away in his phæton as soon as breakfast was over with several other officers. He returned at 8 o'clock, alone, having left the others at the club. After dinner he held a conference with the fencing-master and the chief armorer, then St. Perle, his friend came and called him below his window; I heard him order the "landeau" with the big van—horses for three o'clock in the morning. "Ah," said I to myself, "a duel, and I suppose that they will fight at Delle." This spot lay on the other side of the frontier, and experience had taught me that such affairs usually took place there.

Toward 10 o'clock, the party returned; another conference took place in my husband's study; I heard the brusque voice of Saint-Perle, the gentle voice of de Pelven; a bell rang; I heard my husband call for grog, port wine, ice. Then the hours passed and silence reigned.

I remained awake, very curious. At 2, Roger came into my room, in full uniform and cloak. I did not question him, for I knew that he would not answer. When it was he that was about to fight, he would always tell me brusquely; this had happened three times in our ten months of married life. Like a curious child, I peered from behind the blinds and saw them start off. There were Saint-Perle, Roger, Pelven, and the surgeon. "Who is to fight?" I thought. It must be Pelven, for Saint-Perle would not take an inferior in rank for second."

Finally, I went to bed, nervous and worried. Morning broke. I rose late, feeling bereft of all my friends. I wandered through the house, I entered the study, hung with skins, oriental rugs, panoplied with weapons; on the blackboard I saw some half erased sentences. I opened the curtain, and there, in the bitter atmosphere of cold tobacco-smoke, in this almost sinister disorder of a room where people have watched over night, I tried to decipher the half obliterated marks. The phrases seemed rhythmed. At length, I finished by making out these seraps of verse:

"Qu'on m' enterre
En satin blanc
Comme un seigneur
Et qu'on capitonne ma biere
Toute de roses;
C'est ma fleur"

I wandered about all day, oppressed, feverish.

You know, yourself, that Pelven was killed. Roger came back that night alone and grieved.

Who was the adversary of de Pelven? An officer? Yes. Who? I will not tell you. Only a few knew and the secret has been well kept. The reason of the duel? Nothing, they said, a trifle, but I have always suspected that somebody had accused him of passing too easily across the frontier, alone, at night.

The next day Pelven's aged father came and took away the body. It seems that all the affairs of the lieutenant were in perfect order. He must have had a presentiment that he was going to be killed, for the words on the black-board were in the nature of directions for his own burial. And that was the end of the poor "little mademoiselle."

* * *

Two months passed. Spring came. One day we all started on a drag-party in the woods on the road to Delle. A little before luncheon, I went strolling in the forest with two or three friends. Suddenly, we saw a landeau, drawn by two beautiful horses, coming toward us along a deserted road. In the landeau was an old, pale woman, and a young girl—pretty—clad in black. We were turning out for them, when a dog jumped from the carriage. We recognized it at once. It was Tigresse, the little bull-dog—de Pelven's dog. While he was springing at us, licking our hands for joy, the landeau stopped, and a great gold-braided valet stepped out and solemnly picked up the dog. The little beast struggled, but in spite of yelps howls and tugs the man proved the stronger, and the landeau passed on.

Naturally, we talked of the incident. "What a singular thing! Tigresse with those strangers! Strangers from over the frontier, too; the liveries are blue and black—Prussian nobility."

Talking thus, we came back to the rendezvous. There we found Louis de Rolk, one of my friends whose castle, although in France, yet touches the frontier. We questioned him about the landeau.

"What, don't you know?" he answered "That is the Princess of Burgfeld, with her 'dame de compagnie'. She is doing penance in her 'schoss' instead of dancing in Paris as she generally does in the spring. It is said that during the war, she had a romance, a delicious romance with a French lieutenant, whose name I could never learn. They had sworn eternal fidelity. I don't know what has happened since,but she now lives in solitude and will enter a convent at Mannheim on her twenty-fifth birthday unless she gets out of her sentimentalism—which is not patriotic from the German point of view, for she is the daughter of one of the first generals of the Empire.

He said no more, but we understood. Poor Pelven! That was the explanation of those long, nocturnal rides, taken at the risk of the sentinels' bullets. That was the meaning of that sequestrated life, of the golden locket with its wing—symbol of his ethereal love, fitful and fragile. That was the reason for that life of mystery, poetry and silence, the roses in the cottage, the adagio of Beethoven, and the duel, which finished it all. He was dreaming, "the little mademoiselle!" And in that dream he died!

From the French of Adolphe Chenevierre.

Queen Victoria signed the bill constituting the Commonwealth of Australia on July 9th, and at once appointed the Earl of Hopetoun, her Lord Chamberlain, as the first Governor General. She had made him a Knight of the Thistle, in place of the late Duke of Argyll, a few days before. The Earl was Governor of Victoria from 1889 to 1895. The Queen presented to the Austrian Commissioners the table, the silver inkstand and the pen used in signing the bill.

Mr. Hogarth has opened up the Dictæan cave in Crete where Zeus was nursed by the goat Amalthea. After blasting out the limestone that blocked the entrance a cave was found full of offerings, consisting of bronze weapons, terra cotta statuettes and the like, all of Mycenæan times. A shaft 150 feet deep led to a lower stalacitite cave, where offerings were found finer than those in the cave above.

IN THE SWIM.

The "Smart Set" in London Society.

IT has come to such a pass with me that I hate the words "smart set," at least, as applied to London society. Let me turn from chatterer to philosopher for a paragraph or two, to say that I believe that it constitutes a real danger to the English, this devotion to trivial ideals among the heads of national society. Understand me; I am not reviling polite society as such. If a body of people have the leisure and time and money to devote to amusing themselves in their own way and choose to do so in the thousand and one ways possible in ordinary social life, they have a perfect, natural right to do so, and there is nothing harmful in it either to the nation or to the race. Indeed, English society of some forty years ago, after Thackeray had somewhat modified its abuses by his caustic pen, was an institution for the pride of the nation. "Barbarians," Matthew Arnold called them, and treated them pretty severely, but after all he preferred them to his "Philistines" and "Populace" which made up the rest of the world for him, and he was not comparing them to their own confusion with other elements in the population, but with his ideal people—the followers of "sweetness and light." The life led by the fashionables at that time was gilded and somewhat artificial, but it was healthy and well-rounded and open for the best activities of mind and body.

THEIR GOD IS MAMMON.

And now, behold the "smart set"—the fashionables grown effete from idleness and fulness of bread, the rich, the over-gay, the followers of new whims and new sensations, the self-advertising, the purse-proud, the genteel-vulgar. To say that Mammon is their god would be untrue; they worship rather the god of Light Pleasures, whatever his name may be. But since the prime requisite of pleasure, as they interpret it, is money, the Golden Calf is worshipped as a sub-god. Light pleasure, pleasure that does not go below the surface—that sums it all up. The pleasure of the emotional thrills brought about by new and strange things; the cheap pleasure of the tawdry approbation of others lower than themselves on the ladder, the pleasure of spending lavishly and foolishly—all these and many, many more, equally cheap, and vapid, and worthless, are the ideals of that caste which all England envies and imitates.

Therein lies the danger. Were the "smart set" to go its own way, serving only for the amusement of their fellow countrymen and the prosperity of fashionable tradesmen, as is the case with a similar tribe in our own land, no one would be harmed but themselves and their puny succession. But the rage and madness is upon all England. Every dancing-class of shopkeepers in every provincial town, apes their ways, their manners, their ideals. Every social battle in the kingdom is fought by their rules. Every newspaper in the land is prostrate at their feet. Americans will be surprised to learn that the highest-priced journalists are the creators of society gossip for the weeklies and the big dailies. It is by far the most renunerative form of journalism now a days. As the press anywhere pretty well meets the desire of its readers for news, this may be taken to measure public feeling. It is a time for a great social satirist. In Swift's time, in Moliere's, in Thackeray's, in Fielding's, polite society had run into just such shallows, until the wise man of laughter came to pull them over. London society needs a Thackeray.

THE QUEEN'S POSITION.

Strangely enough, it is the person at the very head and front of English society who has never bowed the knee to "smartness." Queen Victoria constitutes the supreme opponent of this silly and trivial ideal. I imagine that she appreciates and fears this tendency; at any rate, she has of late protested in a thousand little ways. Bound as she is by form, and hampered by her withdrawal from society, she has little opportunity now to make her opinion felt on the mass of London society. I am convinced that, had this state of things come to pass "when the queen was young," she would have set her face against it, and led a crusade. But she is old, and a sentimental regard for her feelings is now her main influence.

AMOS SHELDON.

* *

Revolt of the American Husband.

Why are Americans deserting Paris for London is a topic that disturbs the social controversialists at the moment. One authority declares it is because the American woman is no longer paramount in her menage. This is his explanation: "Time was when, with visions of millinery and jewelry looming in the distance, the American lady went on a tour to "Yurrup" and at once shaped her course toward Paris, her husband naturally following in her train. Now, it appears all this is changed. The American husband has struck. He will continue to foot the bills, but he absolutely declines to sojourn for long in a country where he cannot speak the language, where there is not the resource of sport, and where, in short, to use his own language, he is "at a loose end." And this, it appears, is why Americans are deserting Paris in favor of London.

The old type of husband may still be seen on the continent, and his docility is amusing to observe. While in Paris he passes most of his time at the Chatham bar, which is handy to the Rue de la Paix, where his wife is shopping, and where he can curse Paris and the Parisians in his own language, meet sporting men, and imagine himself far away from France. But he is always there if called upon to criticise the cut of a garment, dry his wife's tears if anything goes wrong, or bring masculine authority to bear in an argument with an unreasonable milliner.

* *

Nine O'clock Dinner.

In country-house life at Newport and Tuxedo the dinner hour is advancing so that nine o'clock is no longer considered too late an hour to sit down at table. There is a great deal of good sense about this for people who live in the country, for it gives a chance to enjoy the sunset in the first of the evening and get back in time for dinner. It is said that Mr. George Vanderbilt, at Biltmore, was one of the first who originated the idea of never dining or supping—for very often an evening at Biltmore is what used to be known as high tea—until nine or half-past. This calls for five or six o'clock tea, and makes that meal quite an event, and there is nothing more attractive on the piazza than afternoon tea with people dropping in and with all the good things that are part and parcel of afternoon tea. This is an English custom that has taken very well and is becoming more and more necessary to the comfort of our own leisured class.

* *

A Filipino Function.

Social conditions in the Philippines are difficult. In Manila the various races have their own coteries. All efforts at amalgamation on the part of the Americans failed dismally. The only way power might be maintained in a social way is for officers of social inclination to divide themselves up among the various sets Town Topics has an amusing description of a summer party in Negros. It was the wedding of the daughter of Senor Apolonio Tascon at the casa populi (town hall).

It was diverting to watch a Negrotian, with a plum-pudding complexion and a double-barreled mole for a nose, clad in white duck and tan shoes, purchased in violation of army regulations from some American private, swagger up to an American officer's wife or daughter, jab his elbow at her, and say, in the native gibberish: "Icao maluyag mag sant sa acon?" And the charming American would resign herself to the situation and say, "Yes thank you," and dance a two-step with the perspiring Malay, whose white ducks soon became limp and dripping, and who complacently puffed a cigarette all the while. When you are among Malays do as the Malays do.

It was equally diverting to watch an American officer bob around with a smallpox-pitted delaga (native woman), who meanwhile puffed a black cigar five inches in length. The first night's dance lasted until after the break of dawn. Just as reveille sounded at American quarters, the presidente, his face wreathed in smiles, asked the stately wife of an American Colonel: "Icao malujag mag lacat sa subah?" (Will you go to the river?) Then the Americans went home, and the Filipino contingent adjourned in a body to the Binalbagan River for a sociable bath. Snapshots of the bathing scene are curious in many respects.

* *

Park Parties.

One of the prettiest customs of the London season is the giving of lawn-parties in certain portions of Hyde Park, and particularly on that stretch of green sward which extends along Park Lane on the west and which is known as Hamilton Gardens. A hostess selects an afternoon, has a portion of the park reserved and sends out cards reading, "Mrs. Blank, Hamilton Gardens, Wednesday afternoon, from 4:30 to 7, if weather fine. Entrance in Park Lane." That is all, and if the weather is fine there assemble hundreds of fashionably attired men and women, who greet their hostess, stroll around, drink tea and nibble cake from two or three tables spread under the trees, and then depart. There is no expense of removing furniture, no servants, excepting those attending on the tables, and nothing but the blue sky and the surrounding greenery.

MEDITATIONS OF A MATRON.

BY MRS. CRICKET.

MONTEREY is the place these days, my dear Diary. I am having such a fine time down here. You know Robert made up his mind that we should stay all this month, so I am at last happy. The hotel has filled up tremendously since I was here last, and most of the people are out for fun. Leila is in San Francisco most of the time getting her trosseau. I have never known a girl more happy than she is at present. Mama is just a little bit annoyed with her. You know, Diary dear, she labored under the hallucination that Leila was a small divinity who would never descend from her pedestal to fall really in love. Of course I mean in love as we call it nowadays. I was describing my ideas on love at some length the other day to a dear old Englishman down here. It was a series of new sensations to him. I really never saw a man so amused first and surprised afterwards. He would hardly believe that a girl could see a husband in the light we all do now. Leila is an exception. She is in love in rather the old-fashioned way. For instance, she allows her Reggie to spend all his time wooing her. She never writes except in answer to a letter of his. I remember, Diary dear, being so badly smitten at one time—not on Robert—that I'd write every four hours and spend ten minutes with his photograph in my hand—it was a tin-type, too—endeavoring to hear his voice. Mama, however, insisted he would make me unhappy. In fact, Diary dear, Mama made life so irrevocably disagreeable, I decided that I had better give him up. He had only one vice, too. At least that is all I ever discovered, and that was an inability to keep out of debt. He is at Cape Nome now, but so far he has not made a fortune. If he should, I wonder if I would be as fond of Robert as I am. Money is so useful. I have just spent fifteen hundred dollars on gowns. That is because Robert spent twenty-five hundred on some ridiculous old horse that I am not allowed to drive. If Arthur is going to have the fun out of my husband's horses, I might just as well be the best dressed young married woman this year. It is so queer I do not get half as much fun out of my clothes as I used when it was a question of two dresses made at a really expensive dressmaker's and three or four at a little place on Post street. Still I am glad I am having the delightful sensation of doing a lot of foolish things I always thought would be fun.

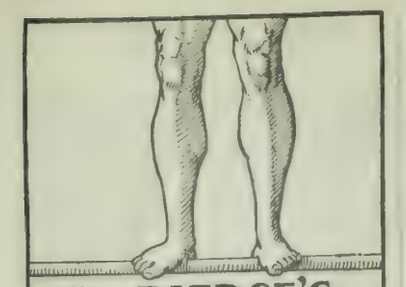
ON THE GOLF LINKS.

Robert and I are quite golf enthusiasts. We go out to play every morning, and I intend to qualify for the Henry T. Scott cup. I spoke to Mrs. Scott about it, and she smiled. I believe, Diary dear, she does not think there is any possibility of my getting it. Stranger things have happened. I like the Del Monte links—they are so easy. Over in San Rafael I really often felt tired after doing the eighteen holes, but down here it is a snap. There are no bad hills, and there are but nine holes. The caddies, too, are less censorious; one told me the other day that my form was perfect. Needless to say, I was very generous to him and gave him my old "brassey." I felt I needed a new one. I told Robert and he smiled and surprised me with a whole new set of sticks which arrived next day, much to my joy and delight.

I must tell you that I have prevailed on Robert to get a coach. You see, though I am exceedingly popular, I cannot expect to get quite as much attention as a girl, and I made up my mind a coach is a pretty good thing to have. I only wish I were not so small. Mrs. Joe Tobin is my idea of a graceful woman driving. She is so tall and willowy, and looks quite to the manner born with the whip. I have not quite decided yet which girl receives the most attention at Del Monte this year nor who is the belle. Genevieve Martin is here, and looks handsomer than ever. One rarely sees a more stunning looking woman. I like to watch her. She is apparently free from the self-consciousness of vanity of the average beauty. It may be that she has been too deeply surfeited with admiration to really care for it. Therese Morgan is here with her mother. She is still deep in study. Every day almost one finds her out sketching. Some of her water colors, Robert says, show a great deal of talent. Therese is one of the most ambitious of all the girls. I am specially attracted by her stocks. She has a variety that would be a temptation even to a man—they are so well selected. Arthur says the first thing he notices about a girl is her hair, Robert, the fit of her gown, and papa says, if a girl is gifted with an amiable expression, he never goes further—whereupon my husband most injudiciously said, "Well, sir, did you feel that way when you were wooing mama?" He had the audacity to say to me once when I was pouting over something, "Cricket, do what you like, but smile; I should not like to see you with your mother's expression." It hurts my feelings often, for mama has loads of really good qualities. I have discovered them since I have been married.

AT SAN RAFAEL.

I received a letter from one of the San Rafael girls yesterday. She said Edith McBean is still doing the lion's share of entertaining. She had a bowling morning last week when Caro Crockett and Genevieve Carolan were her guests. Caro Crockett and Mary Scott have the name of being the two best bred of the Burlingame girls. Genevieve Carolan grows to look more like Frank every day; she has his beautiful coloring and eyes. Florence Josselyn has been staying with Therese Morgan. The hotel is still pretty full. Admiral and Mrs. Kautz are there, and spend a great deal of time on the links. When I saw the notice of the arrival



DR. PIERCE'S GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY

IS A TRUE MUSCLE MAKING MEDICINE

It makes muscle by making health. It makes health by curing the diseases which undermine the strength. The starting place of physical deterioration and weakness is generally the stomach. The "Discovery" positively cures diseases of the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition. Take "Golden Medical Discovery" and you'll get well and strong.

"I wish to express my thanks to you for your wonderful medicine," writes Mr. Geo. Logan Dogget, of Piedmont, Greenville Co., S. C., Box 167. "I was almost past work suffering so much from chronic catarrh and indigestion. Your 'Golden Medical Discovery' was recommended. I used it for three months, and was completely cured of indigestion and greatly relieved of catarrh."

Germea

THE IDEAL BREAKFAST DISH

A TOILET NECESSITY

Wakelee's

Cold Cream of Roses

MADE WITH

Pure Almond Oil and Distilled Water of Roses

STRAWBERRY COLD CREAM

A Perfect Complexion

Made from the pure fruit juice at

GREENBAUM'S,

200 Post Street, Corner Grant Ave.

Sent anywhere on receipt of 25 cents

The Queen's Garden Party.

LONDON JULY 28.

ONE function in English society is the Queen's own. She has very little to say, now-a-days, about drawing-rooms or official dinners and concerts, leaving their details and management to others, but her annual garden party, held at Buckingham Palace, is all under her eye and supervision. She arranges details, she superintends the lists of guests, decides the form of entertainment, with an enthusiasm that is a survival of her young, gay days at the Court of St. James. This function she always attends personally, moreover, staying it out to the very end. She is understood to have ideas of her own about London society in general and the "smart set" in particular. These she expresses through her invitation list. The ultra fashionables are universally complaining that the garden party is becoming "mixed." Indeed, the 5000 or more invitations issued this year went to all classes of society. There representatives of the nobility, the moneyed aristocracy, the country gentry, the middle class,actors, and literary folk, artists, musicians, and soldiers on sick leave. A fair sprinkling of foreign dignitaries and native Indian nobility in their native costume added color and diversity to the assemblage, as did a great number of pretty children—something of an innovation; by the way. Victoria is said to have extended the list to include the little people with a view to the enjoyment of her own great-grandchildren, who romped decorously in corners of the palace grounds with children of lesser rank. The royal hostess, truth to tell, gave them more attention than she gave to the elders. Her love of children is no secret. It is said that one of her greatest desires is to hold a great-great-grand child in her arms. This is by no means impossible, as she has a married great-grand-granddaughter.

A BRAVE DISPLAY

On this occasion no crowned heads were present, but many picturesque personages made an effective contrast in the modern, many-colored crowd. An Indian Maharanee, in her native costume of gold-embroidered brocade, mixed with cloth of gold, and adorned with barbaric jewel of price, was an interesting personalty; and several Indian princes, dressed in what someone styled "khaki-colored dressing-gowns," with single jewels of fabulous value hanging on their coats and from their turbans, were also unique figures in the gardens. The members of the Persian Legation wearing red caps, the bright-eyed, swarthy Japanese, English bishops in their clerical attire, and royal servants in scarlet liveries, made a picturesque appearance amid the throng of smart London ladies and conventionally dressed London men.

A special point of interest was the lake, on which were barges and boats for the use of visitors. The royal bargemen, in their quaint liveries, looked as if they had stepped out from some picture of olden days. The Queen's arms and monogram in gold appeared on the front of their coats, and a royal crown, also in gold, on their backs. They wore small peaked caps of black velvet.

It has been an age since any fashionable chronicler has been called upon to tell what the Queen wore, she being long past the age when such things make any difference. But this time she carried a white parasol of white lace over black silk, and the usual unvarying black of her dress was varied by little touches of white. She seemed to take an unfeigned delight in the proceedings, although it was noticed that she moved with perceptible difficulty as compared with her last appearance at a garden party.

THE "TOP" HAT AND MALE MILLINERY.

To treat further of clothes, I must reverse the rule for the sexes and "go in" for the costuming of the men, which, owing to certain novelties, attracted far and away more attention than that of the women. In the first place, the Prince of Wales sprung his new idea in frock coats on the assemblage—the single-breasted. Already the fashionable tailors are crowded with orders for coats of a like cut. As its name implies, this garment has only one row of buttons. These exist only by courtesy, as it is not supposed to button but only to meet in front. It has a silk facing running to the very edge, and is made for coolness and for displaying the fancy vest, which is prospering under the princely approval.

Again, a survey of the company proved the weakness of the new crusade against the "top" hat, for you must know that a number of fashion writers have been protesting vigorously in the London journals against the use of this, stiff hat form of head-gear during the hot weather. Perhaps a half a dozen men varied the monotony by white "top" hats, an improvement in color only. A few more sported rational hats, broad-brimmed, low-crowned and summery. Lord Roland Gower, who has been memoralizing the thunderer against conventional hear-gear, was the only person high in society who broke through the custom. The ordinary black frock, and the tall, black hat were almost uniform. The few men who broke over the line on hats wore frock coats of gray or drab.

I noticed, also, that there seemed to be a tendency toward the return of the button-hole bouquet, which has been rather tabooed this season. The Prince of Wales wore three tiny rosebuds, and perhaps a third of the other sported gardenias. Further, a new glove, pale-lavender suede, nearly white, was worn by the very smartest men.

As for the ladies, no one but themselves and their dressmakers know what the marvelous costumes cost. Mauve was a favorite color, and lace dresses, both black and white, were well worn. The big ruffles, black, black and white, and all white, has become a livery. The picture hat was much seen—large in size, and of extraordinary millinery beauty—but toques ran a good second. Bonnets now are for the dowdy and the dowager.

Meditations of a Matron, Con. from page 17.

of the Iowa in the papers I could not help thinking of the days when that meant such good times for me. Robert is prejudiced against army and navy men. Diary dear, I love them, they are such fun and then they are so uncertain. They never get away when other men can, and when one is just thinking one is sure to have a deadly, stupid evening a navy man will step in. That is one reason one can't help loving the navy. It is time, Diary dear, I confided to you about Jane Greenwood's engagement. I am told Dr. Ernest Dwight Chipman is exceedingly worthy while being very clever in his profession. I am sorry Jane is to go East to live. She is a really capable girl, sings well and is one of the best workers in the "Doctor's Daughters." I believe she will be married from her brother's house in Belvedere where her mother and she are now staying. The wedding will be about the same time as Leila's. Strange to say their trousseaus are for the most part being made at the same place. Their very nicest things are being made in New York. It is lots of fun getting ready to be married. I often wish I could go over all that part of my life again.

Now, Diary dear, I want to tell you something; the girls who have the black satin bathing suits at Del Monte are the envy of all the others. Florence Ives was the first girl I know out here who had one, but now they are the thing. I am getting one made. I have found many compensations for the fire at Castle Crags. Anything new I get, for the old one, is in my mind always burned. And now until next week I am your own devoted and chirping,

MRS. CRICKET.

Bank of California

SAN FRANCISCO

Capital, $2,000,000. Surplus, $1,000,000

Profit and Loss Account Jan. 1st. 1900, $2,321,212

William Alvord, President; Charles R. Bishop, Vice President; Thomas Brown, Cashier; S. Prentiss Smith, Assistant Cashier; Irving F. Moulton, Second Assistant Cashier; Allen M. Clay, Secretary.

CORRESPONDENTS

New York, Messrs. Laidlaw & Co., The Bank of New York, N. B. A.; Baltimore, The National Exchange Bank; Boston, The Tremont National Bank; Chicago, Illinois Trust and Savings Bank, Union National Bank; Philadelphia, Philadelphia National Bank; St. Louis, Boatmen's Bank; Virginia City, Nev., Agency of the Bank of California; London, Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons; Paris, Messrs. De Rothschild Freres; Berlin, Direction der Disconto Gesellschaft; China, Japan and East Indies, Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China; Australia and New Zealand, The Union Bank of Australia, Ltd., and Bank of New Zealand.

LETTERS OF CREDIT ISSUED AVAILABLE IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD

THE GERMAN

Savings and Loan Society

526 California Street

Guaranteed Capital and Surplus $2,238,372.45

Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash 1,000,000.00

Deposits, July 30, 1900 ..... 28,938,395.02

OFFICERS

President ..... B. A. Becker

First Vice-President ..... Daniel Meyer

Second Vice-President ..... H. Horstmann

Cashier ..... A. H. R. Schmidt

Assistant Cashier ..... Wm. Hermann

Secretary ..... George Tourney

Assistant Secretary ..... A. H. Muller

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, Emil. Hohte, I. N. Walker, H. B. Russ, N. Ohlandt, John Lloyd,

General Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA STREET

Deposits, July 1, 1900	$26,952,875
Paid Up Capital	1,000,000
Reserve Fund	218,093
Contingent Fund	439,608

E. P. Pond, Pres.; W. C. B. de Premery, Vice-Pres.; Lovell White, Cashier; R. M. Welch, Asst. Cashier.

DIRECTORS

Henry F. Allen, Robert Watt, Thomas Magee, George C. Boardman, W. C. B. de Fremery, Daniel E. Martin, C. O. G. Miller, Jacob Barth, E. B. Pond.

Loans upon San Francisco and Gakland Real Estate and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.

Receives deposits. Country remittances may be made in checks payable in San Francisco, Postoffice or Wells, Fargo & Co's Money Orders, or coin by Express, but the responsibility of this bank commences only with the receipt of the money.

No charge is made for pass books or entrance fee.

Office Hours: 9 a. m. to 3 p. m. and Saturday evenings, for receipt of deposits only, 6:30 to 8 o'clock.

MUTUAL SAVINGS BANK OF SAN FRANCISCO

33 POST STREET

Below Kearny Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital $1,000,000

Paid Up Capital 300,000

James D. Phelan, President; S. G. Murphy, Vice-Pres.; John A. Hooper, Vice-Pres.; George A. Story, Cashier; C. B. Hobson, Asst. Cashier.

DIRECTORS: James D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, Frank J. Sullivan, Robert McElroy, Chas. S. Neal and James McDonald.

Interest paid on deposits.

Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co. or Exchange on City Banks.

When opening accounts, send signature.

1875 1900

Safe Deposit and Trust Co.

Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.

PHONE BUSH 165.

Safe-Deposit Boxes from $5.00 per year up. Trunks and Valuables of every Description Stored in Fire and Burglar-Proof Vaults at $1.00 per month.

Office Hours 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.

Churingia Insurance Co.

OF ERFURT, GERMANY

Capital, $2,250,000 Assets, $10,984,248

PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT 204-208 Sansome St., S. F.

VOSS, CONRAD & CO.

General Agents.

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER

TRADE MARK

A Positive Relief for PRICKLY HEAT, CHAFING, and SUNBURN, and all afflictions of the skin. "A little higher in price, perhaps, than worthless substitutes, but a person for it." Removes all odor of perspiration. Delightful after Shaving. Sold everywhere, or mailed on receipt of 25c. Get Mennen's (the original.) Sample free. GERHARD MENNEN CO., Newark, N. J.

Buyers' Guide.

San Francisco Reliable Business Houses

City and Country Orders promptly filled. Catalogues and Price Lists sent on application. Correspondence solicited. MENTION THE WAVE.

ATTORNEYS AT LAW.

MILTON J. GREEN, Attorney at Law.—Referee in Bankruptcy in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Office, Room 94 Chronicle bldg.

A. K. DAGGETT.—Drawing of deeds and all legal papers a specialty; Notary Public. 14 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Telephone 3[illegible]5.

BUSINESS PERSONALS.

Baldness and Dandruff positively cured; Shampooing and Bleaching. Prudential Hair Physicians. Glascow Block, 105 Ellis Street, Room 6.

DENTIST.

DR. C. W. DECKER, Dentist.—806 Market street, Phelan Building.

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.

ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.—Main office. 510 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Dealers in all kinds of Newspaper information. Advance Reports on all Contract Work. Phone, Main 1042.

RESTAURANT.

POODLE DOG RESTAURANT.—Northeast corner of Eddy and Mason streets. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone, Main 429. BLANCO & BRUN, Proprietors.

Electric and Hygienic Treatment. Sure Cure for Chronic Diseases. Tumors, Cancers and Displacements, positively and without operations. DR. WM. SCHMITT, 502 Taylor St., cor. Geary. San Francisco.

CONSULTATION FREE.

CHOLLAR MINING COMPANY. LOCATION of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 3d day of August, 1900, an assessment, No. 52, of ten cents (10c) per share, was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 79, Nevada block, No: 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 6th day of September, 1900, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on THURSDAY, the 27th day of September, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors. CHAS. E. ELLIOT, Secretary.

Office—Room 79, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco California.

BEST & BELCHER MINING COMPANY.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia District, Storey county, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the third (3d) day of August, 1900, an assessment (No. 71) of fifteen (15) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 33, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the seventh (7th) day of September, 1900, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on FRIDAY, the twenty-eighth (28th) day of September, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the cost of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

M. JAFFE, Secretary.

Office—Room 33, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

GOULD & CURRY SILVER MINING COMPANY. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 6th day of August, 1900, an assessment (No. 91) of fifteen cents (15c) per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the secretary, at the office of the company, room No. 69, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 8th day of September, 1900, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on MONDAY, the 1st day of October, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors,

ALFRED K. DURBROW, Secretary.

Office, room No. 69, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Men Women and Books.

The Boy Critic.

Every author to his own taste in critics. The favorite type of literary commentator, however, is he who admires most consistently. Nevertheless, Dr. Conan Doyle, however, goes rather out of the beaten track in expressing a preference. "I want the boy critic," he declares, "the boy who will start a story and then chuck it down and say 'rot,' or who will read a book straight through and say 'ripping.' That's the person I want to criticize my work. It's strange too," he continued, "the older I get the less I read and the more I think. As a child the book that appealed to me most was one of Charles Reade's, and, curiously enough, it is the book I enjoy the most now." Dr. Doyle's system of combination is somewhat mechanical. "I don't create characters, and then allow them to work out their careers in their own way," he says, "I always fix the end clearly before I began to write. Then I work up to it."

* *

A Great Talker.

Who was the cleverest conversationalist of the generation? W. E. Henley, who has the right to speak authoritatively, declares the distinction belongs to the late R. A. M. Stevenson, a cousin of Robert Louis Stevenson. R. A. M. S. loathed writing. "His true gift," says Henley, "was that of talk, and he had it—Heavens! in what perfection. I think I have heard the best of my time, but one R A. M. S. Here is his picture of Mr. Stevenson among his lectures:

Someone, bright-eyed, a little flushed, ever courteous, ever kindly, ever humorous, taking any bit of the universe as his theme, descanting upon it as if he had a prescriptive right in it, and delighting everyone who listened by the unfailing excellence, wisdom, sanity (however insane it seemed at times) of what he had to say. Says a friend of his, and mine, in a letter announcing his death: "He was commentary, and that should go on forever. Good commentary on whatever God saw fit to provide. It seems to me to dwindle the applications of the universe that it can no longer serve for his interpretations." Had Lewis lived to reassert himself, and had it been possible for any one of us to sit and heed while these two—the Master and the pupil—talked of that which is, that which must be, and that which may be, then should we have heard about the best that spoken speech con do.

* *

Mary Hallock Foote's Success.

Mrs. Mary Halleck Foote, who has won distinction both as an artist and as a writer of fiction, lives in California, in one of Calaveras county's mining camps, whither she has followed her husband, Arthur de Windt Foote, a mining engineer. The location is known as "The Hague group" and is an immense proposition on the South African plan. It is there, amid the stamp-mill roar and in the clear, delicious atmosphere of the Sierras, that she has written and illustrated her delicate stories and sketches:—"A California Mining Town;" "The Little Fig-Tree Stories." Their entry into the world of letters was made in the Century to which she had submitted a series of Mexican sketches. The editor, R. W. Gilden, suggested that she supply text to accompany the pictures arguing that one who talked so well, could also write. Since then art has been subordinated to literature. The writing, she says, has "grown from my aborted art, as I found the West and its absorbing material too much for my pencil;" perhaps it was rather because it was enough for both her pen and pencil and her awakened resources. She had difficulty in procuring models, she was not always in houses which she could use as studios, and the facility of writing fitted more happily to her conditions. To write required but a pad of paper and a pen, and the stories could be dreamed out while lying awake or pacing piazzas or taking lonely tramps over the country. The material of her tales, the local color, is furnished by the life with which she is surrounded. For instance the Little Fig-Tree Stories make an autobiography of her early experiences in the West. The plots, however, and the dramatis personae are pure invention. Mrs. Foote comes of an ancient Quaker family. Her ancestors were earnest thinkers and constant, ardent readers, her grandfather was a real student of history and her father a passionate lover of poetry. In her childhood days, she heard Pope and Scott and Burns and the Boston poets read aloud in the family circle, so absorbed style and vocabulary almost with her mother's milk.

* *

Anthony Hope's First Book.

While waiting for clients Anthony Hope wrote A Man of Mark. Despairing of finding a publisher willing to risk money on an untried writer he determined to bring out the book himself on what is called the commission plan. In other words, he paid a publisher for printing and putting the book on the market. He lost money on it: but after the success of The Prisoner of Zenda, he brought the story out the second time and recouped his losses.

Anthony Hope does not wait for moods but tries to do a regular day's work six days out of the seven, just as he should do if he were still in the law. He sits down at his desk at about 10 o'clock, and stays there till luncheon. After luncheon, he goes at his task again, and keeps at it till about 4. Then he goes about in society a little, and in the season for outdoor sports tries to play a little tennis. His father is the pastor of a church in Hackney, and he lives with him.

* *

Alice Meynell's Home Life.

In the home life of Alice Meynell there is nothing to justify the vein of pessimism that pervades her prose. She is the mother of six children—a tall, statuesque woman whose distinction of mind is suggested by a strong and characteristic force. Her husband is rich and himself interested in literature. Her sister is Lady Butler, whose fine battle picture, "The Roll Call," is in Queen Victoria's collection. Their home is a Mecca for writers and artists who are received in an extraordinary Japanese drawing room absolutely without order—a chaos of books and pictures. There are children everywhere, for they have the run of the house, besides the entire lower floor, which has been converted into a gymnasium for their exclusive benefit. In the midst of the cares of this household, Mrs. Meynell writes—puts forth a certain number of words every day, for she does not believe in inspiration, regards composition as a business and contributes this week on art—next week on books, as sedulously as a literary host. She had the distinction of being discovered by John Ruskin and Coventry Patmore who, on the publication of her first volume of poems, declared that a new genius had arisen.

AT NO TIME IS MAN SECURE FROM ATTACKS of such disorders of the stomach as cholera morbus, cramps, and diarrhœa; but these complaints are common during the heated term, when it is dangerous to neglect them. PAIN-KILLER is a remedy that has never failed and the severest attacks have been cured by it. Avoid substitutes, there is but one Pain-Killer, Perry Davis'. 25c. and 50c.

For home use, for bar use, for physicians' use, for everybody's use, Jesse Moore Whiskey is always the best and is in most general demand.

MARTELL & CO.

Cognac, France,

Established 1715.

TRADE MARK.

& F. Martell.

The Highest Grade of Cognac Brandy.

All Martell shipments received by us bear the name of our firm on the bottles. Beware of imitations.

William Wolf & Co.

329 Market Street. Pacific Coast Agents.

573-579 Market Street San [illegible] | R. H. PEASE, President and Manager. | 73 and 75 First Street Portland, Ore.

MOORE' POISON OAK REMEDY

Cures Poison Oak and All Skin Diseases

Sold by All Druggists

Pleasure Trips

A New Era Brought About by Transportation Companies.

It may be justly said of the present season that it marks an era in pleasure travel in nearly all parts of California, on account of the cheap rates which have been made by the transportation companies.

TO SEE OTHER WORLDS

The very latest move is in behalf of the Mt. Hamilton trip. The combined managements of the Mt. Hamilton Stage Co. and Hotel Vendome in San Jose have placed on sale in the Southern Pacific ticket offices of San Francisco, Oakland, Alameda and Berkeley, two round-trip tickets from these points, which include transportation and all expenses. One is a Saturday-Sunday ticket, for $8.90, which entitles the purchaser to a day and a quarter at Hotel Vendome in addition to the trip; and the other is good any day, gives a half day more at the hotel, and costs $8.50. This rate is really about one-third less than the regular cost, and should easily place Mt. Hamilton in the front rank of famous trips.

LAKE TAHOE FAVORED

The Southern Pacific has recently added an attraction to Lake Tahoe by establishing a ten-day rate from the Bay Cities of $13.30, a reduction of twenty per cent of the regular season rate. It is also giving Saturday to Monday excursions for $10, which is indeed absurdly cheap.

VAMOS A MEXICO

Something new and quite out of the ordinary in the way of tours is an excursion to Mexico in a special train, which has just been announced by the Southern Pacific for November 14th. The rate from San Francisco will be $80, and from Los Angeles, $70. Other points along the line will enjoy proportionate rates. This excursion will be under the management of Wm. H. Menton, the Southern Pacific's well-known excursion agent, who is well acquainted in Mexico, speaks the language, and has arranged many incidental attractions.

Any Southern Pacific agent will cheerfully give all desired information about these trips. Call on them.

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

STEAMERS LEAVE BROAD way wharf, San Francisco:

For Alaskan ports, 11 a. m., August 4, 9, 14, 19, 24, 29, Sept. 3, change to company's steamers at Seattle.

For B. C. and Puget Sound ports: 11 a. m. August 4, 9, 14, 19, 24, 29, Sept. 3, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka (Humboldt Bay): 2 p. m. August 1, 6, 11, 16, 21, 26, 31, Sept. 5, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Newport (Los Angeles) and way ports: 9 a. m. August 3, 7, 11, 15, 19, 23, 27, 31, Sept. 4, and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford (San Luis Obispo), Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles and Redondo (Los Angeles): 11 a. m. August 1, 5, 9, 13, 17, 21, 25, 29, Sept. 2, and every fourth day thereafter.

For Mexican ports, 10 a. m. 7th of each month.

For further information obtain company's folder.

The company reserves the right to change steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing, without previous notice.

TICKET OFFICE—4 New Montgomery street (Palace Hotel).

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO., General Agents.
10 Market street, San Francisco.

TO CHICAGO IN THREE DAYS.

From San Francisco at 10 A. M.

Chicago Union Pacific and Northwestern Line.

DOUBLE DRAWING-ROOM SLEEPING CARS, Buffet, Smoking and Library Cars, with Barber, Dining-Cars; meals a la carte. Daily Tourist Car Service and Personally Conducted Excursions every week from San Francisco at 6 p. m.

THE BEST OF EVERYTHING

R. R. RITCHIE,
General Agent Pacific Coast.

617 Market Street (Palace Hotel), San Francisco, Cal.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. Australia, for HONOLULU only, Wednesday, August 22, at 2 p. m.
S. S. Mariposa for AUSTRALIA, Wednesday September 5, at 8 p. m.

Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

TICKET OFFICE, 114 MONTGOMERY ST.
FREIGHT OFFICE, 327 MARKET STREET

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO.
GENERAL AGENTS

Chips From the Scientific Workshop.

An International Wheat Corner.

TO corner the whole world's output—that was the mild proposal that the Russian Government made to the Government of the United States in 1896—at least that is what J. D. Whelpley tells us in the August McClure. In combination with the United States Government to raise the value of wheat 100 per cent, add a billion-and-a-half to the value of the world's wheat crop, benefit America's wheat-raisers to the amount of $350,000,000, Russia's to the amount of $200,000,000, and all this at the expense of the rest of the universe! That was the Muscovite proposition as stated by Minister Kotzebue to Secretary of State Olney toward the close of the Cleveland administration.

And this, to the Russian governmental powers, was not a vague dream, a foolish aspiration put into thoughtless words. The scheme was the fruit of years of study, was perfected down to its minute details.

It was alluring in its simplicity, in its seeming feasibility. All the two allied governments had to do was to enter the wheat market as buyers at the stated price of one dollar. According to the Russian theory all the wheat produced is needed for food. Hence with a standing one dollar offer from the governmental combine, the price would infallibly rise to one dollar throughout the world. Easy, is it not? Simplicity itself.

SPLENDID RESULTS.

Now for the results of the plan if put into execution. Russia and the United States produce nearly ninety per cent of the world's total breadstuff output. The price of wheat now is fifty cents a bushel. Raise it suddenly to one hundred cents. Quite an appreciable gain for the two wheat-producing and wheat-cornering countries, is it not?

The wheat crop of the world in 1898 was 2,879,000,000 bushels. Raise the price from fifty to one hundred cents; you add a billion and a half to the value of the world's wheat crop. Not bad, is it? The United States produce 700,000,000 bushels every year. The operation proposed by Russia would mean a gain of $350,000,000 yearly to American wheat raisers. Russia produces 400,000,000 bushels; net gain to Russian farmers from the operation, $200,000,000 yearly.

BUT THE OTHERS?

"On that side, nothing but favorable results. But there are other countries in this world. England, for instance, how could England be affected? England imports yearly 125,000,000 bushels of wheat every year. Raise the wheat price 100 per cent. It means an increase of $60,000,000 to England's bread bill.

And France and Germany and Italy, and Austria, and all other wheat-importing nations? All affected like England. Would they stand idle while Russia and the United States starved them. Would not a defensive economic alliance between them be the natural result? Russia and the United States pitted against England, France, Germany, Italy, Austria, Holland, Belgium, Switzerland! The bread-makers against the bread eaters! Situation full of possibilities. What room for international complications!

Happily, or unhappily, as men may wish to put it, the scheme was killed in the bud. The United States refused to enter into the compact. It was counter to its most decided economic traditions. It was refused. But, feasible or not, the scheme was certainly a grand one. In magnitude, in audacity of conception, it rivals some of those terrible fancies that Napoleon I. came so near turning into facts.

* * *

The Chinese Calendar.

The Chinese, in spite of their superb indifference to the flow of time and their contempt of vulgar punctuality, have a way of measuring the passing hour. They have a calendar which is by no means a bad one. The calendar now in use is, according to Celestial ideas, a very modern revision. It was established so late as 2300 B. C., by a wise monarch named Yao. The Chinese year is lunar, consisting of 354 days. Every nineteen years contains seven additional months. This reckoning is excellent; it varies only about an hour every nineteen years from the true time and the error would not amount to much if the Chinese Empire was not so exasperatingly old, according to our ephemeral western ideas of time.

Although the year is lunar, its beginning is regulated by the sun, New Year being between January 2d and February 6th. It is divided into twelve lunar months, called by numbers. The extra month that comes every three years is not added at the end, but chucked in any old place according to a system too subtle for western minds. The months are subdivided into three parts, which are not again subdivided, so that a Chinaman may speak of an event without mentioning the exact time within ten days—a very helpful state of affairs when you are called to answer sundry indiscreet questions of irate western governments as to the condition of their legationers. There is no such thing as a week. The hours are one hundred and twenty minutes long.

The years are gathered into cycles of sixty. Another method of numbering years is by the reigns of emperors. The present year is the thirty-sixth year of the seventy-sixth cycle, or the year 4536. Each has a separate name formed by some combination of ten "stem" characters joined to twelve "branch" characters, and the ingenuity with which they are used is beyond the grasp of the Caucasian mind.

* * *

A New Anaesthetic.

At a recent meeting of the Paris Academy of Medicine Dr. Tuffier gave an account of three surgical operations which he had conducted. One was an amputation of the leg, another the removal of a kidney and the third was laparotomy. In all three cases he had operated after securing anæsthesia by injecting one centigramme of chlorhydrate of cocaine into the canal of the spinal column, Acting on the marrow, and not on the brain, the cocaine produced absolute anæsthesia, and the patient submitted without the usual exhaustion incident to the use of chloroform, to an operation of which he had no consciousness whatever, although his mental activity does not appear to have been interrupted. The transmission of sensation to the brain was interrupted; that was all. In order to spare the patient the sight of blood and the wound, the doctor takes the precaution to veil the face. He says that he has tried this method of securing anæsthesia eighty times. It possesses many advantages and no inconveniences that he has been able to discover.

* *

Storing the Sun's Heat.

One of the optimistic and most general expectations indulged in at the present day is the realization during the coming century of what is pronounced the greatest and most important of prospective inventions, namely, a machine for storing the heat of the sun and transforming it into electricity or some other form suitable for ready employment—heat which, though now permitted to go to waste, will, by means of such invention, be applied to the running of mills, the warming of houses and every other purpose for which energy is utilized. The field for such an invention and its world-wide importance are at once suggested by the ascertained fact that every square yard of the sun's surface emits an amount of heat equal to that of a blast furnace consuming one ton of coal every ten minutes. The heat given out by the solar globe, too, in one second would raise 195,000,000 cubic miles of ice-cold water to the boiling point and in this heat the earth receives only one two-billionth part ASSESSMENT NOTICE.—SIERRA NEVADA SILVER Mining Company.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, Cal. Location of works, Virginia Mining District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 9th day of July, 1900, an assessment (No. 19) of Fifteen (15) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the company, Room No. 14, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 14th day of August, 1900, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before will be sold on MONDAY, the 3rd day of September, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the cost of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.

R. L. PARKER, Secretary.

Office: Room No. 14, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.—MEXICAN GOLD AND Silver Mining Company. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Storey county, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the tenth day of July, 1900 an assessment [No. 64] of fifteen [15] cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, Room 79, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the fourteenth day of August, 1900, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before will be sold on Wednesday, the 5th day of September, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.

CHAS. E. ELLIOT, Secretary.

Office—Room 79, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

NOTICE OF ASSESSMENT.—OCCIDENTAL CONsolidated Mining Company.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California; location of works, Silver Star Mining District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the fourteenth (14th) day of July, 1900, an assessment (No. 35) of five (5) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 69, Nevada block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the seventeenth (17th) day of August 1900, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Tuesday, the eleventh (11th) day of Sept., 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors,

ALFRED K. DUBROW, Secretary.

Office: Room 69, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Santa Fe Trains

GO TO

Antioch	9 a m	4:10 p m	8 p m
Bakersfield	9 a m		8 p m
Chicago	9 a m
Denver	9 a m
Fresno	9 a m		8 p m
Hanford	9 a m		8 p m
Joliet	9 a m
Kansas City	9 a m
Leavenworth	9 a m
Merced	9 a m		8 p m
Newton	9 a m
Phoenix	9 a m
Stockton	9 a m	4:10 p m	8 p m
Tulare	9 a m		8 p m
Visalia	9 a m		8 p m
Williams	9 a m

Personally conducted Excursions to Kansas City, Chicago and Boston every MONDAY, THURSDAY AND SATURDAY in Pullman's Best Tourist Sleeping Cars. Try this NEW ROUTE.

Get full information and handsome folder at

628 MARKET STREET

or at Santa Fe Ticket Office

Ferry Building, Foot of Market Street

Alfred Crane Luther A. Teague Frederick Teague

TEAGUE, CRANE & TEAGUE

Dentists

Claus Spreckels Building

Tel. Main 1459 Third and Market Sts., 6th Floor

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Trusts add combinations do not affect Jesse Moore Whiskey. Its fame is established; its quality is the finest and it is always the best.

HOTEL VENDOME

At San Jose is one of Central California's most beautiful hostelries; in the midst of its own twelve-acre park; two blocks from the railroad station where almost hourly trains connect with the outside; the starting point for Lick Observatory; the center of a greater number and variety of attractions than any other place on the Coast; furnished finely, graded and watered roads for driving and cycling lead in every direction; with over 250 elegantly furnished rooms, and suites with bath and toilet; perfect in appointment, service and all the accessories of comfort, and one of the most attractive features of San Jose, the metropolis of the world-renowned Santa Clara Valley.

GEO. P. SNELL, Manager.

For those who appreciate
Comfort and Attention
A Quiet Home . . . . .
Centrally Located . . .

Occidental Hotel

SAN FRANCISCO
WM. B. HOOPER, Manager

Sturtevant House

Broadway and 29th Sts., New York.
American and European Plan.
WILLIAM T. BANG, Proprietor.

Eighty-five Fine Sunny Rooms — Elevator Service
Excellent Cuisine — References Required
FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL

THE BRADBURY

J. A. FERSON, Prop.
N.W. Cor. Polk and California Sts., San Francisco
Transient trade solicited. Rates $2.00 and upwards. Reasonable by the month. Tel. Hyde 2771.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE — Tel. Main 199
DEALERS IN Paper
55, 57, 59, 61 First Street
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
Blake, Moffitt & Towne, Los Angeles — Blake, McFall Co., Portland, Or.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS
Twenty-two-inch, in all numbers; Medium, Soft and Hard; also Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks from 30 to 120 inches wide. Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks, Manufactured by Mount Vernon Co., Baltimore.
MURPHY, GRANT & CO., Pacific Coast Agents.

HAVE YOU EVER THOUGHT
What a Gas Range Will Do?
It will do everything any other cooking apparatus will do, but it will do it BETTER, QUICKER, EASIER and CHEAPER!
IT WILL DO AWAY WITH
Dirt, Worry and Ashes;
Your kitchen will be clean;
Your working hours shorter;
Your food will be better cooked;
Your life prolonged, and
Your happiness assured.
Stove Department,
415 Post Street, - - San Francisco

The Shirt Waist Man.

New York, August 4.

THE shirtwaist man has struck the Metropolis! Haroo! I like him. The cool, audacious, insolent fellow has bumped up against New York, and New York has perpetually recoiled. He has swooped down from the summer resorts, where conventionality consists in careful, methodical, precise, unconventionality of dress, and has neglected to take the usual back-summersault into real conventionality. He struts about the streets, cool, flexible, pink or blue, and laughs at his funereally-encased brethren. He is like a butterfly out of his century-old cocoon. He is bright, light, and vivacious. He flutters about, speckling the dark city with light and color. I like him.

By the way, I forget that I am writing for barbarians, for you cool, wind-fanned San Franciscans. I see you reading this with open-mouths, bursting eye-balls. I must elucidate the shirt-waist man? Why he is merely the product of the torrid heat we have been salamandering in of late. He is merely the man in shirt-sleeves, the weather man.

THE SHIRT-WAIST MAN EVERYWHERE.

I saw him on Wall street the other day, where he often takes on rotund, prosperous airs. He goes to luncheon coatless, attends to business coatless, goes home on the elevated train coatless, and probably meets there his waterloo, and attends the family dinner again properly mummified in a rotund shirt bosom and a tuxedo. At noon the Wall street restaurants are dotted with men in neglige shirts, minus their coats. Even in the women's restaurant, which is supposed to be very exclusive, and where a man is made ineligible by the slightest infraction of the rules of dress, the shirt-waist man has imposed himself.

The roof-gardens are sprinkled with shirt-waist-men as from some gigantic, celestial salt-cellar. The all-night restaurants along Broadway swarm with them, and—audacity upon audacity!—I saw a few at the theatre the other day. At the Madison Square Garden, on Monday evening, when McGovern fought Erne, there was such a shirt-sleeve display that I was tempted to start a shirt-factory, never before had the possibilities of the shirt-making profession struck me so vigorously.

Next Sunday I am going to church, I am. My resolution is unshakable. No use trying to dissuade me. I am going to church and I will wager you the moon against a peanut that, in the sacred edifice, hedged in between masses of solemn black, gay, careless, optimistically religious, fluttering gently in the hymnal breeze, a bit of color and ease will catch my eye—a masculine shirt-waist!

HIS TRIBULATIONS.

The shirt-waist man is nearing his day of triumph, but he has not reached it yet. There are yet benighted regions where he is wrestling valiantly with Boxer-like barbarism and prejudice. I met a prominent business man from Baltimore yesterday, strutting adown Broadway in coatless ecstasy. He tells me that members of the Baltimore Chamber of Commerce were refused the privilege of going coatless by a fossilized, antediluvian Executive Committee, which forgot that its ancestors once went shirtless as well as coatless. The good old gentleman was "hot" in spite of his neglige, as he told me of the affront. In Philadelphia they are yet deep in Mediaeval darkness. My friend Harry Dubois of Germantown took his little boy to Chestnut Hill Park for a walk a few days ago. Dubois, being a scene-painter, is of artistic temperament and, naturally, had doffed the coat. A puritanic policeman caught sight of him, pursued, captured him, and, telling him all the while that he was no gentleman, marched him out of Chestnut Hill Park. To get turned out of a public park for not wearing a coat! Truly that is typical of brotherly-love and tolerance! In Boston on the other hand where the shirt-waist man is increasing rapidly, he is known a Miss Nancy and is held up to ridicule by the benighted. Ah, the life of a shirt-waist man is not always an easy one!

WHAT HE IS.

By the way, you must not think that everyone who is seen in New York coatless is the real thing in the shirt-waist line. Coatless men are driving coal carts and ash-wagons. They are not shirt-waist men, however, The real thing belongs to a class by himself. He is neat, cool, and not effeminate, as the word shirt-waist might suggest to you. I do not say that he is athletic. From the sculptural standpoint, he is not perfect. The line of demarkation between trousers and shirt is a troublous problem. How to shade one off into the other without abrupt, disconcerting transition is occupying the minds of artists. Women conceal the line, but then, they have become adepts through generations of natural selection. The man is not successful. The belt always slips down too low, or slips up and lets the trousers down. Sashes are too warm, suspenders are out of the question. The man who makes the shirts is helpless in this emergency. I think it is up to the man who makes the trousers.

THE SHIRT-WAIST WOMEN.

You perceive that the masculine shirt-waist has made a deep impression upon me. Women's shirt-waists, however, are also interesting just now. The torrid heat which has been poured upon us this last month taxed our how-to-keep-cool ingenuity. Women's waists have become lighter and lighter, more and more transparent. In some cases the tissues have become mere nets, nets that would transgress the fishing-laws, too. One day this week, I was on a ferry-bound street car, when a lady got on and took a seat opposite me. She wore one of those netting fabrics which allowed here-and-not-here glimpses of slightly more than is usually frankly displayed in a ball-room. She looked exasperatingly cool, and I watched her with envious eyes. Then something went wrong. She flushed, tapped her toe nervously, and then began to move her back cautiously up and down against the side of the car. A gentleman sat next her. He watched the proceedings awhile with a puzzled air, then suddenly dropped toward her, and with a hurried "Beg pardon, madam," inserted a large finger between the netting, about at the height of the shoulder-blades. In this position he fiddled awhile. It seemed a ticklish process and longer than he had expected it. Finally, with an "Ah" of triumph, he pulled out of the meshes a great, black beetle. The lady thanked him, then remembered that the next street was hers, signaled to the conductor, and got off. Which proves that to be cool is not always to be happy.

ROBERT JOHNSTON.

IF YOU WANT
The Best Coal Oil
— BUY —

A. O. LINDSTROM [Phone Main 5178] AL. JOHNSON
Sutter Street Hammam
TURKISH RUSSIAN BATHS
415 Sutter St., bet. Stockton and Powell
Open Day and Night for Gentlemen
For Ladies from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m.

Don't Borrow a Home!
BUY IT. Your rent payments for the borrowed home will do it through the aid of the
CONTINENTAL BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION OF CALIFORNIA.
WM. CORBIN, Secretary and General Manager,
Home Office, 222 Sansome St., San Francisco

Brushes for barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bath-houses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candy-makers, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paper-hangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.
BUCHANAN BROS, Brush Mfrs.,
TEL. 5610. 609 Sacramento Street.

Stylish Suits $15.50
Dressy Suits..... $20.00
Pants..... 4.50
My $25.00 Suits are the Best in America.
25 Per Cent Saved by getting your suit made by JOE POHEIM
THE TAILOR
1110-1112 Market Street
201-203 Montgomery St., S.F.
SAMPLES SENT FREE

Nothing more refreshing than "Jackson's NAPA SODA Lemonade"

Orpheum

Four Juggling Johnsons; Sam Morris and Company; Macart's Dogs and Monkeys; Mrs. Bessie Blitz Paxton; Laura Bennett and Stambler, Meeker-Baker Troupe; Hooker and Davis; Biograph.

Reserved Seats 25c., Balcony Boxes, Opera Chairs and Box Seats 50c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.

Columbia Theatre

ONE WEEK, BEGINNING NEXT MONDAY
Eighth week of the HENRY MILLER Season.
Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights and Wednesday Matinee

"HEARTSEASE"

Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights and Saturday Matinee

"The Adventure of the Lady Ursula."

August 20. "THE ONLY WAY."

Alcazar Theatre

Fred Belasco and Mark Thall, Managers
Phone Main 254

Week of Monday, August 13th
Third month of

FLORENCE ROBERTS

Supported by
White Whittlesey
First time on any stage

"A SUIT OF SABLE"

by Charlotte Thompson.
Only matinee Saturday. Prices, 15, 25, 35 and 50c.

California THE POPULAR HOUSE

H. FRIEDLANDER & Co., Lessees and Managers
Telephone Main 1731

They have come back those real live Brownies
Presenting the beautiful operatic spectable,

"The Brownies in Fairyland"

A magnificent production in every particular. Entire new music, songs, dances, specialties, and a wonderful transformation scene. An entire professional cast of principles, no amateurs in this production.

DATES
Sunday afternoon, August 12th and every evening commencing with Monday, August 13th. Matinees, Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday.
POPULAR PRICES.
Coming—Lees, the World's Greatest Hypotists.

PRETTY WORK

NICE PRESS COPIES

Use Smith Type-Writer

The telegraph department of the Southern Pacific Co. dispensed with all other makes and now use the SMITH PREMIER EXCLUSIVELY.

Also more than 200 banks use the

SMITH PREMIER Type-Writer

We Rent Typewriters
Art Catalogue

L. & M. ALEXANDER & CO.

110 Montgomery St., S. F.

Branches: Portland, Seattle, Los Angeles.

Physicians would not recommend Jesse Moore Whiskey if they did not know it to be the best in the market.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP Has been used for over sixty years by millions of mothers for their children while teething with perfect success. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain; cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhoea. Sold by Druggists in every part of the world. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

THEATRICALS.

Signor Russo's Muscle.

Signor Russo, the little tenor of the Tivoli Grand Opera Company, is probably the most athletic singer in the business. A small man and only twenty-six, he is yet wonderfully muscled. It is said that, if boxing were as popular in Italy as in this country, he would be an Italian light-weight champion. Outside of that, he is an expert gymnast and as a fencer can give Professor Tronchet a close rub. When the Lombardi Company visited Portland, he surprised the Multanomah Athletic Club by vanquishing their best fencers and their middle-weight and light-weight boxing champions in the same evening. He is a firm believer in athletics as an aid to vocal health, and keeps in training all the year round.

* *

The Man Behind the Baton.

Few people realize that the success of a grand opera, indeed of any opera, is mainly dependent on a man who rarely, if ever, gets any of the applause—the musical director. "The man behind the baton" can make a good performance with poor material and a passing poor performance with bad material. San Francisco hardly realizes that the extraordinary success of the Tivoli Grand Opera season is due more to Max Hirshfeldt, the musical director than to Salassa, Avedano, or any of the imported singers. Mr. Hirshfeldt is probably the hardest-worked man in the city, newspaper men not excepted. His day opens at ten a. m. and continues without interruption until the small hours of the morning.

An example of his ability was shown last year when "Othello" was first produced. He was unfamiliar with the opera, having never seen the score until the morning of the first rehearsal. Yet he took the piece in hand at once, played the accompaniment with a flaw, and in perfect tempo, and pulled the performance together as though he had known the score all his life. When Avedono, Salassa et al are called before the curtain next time, I pray you spare a "hand-out" for the director.

* *

The Frawleys at Morosco's.

Barring the fact that they have not had a really good play, the revived Frawleys are giving a hugely successful season at the Grand Opera House. The fault with the play lies in the compromise which circumstances have forced upon Frawley and Morosco. Not daring to revert entirely to the old howling form, they are limited to the "refined melodrama"—a hybrid species and rare.

"The Middleman," running last week, is in Henry Arthur Jones' early over-sentimental manner. It is not so good as "The Masqueraders," which is the masterpiece of the young English playwright, and not so bad, by many a heart-throb, as "The Dancing Girl" Its chief virtue is that it gives Lackaye one of his best character parts. To say that he fairly outshone the rest of a very good cast would be only the truth. And, in spite of the easy dulness of the piece, Lackaye raised the audience to enthusiasm. Indeed, his work in the part was the best he has done here this season.

Next to him, Mrs. Riccardo shone as a lady with a past. This is an actress with great natural beauty—Lord love us we always consider this first in an actress, spite of everything—and of an Italian subtlety and finesse rare on the American stage. Apparently she is lacking in real passionate force. I should like to see her tested in a comedy of manners.

* *

The Alcazar, which is by tradition the one San Francisco house daring to try ventures with new plays, presents next week an untried drama, "A Suit of Sable," by Charlotte Thompson, whose first play, "Only the Master shall Blame," was an Alcazar success last season. The drama is described as a serious, emotional one. and the leading role, that of a young country-bred girl, driven to desperation by lack of symyathy in her family, who risks all in an assault on the conventionalities, should just suit Florence Roberts.

* *

"Heartsease" has been so tremendously successful at the Columbia that the Henry Miller Company will repeat it on Monday Tuesday and Wednesday evening and Wednesday afternoon of next week. For the remaining evenings, "The Adventure of the Lady Ursula" is to be the bill. This romantic comedy by Anthony Hope will be remembered as one of the big successes of last season.

Following that is "The Only Way," a dramatization of Dickens' "Tale of Two Cities, Mr. Miller's great success of last season, and now first appearing on the Pacific Coast, J. H. Stoddard, Daniel Harkins and Joseph Brennan are coming on from New York especially for this production. Seats will be ready next Thursduy.

* *

Little Miss Maud Sorrenson the Star of "The Brownies in Fairyland.

The Four Juggling Johnsons in an Indian Club specialty head the new Orpheum bill. Mrs. Bessie Blitz Paxton is a California vocalist of note, and adds greatly to the strength of the new bill. Sam Morris and Company have a local comedietta. Macart's dogs and monkeys are a troupe of trained animals with some new tricks.

* *

Mrs. Paxton's Debut.

Mrs. Bessie Paxton of San Francisco, made her debut at the Orpheum in Los Angeles and achieved a distinct success. She has a fine rich voice which thus far had been heard only under religious auspices for Mrs. Paxton was a member of the choir of the First Congregational church. For some time she has been considering a proposition to extend fhe field of her usefulness—hence the Orpheum engagement. Next week she is to be heard at the Orpheum in San Francisco and is certain of a brilliant reception. On account of her kindly and sympathetic personality which has won for herself a host of friends. Mrs. Paxton has quite decided to "do" the vaudeville circuit. She should gather all kinds of laurels en route for it is seldom one if privileged to hear a voice so fresh and agreeable as hers.

* *

The "Brownies in Fairyland" will reappear at the California theatre to-morrow afternoon and every evening of next week with matinees on Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday. Over a hundred professional children will be in the cast and the songs, dances, specialties, costumes and scenic effects will be entirely new. There will be a silver ballet, danced by sixteen tiny tots, and the performance will conclude with a gorgeous transformation scene. Lee, the hypnotist, will be the next attraction.

Clara Kalisher, the well-known contralto, who recently returned from an Eastern tournee, announces a song recital at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s hall, Tuesday evening, September 4th.

Dining at the Carlton.

Sunday night dinner at the Carlton in London is a marvelous sight. There is nothing like it in this country, nor elsewhere, indeed, in the world. The dining-room itself is not remarkable, although its proportions are good, but the spectacle of so many superbly gowned women and so many smartly dressed men dining together is rarely seen. Here are all the notabilities and the different sets; the Prince of Wales often dines here; all the prominent people of the social literary set, or artistic set, drop in; famous beauties are to be seen and the jewels that are worn are marvelous. The dining-room opens out on to a platform, as it were, from which broad steps lead down into the palm room, where are any number of small tables, at which coffee and liqueurs are served. The palms used in the decoration of this room are superb in size and arrangement, and the spectacle of the women as they come out of the dining-room and come down these stairs gives the best possible opportunity for the display of smart gowns.

In the dining-room there are always a number of persons at small tables, and also large tables, where dinners for twenty or more are given, so that the whole room presents an unbroken vista. The dinner can cost any price that was ever heard of or never heard of, but the food itself is but a lesser part of what might be called the exhibition.

Catarrh Cannot be Cured

with LOCAL APPLICATIONS as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials free.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Props., Toledo, O.
Sold by druggists, price 75c.
Hall's Family Pills are the best.

The origin l Swain's Bakery at 3 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

When the barkeeper sets out Jesse Moore "AA" he gives the customer the best in the house.

All bon vivants will be pleased to learn that genial "John" Heinkee supersedes Mr. Justin Ladagnous as proprietor of the famous Maison Riche, so happily named by dainty Aimee in her golden days. Epicures the world over know the Riche. "John" will maintain the high standard that this restaurant has always held in this city.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

There is only one reason why you shouldn't drink Jesse Moore "AA" Whiskey—that's because you have signed the pledge.

BYRON MAUZY PIANOS

308-314 POST STREET
SATISFACTORY TO THE EYE AND EAR
All the Latest Books in Our Sheet Music Department.

A Glowing Highway to Happiness is the Road that leads to . . . . DEL MONTE Added to the many pleasures afforded by its enchanting surroundings are FINE GOLF LINKS

THIS SEASON'S

HOMES OF PLEASURE

. . . THE PEERLESS CALIFORNIA RESORT . . .

MONTROSE BICYCLE SENT FREE

on approval to your address WITHOUT A CENT IN ADVANCE. SEND US YOUR ORDER, state whether you wish lady's or man's wheel; give color, height of frame and gear wanted and WE WILL SHIP THE WHEEL C. O. D. on approval, allowing you to uncrate and examine it fully before you accept it. If it is not all and more than we claim for it, and a better wheel than you can get for any where near the price from any one else, refuse it and we will pay all express charges ourselves. The "MONTROSE" Bicycle at our Special Agent's sample price of $16.50 is the greatest bargain in a bicycle ever offered. We guarantee it equal to any $40 wheel on the market, and you need not accept it nor pay a cent if you do not find it as we represent. We are EXCLUSIVE BICYCLE MANUFACTURERS and take this method of quickly introducing our 1900 MODELS. This offer of a sample wheel at this low price is made to secure a RIDER AGENT in each town to represent us and take orders. Our agents make money fast.

SPECIFICATIONS. Frame, 22, 24 or 26 inch; ladies, 22 inch. Best Shelby seamless tubing with forged connections, flush joints, improved expander device to fasten seat post and handle bar; Royal Arch crown; the celebrated Mavis hubs and hanger—the easiest running known; Record "A" tires, the best and one of the most expensive tires on the market. The genuine $4 Mesinger Hygienic saddle; pedals, tools and accessories the best obtainable. Enameled in black, maroon or coach green, highly finished and ornamented; special finished nickeling on all bright parts. We thoroughly test every piece of material that goes into this machine. Our binding year's guarantee bond with each bicycle.

FREE to any one sending the $16.50 cash in full with order we will send free a genuine Burdick 10,000 mile barrel pattern cyclometer; or a high grade floor pump. Your money all back if you are not perfectly satisfied.

CHEAP WHEELS. We do not manufacture the cheap department store kind of wheels, such as many new concerns and big supply houses advertise and sell as high grade. We can furnish them, however, at $5 to $7 stripped; or $9.75 to $12.50 complete. We do not guarantee nor recommend them. BEFORE ORDERING a bicycle of any one else, no matter who or how cheap, write us and let us tell you how much we can save you on the same machine.

If you are UNABLE to BUY a wheel we can assist you to EARN A BICYCLE by distributing catalogues for us a few days. We need one person in each town for this purpose. We have several hundred SECOND HAND WHEELS taken in trade which we will close out at $3 to $10 each; also some shopworn samples and '99 models very cheap. Send for Bargain List. OUR RELIABILITY is unquestioned. We refer to any bank or business house in Chicago, or any express or railroad company. We will send you letters of reference direct from the largest banks in Chicago if you wish it.

SEND YOUR ORDER today. This low price and these special terms of shipment without deposit will be withdrawn very soon. ☞ Give name of this paper.

J. L. MEAD CYCLE COMPANY, Chicago, Ill.

HAVE YOU A PIANO THAT YOU DO NOT USE?

Is the piano in your home a musical instrument, and do you enjoy it as such, or does it remain unused for months at a time and become practically nothing more than an article of furniture.

The Pianola

Is Bringing into use thousands of pianos that have been silent for many years.

It is bringing music into homes where it has long been a stranger.

It is making players of people who, lacking musical training, had never expected to experience the pleasure of producing music for themselves.

It is increasing the repertoire of amateur and professional pianists by making the entire literature of the piano instantly available without study and without practice.

The Pianola looks like a small cabinet. It has small felt-covered fingers that rest on the keys of the piano and, operated by pneumatic power, strike the keys with a pliant, yielding and remarkably sympathetic touch that is almost identical with that of the human fingers.

When not in use the Pianola may be easily detached from the piano and moved to another part of the room.

The Pianola can be used in connection with any Grand or Upright piano, and does not in any way mar or disfigure the instrument. It can be easily and quickly adjusted by any one.

The action of the Pianola is so simple that even a child can readily learn to play it; at the same time it is capable of so much expression that its greatest admirers are those who best understand and appreciate good music.

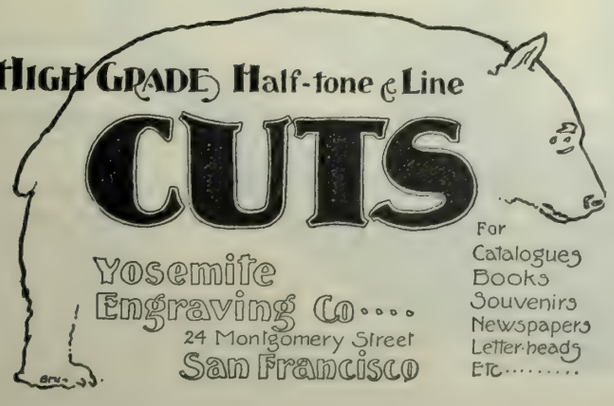
Price $250 Upward.

The Pianola can be bought by monthly payments. Our instruments are gladly shown to the merely curious as well as to intending purchasers.

Kohler & Chase, Sole Agents.

26, 28 and 30 O'FARRELL STREET.

We Make the Cuts in this Paper.



CAN be made to brighten memories of the past, without fear of scratch or tarnish, if cleaned with

SILVER
ELECTRO-SILICON
POLISH

It's as harmless as the flour you eat. It makes old silver new—in brilliancy—and keeps new silver always new.

The proof is yours simply for the asking. Send address on a postal, or 15c. in stamps for box, postpaid. Grocers and druggists sell it.

"SILICON," 30 Cliff St., New York.

DR. CLYDE PAYNE

Has returned from New York and resumed the practice of Dentistry at

135 GEARY ST.

Phone Main 9. Spring Valley Building

W. C. ACHI & CO.

Real Estate Brokers

We buy or sell real estate in any part of the Group. We will also buy or sell Stocks in any corporation in Hawaiian Islands.

Office. 10 W. King St. HONOLULU, H. I.

MILLS College and Seminary

Seminary course accredited to College and Universities. Ideal surroundings. Thirty fifth year. Write for catalogue to

Fall Term Opens Aug. 8 1900

MRS. C. T. MILLS, Pres., Mills College P. O., Cal.

BAJA CALIFORNIA

Damiana Bitters

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes, and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. Send for Circular.

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 MARKET STREET, S. F.

Electric Supplies

CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIRS

California Electrical Works

409 MARKET STREET

The Sign of the Peacock

229 GEARY ST.

Theatre Suppers

Luncheon Ice Cream Breakfast

ORDERS DELIVERED

The Saturday Wave

Is Printed by

THE MYSELL-ROLLINS CO.

22 CLAY STREET, S. F.

New Stories Re-Told.

[illegible] OF THE SOCIETY METHOD. This happened at a well-known San Francisco Sunday School [illegible]. "Who [illegible] all the fine houses and stores, and lots, do you ever think [illegible] "Yes ma'am." Teacher.—'Where will your fathers be thirty years [illegible] "Dead." [illegible] —"That's right. And who will own all this property then?"—Boys (in ungrammatical concert):—"Us boys!" Teacher.—"Right. Now tell me, did you ever in going along the street, notice the drunkards lounging around the saloon doors waiting for some one to treat them?" Boys (heartily):—"Yes ma'am, lots of them." Teacher.—"Well, where will they be thirty years from now?" Boys:—"Dead." Teacher:—'And who will be the drunkards then?" Boys (in enthusiastic chorus): "Us boys!"

THE GOOD LITTLE TWIN.—Somewhere in Frisco live two little twin sisters. The other day one was naughty, and to punish her, her mother made her stay indoors all day. To emphasize the disgrace, favors were showered upon the good sister. She was dressed up in her very best. She was given a parasol and went prancing up and down the front walk in the greatest glee. Presently one of the neighbors came by and paused at the gate to speak to the child. "You're one of the Brown twins, aren't you?" asked the neighbor. "Yes'm." "Which twin are you?" The child gave her skirts a proud toss. "Oh," she said complacently. "I'm the good little twin that's out walking."

THE RETORT DISCOURTEOUS. In the district of the Cheviots a young ploughman once went on a courting visit. It was Jock's first appearance in the character of a wooer, and as he and the girl had had little previous acquaintance, he found himself sadly at a loss for something to say. In vain he racked his brains for some interesting topic; not one sentence could he utter, and for two hours he sat silent beside the maid, who herself was equally silent. At last Jock suddenly exclaimed, "Jenny, there's a feather o' they apron!" "Aa wadn't ha' wondered if there'd been twee," replied Jenny, "for Aa've been sittin' aside a gyuse aall neet!"

FORBES' FIRST LECTURE. Archibald Forbes began his career as a lecturer at a small town in Scotland. He was very nervous and asked the janitor at the hall to let him in by a side door in order that he might avoid the crush. "Ye need na mind," replied that functionary, "there's na crood." This was no more than the truth. A bored commercial traveler composed the entire audience. Forbes waited awhile and no one else approaching, he said to the "audience," "Will you have the lecture, or will you have a drink?" "A drink," said the traveler.

THE SENATOR'S CRITICISM. Senator Green of Missouri while in Washington was prevailed on one Sunday by some worshipful lady friends to go to church, a habit to which he was not addicted. It was a long-drawn out ceremony which the Senator suffered in silence. On returning to his hotel he was pressed by his friends to give an opinion on the service. "Ladies," he said, "It appeared to me that there was too much reading of the journal and too little debate."

SAM JONES' LIMITATIONS. At a Methodist gathering there arose a discussion over the oratorical powers of Rev. Sam Jones. Various opinions were expressed but the cap was put on the debate by a colored clergyman who said: "Brethren, jist as long as Bro'r Jones sticks to de Scripters, he ain't no better preacher than eny uv de rest of us. But when he cuts loose from de Scripters and jist lets 'er sail, den he's de doggondest preacher dat ever pounded a pulpit."

PALACE HOTEL

To these hotels belong the distinction of having entertained the notable travelers who have journeyed from every portion of the world to San Francisco.

It is universally acknowledged that they possess the attributes that appeal to particular people—undoubted luxury and comfort, unsurpassed cuisine and service, and superior appointments and location.

Connected by a covered passageway and operated under one management on the American and European plan.

GRAND HOTEL

Famous FOR ITS Purity

SEATTLE, U. S. A.

WHEN LEAVING THE CITY PLACE YOUR VALUABLES IN THE

Safe Deposit Vaults

OF THE

First National Bank

N. W. Corner Bush and Sansome Sts

EVERY POSSIBLE SAFEGUARD TO PROPERTY

REASONABLE RATES
PROMPT ATTENTION

Office Hours: 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.

REPSOLD SELECT VINTAGE REGISTERED BRAND

Repsold Select Vintage Wines

FOR YOUR HOME DINNER

This brand of Wine is served at all first-class clubs, hotels and restaurants

Office, 416 Pine St. A. REPSOLD & CO.

THE

White Pass and Yukon Route

Through Freight and Passenger Service to

Dawson, Atlin, White Horse

AND OTHER POINTS

All Rail From Skaguay, Alaska, to White Horse, Y. T.

Beginning August 1, both passenger and freight trains will be operated, Skaguay to White Horse, a distance of 112 miles. At White Horse, the ten fine river steamers of the Canadian Development Company,

Connect directly with the railway train and afford DAILY service to Dawson and all other Yukon River points. Through connections are made at BENNETT and CARIBOU with the

Irving Navigation Company's Lake Steamers

For ATLIN, TAKU, and GOLDEN GATE MINING CAMPS.
This system now affords best of facilities for handling perishable freight.

A SCENIC AND PLEASURE TRIP TO NOME.

FOR RATES AND PARTICULARS APPLY TO

S. M. IRWIN
TRAFFIC MANAGER
Skaguay, Alaska, and Seattle, Wash. [Phone Main 574]

M. P. BRASCH
COMMERCIAL AGENT
535 Market Street, S. F.

From Admiral George Dewey:

Mr. George Mayerle, German Expert Optician, 1071½ Market street, San Francisco—Dear Sir: I am still using with much satisfaction the glasses you sent at Manila; also, the new ones suit my eyes perfectly. Very truly yours,
GEORGE DEWEY.

A GRADUATE

George Mayerle

German Expert Optician

Consultation, Examination and advice free.

OPTICIAN HONORED

1071½ Market St.

near Seventh

Telephone Mint 257

German Eye Wate 50 cents.

From General Wm. R. Shafter:

Mr. George Mayerle, San Francisco—Dear Sir: The glasses made by you received yesterday. I have never been better fitted than with this pair.
Very truly yours,
WM. R. SHAFTER.
Major-General, U. S. V.

Paper not to be taken from the Library.

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

Reduced To 5 Cents a Copy.

THE SATURDAY WAVE

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY
AND JOURNAL OF EVENTS CURRENT

THE WILD EAST SHOW.

Chinese Drama In San Francisco

THERE is a strange analogy between the Chinese drama as practiced in San Francisco and the early beginnings of our own English stage. The company of the Jackson Street Theatre, may not be aware of it, possibly would not be flattered if they were, but their manners, their ways of living, their methods of stage-representation are so alike to the manners and ways of living and methods of representation practiced by the Lord Chamberlain's servants—Shakespere's company—that the observer is bewildered by the resemblance. The forms of the drama, the acting, the costuming are totally different, of course. The similarity lies in other things. It strikes you on your first entrance. When you have paid double the fee given for entrance by the common, ordinary Chinaman, you are led up on the very stage and given a seat against the wall, within touch of the actors. The very same custom prevailed in the Elizabethan theatre, where grandees, nobles, and gentry were seated on chairs along the edge of the stage, in full view of the audience. Furthermore, the scenery, and the method of suggesting it, are the same. We are told that the immortal plays of Shakespere had their first production on bare boards,with no curtain,no wings,no scenic effects of any sort; that the place of action was stated by a placard and often further suggested by some object, as a bed to represent a chamber, and a table with glasses to represent an inn. Here the resemblance is perfect again. In the Jackson Street Theatre, a sign hung out by one of the omnipresent stage-hands tells where the scene is laid, and objects of common use help the imagination to conjure up the illusion. A king speaks from the throne made by setting two tables together and topping them with a chair. A pile of chairs and tables makes a mountain. When occasion arises for the appearance of a god, he speaks from a heaven constructed of tables and screens.

Further, we know that the Lord Chamberlain's servants conducted the Globe and the other playhouses in which they were interested on a peculiar co-operative plan, dividing the profits on a pro rata basis, stars and public favorites receiving the greatest shares. The analogy again; twenty two actors of the Jackson street company own and conduct the business, and divide on the same plan. The Chinese players of San Francisco have no women in their number, female parts being played by boys or by men trained from youth as female impersonators. One of the things that we know most certainly about the English theatre of 1600 and before is that the same rule prevailed. The inferior social position of the actors, their practical ostracism, is another exact parallel. Only,the prejudice in China of 1900 goes further than did that in London of 1600. and the Chinese actors of San Francisco lighten it by living in the theatre apart from the scornful world. These are the main points of likeness; they will serve to illustrate. It is probably only accidental; certainly, the dramas presented on Jackson street and the manner of their acting do not indicate that there is a rich seed-ground for a coming Chinese Marlowe or Shakespere.

The Stage and Accessories.

As I have said, the Chinese play is presented on a bare stage, with no scenic accessories. At the back is a dome-shaped alcove, where sit the musicians. On each side of this is an entrance, covered by a curtain and opening into the dressing-rooms. Against the wall on each side are a double row of chairs for tourists and guides, and in the corner a few chairs, tables and stage properties are stacked. The whole thing is naive beyond description. The "supes," the employes of the theatre and other privileged loafers hang all around the edge, pass in and out of the dressing-rooms and on and off the stage with perfect freedom and plentiful noise. No one, actor or spectator, minds it. The little yellow tots belonging to the theatre are as likely as not to make the stage their play-ground They do not exactly romp on the matted space under the feet of the actors, but they come very near it. I have seen one of them chase another clear across the stage in a game of tag, and this, too, while the leading tragedian was black in the face with tearing a Chinese passion to tatters. Two or three of these children make it a business to take down folding chairs for the chance tourist. Once, I remember, the father of one of these self-appointed ushers was in the scene when the child made some blunder. The father, being out of the action just then, stepped over and "corrected" him, resuming his place when it was done, in the most matter-of-fact way. When they are not torturing their instruments into wails of anguish, the musicians, just back of the actors, chat with one another or with the incidental loafers. One of them seems to carry costuming as a side line, and mends coats or caps when his gongs are not in active use. The scene-shifters travel back and forth with no effort at concealment. If an actor needs a stick to beat his wife or a sword to fight his enemy, one of these functionaries, generally not over-neat in appearance, walks out and puts it into his hands. Similarly, when the stick or sword is dropped, the "scenic artist" carries it away.

Elaborate Properties.

Nevertheless, in spite of their scorn of illusions and of scenery as we know it, the Chinese lay out money on their drama. Paradoxically enough, their costumes are tremendously expensive and their accessories often reach absurd figures. An example was shown last Sunday night. In the fairy play, of which I shall have occasion to treat later, there is an incident connected with a boat. A property boat was brought all the way from China for the purpose. How much it cost, no white person knows exactly, but the custom-house duties on the box of properties of which this filled the biggest part was seven hundred dollars. It is made of pink rice-paper, mostly, with ornaments of tinsel and of semi-precious stones, and innumerable tiny candles burn among its decorations. It is moved on the stage in the same fashion as one of these property floral yachts in our flower fiesta processions. The occupants, while seeming to be seated under the canopy which runs across the top, are really walking, giving realistic bobs and tosses to the craft as they go, their legs being concealed by the hull of the toy vessel. To see this little boat going across a board ocean to inspect a bridge made of two chairs and a table, is to realize the inconsistency of Chinese scenic effects.

In fact their ideas on "properties" seem entirely inconsistent to us. Whenever any article of use cannot be left wholly and entirely to the imagination, it is represented by something prettier than the original. To take an example from the same play, there is a stage of the action when a number of people of different trades cross the stage, stopping en route for a solo. A tinker, a melon seller, a lunch man, successively entertain the audience. The melon seller carries in his trays two opaque Chinese lanterns which look like melons. The boxes of the lunch man are wonderful paper affairs, with gaudy decorations and with glowing lamps ; the paraphernalia of the tinker are similarly decorated. Carried further, this principle is applied to the costuming, which is gorgeous in the extreme. Only the low comedy characters are dressed in ordinary clothes. Everyone else, be he mandarin, king, high dignitary, or lady of fashion, is robed in a costume as elaborate as embroidery, gold thread and high color can make it. The costumes shown in the photograph accompanying this article cost one hundred dollars at a minimum. The one with long pheasant's feathers, worn by the god to the right of the picture, came to three times that sum. Indeed, the purchase and care of these robes are the greatest expense of the Chinese theater next to the salary list. Four costumers are kept continually at work manufacturing new costumes and keeping the old ones in repair.

The Plays.

The plays presented are all classics. There is no demand for a "new drama" in China. They frequently date back five hundred years; some of them are so old that their beginnings are lost. The language and action may have changed a little in the course of centuries, but the themes remain the same. There is a wide-spread idea among the whites that the ordinary Chinese play lasts for several weeks, being played by instalments, night after night. This is true only in exceptional cases. The common farce comedy, romantic drama or light comedy lasts one night, beginning at eight o'clock and is finished sharp on the stroke of twelve. The exceptions are the heroic dramas, cycle plays relating the history of Chinese kings and heroes. These, as written for the national theatre sometimes last three months—ninety days of consecutive performance, from overture to final curtain! It remains to be said that each night's performance is, in a way, complete in itself—just as there are certain long novels in which every chapter, while related to every other, is a finished story. Anthony Hope's "Heart of the Princess Osra" is a good example. These dramas, when put on in San Francisco, are generally cut, because of lack of accessories, costumes and properties. Rarely does such a cyclic play go over three or four weeks at the Jackson street house. When one of the long plays is not running, the bill is changed every night.

Of the merit of the plays, judged either by Chinese standards or our own, no one unacquainted with the language can speak. Certainly, their main attraction for an American is their strange variance from our own ideas on the art. Every Chinese play is partially an opera, long interludes being sung, mostly in the form of solos, although duets are common, and I have even heard a quartet of four gods. These interludes take the place of scenery and of scenic changes. In the period of a play corresponding to our divisions of acts and scenes, a singer tells of all that has passed in the interim, and of the setting of the coming scene. Every exit and entrance, every stirring point in the action, is accompanied by deafening Chinese music, in which the metallic gong plays the chief part. We have Paderewski's word that Chinese music is real melody, and pleasing to a musician of parts; but to a layman, it is more like the noise of a boiler factory with intermittent scraping of tin pans than anything else in the range of known sounds. The incidental tunes occasionally strike a familiar, comic opera cadence. One song delivered by the low comedian in a recent farce-comedy was in the swing and meter of the popular air, "An Elephant on His Hands," from "Wang."

Comedy and tragedy flourish side by side, the "unity of action" which prescribes that the two forms shall be held separate, which bound the Greek, the Latin and the early English drama and which was never broken in France until Hugo challenged it with "Hernani," is a thing unknown to the Celestial stage. A hero will engage his enemies in his last fight, a princess will go away, heartbroken, to commit suicide, and immediately the low comedian will enter and convulse the audience with buffoonery just a little stronger than those that we omit from Shakespere. In the same way the simon-pure farces have usually a touch of feeling.

The themes are varied. but more than half are founded upon fairy legends, and nearly all introduce gods, goddesses, genii and demons into the action. All our forms of drama are recognizable—farce, comedy, historical drama, romantic drama, even melodrama. Some historic dramas in which music holds a prominent place are strangely like Wagnerian grand opera, the resemblance lying in a crude adaptation of the melody to the sense and in the recurrence of certain themes.

The Drama of "Lok Yung Keow."

Perhaps the fairy drama staged last Sunday night was as interesting and comprehensible a play as they have had for many months. This is a festival season, and the piece "Lok Yung Keow" (Building the New Bridge) had been reserved as a holiday card. It approaches very near to the holiday spectacular plays given at the Tivoli every Christmas; an extravagant plot turns on a supernatural theme, with "elaborate scenic accessories"—such as the boat before mentioned—with gags, specialties and much music. The story is somewhat like that of a German fairy tale. A poor young man loves a rich girl. She will have him only on condition that he builds a bridge over a steep, narrow gorge, in which no one has ever been able to set piles. The poor young man tries but fails, and falls asleep from weariness; a good fairy comes, sees him sleeping, summons the fairy people, and confers with them. They decide that the sleeper is worthy of their help, wake him, and give him some magic lozenges. He drops them at intervals along the gorge; they take root and each one grows into a pier. Upon these, the bridge is built. The rich girl comes in her boat to see the work and pronounces it good, and the drama ends by a burlesque dedication, a caricature on the priesthood, by the antics of the people who come to see and use the new structure and by a meeting between the hero and the good fairy on the bridge. There is farcical sub-plot dealing with the theft of some official papers by evil genii.

Last Monday night, the play of "Bit Yeong," a popular romantic drama of tragic tone, held the boards. Its theme is very near to that of Tennyson's "Eugene Aram," it is a play of adventure, ending in a parting between husband and wife. There is much fighting and excitement, and a climax centering in the taming of a wild horse. Tuesday night, there was a broad farce, and next week begins a long, cyclic historical drama.

It will be seen from these short summaries that the plays are very nearly comprehensible to our understanding. Indeed, I see no reason why the "New Bridge" could not be successfully translated and adapted for one of the Tivoli holiday productions to which it is so nearly allied. The acting, more than the text, marks the great difference between the Chinese and the Caucasian drama. Conventionality is the leading trait of all Chinese art. Take painting for an example. With all their marvellous command of color and decoration, they cannot draw or paint a thing naturally—as it is. In the most serious works of their greatest masters there are artificial features which are ridiculous when measured by our standards. The head of a sage is made to bulge out like an American caricature of William Jennings Bryan. The face of a warrior is distorted out of all human semblance in an effort to make it appear fierce. This tendency is carried to the extreme in Chinese acting. No gesture, no intonation, no form of expression, is supposed to be natural; it must be a beautiful improvement on nature. The singing is all in falsetto; the speaking, except in the lowest of low comedy or in high tragedy, is in a high, unnatural tone difficult to describe. The tragic voice is an exception. This is a caterwaul—pardon the comparison—with occasional splutters and squawks like the agony of a condemned chicken. The funny man heightens his comic effect by elaborate painting of the nose, eyes and lips. With the tragedian, facial contortion is a stock in trade; the facial muscles of an old Chinese actor are remarkably strong and supple. The countenance of old Ah Chic, leading tragedian of the Jackson street house, is a map of ridges and lines, and his power of turning and twisting his mouth and forehead is totally beyond that of the most mobile-featured American player.

Gestures and Expressions.

Conventional gesture is further employed in the suggestion of accessories not possible in the primitive playhouse. The explanation of this point helps the visitor to understand many movements otherwise incomprehensible. For example, a body of grandees and soldiers will enter, bearing sticks, deliver their lines, and make their exit. As each one leaves, he makes a half-turn, lifts a leg high in the air, shoots it out sidewise towards the audience, and strides away carrying his stick straight and stiff before him. This gesture means that he is going away on horseback; the motion of the leg suggests mounting, the position of the stick imitates the Chinese method of holding a whip. When, at the close of the extravaganza, the hero meets his fairy benefactor on the magic bridge—made for the occasion from chairs and tables and mounted with the help of a "supe"—the two talk for a moment; then the hero puts his hands to his face and turns his head from side to side with a searching motion, while the benefactor walks away. This means that the fairy has disappeared. At every turn these details have to be grasped; therefore, if you would really understand the unvocalized action of one of these plays, you must watch it with an interpreter at your elbow.

The Stage "Ladies."

The female impersonators, the men who have been trained from youth to imitate women and who do no other work, are in a class by themselves. They are the highest-paid actors, the real stars. Lu Lim, the leading "lady" of the Jackson-street company, has a far larger share of pro rata receipts than any of his fellows. It may be said that such actors come nearer to nature than any of the strictly male players. The women which they portray are of rather an affected or mincing sort, but real women in speech, manner and gesture. I venture that a tourist, uninformed as to the sex of the actors, would be deceived. Off the stage, there is nothing effeminate about these players. Lu Lim, as he lolls on a bench in the dressing-room, smoking a pipe and waiting for his cue, speaks in good resonant bass and with the gestures of a man. Ah Bok, the comic old woman, appears on the street like a fat, smug old merchant. Ah Lam, the soubrette, who is really funny as a shy and affected maiden, swears in Chinese and in round, vehement Anglo-Saxon when things go wrong off the stage.

In spite of conventional fetters, the acting is surprisingly good—they are real actors, with the genuine temperament. When one has grown accustomed to the strange extravagances of their methods, he sees below and realizes that they are living the parts; that they feel. The comedy, which has east of any form to do with squally voices and wild gestures, is really funny, albeit of the knock-about order. Some one, I think that it was Sir Henry Irving, has written that the Chinese audience never laughs, no matter how humorous the action. Sir Henry must have seen a tragedy and taken it for comedy—perhaps only a natural mistake on first sight—for the audiences do laugh heartily, although they refrain from applause. Dow Hay Hong, the low comedian, has the comic gift to a high degree. Could he master our method of singing, he could be coached up to do the comic Chinaman of "The Geisha" as it was never done by a Caucasian actor. His grin is infectious, his affectedly serious air is an invitation to laugh. The sea of yellow faces below the stage breaks into ripples of smiles at his very entrance.

"The Best of All Kinds for Comedy and Tragedy."

Ah Chic, the leading tragedian, who also takes a hand at comedy and the romantic drama, is even better. Accustom yourself to his squalls and facial contortions, reflect that it is only a convention, like the actor dialect of our own players, and you realize that he has the temperament to feel and the power to express. He is a large, powerful Chinaman, with a more pronounced cast of features than is common to his race. His nose is convex instead of concave, and is thin and delicate in outline; his mouth, in repose, is well-formed and mobile, but it stretches to any limit when he is in action. His head is well-formed and of a noble cast, and is finished by heavy, powerful brows. On this face, expression plays continually. His movements, his whole appearance, show that he is living the part, be it tragedy king, young, romantic hero, or warrior. Somehow, he reminds me of Salvini the younger, whose temperament he approaches very nearly. In the romantic drama of last Monday, he gave an illustration of his power. At one point in the action, he tames a savage horse. This brute is portrayed by a property animal made exactly like the dancing cow in "Jack and the Beanstalk." A frame, patterned after a horse's head and body, is carried on the backs of two men, whose legs, protruding from below, play the part of the beast's natural supporters. This would seem undignified enough to spoil any tragic effect. Yet, after I had forgotten the first impressions of ridiculous unfitness, I found myself absorbed in the fight between man and beast as suggested by Ah Chic, and when at length he had mastered the horse and ridden him away, I found the thrills running down my back as they had done when Salvini played with swords in "The Three Guardsmen." This excellent actor is, I believe, not thoroughly appreciated in Chinatown, the natives preferring the female impersonators or the softly-cooing, moon-faced Ah Li, the juvenile lover, adored by the matinee girls of the Oriental quarter.

The Stage of the Chinese Theatre and Some of the Actors

The Love Affairs of the Sons of Heaven.

For, although there are no matinees on Jackson street, Chinatown has its matinee girl, no less than Caucasian San Francisco, and much trouble she makes for the actors. Many tragedies, many highbinder disturbances have resulted from the devotion of impressionable Chinese girls to the player-folk of the quarter. The actor is a low-class man and strictly ostracized. There are only two classes lower, the river boatman and the handlers of the dead. The very mendicants who beg for tickets at the doors of the theatres would refuse to sit at the same table with an actor. Most of the players are born to the cast, inheriting the craft from their fathers, but those who enter it from the outside do so with the consciousness that they are cutting themselves off from their families and friends. No Chinaman attempts to give a reason for this. It is so, it has always been so, it exists, and there's the end, on't which is ample cause to the Oriental mind. The company lives at the theatre, the major part of their lives bounded by the four walls; the cooks who prepare and serve their food despise them, and the respectable outsiders avoid their society. Fancy, then, the rage of a respectable merchant when he learns that his daughter or slave girl has exchanged dainty, perfumed notes—a yard and a half long, and on red rice-paper—with an actor! Yet, such is the attraction of stage-glitter for the feminine heart, that maidens take the risk, and the ideals of their devotion sometimes reciprocate. Ten years ago, when the Chinese were more plentiful and, being less under control, more turbulent, there were one or two highbinder murders and innumerable disturbances from this cause. It was then, and still is, a source of blackmail for the highbinder. An actor is found to be in communication with a Chinese girl from the outside world, and one of the harpies of Chinatown obtains proof of the fact; thenceforth he holds it over his victim as a means of extorting money. If the actor squirms in his grasp—the relatives or owners of the girl are acquainted with the facts, and there is one mummer the less on Jackson street. Of late, there has been little of this sort of thing, the theatrical people are more careful about entanglements, perhaps but it is said that Ah Li, the moon-faced juvenile, the professional lover, is not without his troubles at the present time.

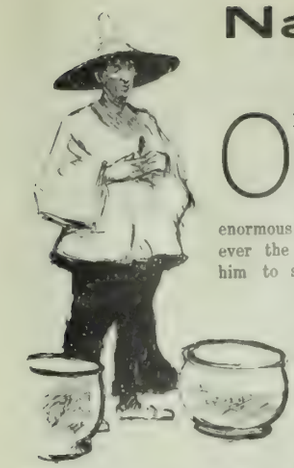
It is a curious life, that of the theater—a little world, sufficient unto itself. There are something over a hundred people living in the underground rooms below the play-house. Twenty-two of them form the joint-stock company. They hire about twenty more as supernumeraries, of whom several are studying to be actors themselves. There are perhaps twenty or thirty servants—costumers, cooks, porters—and six or seven musicians. The rest of the colony is composed of the wives and families of the company. Prisoners of sentiment, like the Pope in the Vatican, they never venture out except on business. The children grow up in the atmosphere of the place, predestined mummers; all their play is of acting. In the long waits in the dressing-room the elders amuse themselves by watching these yellow babies strut around and squeal in imitation of the sure-enough actors. Like all stock company work, it is hard, and made doubly hard by the daily change of bill—imagine a stock company preparing six or seven new plays each week! Hard work, ostracism, imprisonment, danger—why do they ever undertake it? I have never summoned the courage to ask them. Perhaps it may be for the good and sufficient Oriental reason, "him b'long my pidgin"—it is a part of my caste. Perhaps the fact that there is money in it may have something to do with the case. And perhaps art for art's sake, the love of it maydo its share. Certainly, the illumined face of old Ah Chic as he swings into his tragic gait at the stage entrance the drumming and un-Chinese impatience of Jan Day as he listens to the music and waits for his cue, the evident rapture of the leading musician as he scrapes unearthly melody out of his wisp of a fiddle—things which I have seen when the actors had become so accustomed to the presence of the prving white devil in their dressing-rooms as to forget their armor of reserve—would suggest that the reason for bearing all this privation and toil and indignity lies close to the reason for Samuel Johnson's heroic poverty and for the long struggle of Millet.

WILL IRWIN.

The Trans-Siberian railroad will be completed at the present rate of working in about two years. The cost probably exceeds the original estimate of $173,500,000. Some of the engineering features are of particular interest. The Siberian rivers running generally across the line, there are therefore many bridges, the most important being those crossing the Irtusk, the Obi, and the Selenga. The first of these is about 2700 feet long, and the others each about a mile in span. The Obi bridge is a fine structure of steel on stone piers, 80 feet above the ordinary water line and about 50 feet above the flood line. The other bridges mentioned are of the same type of construction. There are 1,429 wooden bridges to be replaced with steel and stone structures. The whole of the third and fourth sections are to be relaid with heavier rails and re-ballasted. At present the ballast is very insufficient and the rails are held down by spikes on the inside only in gains in the wooden crossties. Stations are about twenty-five miles apart, one sididg being at each. The line is of course single track. In rate of construction the Trans-Siberian road is far behind the work on the Union Pacific. Ten and one-half miles a day was the record speed of construction on the American road, while 3½ miles a day is the best speed the Russians have made.

Nai Yim, The Fish Fighter.

By Basil Thomson.



OF all the fish-fanciers in Bangkok, Nai Yim is the most distinguished and successful. His breed of fighting fish fetches an enormous price in the market when ever the stress of poverty obliges him to sell; but so great is the wrench of parting with any of his darlings, and so vital the importance of selling none that will not acquit himself valiantly, that he only resorts to the market under the most pressing necessity. That is, when Mrs. Yim tells him to.

It is nothing to Nai Yim that royalty, in an honest determination to put down betting, pronounced against fish-fighting. Sport is dearer to his heart than Court favor, and, although fish-fighting has declined somewhat from its high estate as a fashionable amusement, and the little club near the old tramway stables is no longer thronged with princes and nobles as of old, Nai Yim still trains his fish in the unregenerate way, and his little home in New-st (the Tanon Mai), is still the resort of the higher sporting circles. That house is like any other gentleman's residence in Bangkok. Its sole inhabited story, the upper, is floored with palm stems, thatched with leaves and walled with reed work. The space between the posts, which should have been the ground floor, lies open to the world. One end is piled with garden tools, firewood, and domestic litter; the other with neat rows of earthen pots of every shape and size. For in the breeding season no mother has the maternal instinct more fiercely developed than has Nai Yim for his motherless babes.

The Plakad has no right to exist at all. By all the laws of evolution a creature that eats its young and fights to the death with everything it meets should have become extinct very early in the world's history. The Plakad is born with the lust of battle, and, if his blood be cold, his temper is hotter than anything that will be known this side the grave. He will tackle any creature that is not big enough to swallow him whole—the only treatment that seems to quench his fighting spirit—and he will fight till he has never a fin to wag. And all this eruptive fury is caged in the length and girth of a schoolboy's pocketknife! He is found in the fresh-water pools of Siam; but in a wild state he has allowed himself so to dissipate his energies that he generally agrees with his adversary when a stubborn fight has convinced him of the advantages of peace. Life is too hurried in the pools, the competition too keen, to permit of concentration upon a single idea; it is in solitary reflection within the narrow limits of an earthenware pot that he realizes his mission in life and meditates the sole eternal theme of piscicide. Though diminutive from the human point of view, he has a very imposing appearance. His scales are red or deep blue, according to his species. His dorsal and ventral fins are enormously developed, the former being erect like a fore and aft sail, while the latter trails, like a centreboard keel, the whole length of his body. The expression of his countenance would be mild if his lips could be got to hide the teeth which are at once his glory and his excuse; for such an array could never have been intended for the mere mastication of pulpy mosquitoes—the creature's daily food.

In April, Nai Yim's cares begin. He has to fish out of the pond in the garden the young Plakad of both sexes which promise best to rear a creditable family, and mate them in separate jars. The female Plakad has no virtues—has not even beauty. She is a sober-colored, mean little fish, as quarrelsome as her mate, without the redeeming quality of natural affection. When she has laid her eggs she must be fished out of the jar in a bamboo spoon without an hour's delay, for this young mother's first act is to fill her stomach with her offspring. It is now that the domestic virtues of the father come into exercise. He is the most confirmed in the practice of the couvade of all the fathers in the animal kingdom. He knows too well the cannibal propensities of his consort, and from the moment when her eggs are festooned to the waterweed in his jar he mounts guard against the greed of their unnatural mother. Nor does his vigilance relax with her removal to the pond. Night and day he keeps sleepless watch over them, scarce leaving them for the mosquitoes which Nai Yim drops into his jar, until the tiny fry break through their envelopes and swarm about him. It is then his turn to take passage in the bamboo spoon.

The early days of the baby Plakad are a severe tax upon Nai Yim. With a muslin net he scours the pools for the larvæ of mosquitoes to dole out among his swarming jars; for the little warriors must not be stinted if they are to do him credit in the jar of battle. And as they grow in girth and fin from caraway to almond size it needs a practised eye to sift the future heroes from the ruck of bullies and decide on which a costly education shall be lavished to the end that he may uphold the honor of the Yim breed through another season. No Roman gladiator was more carefully trained for the arena. Pluck avails nothing unless the teeth be strong and sharp; and it is therefore upon the teeth of his young fish that Nai Yim's chief care is spent. Every few days a cloud of fine, sharp sand is discharged into the water, and the Plakad, which from infancy has acquired a habit of grinding his teeth, puts a fine edge upon his weapons automatically as he swims lazily about his jar. When he has reached his full fighting weight his natural pugnacity and his self-confidence are fostered by a series of victories over a succession of immature Plakad fish with fight enough to goad him to fury, and not enough gristle in their fins to spoil his grinders. This part of his training costs the lives of ten or twelve youngsters, which might find some consolation for their sufferings if they knew that they were sacrificed for the honor of their breed. Then the health of the champion in training is the subject of most tender solicitude. An overgenerous fare of mosquitoes, without the exercise of capturing them, is apt to make him bilious; but at the earliest symptoms of this disorder a brown finger, bedaubed with a potent laxative, is intruded into the jar. His nerves are by this time so tense that he would resent such an insult from a creature four times his size; and he dashes open-mouthed at the finger and expels it valiantly from his domain. The medicine that clogs his jaws is the spoil of war, and he gulps it down as he would the fin or the eye of a personal enemy.

At this stage the Plakad of a noted breed has a high market value; but Nai Yim knows better than to sell this creation of his, and so put into rival hands a champion dangerous as any of his own. The fruit of his patient industry is to be garnered in nobler fashion; for Nai Kem has sent him a challenge, and the battle is to be fought a week hence in the little Proprietary Club near the old tramway stables. Nai Walab, the proprietor, himself a fancier of no mean repute, has set his house in order, and, that the attendance of sporting men may not depend upon a single encounter, has issued challenges on his own account. The clubhouse is a roof without walls, and in the earthen floor are planted four thick pedestals two feet high, each supporting a quadrilateral glass jar, narrowing at the foot so as to allow no space for a beaten fish to sulk in. Nai Kem is the first to arrive. Clad in a clean cotton jacket and new parnung, and carrying his fish in a little jar enveloped in a cloth, he heads a body of supporters prepared to back his champion for all, or more than all, they are worth. But the number of Nai Yim's following shows which breed is the favorite. Until this fight be decided it is useless to start on the other pedestals; for, besides the two owners and a dozen of their followers, who squat around the jar with their noses glued to its transparent sides, there are four rows of by-standers betting recklessly. The stakes and the bets being duly recorded, and, Nai Walab having made a mental calculation of his percentage as proprietor of the club, Nai Kem tilts his fish into the jar. With a flirt of his potent tail, he explores the larger limits of his new quarters, and then eyes the human faces through the glass with contemptuous unconcern. He is a portly little green fish, a thought too thick in the barrel for dexterous evolution, but armed with an array of teeth that would put a bull-terrier to shame. The flop of Nai Yim's fish is very disturbing to his nerves, and for a moment the two fly about the bowl concealed from each other by a cloud of bubbles. If fish had the sense of hearing more keenly developed they would be still more perturbed by the shouts of their backers, inciting them to the fray. Nai Yim's warrior is dressed in red: a lean, wiry little fish, with a mighty spread of fin upon his back and a vast undulating keel along his belly. The water clears—the gladiators are suddenly tooth to tooth in the middle. Their whole demeanor changes in a flash, and they sheer off, puffing out their gills, and erecting every fin bone with wrath. Then the red fish shoots up alongside his big antagonist and asks him what the devil he means. The green fish is grossly affronted, but will have no vulgar quarrel with an ill-bred bully in a public place. But he cannot shake the ruffian off; and, as they circle the bowl side by side, the red fish jostles his left fin and throws him out of his stroke. It is a terrible provocation, but his dignity will not permit him to resent it, and he simply quickens his pace. The red fish has the inside of the turn, and quickens too, till he leads by half a head. This big green coward, he thinks, shall be made to fight; so he deliberately fouls him, and drives him against the wall of the bowl. "Ten tikals on the red fish!" shriek Nai Yim's supporters. But the fat fellow is aroused at last, and makes a side snap at his enemy's eye, and another at his open gill, fixing his teeth in the edge of the gill-shield. There is a struggle, and, as the red fish shakes himself free, two silver scales settle gently to the bottom. They are at it now hammer and tongs, flying round the bowl fin to fin, and snapping fiercely at each other's eyes. Then the red fish drops an inch behind, and makes a grab at his opponent's fin. His teeth are deep in the fleshy joint, and the green fish spins round and round and round without dislodging them. His struggles grow weaker, and gradually the two sink lower in the bowl. The excitement in the gallery is deafening, and Nai Kem's supporters grin foolishly, and shout empty encouragement to their champion. Gradually the shouts die down, for the combatants are sulking at the bottom, and may remain there for half an hour. But the red fish cannot keep his grip forever, and a sudden wrench of the fin tears it free. Nor, with his tired jaws can he lay hold again, for the green fish turns suddenly and comes at him open-jowled. They lock with a fury that shakes them stem to stern, and now the weight of the green fish begins to tell. He forces his antagonist helplessly against the glass, and, loosing him, digs his teeth into a dorsal fin. It is now Nai Kem's turn to cheer; for, twist and wriggle as he will, the little redcoat cannot wrench himself free. Then the fin tears, and, whole in valor, if tattered in body, the red fish renews the attack. The sail he carried so proudly aloft when he went into action is a wreck, and its torn shreds drape his battered sides and impede the working of his fins. But, like a game little privateer engaged by a frigate, he asks no quarter, and only fights the more fiercely for his injuries. He has found out that the green fish is slow in turning; he remembers how dear such unwieldiness cost one of his dummy antagonists in the training jar. Open-mouthed, he hurls himself at his enemy's great broadside, and his chisel teeth snap to on a mouthful of scales behind the fin. In vain the green fish strives to turn and bring his jaws to bear. He has drifted against the glass, helpless, and his enemy rams him again. A shower of scales goes settling to the bottom, and the wounds show white in his green ribs. He tries the surface and the calm water is lashed into a tempest of ripples. In despair he plunges down to the narrow bottom, hoping perhaps to find some hole to shelter in till his hurts are healed. It was a fatal decision, and he knows it too late. Slantwise, like a lance, the red fish shoots down upon him, and holds him in the narrow foot of the jar. No rabbit driven by a ferret into the blind end of his burrow was ever so much at the mercy of his tormentor. The green tail is the first to suffer. It is all too tempting a toothhold in its wavy, undulating curves. Its feathery, transparent edge is torn to ribbons, and then the red fish attacks the dorsal fin. With every furious backward tug the fabric gives, but still the poor fool clings to the bottom, rather than face the terrors above. Nai Yim and his backers have shouted their voices away. The betting is ten tikals to one and no takers, and Nai Kem is softly aspersing the reputation of the green fish's female ancestors to the third generation, his fingers itching the while to drag his recreant champion into the open water, if only the rules allowed it.

But who shall passively allow himself to be dissected by ragged teeth? Naked of scales from quarter to rudder, the tortured green makes a blind rush upward, and, as his tormentor makes a grab at his pectoral fin, he turns and grapples. It is a struggle of despair, and in the tempestuous broil the spectators cannot for a few minutes see which has the upper hand. Even Nai Kem takes heart to shout a war-cry, unaccompanied, however, by a bet. The combatants, fast locked, seem to be spinning in an aimless circle. Will they never break away? So terrific is the struggle that shouts die down to stifled ejaculations; the gallery catches its breath, and then a great shout of victory rends the summer air. For the straining bodies have risen to the surface, and a fountain of spray from the thrashing tails has splashed the first line of eager faces; when, with one supreme wrench, the red fish straightens himself like a bent spring, tears himself free, and lays a halting, zigzag course to the bottom of the bowl. In his teeth he carries much that does not belong to him; but he has had enough, and, if his enemy could even now flap a fin, and right himself in the water just for appearances, he might save his reputation and his owner's money. But he is past caring for fame. There he lies, careened over on his side, with one torn fin-stump clear of the water, and a ragged tail drooping idly toward the bottom. He has fought his last fight, and he wants death to take him quietly.

Tenderly Nai Yim lifts his game little champion with the bamboo spoon. He, too, has fought his last fight, but there are still seasons of honorable retirement and family life before him. His rigging hangs about him in a wreck that would excite derision but for the glory of it, and his teeth are blunted beyond repair. And, even so, his great heart is not daunted, for he bites savagely at Nai Yim's finger, as that proud sportsman restores him to his traveling jar, and takes him home to be the father of generations of warriors to come.

Væ Victis! The poor, battered corpse of the green fish is dishonored in his most honorable death. Nai Kem, smothering an execration as he unties the amount of his lost wager from the corner of his parnung, slings him to the dogs, still feebly waving a fin-stump.

IN THE TRACK OF THE TRADE WIND

The Cora Kitchen at the Exposition.

THE corn kitchen established at the Paris Exposition to educate Europeans up to an appreciation of our national cereal is proving a startling success. Indeed, it is regarded by Commissioner Peck and other American authorities as about the most valuable result of our display. The "kitchen," so-called, is really a restaurant, where dishes made from corn are served free of cost to the consumer. Uncle Sam stands the freight, and as the popularity of the kitchen grows, his bills mount. It is considered money well laid out, nevertheless, and the charges are somewhat modified by the liberality of certain manufacturers of corn food, who have given their wares by the carload for the sake of the advertisement and in order to create a foreign market.

The American staple is served up in fifty different ways. A French chef who has been put through a six months' course of preparation makes corn soup, corn patty, a dozen kinds of puddings, cakes and wafers. He also combines it with oysters, clam-juice and lobster in several dishes of his own invention. He has a patty all his own which is worthy of imitation. It is made with a shell of prepared meal and a filling of hominy. It is, however, his assistant who attracts the most attention. She is a regular down-South Aunt Jemima, and her specialty is hoe-cake, corn-pone, Johnny-cake and flannel cakes. Black as coal, with a snowy apron and with a red bandana around her kinky head, she is a spot of color which helps to draw visitors. Once drawn, they are held by the excellence of her cooking.

Few Americans are aware that this is only a stage in a big missionary movement on behalf of corn in Europe. It began in Denmark with the chance discovery, made by United States Minister Carr, that not one grain of the cereal could be obtained in all Scandinavia. The value of the food for the poor occurred to him at once, and he began to interest both the government and private firms. The work was begun systematically. It was realized from the beginning that to advertise the grain as a poor man's food would be to defeat its general spread among the class for which it was intended. Colonel Carr and his associates went to work to interest the affluent class, believing that, if they took it up, the poor would adopt the food by way of imitation. The first step was a banquet given in Copenhagen attended by most of the large purchasers of food-stuffs in the kingdom, at which practically all the dishes were made from corn. This was the entering wedge and, with the advertising that followed, put Scandinavia on our books for several thousand barrels a year. The work was then carried to Germany, with results equally flattering. Two years ago, Special Commissioner Murphy carried the movement to France, and now the "corn cranks" have taken advantage of the World's Exposition to give their hobby world-wide introduction.

The Tea Trade.

EVENTS have unforeseen consequences. Because the Boxer is dissatisfied with the missionary, we have to stop drinking tea, or make more money to drink tea. During the past three weeks the price of tea has advanced twenty-five per cent, and the reason for this sudden bound of the fragrant leaf up the money-ladder is traceable to the disturbances of the Mongolian Empire. The great tea-dealers do not see clear into the Chinese situation. They have large stocks on hand, but are afraid to be cut off from their base of supplies. The Japanese crop this year is a failure, and the other source of supply, from the British East Indies (Ceylon and India) is not to be counted on to fill the immense shortage that would result from the stoppage of the Chinese output. Hence the conservatism of big tea-merchants and the consequent rise in prices.

That the fears of the tea importers have some reasonable basis is seen when the mechanism of the industry is examined. Tea is raised in the great interior regions of China. The crops are bought as they stand by Chinese brokers who travel among the plantations. The tea is then freighted by caravan and sampan to the coast ports where the importers make their purchases. Now, it is easily seen that, should the present revolutionary movement spread to the great southern tea provinces, the traffic of the brokers must be obstructed. In fact, that is what has already happened to a certain degree. The bankers who advance the cash with which the middlemen make their purchases are now lending money with more and more reluctance; the brokers, even when they can obtain the necessary loans, are afraid to travel with the large quantity of bullion necessary for their operations, and those who have surmounted these obstacles find that, after purchase, it is almost impossible to bring the merchandise to the coast. The roads are infested with bandits, the rivers with pirates. The coolies necessary for transportation are almost unobtainable—they seem to have been all enrolled in the Boxer bands, impressed into the Imperial army, or to be engaged in some independent depradatory pursuit of their own. In the general disorder, traffic has come to a stand-still. Reports from the great tea-ports show the consequence of this state of affairs. In Amoy, only twenty-one per cent of the current season's crop of Oolong has arrived; in Shanghai, only thirty-six per cent of the usual "Pingsuey" supply, and only nine per cent of the country greens. Other ports report equal deficits.

Now, as to the stocks available in the United States. When the horizon began to darken, the wholesale men started to buy as heavily as the supply allowed it. The consequence is that the reserve in hand is greater than usual. On July 1st, the stock of all teas at the principal ports of entry in this country (San Francisco, Chicago, New York) amounted to 28,000,000 pounds. This is sufficient to supply the country for four months. A quick pacification of the Chinese Empire would restore the usual prices; a continuation of the trouble will as surely produce a yet greater rise.

There is, however, no danger of a famine. The India teas will prevent this. In fact, a prolongation of the Chinese troubles is apt to cause the supplanting of the Chinese leaf by the Indian product. The India teas have already pushed the Chinese out of the British market and have made themselves felt in Russia, Canada, and the United States. Now is the chance to complete this partial success. Where the India tea once gets a foothold, it is apt to stay on account of its superior quality. With the Chinese tea rotting in China, the stock of the importing countries depleted, it should be easy for the India product to obtain the necessary foothold. The unlooked-for result of the Boxer movement may be the loss to China of its two century-old tea monopoly.

The Ship-Building Industry of Japan.

THE admirable quality of the ocean steamships built in Japan has been universally recognized on the Pacific Coast. It now appears that the work of the Oriental builders has obtained recognition abroad as well. Over 13,000 tons of steamships are now building in Japan for European account. Formerly, Great Britain has manufactured most of the vessels used by the people of the Far East, but this year Japan is building twice as much tonnage for England as England is building for Japan. More than that, the enterprising little yellow people are making for Europeans vessels aggregating one-third the tonnage built in all France for the present year.

The principal reason for this expansion is a new and wise bounty law just put into operation by the Japanese government. Not only has it increased the output, but it has raised the quality because the law provides for thoroughly good workmanship. No vessels failing to meet the high standard receive any bounty. As late as 1898 it was reported that few steamers really and honestly complied with the requirements, but the European firms which have placed orders since then have been universally satisfied. And, in spite of the well-established position of their competitors, the Japanese lines have all but crowded American and European lines to the wall in the struggle for trade with Australia, the United States and Europe.

The center of the industry is at Nagasaki, and the Mitsu Bishi Company is the biggest concern. Recently, a merchant ship of 11,600 tons displacement was launched from this yard, it being the biggest ship ever put together outside of America. The yards are arranged for vessels up to 500 feet in length, and four may be on the stocks at one time. About 2,000 men are employed by this company alone.

Advance of Wages in Japan.

THE latest investigations concerning the trade and industrial conditions of Japan go to prove that the fear of competition from that quarter has been greater by all means than the facts warrant. The dread of Japanese opposition is based on the low wages paid, the low, cheap standards of living, and the cleverness of the Oriental artisan. It now appears that both the rate of wages and the cost of living have increased enormously of late. In the last ten years, the pay of laborers and artisans has gone up from 71 to 140 per cent. At the same time, the price of the common necessities has just about doubled. Rice, the most important staple, has advanced nearly three-fold in cost. Furthermore, experiment shows that the Japanese workmen, while extremely clever, are capable of only two-thirds of the work done by Europeans. Besides, they are erratic, being likely to leave their work in large bodies, a thing which renders difficult the formation of an efficient skilled laboring class.

The best American economists have all along maintained that the danger of Japanese competition would never become pressing so long as the workmen operated under native management; that in the direction of large bodies of cheap coolies by European entrepreneurs would lie the peril. It now seems that this, also, is not imminent. The late Japanese treaty gave foreigners the right to go anywhere in Japan and to exercise their trades and professions freely. It was hoped that this concession would attract foreigners and foreign capital, but the hope seems to have been vain; there has been practically no response. The opening of twenty-two new ports to foreigners has had no result.

Chinese Labor Unions.

CHINAMEN are co-operative to the last degree. Probably every Celestial in the United States belongs to some organization composed entirely of men of his own race. There are Chinese labor-unions, insurance societies, mutual benevolence societies, gambling societies, secret political societies, fraternal societies, mutual banking societies, and last, but not least, societies for the expeditious putting out of the way of undesirable countrymen. Chinese labor-unions are the most numerous; they are especially strong in California, but exist also throughout the Pacific Coast and in Chicago and New York. Now—union Chinamen are driven out of business by all sorts of ingenious methods, murder frequently being resorted to as a final persuasive. There was a time—before the advent of the steam-laundry—when the Chinese had the monopoly of the washing business on this coast. If a customer did not bear with becoming patience the idiosyncracies of his laundryman, he was boycotted by the union and had to wash his own clothes. In those days the laundrymen's unions demanded a $30 initiation fee and their treasuries were filled to overflowing. The large cities were mapped out into regular districts and each laundryman had a certain territory. Infraction of any of the union's rules was punishable by fines of from $25 to $50, expulsion and boycotting.

Besides protecting its members against non-union Chinamen, the societies also protect them against "the oppression and injustice of Americans." They also bank his savings, support him when he is sick and bury him when he is dead. Each union also employs two or three lawyers for the use of its members, this explaining in part the legal bickerings in which seems continually plunged the Mongolian population. All in all, it is easily seen that the Chinese have no cause to envy the most rapid American Union working-man.

The Bee Industry in the United States.

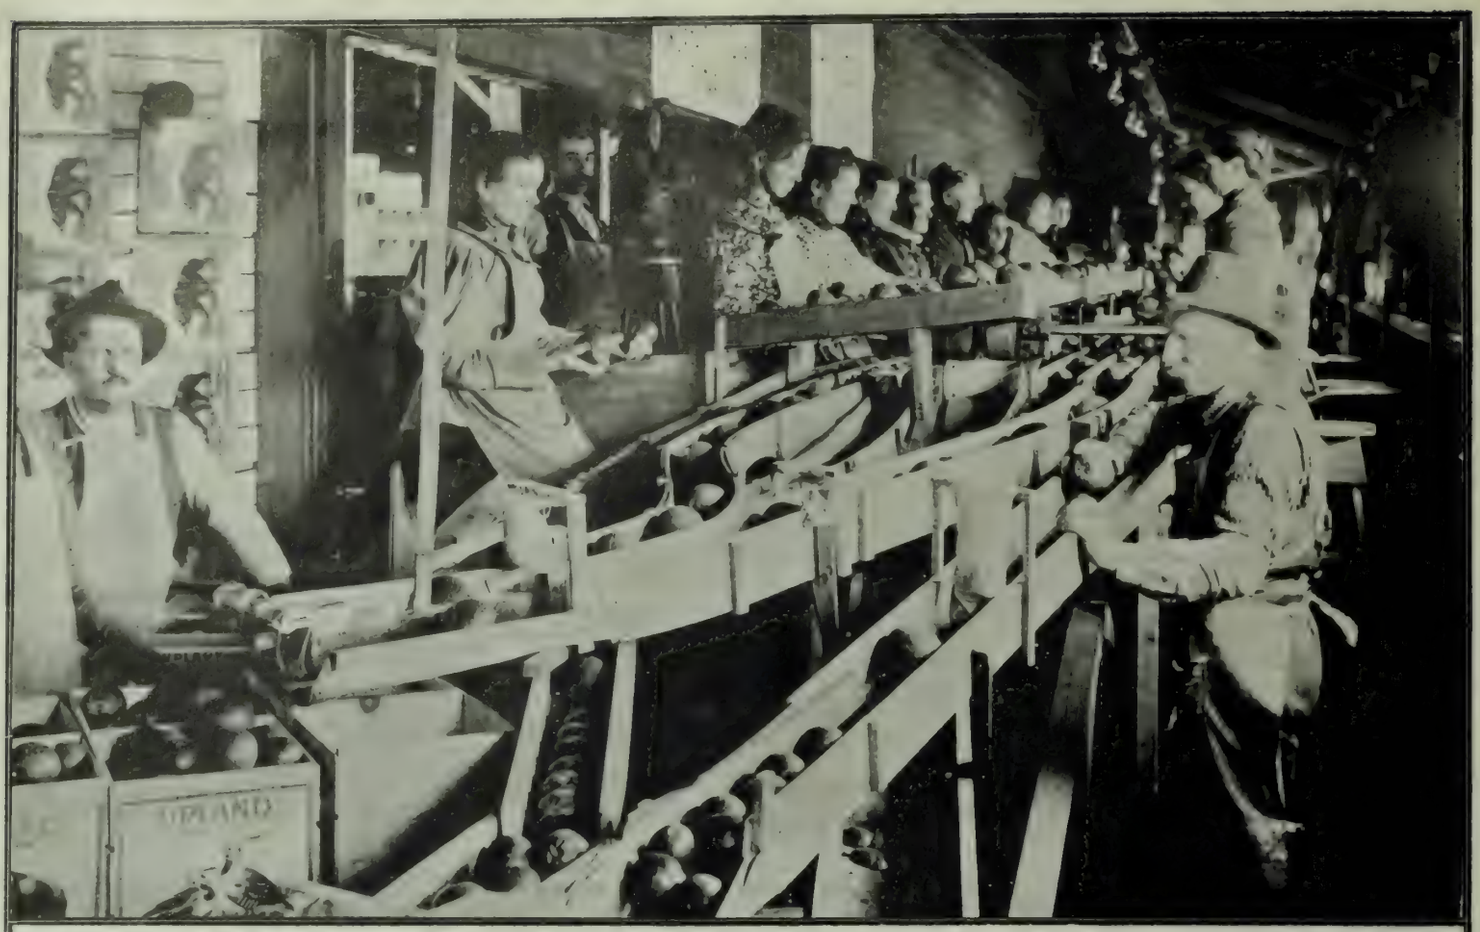
DO you know how much money the little buzy bee puts yearly into the pockets of the American apiarist?—just $20,000,000. When you consider the minuscule drop of honey produced each day by the little worker, this sum is an eloquent demonstration of the power of numbers, and of the result of patient, unflagging industry.

Bee culture in the United States is only forty years old, but it has developed astonishingly during that time. Three hundred thousand persons are at present employed in the apiarian industry; eight journals and one hundred and ten societies are devoted to its progress; fifteen great steam-power factories and a large number of smaller ones are engaged in the manufacture of supplies for its use, and its annual produce is of the value of $20,000,000.

Professor L. O. Howard, chief of the Bureau of Entomology, is authority for the statement that the present flora of the United States could support, with the same average profit, ten times the number of bee colonies that it now does. This would mean an industry keeping 3,000,000 men employed and producing merchandise to the amount of $200,000,000 yearly. What a chance for the over-population of the greet cities!

There seems to be little danger of superproduction, for so far the demand has grown more rapidly than the supply. American honey is having success in Europe. England is the chief buyer. Ships sail every summer from San Francisco and San Diego, from New York and Philadelphia, carrying cargoes of honey for the Old World. New York, Pennsylvania and Vermont export the greatest quantity of comb-honey, while from California comes most of the extracted or liquid honey. The development of the bee industry has indirect as well as direct beneficial results. Bees are great cross-fertilizing agents and the work they do in this line is worth yearly many times $20,000,000 to the fruit growers.

Professor Mahaffy points out that among the yet unpublished curiosities of the Petrie papyri is a list of names connected with the manufacture of beer. These names are oddly unlike either Greek or Egyptian names, and are suspected to be abbreviations. "There is one," says Professor Mahaffy, "which appears regularly in the same form, and of which we can give no further explanation. It is the name Smith. We have never found anything like it before, and it is surely worth telling the many distinguished bearers of the name that there was a man known as Smith in the twentieth year of the third Ptolemy, 227 B. C., and that he was occupied in brewing beer or in selling it. Is there any other English name comparable to this in antiquity?"



The Grading Process.

Grading and Packing Oranges for Shipment.

Orange Growing in California

IF the average eastener were asked to name, out of hand, the principal agricultural industry of California, he would probably say orange-growing. He would be wrong, of course; almost any Californian knows that. The wine industry, and wheat raising, go far beyond oranges in the totals. But the eastern attitude of mind shows how great an impression has been made by the rise of the citrus fruit industry, which came up so sensationally in the early eighties. In a certain way, the easterner would be right. The culture of the golden fruit is California's own, peculiar industry, not to be crowded out by competition. Wheat and grapes and deciduous fruits may be cultivated, oil and gold may be discovered in other sections of our national domain, and the competition of a new find may wreck or reduce the corresponding industry in California. But in only two little spots in the country can oranges be cultivated. The one is a small area in Southern Florida; the other is a much larger section in Southern California. Therefore, the orange industry is a bulwark of our commerce, a thing to be depended upon for permanent returns.

Were the general figures circulated about the orange industry absolutely true, there would be a race of orange millionaires in California. The proposition is a simple one—on paper. So much invested at the outset in ground, irrigation, and trees; a ten years' wait while the trees come to profitable bearing, with an incidental outlay for cultivation, and then a profit which pays for the expense in a few years and leaves the happy owner with an income entirely out of proportion to his first investment. All this would be true, were it not for the uncertainty of the industry. Given good luck and an intelligent supervision aimed to combat the enemies of this most delicate of all the fruits of the earth, and it is true. But there are many rocks and pitfalls and many unforeseen chances. Frost may ruin a whole season's crop, scale may render an entire orchard useless in one year. The water supply, if not carefully provided for, may fail in a spell of drought. The orchardist who puts into his business the brains and calculation used in any other pursuit is likely to avoid these contingencies, but the South is strewn with the wrecks of unsuccessful orange enterprises. With the shoals passed, an orange farm is a profitable investment.

Precautions Against Scale.

Outside of that, the gradual introduction of defensive methods against scale and frost have greatly reduced the risks. The best and biggest orchards now provide against sudden turns of the weather by costly systems of lathing and canvas, which pay in the end by the security which they afford. Scale was and is a much more difficult proposition; half the scientists of California have wrestled with it, and, while it cannot be said to have been beaten entirely, the risks are greatly minimized. In well conducted orange communities, there is a public health officer whose sole business it is to inspect the individual trees and to take measures of all sorts against the deadly foe. Week after week he runs through the various tracts, watching every tree for the first beginnings of the pest. At the slightest symptom, the branches are sprayed with some scale-destroying fluid. If this does not avail, the tree is totally destroyed by fire. He allows no fruit to come in from other communities and no boxes which have been used elsewhere; the very orange peelings thrown from passing trains are carefully gathered and burned. No plague quarantine is more careful. Yet the scale will sometimes creep in; the wind is the one agency which cannot be shut out and disinfected.

The cost of purchasing orange land and bringing an orchard to bearing is fairly stable. The ground, unimproved, will cost from two hundred and fifty to five hundred dollars per acre. Water rights are generally included in this primary cost. The wise buyer looks to this point carefully, since it is a vital one. He sees that the supply is large enough to keep his orchard; is from such sources as assure its permanence, and is legally unencumbered. Moreover, he looks for that extra supply necessary in years of drought. The next expenditure comes in for head ditches in his irrigating plant, the purchase and setting out of the young trees, the clearing of incidental brush and stones, and the defense of the young saplings from rabbits and insect pests. Next comes three years of close attention—watching, cultivating, irrigating. Once a year, the whole tract must be fertilized. Then, three seasons after ground is broken, the first fruit appears. Three years more, the orchard is paying running expenses, but it is ten years from planting before the tract is bearing in sufficient quantity to insure profits in good and bad years alike. As before stated, it is then in a way to pay its owner handsomely if he is vigilant, careful and has average luck.

Wrapping Oranges.

Picking the Fruit.

Oranges the Year Round.

Although oranges are harvested and shipped by the thousand carloads during all the twelve months of the year, the busy season is from December to May. April, when the fruit is best and most abundant, being the season's climax. This continuity of sale is one of the great virtues of the orange as a profitable crop. The grower can sell whenever he likes, providing he holds his fruit on the trees until he is ready to ship. From bud to bursting fruit, it takes an orange a year to develop; it keeps its freshness indefinitely while left on the parent stem. The grower can thus watch prices, calculate the fluctuations of the market, and sell when it seems to be to his best advantage. Once picked, the crop must be hurried from tree to car with all possible speed if it is to land in the big Atlantic markets in first-class condition. The average space of time between picking in Southern California and sale in New York is thirty days. This custom of leaving ripe fruit hanging makes a group of orange trees rather an unusual sight to persons accustomed to ordinary fruits. Blossoms, buds, green and golden balls will hang together on the same branches. Hardly a farm of the South but has ripe fruit on the trees at all seasons of the year.

Gathering and Packing.

In no department of agriculture, except perhaps wheat-harvesting, has so much mechanical ingenuity been called into play as in the gathering and picking of the orange crop. The crop is picked by hand. At this stage, the greatest care is necessary to prevent bruising the fruit. A bruised orange in Riverside or Redlands is a rotten one in New York. The pickers generally work with a canvas bag gathered with a draw-string at the bottom, from which the oranges roll gently into boxes. In this shape, they go on to the big packing-houses, and from that time on only one process, wrapping, is done by hand. There is a machine to nail together the boxes, which come "knocked down," driving all the nails on a side with a single blow; a machine with long, spiral, revolving brushes to clean the fruit and carry it on. There are machines which take the fruit from big general bins, sort it into sizes mechanically, and drop it into padded bins ready for wrapping. This last process, together with the placement in boxes, is done by deft-fingered girls. These wrappers stand beside the bins, emptying them constantly, as they place each orange in a square piece of tissue paper, wrap it tight, and lay it compactly in boxes. The stamp certifying to the number of oranges in each box is affixed, the top is nailed down, and the completed product goes on flat cars for shipment in the refrigerator cars.

A few years ago the whole orange crop was marketed through great companies who controlled the prices. It was hard to overcome their monopoly, because they owned the indispensable refrigerator cars, but a fight of long duration on the part of the orange growers broke their power, and now the farmers themselves market their fruit, this being done through exchanges, with sub-exchanges in each settlement. These organizations take full charge of all shipping and marketing, give notice to the growers when their shipments are wanted, put the boxes on the train, and return the proceeds, less their own discount, to the growers.

CRANE'S VERSE.—A friend of the late Stephen Crane says that the young author declared he had given deeper thought and more careful attention to "War Is Kind," his second volume of verse, than to almost anything else he had written. Many of the verses, he explained, had been jotted down while he lay hiding from the Spanish soldiers in the hut of an old Cuban woman. The volume was received with ridicule in this country, as it deserved to be.

HOW CASTE IS LOST.—An Englishman recently arrived in India, while going up the Ganges, beheld an aged Hindu lying exhausted on thebank. Raising the native he poured down his throat a little cologne, the only stimulan the had at hand. The man revived, but he had lost his caste by swallowing the liquid administered by a man of no caste. Several times a week from that day the Englishman was solemnly cursed by the old Hindu whom he had saved from dying.

MEXICAN EMIGRATION.—Mexico seems anxious to get back the sons and grandsons of her former citizens, who are now citizens of the United States, living in California, Colorado, Arizona and New Mexico. In a colonization concession recently made the governmen tstipulated that all colonists must be from foreign countries with preference for those of Mexican origin now in the States and Territories above mentioned.

WHAT BARS THE WAY? Not the Chinese Dragon, but the International Green-Eyed Monster.

SPEAKING OF LI HUNG CHANG.

"He's up against the real thing now."

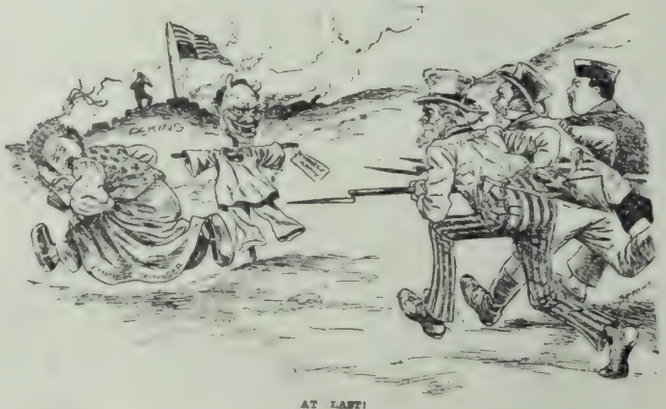
THE CHINAMAN'S CHOICE.

THE CHINK—"Maybe his book no use but I think his gun be all lighter"

"SEE?"

DON'T LET HIM FOOL YOU, UNCLE!

The Chinee-Melican man velly smart, but no see ministers in hattee
Ministers in hattee allee times allee same!



AT LAST!

NOW WILL YOU BE GOOD?

Grant Wallace in San Francisco Chronicle.
Walker in St. Louis Republic.
Simons in Brooklyn Eagle

Corry in New York World.

Bowman in Minneapolis Tribune
Corry in New York World.
Philadelphia Inquirer.

CARTOONS OF THE CHINESE EMBROGLIO.

A Happy Man

Signor Salassa Discources on the World's Desire-

"He comes nearest to being a happy man of anyone I ever knew," an Italian acquaintance of San Francisco said to me concerning Signor Salassa the great baritone who heads the Tivoli Grand Opera Company.

"Why so?" I asked.

"Wait until you see him."

So I sought Signor Salassa to learn the secret of happiness.

On the stage, made up as Iago, Salassa has an antique Italian face, fit for one of the characters of the Decameron; in his apartments in a flat of the Latin quarter, he appears as a large, heavy-set Latin with a face—barring the complexion—as near like Ada Rehan's as a man's can be like a woman's. He knows only one phrase of English—"How do you do? I am glad to see you." But his manner in saying it, is a whole language of welcome. Never have I met a man who exhaled such a breezy atmosphere of good-fellowship—not the cheap and flabby good-fellowship of the politician, but the sincere cordiality of the man who loves the world and men, because he finds them good.

" 'A happy man' ," I thought; "he certainly looks it." Forthwith I began to question him on his mode of living, as an introduction to prying into his secret.

"System," he said, through the interpreter; "that is my guide. It is the only way for an artist to work and last. Everything is just so, everything is done on the hour and the minute, and one day the same as another. It is the only way."

"But don't you find it monotonous?" The singer raised his shoulders above the level of his ears.

"Why should I? It makes it possible for me to sing and keep well."

"But I thought that the artistic temperament was capricious, that artists of all kinds were disposed to be irregular."

"Ah, there you have the secret of the downfall of so many artists"—the word artist means "singer" and nothing else to Salassa—"the ones who learn to control their caprices live and go on, the others fail. In my class at the conservatory at Turin, there were thirty graduated. Five of them are living and singing to-day, the rest are dead or broken down. We five are not the best, but we are the ones who learned to control ourselves. With my people, art is intense, passionate, and those who are not careful burn themselves out and die."

"Wasn't it hard at first?"

"Undoubtedly. I had to learn it as part of my profession."

A life of monotony, one day the same as the other. Not much happiness in that, I thought. So I changed the tack.

"But what do you do for recreation—how do you amuse yourself when you are not at work?"

"I rest. Sometimes I lie down, sometimes I take a stroll."

"Haven't you anything else to occupy your mind? Don't you do anything to make you forget your profession?"

Salassa's voice and manner were volcanic as he answered:

"Forget? Why should I try to forget? There is nothing else for me. If I rest I think about it. Sometimes a friend comes to see me and we talk it over. We sit down at the piano and play. I have no other interest. I am sincere when I say this. I will give an example. Between engagements I am at Milan, which is just like Paris at the height of the season—amusements, society, races, pretty women—you can enjoy yourself pretty well there. Do you know what I do? I go for a day or two to the home of a friend in the country where I can take care of myself and talk about music, and then I return to the city and stay around the opera house until my season opens. I have my wife and my music. It is all I want."

I came out with it boldly:

"They say that you are a happy man, Signor Salassa. Is it so?"

His face grew serious as the interpreter translated my question, and he thought for a while.

"Yes," he answered presently, "I think that I am happy. I do not know of anything which a man could reasonably want that I can ask for. It never was suggested to me until lately, and I am sorry that it was said, because I would rather be happy and not know it. Mostly, I am too busy to think about it, but I suppose that I am happy."

I rose to go, having been warned that that precious voice must not be overstrained by too long an interview. I believe that I shook hands with Salassa three times on the way out it may have been four—just for the pleasure of performing that time-honored ceremony with a man who means all the good therein expressed.

"Tannhauser goes well," he called down the stairway to the interpreter. "You should hear Avedano—grand, magnificent—ah, Tannhauser is the test of a tenor, and he stands it."

"That is always the way with Salassa," said Mr. Patrizi, the interpreter, when we were outside. "No professional jealousy in him. I believe that he would rather see Avedano do well than do well himself."

"I wonder if that is a cause or an effect of his happiness?" I said. I.

Avedano and Anna Lichter in Othello, a Tivoli Impression.

Rods and Lines at the Paris Exposition

If good old Izaac Walton should drop into the Paris exposition and wander into a particular pavilion with the inscription "Chasse et Peche" over its portico, he would gaze a few moments with open-mouth, throw up his hands to heaven in silent but powerful ejaculation and would rush back to "Je Recorde of je Compleate Angler" to add several chapters on "Je Unspeakable Degenerescance of je Moderne Fisherman." For he would have seen such an array of hooks and spoons and nets and reels and rods, and gut and line and bait, kettles and baskets and spinning traces; he would have seen the proofs of such diabolical ingenuity in fish-luring as to shock all of his good old Briton conservatism, and sense of fair play.

There are a variety of exhibitions. The well-known house of Allock shows some beautiful specimens of split cane trout or salmon rods with admirable combinations of greenhart and cane, which unite strength and spring to a remarkable degree. They also specialize with a water-proof line which resists the action of salt water and will stand all climates. Their hooks are rust-proof and made bright or bronzed.

At Messrs. Petit's stand the angler will find a new element, the bamboo and the roseau. Like other French makers, M. Petit never weakens the bamboo by paring down the joints with view to symmetry. Buy a bamboo pole from him and you'll never want another. Another feature here is horsehair for the line instead of gut. French horsehair is a wonderful product; in a lake the angler will take half a dozen fish on hair for every one on gut. Wyers Freres may be called the Anglo-Franco firm. These makers have struck a new line by their intelligent combination of French and English methods. Their bamboo rods are in the French style, untrimmed, but finished with the English made rings. Their hooks are of all popular English shapes, but beaten flat at the end, in French style,and tied on direct instead of being whipped. This is an immense improvement, as the shank is hidden by the white hair. The great success, however, is in bottom fishing rods. For roach poles they use a kind of reed that is literally as light as a feather in proportion to size, the top of the pole being bamboo. Among other novelties is a new aluminum reel, a double-barbed hook that will hold on the slightest provocation, and a device preventing the loosening of rods at the point.

is published every Saturday at The Wave Building, 24 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal., and Colman Building, Seattle, Wash. Entered at the Post Office as second-class matter. Subscription: Per year, $2.00; six months, $1.25; three months, 75 cents. Foreign subscription (countries in postal union) $1 per year additional. Sample copies free.

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY
PROPRIETORS

Chinese Drama in San Francisco, by Will Irwin..... 2
"Nai Yim, the Fish-fighter," by Basil Thomson 4
In the Track of the Trade Wind..... 5
Orange Growing in California..... 6
Cartoons of the Chinese Embroglio..... 8
A Happy Man..... 9
Editorial Comment..... 10
Events Current..... 11
The Late C. P. Huntington..... 12
Things and People..... 14
The Piece of Gold..... 16
Magazines and their Makers..... 19

San Francisco — August 18, 1900 — Seattle

Collis P. Huntington.

SILENT be the tongue of envious slander and let the truth be spoken of Collis P. Huntington. His great over-mastering mind is stilled, and the hush of death has fallen all about him. Speak the truth of him. He is dead now and can no longer feel the sting of envious hate nor take satisfaction from approving phrases of his friends. In his lifetime he seemed unmoved by the infamous calumnies heaped upon his aged head, and yet, he must have realized the base ingratitude of it all, and keenly felt the hurt, even though concealing it. His was not a nature to be moved by the blandishments of flattery nor diverted from a well-considered purpose by fear's misgivings. He was brave beyond the run of ordinary man. He did not know—and, if he knew he did not care for—the fear of popular displeasure. He tried to be honest with himself and with the world. He was not afraid to speak his mind on any subject, at any time or at any place. And if called upon to do so, he could fully justify the faith within him. Fear never took up lodgment with him. He was brave to the point of indiscretion. Even his unkindest critic must concede him that much, together with the higher attributes that ever go hand in hand with moral courage.

What, in all of his lifetime, had this man ever done to engage the unjust hostility of any man in a State whose welfare he had labored to forward with such untiring diligence? He had succeeded where others had failed, and, while success itself might operate to set him up as a shining target for the shafts of slander, it could neither justify nor excuse the wrong. He might have escaped the flings of envy and ingratitude, by moving his energies elsewhere, but the State would have been loser by the transaction.

He was true to his friends. A rare and noble trait which no man will deny him. He never did things by halves. Those whom he did not like, he did not like, and that was the end of it. And yet no one was more prompt to mend an injustice in this respect, if injustice had been done. The man upon whom he bestowed his friendship never was haunted by fear of its being exhausted by time. No amount of abuse, no amount of fault-finding, could disturb his faith in those whom he trusted. He was loyal. Having once placed his trust, it required some overt act of the recipient himself to disturb his great faith. Exterior forces could no more stay it, than could the finger of an infant block the progress of the universe.

He was brave. He was fast in his friendships and loyal to his friends. Will any man privileged to speak deny him these things? Yielding him these rare qualities, will any man deny him the possession of the accompanying attributes of heart and mind that inevitably go hand in hand with loyalty and valor?

There are some things which rich men are often prone to do, against which his whole spirit rose in rebellion. The cheap sentimentalism of indiscriminate "charity" did not appeal to his nature. It is difficult to conceive of his ever having ostentatiously performed any act for buncombe or popularity's sake. If he ever gave in charity, it was because he had investigated that charity and found it deserving. If he contributed to a popular subscription, it was because the purpose was worthy, and the hands entrusted with disbursements honest.

He had taken up some charitable works, and they are typical of the man. He took a broad interest in the development of the negro race in the South. It was most fitting to his character that he should have entered this neglected field and turned his efforts and his money toward elevating this ostracized race. There were no spectacular effects nor popular applause possible in such an undertaking. It was useful, practical, and free from the elements that appeal to the demagogy of wealth. He did not spend for the praise it might bring, but for the good it would do. He did not blindly pour into appealing but incompetent hands, the funds required, then lie back and watch the squandering of his generosity. He mastered the situation himself, and bringing that rare judgment of his to bear upon the question, saw that the undertaking did not lack for necessities nor suffer from incompetency.

He liked self-helpful men. He had rather supply a shovel to Want that it might earn its bread, than dismiss the appeal of Hunger with a piece of money that it did not earn. His vast undertakings, his untiring zeal to build and develop, gave employment to countless thousands of men. He had no love for the easy side of life, no sympathy for idle wastefulness. He did not believe in teaching a man, through short-sighted generosity, that he might live without labor. He believed that the highest use to which wealth could be put was to provide employment for the man willing to work. He believed a nation of workers to be more desirable than a nation of beggars, and that alms carelessly given to a healthy beggar wrought harm to the man as well as to the nation. The slanderers of Mr. Huntington declare him to have been a monopolist. The only monopoly he seemed to enjoy was that of enterprise. Was it monopoly or enterprise that pushed the steel rails down into the valley of the San Joaquin, enriched thousands of land holders, and wrested from primitive nature a principality and gave it to the world? Was it monopoly or enterprise that climbed Tehachapi pass, forced its way across the Mohave desert, pierced the Cucamongo range and opened up the beauties of semi-tropic California? Was it monopoly or enterprise that sent out innumerable lines of railway, tapping the fruitful valleys of the state and grid-ironing California with life-giving arteries along which commerce and agriculture might pass to and from the markets of the world? Did ever any man partake of more achievements for a state? Did ever any man pay a heavier penalty for success? Toil begets success, success begets envy, and envy begets slander. Such has been the experience of this man, at least. During Mr. Huntington's lifetime, his personal financial credit stood highest where he was best known. He never defaulted in a moneyed obligation. His was essentially the financial end of the great institutions over which he presided. In the history of these roads, he never defaulted a single dollar of principal or interest. He has negotiated for millions upon millions of dollars, and in the financial centers his naked promise to pay was equivalent to a bond secured by ample collateral. California has lost the one man above all others most interested in her permanent development History may do him tardy justice. He has served the state beyond all measurement, and time will not efface from the hearts of some strong men, a tender memory of this brave, loyal, rugged old man, who, with those he loved, was as gentle as a child, with those he trusted, as constant as the sun.

Bryan's Indianapolis Speech.

THE country has waited with proper patience for Mr. Bryan's opening speech of the campaign. For he was expected to meet a serious charge seriously made by one of the great men of the nation. Senator Hoar, the most notable opponent of expansion in America, had solemnly charged Mr. Bryan with duplicity and bad faith. He had charged Mr. Bryan with favoring that clause of the treaty which gave the Philippines to this country. Had charged him with supporting the very measure he is now so indignantly denouncing. In patience we have awaited that gentleman's reply.

Mr. Bryan in his Indianapolis speech admits that he favored the whole treaty—Philippines and all!

Every reader—every man in America, except the densely ignorant man—knows that the clause of the treaty which ceded the Philippines was beaten. We all know that an opposition under the leadership of Senator Hoar had secured enough votes to have defeated that clause, and it was defeated, until—as Senator Hoar publicly charges—Mr. Bryan came to its rescue and by his individual efforts procured enough Democratic supporters to make up the necessary two-thirds vote.

Mr. Bryan, in his Indianapolis speech, admits this charge. Is he lying now, and maliciously misrepresenting the effects which that treaty will have upon the country if pursued to its logical end, or is he now telling the truth? If he is telling the truth to-day, then, when the treaty was up for ratification before the Senate he was false to his country, false to his principles, false to every attribute of honor, and true only to a selfish and damnable desire to create an issue upon which he might bid for the votes of his countrymen, and behind which he might conceal his disastrous and dishonored hobby of Free Silver.

* * *

But listen now to his lame and miserable excuse, and let some intelligent man come forward and declare his satisfaction with his sincerity. Either Mr. Bryan was dishonest when be supported the treaty or he is dishonest in his opposition to it now. Groping about for a plausible reason for his manifest duplicity, he offers this most implausible explanation:—

"In view of the criticism which my action aroused in some quarters, I take this occasion to re-state the reasons given at the time. I thought it safer to trust the American people to give independence to the Filipinos than to trust the accomplishment of that purpose to diplomacy with an unfriendly nation."

In other words, Mr. Bryan favored the payment of $20,000,000 to Spain for the Philippines, because he thought it "safer to trust the American people to give independence to the Filipinos" than to trust Spain to do the job.

Think of it!

He favored taking all of the desperate chances which he is now picturing in lurid colors, when he might have quietly killed the threatening measure in its infancy and offers as his sole excuse a desire to give the Filipinos independence.

Do you believe it?

But besides all this, Mr. Bryan maintains that the constitution (by the operation of this same treaty) followed the flag into Porto Rico but in the same breath denies that it followed the flag over into the Philippines. To carry out his wierd notions of things, he proposes to lock up the Constitution so that he may violate it. He proposes to set aside the verdict of the civil war; he proposes to wipe out the principle that was maintained at the cost of tens of thousands of lives and hundreds of millions of dollars in the war of the rebellion! He proposes to establish a precedent for secession. He proposes to lay a foundation upon which future rebellious states and territories may base their claims for divorcement from the Union and so fasten upon us a policy most dangerous to the safety of the republic. No man has had the temerity to publicly advocate such an unholy doctrine since South Carolina attempted to secede.

* * *

Read Mr. Bryan's Indianapolis speech carefully through to the well-rounded peroration. Mark the horror and indignation that is woven and interwoven with the Philippines, the dreadful calamities, the dark forebodings, the tottering Republic upon which an Empire is to grow. He rings every alarm bell of rhetoric, he shakes the danger signal from every studied phrase. The horizon of the future is dismal with the smoke of calamity, and all is woe, unless he be elected.

After you have wrought your patriotic fears up to the proper pitch of sensitiveness, bear well in mind that it was Democratic votes, secured by this same Mr. Bryan, that made ratification of the treaty possible; bear well in mind that he favored the treaty and confesses it; bear well in mind that if the Philippine clause had been stricken from the treaty there would have been no question of Imperialism in this campaign; bear well in mind that the adoption of the Philippine clause cost this nation twenty millions of dollars, bear well in mind that all of these evils, all of the calamities, all of the dangers, that Mr. Bryan's speech depicts—if they are all well founded—were created by that treaty which Mr. Bryan says he favored, because he "thought it safer to trust the American people to give independence to the Filipinos" than to trust it to Spain to do so.

Do you believe him? The credulity that approves such nonsense, approaches gullibility.

Mr. Bryan was busy manufacturing issues for this campaign when the treaty was before the Senate.

If he is telling the truth now, if he believes all that he claims to believe about expansion, if he loves his country better than he loves votes, then, the time to have opposed expansion and "saved" the country, the time to have husbanded that twenty millions of dollars, and avoided the dangerous precedent of legalizing secession, was when the treaty was up before the Senate. Would not you, or any other loyal American who assumed to discover such dangerous possibilities in the Philippines, have killed the measure in its infancy while you had the power to do so? Would you have encouraged and aided the ratification of the only thing that made expansion possible?

* * *

But follow Mr. Bryan's explanation a little further. He says:

"I believe we are in a better position to wage a successful contest against Imperialism than we would have been had the treaty been rejected."

Think of it. Does this deceive anyone? Think of the hunter who has trapped a man-devouring lion turning him loose so as to be in a "better position to wage a successful contest against him." Think of this "peerless statesman" who advocates and passes a threatening and otherwise defeated measure before Congress, for the purpose of "being in a better position" to beat it. There would have been no question of Imperialism if the Philippine clause of the treaty had been rejected. There would have been no question of Imperialism if Mr. Bryan and his Democratic followers had simply remained silent. In point of fact, there is no question of Imperialism now, no danger threatening us. Alaska has been a colony for thirty-three years. The people up there have no government of their own; they do not and cannot vote. Congress and the Secretary of the Interior govern Alaska, just as Congress governs the City of Washington and the District of Columbia, and yet we are not "half empire, half republic," and neither "despotism at home" nor "tyranny abroad" has ever come to us.

EVENTS CURRENT.

The Trouble in China. The advance of the allies toward Pekin is progressing beyond all expectation. On Aug. 10th, the van-guard, composed of one Siberian regiment, one regiment of mounted Cossacks, three battalions of Japanese infantry, and an American battery was twenty-seven miles from the walls of Pekin. The Chinese resistance seems weakening as the international column advances. It is suspected, however, that the Imperial Army is concentrating for its last stand at Tung Chow, twelve miles from Pekin. This place is said to be heavily fortified and all the vigor of the international army may be tested to the utmost in forcing a passage. A Shanghai dispatch tells of a "rumor" that the allies are already at the gates of the Imperial City, but Shanghai "rumors" have been found wanting too many times to be taken seriously. The next few hours, however, may bring news of the utmost importance. The Pekin drama is drawing to a close and the whole world is waiting with bated breath to see an end that may be tragic, or melodramatically satisfactory.

From the imprisoned legations, the news is obscure and meagre. Embassador Pichon of France reports his legation still beleaguered, and warns his government against Chinese negotiations tending to retard the advance of the relieving corps. Conger's dispatches are incoherent. He does not answer the queries of his government and it is strongly suspected that he does not receive them. With the international corps so near, the legationers are close to a last crisis. At any time a defeat of the Imperial Army outside the walls may bring down upon them a mad attack from an infuriated soldiery. It behooves the commanders of the international force to be cautious. The desire to see their flags floating triumphantly over the Imperial City must not make them lose sight of the human lives at stake.

After Pekin, the deluge. There are signs that the present international co-operation will not last after the rescue of the legationers. Great Britain is already acting by herself. English troops are being diverted from the international relieving force, where they are much needed, and landed instead in Shanghai, where they are internationally unnecessary. Possession of the entire Yang-Tse valley, the richest part of the Empire, is alleged to be the aim behind this move. On the other hand, Russia is landing men in Newchang, much to the alarm of Japan. France, Russia and Germany are united in opposition to the landing of British soldiers in Shanghai, while Japan and Great Britain are upbraiding Russia for its Newchang move. The United States government is wisely keeping out of the squabble. The present condition seems to indicate a grand international mix-up in the early future.

American Co-operation with Philippine Insurgents. The report that certain members of the Anti-Expansion League have been in conference with the Philippine insurgents, urging them to resistance, has been definitely proved. Some months ago, General Funston captured a quantity of Aguinaldo's private papers. It was given out at the time that these included some traitorous correspondence, but the exact contents were kept a dead secret. The letters were forwarded to Washington, and the first is now made public. It is from Dr. Montague R. Leverson of New York, a prominent anti-expansionist, and addressed to Senor Apacible of the Filipino junta. Briefly, it describes President McKinley and General Otis as "pirates," making war without authority of Congress or consent of the American people. The writer urges the Filipinos to capture some American official and try him for piracy as a means of attracting the attention of European nations to the native "wrongs." He further advises that the junta appeal to the people of the United States, stating the atrocities committed by the American troops, among which are named the massacre of women, children and non-combatants, the violation of women, the bombardment, without warning, of peaceful cities, and the "lying tactics" of President McKinley. This document will probably be widely used by the Republican press as a campaign argument. In all justice, it must be said that it proves nothing against the Democratic party as a whole. Dr. Leverson holds no office in his party and probably speaks only for himself. But it proves the contention that the mysterious tenacity of Aguinaldo's followers in supporting a lost cause is traceable to the false hopes extended by the Anti-Expansionists in this country.

The Problem Before the New King of Italy. The accession of the new King of Italy, Victor Emmanuel III., is likely to be a turning-point in the history of the country. It is felt on all hands that the change in affairs will either precipitate the revolution which has been smouldering in Italy or will open a new era of peace and prosperity. The indications rather point to a favorable outcome. The young king was regarded, at the time of his accession, as something of a weakling. Fuller and more exact information shows that this opinion has been based on his diminutive stature rather than on his intelligence. It is now known that he has for some time been a power in the nation, participating in his father's counsels and policy. Furthermore, it is certain that his advice has been on the side of wisdom. He objected strenuously to Italy's continuance in the Triple Alliance, a policy which was responsible for the country's straightened finances. Again, he opposed the Abyssinian expansion policy which proved so serious a loss to the kingdom and a drain on its resources.

Victor Emmanuel will have his father's mistakes to straighten out. Although upright, honest, and well-intentioned, Humbert was not a strong ruler. Conscious, probably, of his own weakness, he leaned on the constitution, administering it to the very letter of the law. Italy's constitution happens to be a defective code; the part of the wise king would be to apply it with discretion, violating it when its application became absurd. This Humbert failed to do, and the result was a continually dissenting national Chamber, torn by violent party spirit. This produced internal dissension, which matched the external trouble caused by the keeping up of an alliance with nations too rich and powerful for a country of Italy's poverty. Those who know him believe that the young king will apply the constitution with discretion and will use all his authority to check the extravagances of his Parliament.

A Boer Success. Two weeks ago the telegraphic reports had General De Wet, commanding the Orange River Army of the Boers, finally corralled by Roberts and his British soldiers and on the point of surrender. The slippery leader, who is making a reputation for himself in South Africa at the expense of that of the English commander, has not only evaded capture, but has slipped clean out of the cordon, made his way across the Vaal and joined the army of the Transvaal burghers. It is really a serious set-back to the English cause, and, while it cannot prevent the inevitable end, it will delay it for some time. The force under De Wet numbers about 3,500 men. With the forces of the Transvaal proper, they should put up a lively guerrilla war, especially since the Boers of Western Transvaal are rising again as a result of this success. In a way, this makes Roberts' task the easier, since the forces in opposition are concentrated in one body instead of two, and will therefore be easier to "round up."

Special Laws for Chinese in the United States. In the current number of Harper's Weekly is an able article by John E. Bennett of San Francisco on "The Chinese Tong Wars in San Francisco." The relation of the highbinder disturbances there given is a familiar story to all Californians, but the valuable part of the article is contained in the recommendations of Ho Yow, Consul-General at San Francisco, here for the first time set down. It may be said in passing that Ho Yow is the one Chinaman in America able to speak with convincing authority on the conditions and rights of his people in relation to those of the whites. He is highly educated in both Chinese and English, is an experienced diplomat, and his success in suppressing the highbinder disturbances of three years ago, after six predecessors had failed, stamps him as a tremendously able man of affairs.

Ho Yow contends that, as the Chinese are more widely different from ourselves than any other alien class, special laws should be made concerning them. First, he would have an extradition treaty, which would enable China to recall the criminals who make this country a refuge, and would thus keep out a dangerous element. Then Chinese consular courts could be established in the United States for the treatment of the Chinese criminal class. The Chinese here should be in direct charge of an imperial representative, who should keep a roster for identification. He should have authority to co-operate with the Chief of Police in choosing officers to regulate Chinatown, and have co-ordinate jurisdiction with local police judges for the trial of Chinese cases. In convictions of felony, sentence should be suspended and the convict should be transferred to China to be punished there. This would rapidly remove the criminal element. Ho Yow is irrevocably opposed to the jury system as applied to Chinese cases, giving it as his opinion that white men who could not be bribed in a case involving a Caucasian will accept corruption-money when a Chinese is on trial. He advises further that no certificate of incorporation be issued unless the application is approved by the imperial representative—the Consul-General. He points out that this seeming concentration of power in the hands of one man is mitigated by the fact, that should he deal otherwise than impartially, the whole Chinese population would rise up and demand his removal.

There is small likelihood that Ho Yow's advice will ever be taken by the municipal or governmental authorities. Very probably, they present the best solution, but there are grave objections. The disturbing missionary element in China has always protested against the extradition of Chinese criminals from the United States on the ground that Oriental justice is severe, ordaining death for crimes comparatively slight from our point of view, and that it is barbarously administered. This objection will still be emphasized. The jury system is so strong a bulwark of our law that an exception can hardly be made for the Chinese. Finally, the well known talent of Oriental officials for extorting bribes and corruption money would naturally cause our authorities to hesitate before placing almost absolute power in the hands of one man, as would be done should Ho Yow's suggestions be adopted. The present Consul-General has shown himself incorruptible, but he is an exception, and he cannot live a rule forever. Nevertheless, they are worthy of consideration.

The Provisional Alaskan Boundary. Our modus vivendi with the Canadian Government has aroused the ire of the anti-administration organs. Secretary Hay has been accused of selling American soil to the English; of sacrificing the interests of his country to the desire of gaining the good opinion of Britons; he has been called a traitor, a felon, and many other gracious

An Impression of Collis P. Huntington.

A FAVORITE expression of the late C. P. Huntington was that no man quite makes the round of the circle. It was his epigrammatic way of saying that no man is perfect. Power of accomplishment in one direction he knew was more often than not, balanced by weakness in another. Those who had been admitted to intimacy with the late president of the Southern Pacific Company, and to whom his character had been unfolded, thought him an exception to his own general rule. He came nearer making the round of the circle than any of his contemporaries. He was a man of unusual physical force, extraordinary will power and great grasp of intellect. He had, in addition, strong moral attributes. He was ascetic in his mode of life, rigid in fulfilling his obligations, of unswerving loyalty to his friends. In addition he had facility at doing things.

Few men in any country have united the power to conceive and the capacity to execute to the degree Mr. Huntington did. Whoever had relations with him was inevitably impressed by his foresight. He looked ahead; indeed, he had an insight into the future that might be called prophetic. I have known other and lesser men who could from a given condition of events, predict about what must happen. The capacity is simply a higher power of common sense. It is a faculty which dreamers often have. When one thinks of Mr. Huntington's career, what a magnificent dream it seems. Think of the power he has attained to. Think of the extraordinary range of his achievements. Yet the end of it all—these last six months in which he had reached the apex of his ambition—it was merely the realization of what he had set out to accomplish.

In the highest degree Mr. Huntington had the ability to do that to which he had set his hand. Most of us have aspirations, all of us desire riches and power. This man had both ambition and the will to realize it. Throughout his life you will find innumerable instances of this faculty. He was always planning ahead but taking also good care of the present. He was fond of saying that neither the past nor the future troubled him, and that he was occupied with today. Yet no man ever builded better for succeeding generations.

As An Employer.

It was a great privilege to have known Mr. Huntington well. In conversation he always gave you the best he had. From the men whom he considered as friends he obtained something more than honest service - it was an honor and a pleasure to work under so keen, so kindly, so inspiring and so loyal a master. But he was also a strict disciplinarian and he had the shrewdest knowledge of human nature. Industrious himself, he demanded industry from his subordinates. He had little use for the clerk who watched the clock, or jumped at the dinner bell. That was because he knew such men could not succeed. Success to him was simple enough, industry and thrift—work hard and spend less than you earn and the world was yours. By following these principles he had attained something of a competence he would tell you. For a moment you might forget the magnificent equipment which nature had endowed him with.

There was no better memory in America than that of Mr. Huntington. It was not geographical alone—yet I suppose he could summon up a mental image of every mile of his railroad; certainly he could tell you the name of every station between Portland and New Orleans. He could take you over the Chesapeake and Ohio mile by mile and explain the conditions under which every section was built. He never forgot prices, and would give you the cost of steel rails in the sixties, in the seventies or in any of the nineties, almost without thinking. Not only that, but be remembered the details of most of the business transactions he had engaged in during the long years of his most eventful life. William Mahl told me that often in New York, when in the preparation of financial reports it became necessary to review some ancient negotiation, he preferred to apply to the president for information rather than to the records. Mr. Huntington would throw his head back, look reminiscent, then say, "Yes, I remember, I bought that road from so and so; it must have been on the 12th or the 13th of November in '76, and I paid so and so much." Never a fact missing, and all stated as though it were the most natural thing in the world that he should remember so exactly.

His Loyalty in Friendship.

There is nothing that engages the admiration of men to such a degree as demonstrated ability. Those in his immediate environment, who saw what Mr. Huntington was doing and what he had accomplished were strenuous in their regard for him. The papers might say what they pleased—C. P. was the greatest man they knew, or were ever likely to know. Those who were in correspondence with him were immediately cognizant of his wisdom and his insight into affairs not only of the railroad but of politics and life. They know how clearly and how closely he reasoned out the problems of the moment, how seldom he made a misstep and how sagacious his conclusions ever were. They know further that he recognized and appreciated good work, that honest intentions excused errors.

When he had tied to a man only the man himself could break the cords of his faith and friendship. This was disposition as well as principle. He used to say almost any one might trick him once. He believed that the best service was had through implicit confidence. Indeed he could never have carried on such a series of immense operations save by conferring responsibilities and depending on his officers for their fulfillment. The men whom he so trusted, as I say, came to have a paternal feeling for Mr. Huntington. He was always interested in their work, always kindly and appreciative, but requiring a strict accounting and their best in unstinted measure. They are strong partisans these men, of the president of the Southern Pacific, and you must not put it down to the enthusiasm of the servitor, if they assure you he was the best man in the world. They are all too ready and willing to prove it.

Among the many stories that have been told of Mr. Huntington since his untimely taking off, for he should have lived a decade or two more to enjoy the fruit of his attainment, was one in which Henry Clews, the New York broker, told of a horse transaction that he had with Mr. Huntington. The latter had a pair of horses which he wished to sell to Clews. He asked $1500 for them. Clews refused, and he says that for several weeks Mr. Huntington haggled over these horses. The conclusion he drew was that the president of the Southern Pacific could be mean over small things however great he was in transactions involving millions. There was nothing Mr. Huntington loved as much as a trade. He enjoyed buying or selling and seldom did anyone get the better of him. It was through his skill and cleverness at trading that he laid the foundation of his fortune, and the faculty stood him in good stead in transactions of the greatest magnitude. Those who knew his propensity in that direction will appreciate the Clews' story realizing that Mr. Huntington cared nothing for the money involved but much for the opportunity of bargaining, and doubtless he was shrewdly observing his adversary, taking his measure for use in some deal of larger moment.

His Soc al Side

There was a social side to C. P. Huntington that the intimates of his family circle were privileged to know. He was a fine talker, full of humor and anecdote. His comments on men and events were crisp, frank and vigorous. He spoke his mind freely and wittily and few subjects there were he could not illuminate with a pregnant phrase. His best friends declared they had never known him to be at a loss in any company, for his vast experience, coupled with his extraordinarily retentive memory had given him material to match with any man's. Mr. Huntington liked to talk of his own life—of the deals he had engaged in, of the bargains he had made—episodes that always exhibited his sagacity and thrift. In some men this would be mere boasting, but these bits of autobiography did not convey that impression. The personal side was invariably subordinated to the intrinsic interest of the story. It was a good story about anyone. Mr. Huntington has told me dozens of such yarns, as he has all his friends but never in the spirit of vain-glory. He had measured himself too often with his contemporaries not to be aware of his own power but an egotist he certainly was not. He had far too much humor, too much common sense for that. He was much the best talker I have ever known. Besides, he was so obviously sincere and in so many things, extraordinarily simple. However, all this is merely saying he was a very great man and that he had many sides.

His Many Charities.

The assumption given such wide currency to by his enemies that Mr. Huntington was close in monetary affairs did him the most absolute injustice. He was truly generous, charitable, and tolerant. In business he was indeed strict, exacting his just due, but to no deserving cause did he ever refuse assistance. For the friends of his youth he had the tenderest feeling and for them he was always doing kindnesses. His old associates should never want as long as he could aid them, but he insisted on being convinced that their need was real. In indiscriminate giving he saw evil rather than good.

His theory was that the best charity is that which assists men to help themselves. He was always willing to support with both capital and advice the adventures of young and ambitious men. It was the scheme of giving he took greatest pleasure in. For verbal thanks he cared not a jot, but he did want to see his beneficiaries succeed and justify his confidence in them. During one of his visits to California he presented his niece Mrs. Burke Holliday with a house, and while looking over papers connected with the purchase he said to a friend that it was the one hundred and thirty-fourth house he had given. Mr. Huntington believed strongly in educating and uplifting the colored race, and to the various institutions devoted to this cause he contributed liberally. Booker T. Washington the eminent colored teacher and orator was his confidant and assistant in this direction, and those who knew Mr. Huntington's sentiments saw them reflected in the articles which Washington wrote for the Atlantic Monthly.

His One Hobby.

Mr. Huntington was very fond of pictures and his two houses, that on California street, San Francisco, and on Fifth avenue, New York, were full of valuable and beautiful canvas es. Sternly individual in all relations he purchased paintings not because they bore great names or that someone else had admired them, but because they appealed to his personal taste. He became a real connoisseur; several of the finest examples were of portrait of the best English, French and Dutch schools are contained in his collections besides some of the most notable examples of modern French art. There are two paintings by Daubigny in the California street mansion which are quite the most beautiful landscapes I have ever seen. The great Murillos have been hung in the expositions of the Art Association but the fine Corot, the Diaz, the noble series of portraits, the splendid Turners he reserved for his own delecation and that of his friends. It was Mr. Huntington's custom after breakfast to go into the art gallery and spend an hour with his pictures. There he received the men he wanted to talk with intimately. Nothing pleased him better than to find some one with a soul for color and art to whom he would show the treasures of his collection.

The subject of C. P. Huntington is not to be exhausted in a single article. I have made no mention here of his tremendous achievements, of his finely rounded career. His unique literary gift and his faculty at epigram are well worth comment and quotation. I have only tried to tell how he appeared to those whom he had given the privilege to call him friend.

J. O'H. COSGRAVE.

---

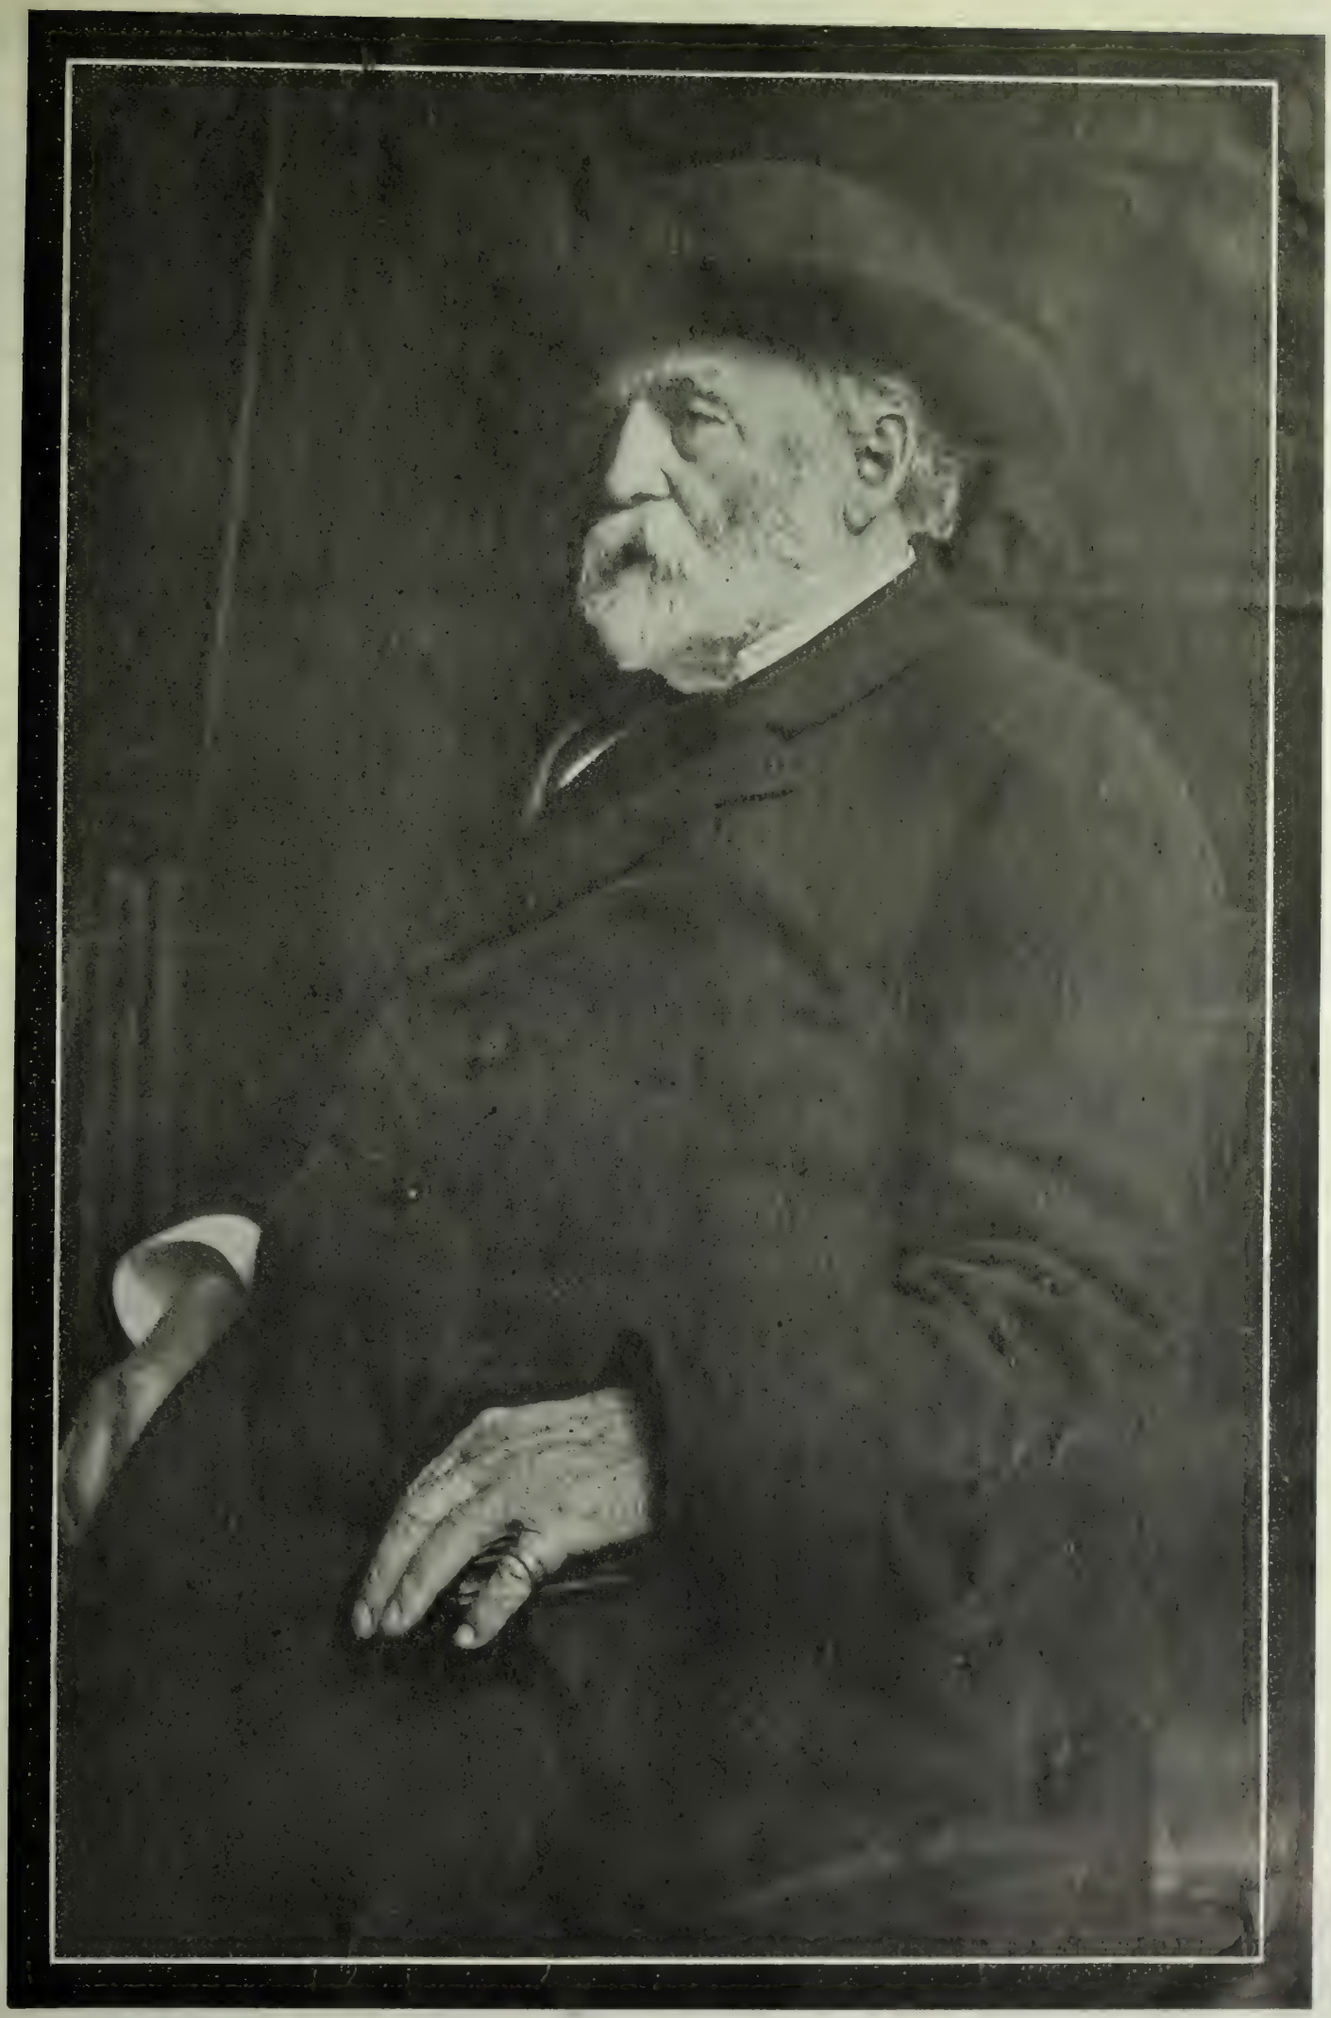
epithets. Of course, this is mainly campaign talk, aimed at the prejudice of voters. It may be well to summarize briefly the real conditions. The facts are these: The boundary between our Alaskan possessions and the Canadian territory is unsettled, and, naturally enough, the subject of some discussion between the governments. Pending negotiations that are bound to be long and difficult, the two parties have agreed to a modus vivendi. A provisional boundary has been decided upon and surveyed. It is a temporary working frontier, very useful to both governments pending the establishment of a permanent line, and harmful to nobody. If, in fact, there is any room for complaint, it should come from the Canadian side, for in the mutual concessions preliminary to this provisional compromise Canada gave up her pretensions to the extent of one hundred miles, while the United States yielded only ten miles. Were this modus vivendi a permanent arrangement, it would be a triumph for American diplomacy.

Old Age Pensions in New Zealand.

New Zealand, where the government approaches nearer to a system of State Socialism than that of any other state or nation in the world, is much disturbed over the probable result of one of its socialistic experiments—the old-age pension system. This plan of government relief provides that every man and woman who has reached the age of sixty-five and has lived twenty-five years in the colony shall be entitled to a pension of 6s 11d—about $1.72—for life. For some time after the passage of the law but few applications for relief were made. Lately, however, there has been a great increase in the number of pensioners. The sum required went up £60,000 in one year, and now something like £190,000 is required annually. This is paid out of the regular revenues. As the population of the colony is less than 800,000, it will be seen that the pro rata expense is already very heavy, and must advance as the years roll on, while there is no likelihood of a proportionate increase in the population. The legislators of New Zealand are already convinced that the burden is too heavy, and are discussing the revocation of the law or the shifting of the burden to a compulsory system of insurance.

Unsatisfactory Bids for Armor Plate.

There is a possibility that the provisional armor-plate plant provided for at the last session of Congress may have to be called into requisition. It will be remembered that a clause in the last naval appropriation bill provided that, if for plating of the new battleships were not satisfactory, the Secretary of the Navy should proceed at once to the erection of government works. The bids have just been opened and considered. While they are mostly inside the price, each firm demands a ridiculously large share of the work as a condition of acceptance. The lowest bidder was not satisfied to accept less than 20,000 of the 36,000 tons required. If such terms were accepted, work on the new ships would be seriously delayed, as no plant in the country could turn out single-handed such a quantity in the required time. The bids have therefore been cancelled and new ones are requested. If these fail to meet the requirements, the navy department will probably open its own plant.



THE LATE COLLIS P. HUNTINGTON

Enlarged from a photograph made by William Keith in his studio during Mr. Huntington's last visit to California. This portrait is considered to be the best ever made of the great railroad builder.

THINGS AND PEOPLE

Leave the Courts Alone.

IT is not a strange thing that the moment the press mentioned the probability of Mr. E. S. Pillsbury becoming a candidate for the United States Senate, it also fell to discussing his merits and services entitling him to the reward. Then Mr. Pillsbury fled the scene or what was more to the point appeared in a card declaring himself not a candidate. Any man might shrink from having a career held up to public view for the purpose of his unfitness for an office which he does not seek. But Mr. Pillsbury is not "any man." Mr. Pillsbury's letter to the press ought to be respected. It was intended as a Chinese wall to stay further encroachments of the press. If he is not a candidate, he is not fair game. Still Mr. Pillsbury is in politics. He is attorney for the Santa Fe railroad, and rumor has it, is to be their chief solicitor. Among corporation lawyers he is considered exceeding "wise," but he needs a political guardian or a private secretary with some wit. In his letter denying the slander that he is a candidate for senator he declares that his sole interest in politics is to elect good judges. He is unhappily frank. Either he does not view himself in the proper perspective or he does not understand himself, and does not care what the public thinks about it. Boxes of candy and social attentions to the other half of a judge's family do not influence decisions, but it may by careful recounting form a splendid basis for large fees.

* * *

There is a story—and it is not a new story—which tells of a lawyer who used to boast of having paid Kelly and Crimmins for a block of votes so as to secure a nomination for a member of the supreme bench. As things go in politics it was not such a bad thing to buy the rascals to vote for a decent man; but what shall we say of the man who boasts about it. Such a story recited to a rich client, even if told without embellishments, is well calculated to suggest an unholy parity between the judge and the practitioner, and forms a basis for a more than ordinary fee.

There ought to be some way of electing honorable men to our supreme and superior bench without the intervention of any corporation lawyer. The corporations do not monopolize the "lawyers with a pull" by any means, nor does it follow that any man is dishonest or corrupt because employed by a corporation, but one may be pardoned for objecting to such a lawyer interesting himself in securing good judges.

***

Strikers' Logic.

THE united mill hands of San Francisco have arisen in the majesty of organized labor to demand eight hours' work for ten hours' pay. It is nothing to them that, if their demands are acceded to, their employers must shut up shop and turn them loose on the noble army of the unemployed. They must have eight hours' work for ten hours' pay if they are out of work the rest of their days. They can live off the more honest section of their labor unions on the plea that they have been ruined by capitalistic oppression. Furthermore, they can spread their beneficent movement a little further by persuading other laborers, who have nothing to do with their business, to throw up good jobs and go on a sympathetic strike. It will be martyrdom in a noble cause. It will help the mill hands to wreck the business enterprises from which they derive their support.

***

Operatic Conventions.

EVERYBODY admits that there must be theatrical conventions. However, it seems to me that operatic people rely on these conventions too much altogether. That is the conclusion that I came to while at the Tivoli Opera House a few evenings ago. It was during the last act of Rigoletto. You know the scene—an inn cross-sectioned toward the audience takes up the left half of the stage; the other half is the country outside. The people inside the inn cannot see what is going on outside; the people outside can see what is going on inside through a convenient key hole in the inn door; the spectator sees what is going on both inside and outside. It is very handy. Well, I like music and am not hard to please. I accept all this. Inside, the Duke of Mantua flirts with the brigand's daughter. Outside, Rigoletto plots the Duke's death with the brigand. All these people sing with due vehemence considering the necessity of secrecy. Gilda, Rigoletto's daughter, comes and peeps into the inn to see the duke, who has betrayed her, flirting with the brigand's daughter. Then begins a magnificent quartette. Gilda gives voice to her despair, and Rigoletto proclaims his hate; inside, the duke flirts and the brigand's daughter laughs. The inside couple is not supposed to hear the outside couple, and vice versa.

* * *

Well, as I have said before, I am a good-natured person. I take all this for granted. I say to myself: Now, remember: couple number one sees not couple number two, and vice versa; couple number two hears not couple number one, and vice versa. It is just coincident that they sing together and harmonize so beautifully. It is by a mere chance that Rigoletto sings basso to the duke's tenor, that the brigand's daughter sings alto to Gilda's soprano. Only the flirting couple becomes excited. They glide forward and tell the audience their ectasy. On the other side, Rigoletto and Guilda step out and confide their woes to the same audience. Now the duke grows more and more gesticulatory, and suddenly —O horrors!—he forgets his boundary. The inn wall that separates him from the world outside ends a few feet short of the edge of the stage, and through the space thus left, he bobs out. I feel like crying, "Look out, you fool! Don't you see that is a wall you are going through? And Rigoletto will see you, sure! Get back!" Well, he goes back, but continues thrusting now an arm, now a leg, now half his body over the boundary. It looks exactly as if he were a spirit and was passing through the wall. The agony becomes intense. I know that Gilda must see him. At last, I can stand it no longer. I close my eyes and enjoy the music unhampered by the petty realities of life. The quartette ends in a furious crescendo. A thunder of applause comes from the audience. I open my eyes, and what do I see?

I see Rigoletto and the duke and Gilda and the brigand's daughter bowing to the audience in an endless chain. The wretches have taken hold of hands right through the wall!

***

The Call Banquet.

IT was a pretty idea that Mr. J. D. Spreckels had of meeting the entire force of his big daily at dinner last Monday. Owner, managers, editors, reporters, artists, clerks, stenographers, photographers, type-setters, stereotypers, machinists, fraternized together in one big family. In these days of division of labor, the different parts of great industrial organism are too apt to remain apart from each other, and the combination presented by the Call people is a refreshing one. Mr. Spreckels will not regret his idea. I am sure that the paper that emerged next day was the best issue in every way that had ever appeared; for there is nothing that causes a man to work with more pleasure than the knowledge that he is a part of a great army, each member of which is in sympathy with the other. It is an excellent precedent—I believe it is the finest instance of such an entertainment on record and I trust it will not be the last.

***

Again a Jay Town.

IT IS difficult for a community to support the expectations of all its visitors. Our late entertainers, the members of the Dunne and Riley combination, which held forth at the California Theater, are rather inclined to dub San Francisco a jay town. The basis of this contention is not the absence of support, because the engagement was fairly profitable, but the lack of enthusiasm. Here was an aggregation of farce comedy stars—the cleverest men and women in the profession. According to their ideas of the opportunity the "standing room only" sign should have been flying every night of the engagement. But it was not. One of the stars stood in the doorway of the theater on Sunday last watching the stream of gaily dressed women and children passing in to see the "Brownies." Said the star, with a contemplative toss of the head, "Funny, but I guess it is just what they want out here."

***

Political Dissensions.

IN SAN FRANCISCO political conditions seem rather disturbed at this juncture. The attempted resurrection of the firm of Crimmins and Kelly, contrary to the laws of nature, may be tolerated by the politicians, but will not be endured by the people. The County Committee is divided and the business men are organizing combinations, all of which will tend to the creation of dissensions that must aid opponents. If the Republicans are to have the opportunity to correct Democratic errors they must be united under strong and intelligent and respectable leadership, which is not the case at present. The office which the stupids are performing in Republican ranks J. G. Maguire and W. F. Tarpey are trying to execute among the Democrats. Posed as leaders of the "old guard," which, by the way, is composed of ex-followers of Buckley and Rainey, they are now engaged in a barking contest against the movements of the State Central Committee. A score of times has Maguire been heard to exclaim "special privileges for none—equal rights for all," which is the slogan of revolt for the clan. Mr. Tarpey, last of the "Ole Bills," continues to follow out the traditions of that disappearing order. Living in Alameda, and inured to defeat, rebuffs have no more terrors for him. He is veritably the trade-mark of failure. Sandbagging is an offense against the law, and surely there should also be some penalty for the windbagging tactics of which these gentlemen are making the committee the victim.

***

A Clever Cartoonist.

THE excellent cartoon work of Grant Wallace in the San Francisco Chronicle is attracting attention. Mr. Wallace inaugurated his career on the Examiner, and after the departure of Davenport did splendid service. He has an individual style and rather more skill at drawing than the average cartoonist. Then Robert Edgren appeared and he was relegated to the Sunday supplement, for which he furnished comic situations, done with much humor and cleverness. Those who are familiar with the cartoon work of the American press must concede Mr. Wallace a high place both for style and execution. He has not, perhaps, the ability to achieve the startling effects that characterizes Davenport, but he has a power of composition and a skill at drawing which the creator of the Mark Hanna libel does not evince. The improvement in his conceptions from day to day is most distinct and argues well for his future.

***

West Point Ethics.

THE ways of the West Point cadet are strange to the layman. We know that these young gentlemen will stand cheerfully any punishment rather than "tattle" or "peach" or "split" on a comrade who has broken the regulations. Yet at the same time, it seems that if the luckless offender dare himself to prevaricate slightly when asked embarrassing questions by the inquisitive authorities, then the point of honor changes. It becomes the duty of his comrades to "split" on him. In other words, the man who is bad at West Point is sure of not being found out—as long as he tells on himself. This somewhat complicated ethical principle is illustrated by a recent event. Forbidden eatables were found in the tent of the cadet. According to the custom, he was ordered to give an explanation within twenty-four hours. He did so. His version was that he had given orders that the objectionable dainties be cast out and had supposed that the order had been carried out. The authorities were satisfied with the explanation. But his fellow-cadets were not. It was decided that the embryo general had prevaricated and broken the West Point code of honor. His class had a meeting and appointed a committee to wait on the commanding officer and explain the true condition of affairs. This was done. An investigation in the form of a court-martial was ordered, and the epicurean cadet is in danger of being forever disgraced for having given a slight twist to the truth.

***

Temperance in Russia.

I LIKE the manner the Russian Government has of going at things. There is something direct and unquestioning in its method of dealing with social problems that appeals to me. There are no "if's" and "but's," no vacillations about it. Take, for example, the manner in which it is attacking the temperance question. The Russian peasant has always been a heavy drinker; but since he has gained his freedom has his passion become unbridled. He will spend all his earnings, his clothes, pawn the future result of his labor to fill himself with the vile stuff furnished by the publican, who in Russia is nearly always a pawn broker at the same time. The Czar's Government has taken the evil by the roots. How? Simply by becoming itself the liquor dealer. The trade is now a government monopoly. The administration itself runs the dram shops. The result is that the Russian peasant, although able to satisfy his craving for alcohol—a craving that is natural in some degree in that rigorous climate—gets liquor that is pure, only in moderate quantities, and is freed from the octopus grasp of the publican money lender. Of course, this is happening in a "barbarous" country and cannot serve us as example.

BOSWELL, JR.

The Hidden City of Yucatan.

Searching for Aztec Ruins. A Mexican Pueblo. Photos by Taber

THERE is a romance hidden in Mexico, if some writer has courage and enterprise enough to go out and find it. It deals with the mysterious and unquenchable Mayas, who, like their cousins, the Yaquis, have kept the Mexican government away from their fastnesses the whole century long. It tells of an ancient and jealously-guarded city, which these people are said to maintain and govern at the very top and center of their domain, and which no white man has ever seen. The tale may be a myth, probably is, but it is a stock story of every Indian and every trader on their borders. At night, when the camp-fires are low and the cattle are asleep, and the stars draw the secrets out of men, your Indian guide will sometimes grow talkative about the people of mystery and will tell you how a brother or a cousin or an ancestor has been told by a traitor Maya of the hidden city, or has met the mysterious guard which surrounds its approaches to drive out intruders, or has stood on the peaks beyond and seen its mud-baked towers gleaming in the desert sun. He has never been there himself; "he has heard," and he says that he believes. It may be a part of the native guide's stock in trade; what should that matter to the true romancer so long as the material is there?

The Maya Revolt.

These people are a remnant of the American race which stood third in power and civilization when the white man came. First, of course, were the Peruvians, who ruled in South America, not knowing that there were other races of almost equal power beyond the trackless isthmus. Second came the Aztecs, with their great cities in Mexico and their ruined past. Below the Aztecs to the south and east, the Mayas were lords of the country, and used to engage the rulers of Mexico in fierce, barbarian battles whenever the two races clashed on the border. It is probable that their nation was in its decadence when Cortez came; at least, the ruins which strew their land mostly bear evidence of an abandonment far older than the sixteenth century, but their race was still comparatively vigorous at that date, and their civilization was a shade higher than that of the Montezumas. Mexico conquered, the successors of Cortez turned their arms against these people of the south, tried their strength in a great pitched battle and conquered them. It was a terrible fight, one of those heavy and needless slaughters which marked the Spanish conquest. The Castilian historians, strangely enough, say little of this battle or of the customs and culture of the Mayas. We only know that they went down in a great, determined engagement at Tihao, an ancient city near the spot where Merida now stands, that the conquerors took much treasure, and that they razed the town. After that, there is no record of the Mayas for two hundred years. Whether their national life was ended in this stroke, or whether the work was finished, after the Spaniards had broken their spirit, by warring tribes on the borders, is not on record. When they emerged from obscurity in a border war begun fifty years ago, their palaces were crumbled, their territory shrunk, their ancestral characteristics lost, their civilization, so far as white man could see, obliterated, and they were only a small tribe of mountain Indians who had refused the yoke of the whites. They reappeared thus in 1850 or thereabouts. They began then a continuous war on the Mexicans and on those neighboring tribes which had accepted their yoke. Since then, they have successfully resisted attacks from the Mexican government, from the forces of British Central America, and from an army of American mercenaries raised on a forlorn hope to clear them out. The long war is still on. Only last month, they beat a force of three thousand Mexicans who tried to force them into submission.

The Mysterious Town and its Guard.

The great ally of the Mayas is the nature of the country—a mountainous desert, wherein the only water-supply lies under the earth in sources known only to the natives. Thirst, more than their skill at arms, has vanquished the forces sent against them; many a company of Mexican rurales has died under the desert sun, totally annihilated from thirst, before firing a single shot at an Indian. And this powerful ally keeps safe and close the secret of the hidden city, if, indeed, it be anything more than a myth.

Here is a sample of the border tales: A negro, following wild pigs, was led far astray by his quarry. He wandered about for several days, and in the end was taken by a band of roving Mayas. They bound him, set him on horseback, and led him a three days' march along narrow trails into a basin of the mountains. Halting there, one of the band blew a conch-shell horn; it was answered from above, and the whole party proceeded to a long, thatched house, carefully hidden in the mountains. Here an old, gray-haired chief, with a large retinue, appeared and questioned him closely through an interpreter. The examination was very strict; the man had to account for himself, to explain his presence and his motives. He told a straight story, and the chief, after showing some anger at the Indians who had captured him, had him put on horseback, blindfolded, and taken away. He was led for two days in this manner, when the cavalcade halted, removed the blind, and set him on a road which led to his home.

A Christianized Maya created a mild sensation among the Americans in Gautemala last spring by offering to guide a party of adventurers into the forbidden town. He said that he had often visited it as a trader, going in only under special permission from the chiefs and leaving when his business was finished. He had been only in the market-place, which he described as old but in good repair and surrounded by great buildings; a temple stands at the height of the city, and the palaces of the chiefs are grouped around it. The city is rigidly governed, and the walls are guarded night and day. No one was adventurous enough to call his bluff, if it was a bluff, but he is still telling the story.

Things spread in the telling; the mysterious city may exist and be nothing wonderful, after all. It may be an old city of the dead civilization where the remnants of the tribe are living in savagery amidst ruined splendors—it may be only a collection of Indian huts which tradition has made into a town of palaces. Or it may be a real survival of the days of old, with records to show the lost history of a race whose ancestors ruled Central America when ours were harrowing the north seas looking for an abiding-place.

Correspondence.

Bryan and the Paris Peace Treaty.

Editor of the Wave:

No one denies that Mr. Bryan advocated, and was largely instrumental in securing ratification of the Paris peace treaty. He did this because he deemed ratification without modification necessary to forestall possibility of international diplomatic complications. He sagaciously foresaw that Spain might have an opportunity to pose before the European Powers as an "injured innocent," if that treaty, all in favor of the United States, was sent back to her to be acceded to in a modified form less conciliatory.

It must not be forgotten that "strained relations" subsisted between Germany and the United States, and that France and Russia did not view with great complacency Uncle Sam's advent upon the Eastern continent. Dalliance by diplomacy, which would have resulted from the non-ratification of the Paris treaty, might have served to embroil us with these Powers had John Bull remained passive. This contingency Mr. Bryan had in view, and he urged that course of action which he deemed most certain to avert it.

Then again, it should always be remembered that Mr. Bryan advocated the passage of the "Bacon resolution" immediately following the ratification of the peace treaty. This resolution declared specifically that it was not the purpose of the United States to exercise permanent sovereignty, jurisdiction or control in the Philippines, but to allow the people of the islands to maintain self-government. In a word, by this resolution the United States pledged itself to treat the Philippines and their peoples as it was pledged to treat Cuba and the Cubans.

It will be remembered that this resolution was defeated by the vote of Vice-President Hobart, the presiding officer of the Senate, who had to cast the deciding vote to break a tie.

Had this resolution been adopted by the Senate, concurred in by the House, and approved by the President, there would have been no Filipino war, and no issue of "imperialism," in so far as the control of those islands are concerned.

JOHN AUBREY JONES.

Continental Building and Loan Association.

The growth of the Continental Building and Loan Association during the past year has been little short of phenomenal. In the past twelve months it has added to its subscribed capital two millions of dollars and to its assets $400,000. In the institution subscribed capital means subscribed savings. The stockholders of the Association are drawn from among the working classes, who find by the system in vogue they get a legitimate profit on the money they can afford to invest. The gross profits of operation for the past year amounted to $139,866.55, and the net amount turned into profit for the members amounted to $95,245. Dividends were 5 per cent on ordinary deposits, 6 per cent on term deposits, 10 per cent to "Class F" stock, 12 per cent to "Class A" stock. On June 30, 1900, the subscribed capital was $10,326,500, representing 103,265 shares in force. The assets at the end of June, 1899, were $1,321,845.14; at the end of June, 1900, $1,705,687.53, making an increase for the year of 29 per cent in assets and 22 per cent in shares in force.

The Piece of Gold.

From the French of Francois Coppee.

WHEN Lucien de Helm had seen his last bank-note raked in by the banker, he rose slowly from the roulette table and threw himself limply upon the leather-upholstered bench that followed the wall around the room. He felt weak and dizzy. For a few minutes he gazed vaguely upon the tables over which he had wasted the best years of his youth. He recognized the tired faces of some of the players, yellow beneath the lamp shades; heard the rubbing of the rake over the green cloth; told himself that he was ruined; saw as vividly as if they were before him the two holster-pistols in the left hand drawer of his desk, up in his room—the same pistols which his father, General de Helm, then captain, had used so bravely at the assault of Zaatcha; then he fell asleep.

When he awoke, broken with unhealthy fatigue, he was surprised to see that he had slumbered only a half-hour. The big clock on the other side of the room marked a quarter to twelve. With a bitter smile, he realized that in a few minutes it would be Christmas. A great longing for the fresh cold air of night seized him.

At the door, however, old Dronski, the classic Pole of the den, intercepted him. "Lend me five francs, monsieur," he mumbled in his unkempt grey beard. "For two days I have not left the table and for two days No. 17 has not come up. Mock if you please, but I would stake my arm upon it; 17 will come at the stroke of twelve."

Lucien de Helm shrugged his shoulders and passed by. Five francs! He did not have even that. He went out into the hall, put on his hat and pelisse and, with feverish agility ran down the stairs into the street. During the twelve hours that he spent in the den, much snow had fallen and the streets were white. In the black-blue sky, the stars scintillated coldly. The gamester shuddered and started to walk rapidly, drawn on irresistibly by the picture of the two pistols awaiting him up there in his room. Suddenly he stopped.

Beneath the monumental archway of a private residence, on the stone bench placed according to a by-gone custom against the wall, a little girl sat fast asleep. Her black dress was in rags and the collapse of the whole body told of fatigue, misery and despair. One of her shoes had slipped off her foot and lay in the snow. With a mechanical gesture Lucien's hand moved to his empty pocket, and then he approached the child in an instinctive movement of pity. Something glittering in the slipper at her feet drew his attention. He stooped down to see. It was a piece of gold.

Some charitable person had seen the shoe before the sleeping child and, remembering the Christmas legend, had dropped the munificent gift into it so that on awakening, she would know herself remembered by the "little Noel"—the children's Christ—who, on the anniversary of his nativity, goes about in the dead of night filling with presents the shoes which the little children place for him at their hearths.

"A Little Girl Sat Fast Asleep."

Twenty francs! It meant days of rest and well-being to the little beggar and Lucien was just on the point of waking her to tell her of her good luck when, right in his ear, with the distinctness of an hallucination, he heard the voice of the Pole murmur:

"For two days I have not left the tables and for two days No 17 has not come out. I would stake my arm upon it; at the stroke of midnight 17 will come."

And then a fearful thought took possession of him, a mad, hysterical, monstrous desire. He looked about him, saw that he was alone, and, with bended knee and trembling hand, he stole the gold of the sleeping beggar-child! Then, on the run, he rushed back to the gambling hell, clambered up the steps in a few mad bounds, burst into the room and, just as the clock sounded the first stroke of midnight, threw the piece of gold upon the green cloth with a hoarse cry.

"On seventeen, all!"

And seventeen won.

With a nervous jerk of the hand, he raked the thirty-six pieces he had won over to the red.

Red won.

He left the seventy-two louis on the red. Again, red won.

And then he was seized with a mad exultation. He could not lose. All of his combinations succeeded. It was supernatural luck. The little ivory ball hopping about in the compartments of the roulette seemed magnetized, fascinated by the eyes of the gambler. In ten strokes he had regained the night's loss, and now, risking enormous sums at each punt he was winning back the hereditary fortune which he had squandered through many mad nights of dissipation. The pockets of his pelisse which, in his haste to begin play, he had not removed, were bursting with gold and bank-notes; now he was stuffing with coin and paper the pockets of his frock-coat and vest and trousers, his cigar-holder, his handkerchief, his hat, everything which could serve as a receptacle. And he kept on playing and winning, mad with the frenzy of gain, throwing gold upon the table with insolent certainty of success.

But a hot iron seemed pressed against his heart and the picture of the little beggar maid asleep in the snow would not leave him.

"She is there yet," his thoughts ran, "she certainly is there yet. In an hour, yes, when one o'clock sounds, I'll go there—I swear it; I'll go out; I'll take her up, all asleep, in my arms and I'll put her to bed, in my room. And I'll adopt her, I'll love her like my daughter, bring her up like a princess; I'll care for her, always."

But the clock struck one, and the quarter, and the half, and the three-quarters—and Lucien was still at the infernal table.

Just before the stroke of two, the banker rose. "The bank has failed, messieurs," he said. "Enough for to-night!"

In one bound Lucien was up and out. From afar, in the light of a gas jet, he saw the child, still on the bench.

"God be thanked!" he cried. "She is still there."

He approached her and seized her hand.

"How cold she is, poor little girl!" he murmured.

He took her up in his arms. Her head fell back limply and she did not awake.

"How they sleep at that age!" he thought.

He pressed her against his heart to warm her, then seized with a vague fear, bent his head close to hers, intending to awaken her with a kiss.

But he perceived that her eye-lids were half open and that her eyes were glassy and motionless.

While he had been amassing a fortune with the piece of gold that he had stolen from her, the poor homeless child had died, died of the pitiless cold, of the pitiless neglect.

Struck to the heart with the terrible truth, Lucien gave way to a cry—and awoke, moaning on the bench of the empty gambling-hall where he had gone to sleep the night before. A pale, foggy light whitened the windows. It was dawn.

Lucien went out, pawned his watch, took a bath, breakfasted, and going to the nearest recruiting office, enlisted in the 1st regiment of "Chasseurs d'Afrique."

* * *

In Algiers, there is a first lieutenant of "Chasseurs" who is considered somewhat cranky. Of undoubted bravery—he has risen from the ranks to his present position,—a slave to his duty, he shuns the pleasures with which his brother-officers strive to lighten the monotony of garrison-life. Once, people explained this by saying that he was a miser. But one day a curious officer having seen him drop something into the hand of a little Spanish beggar-maid asleep against a wall, looked to learn the nature of the miser's alm. In the hand of the little girl was a piece of gold.

THE PROPRIETIES IN CHINA.—There is everything in the point of view. In China it is considered very unwomanly for a woman not to wear trousers, and highly indecorous for a man not to have skirts to his coat. It is no wonder that the Chinese look askance at the ordinary American or European who comes among them. To the Chinese, says the author of Intimate China, it seems very unfitting for a lady to go out unattended by a woman—and for a woman to stand firmly on her feet and walk on them like a man is shocking.

BALLADE OF CONCEIT.

To all ye Critics who come to chill
  And to smirch the work of the blessed few,
Who feed on the fancy they try to kill,
  I snap my fingers—the sapless crew!
What do I care if they bark and mew?
  This in the teeths of the mouths that whine:
What have ye wrought ye can say this to:
  "By Jove, I made it, and it is mine!"

Never a book that was writ so ill,
  Never a picture so false of hue,
Never a song with so little thrill,
  That it had not something I'm glad was true!
What if I fail? I can still pursue
  Joy of Creation, the gift divine!
And he who creates has at least this view:
  "By Jove, I made it, and it is mine!"

Thank God, who gave me the wits and will,
  And the raging passion to put it through,
I never saw task that took so much skill
  I dared not try, and I cared not do!
  My work is crude, and a bit askew,
You're free to condemn it, line by line,
  But, bred of my brain, in my heart it grew;
"By Jove, I made it, and it is mine!"

ENVOY.

Critics, your parasite life renew!
  Drink my conceit for it flows like wine;
Here is my poem, and here is your cue:
  "By Jove, I made it, and it is mine!"—Gelett Burgess

IN THE SWIM.

An Automobile Gymkhana.

The very latest is an automobile gymkhana which was brought off at the Ranelagh Country Club, near London recently. The first event on the program was called a "handicap bending race for motor carriages," the competitors having to twist in and out among a number of light poles stuck in the lawn, and on reaching the end of the course return to the starting point backwards. There were some very clever exhibitions of skillful manipulation as well as some clumsy ones by people who get rather rattled by the laughter of the spectators, and the first prize was won by Mr. Cecil Grimshaw, who moted on a double cylinder "sports" car in a very clean cut and convincing manner. Not only did he steer both forwards and backwards with consummnte ease, but he ran the double course at so rapid a gait that no one else was in it with him. The second prize was won by the Hon. C. S. Rolls on his Panhard car that was voted the winner of the recent 1000 mile trial trip or test trip from London to Edinburgh and back again.

Next came a competition in starting automobiles from "cold," all who took part having to manage motors fitted with the tube method of ignition, and the winner turned up in a Pengot machine of eight horse-power. The Hon. Mr. Rolls was also second in this event.

The fair sex had the third item all to themselves with a race in and out among some posts, there being half a dozen entries, and the winner being a young lady who had a six horse power Daimler car, and the second a married lady who engineered a De Dion voiturette so well that the judges displayed some hesitation in making the awards.

"The fourth event was called on the program a motor tricycle coat and waistcoat race," and the course was four times around the splendid stretch of lawn which was used throughout the afternoon for the display. At the end of the first lap the competitors had to stop, take off their coats, hang them on pegs sticking from a row of posts, and go on again, and the same process was repeated with their waistcoats at the end of the second lap. At the end of the third, both garments had to be put on again "and fully buttoned up," after which another round had to be completed before the race was over. Mr. R. H. Langrishe, who had won the "starting from cold" competition, was the successful performer of these conditions.

An interesting item was the "sudden stopping" competition, those who took part having to dash along at a high speed, and pull up as closely as possible to a "property" brick wall, made of painted canvas, and which toppled over with the slightest impact. Several times it was knocked down, and in two instances the results to both motor cars and motor carists would certainly have been disastrous had the wall been the real thing. Others dashed at it at racing speed, and pulled up to a dead stop within a foot of the obstacle, a very skillful performer being Mr. E. Campbell Muir, who had a steam car of the Stanley make, and who was awarded the first prize. The second fell to the share of a Mr. Phillips, whose car was of French manufacture. He won the last event on the card with same car, and it was a very trying test of the "squirming" order, the lawn having been marked out with a course of abnormal curvings, and here and there the pilots had to run the risk of knocking down dummy policemen, ladies and children.

* *

Social intercourse in the Philippines is not without its especial difficulties. The mestiza hostesses have a way of asking embarrassing questions of their American visitors, based upon their faulty ideas of the matrimonial relation in America. Some of the good friars have given them to understand we are a nation of Mormons and that our respect for the marriage tie is the slightest. According to Town Topics, the conventional conversation invariably begins about this way:

(Eyes elongated with pleasurable expectation)—"How many wives has your husband had?"

(Evidently disappointed, and in a tone of condolence)—"Only you? Is it possible? I suppose he has but recently arrived at a competence."

(With renewed animation, and hopefully)—"And how many husbands have you had?"

(Dejectedly)—"Only this one? You astonish me!"

(Again, hopefully)—"How many wives did your father have?"

* * *

One American woman, who prided herself on her ready wit, and who had undergone several uncomfortable half-hours in regard to her married experiences, resolved to retaliate. It was at Cebu, on the island of that name. A marriage is not considered as fully consummated, over there, unless it is accompanied by a grand fiesta to which the whole island is invited and at which everyone eats, drinks and dances for three days at the expense of the bride's parents. The expense is something to stagger even the well-to-do mestizo. Consequently, even people in a good social position frequently assume the marriage relation and keep it up for an indefinite number of years before the tie is consummated by Church and wedding feast. Meanwhile, the husband-to-be stands as godfather for his children. Having this fact in mind, the American woman, with a ready wit, patiently responded to the usual questions one day and then proceeded to put some in return:

"How many children," she asked, anticipating great confusion on the part of her mestiza victim, "did you have before you were married?"

The mestiza calmly counted on her fingers: "Six," she said, "and three more since then."

Undaunted, the American woman returned to the charge: "And how many years," she asked, "did you live with your husband before you were married?"

Again the mestiza, unabashed, checked on her fingers: "Nine years," she said, calmly.

The American woman gave it up.

* * *

Archery in France.

Last season, the Frenchwoman made a mild effort to imitate the athletic, country life of the English girl. Out-of-door sports and the appropriate costumes became a mild rage. It was not a fashion which had any elements of stability, however. The Frenchwoman is not naturally athletic, and, more potent reason, she does not look at her best in short skirts and tailor-mades. Therefore, French society adopted a compromise in an archery craze. The practice of the bow and butts is not really an athletic sport, being four parts picturesqueness to one part strength and skill, and it does not require athletic costume. One can draw the bow very well when attired in the most fluffy and frilly of summer muslins. This arrangement suits the French so well that archery is likely to be a reigning amusement for the next few seasons. Tennis, which means harder work and plainer costuming, is being rapidly driven from favor.

One of the most fashionable up-the-river country clubs gave a big tournament last week. Most of the women wore delicate muslins and picture hats. A few, a very few, were dressed in the English country style. Very ill-dressed they seemed, too—as much so as an English girl seems in fluffy French gowns—and they were frowned upon and disapproved of by the majority of the ladies present. One or two wore linen gowns, half-way between serviceability and frivolity. A specially dainty one was of light green linen trimmed with Valenciennes lace. The skirt opened in deep V's around the bottom to show an underskirt made of pleats about an inch deep edged with Valenciennes. The bodice had a bolero with long sleeves, both pleated, and worn over a skirt of tucks and embroidery. The hat was of white pique trimmed with a scarf of green and white gauze and finished in a bow.

A gown which strayed further from the athletic idea was of white crepe with lace insertion run through the crepe in parallel lines and narrow black ribbon run through the insertion. The gown was mounted over rose silk. About the bottom of the skirt were several ruffles, one above the other, some of pink and some of thin white, and a fringe of velvet loops of irregular loops fell over this. The bodice had a bolero of cluny lace, closed in front with a chou of black gauze. The choker of black tulle had a small chou at the back, with long ends floating to the hem of the skirt.

Imagine, O my countrywomen, practicing a sport supposed to be athletic in such a gown.

MEDITATIONS OF A MATRON.

BY MRS. CRICKET.

I AM having such a very enjoyable time, my dear Diary, and living in anticipation of more fun every day. It is simply wonderful at Del Monte at present. All those who are here are practising golf, and swimming, and driving, and making up their minds how they can best give their friends a good time. I love the whirl of a big crowd. Robert loves the beautiful clothes and the girls. San Francisco is lucky to have so many really striking girls amongst her best people. So far it seems to me Edith Preston is the handsomest girl; she has also charming manners. Carrie Taylor is a great favorite though not so chic as Mrs. George Pope; she has a decided personality, which is always attractive. Therese Morgan generally looks well. She is getting quite athletic, and sits a horse admirably. Helen Wagner always attracts me; she has such a soft, sweet smile in her eyes and is so very sympathetic. I like to see her with her sister, Mrs. Macarthy, they seem to have such a good time together.

Now I must tell you, Diary dear, what we are doing. The most industrious, or shall I say ambitious, arise very early in the morning to play tennis or golf. Those practising for the tournament take it most seriously, and I think I have noticed a stereotyyed expression on the golfist's face that sort of reminds me of the bicyclist's rigid frown. I do wonder how it feels to have one thing mean as much to one as golf does to any number of girls. Mr. Folger and Mr. Fitzgerald are the two men whom I like to watch. Mr. Folger is stunningly built and attracts me so much. He plays so well but cannot make a better score than Mr. Fitzgerald, who is rather slight and decidedly a man with a brain. He is very jolly. Both he and Mr. Folger intend contesting for the cup. The prizes are quite worth while. I should like to have a cup bearing a flattering inscription; it would be so nice to fill with flowers on one's drawing-room table.

POLO AND GOLF.

The band stand this year at Del Monte, opposite the door, is a mass of vines and looks quite as though it was a permanency. I am sorry that we could not have a moon, but I put my trust in the fact that the place will be a mass of lanterns, and we shall need nothing else. The polo ponies from the South are arriving, also the men. We shall all miss Charley Baldwin at polo—he was so plucky and really a good rider. I hear that Ella's health has not improved at all, in fact I really believe that she is quite seriously ill. We all anticipate, however, that her return to America will make her strong again. I remember last year at this time we were so worried about Walter Hobart, and now he is outshining older players by his fine game of tennis. Everyone is fond of Walter. I do not know a nicer nor more thoughtful fellow. Mr. Raoul Duval is also very popular; he is delightfully polite. Beatrice and he make an ideal couple—they are so congenial. Mrs. Gilman Brown, Mrs. Johnson, and Edith McBean are all here from San Rafael. They each play an excellent game of golf. Mrs. Brown's is really masterful. I wonder shall I ever play like her!

I miss lots of the people of last year. There was Mrs. Cunningham, now Mrs. Folger, Emily Hager, now Mrs. Walter Dean and Katherine Dillon, who is at the Hotel Rafael. I cannot imagine anyone staying away from Del Monte at this time. We have lots of dinners and small suppers at the club house. Mrs. Eleanor Martin makes an admirable chaperon for Peter, who is forever giving all sorts of parties. I really like him—he is so gay and bright and such good company.

DISENGAGEMENTS AND BETROTHALS.

I received a letter the other day from Ethel Dorothy Patton telling me she is not engaged as was announced some time ago in the papers here, also telling me that Helen Woolworth was staying at the same hotel in Paris, also unengaged and unmarried. They, she said, had a great deal of fun over the disposition of their hearts and hands by the papers out here. We are to have two new engagements; one is one of the older girls of San Mateo county, who is to marry an Easterner and the other is some one we all rather expect to be engaged.

Allyse Latham, Helen Hopkins and Jane Greenwood are to have October weddings also, my dear Leila, so I advise you all to save up for wedding presents. They have been a great item this year; I have given over twenty since the first of January. Maribel Gwinn Follis has taken the Hart house on Jackson street near Octavia for the winter, and I believe will entertain in a quiet way. The Kips have taken the pretty little Garness house on Pine near Hyde. Clemmie, now Mrs. Edie, will remain with them during the winter; she is much better since her return from Manila. Emma Butler is the latest acquisition in San Rafael. She is the sort of girl that everyone likes and is decidedly handsome. Cora Smedberg, the Smith girls, Mary Kip, Katherine Dillon, Emma Butler, all have their good times together. None of these girls play golf, but do a great deal of driving and walking. Burlingame is gathering up bag and baggage for Del Monte, so I have no news from there. The Vendome at San Jose is pretty crowded. That of all places on earth is the most delightful, so far as drives are concerned; it is in a beautiful valley and attracts more Easterners to settle there every year.

Now, Diary dear, next week I shall tell you all the fun of the sports and who is the fortunate possessor of the cup.

I should like to have told you something about the jinks, but I would not let Robert go and Arthur has not put in an appearance since. I suppose it was much as usual a great deal of ceremony, speeches and the most necessary of all a superabundance of onion soup next day.

I know any number of girls who would give half they possess to get a bird's eye view, not ear, however, of the whole affair. But, Diary dear, I am not one of these; Robert says I would not enjoy it—and he knows.

Don't Forget! What?

THE SEMI-CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION OF

ADMISSION DAY

IN

SAN FRANCISCO

SEPTEMBER 9 to 11, 1900

ONE FARE

From all Southern Pacific Co. Points in California to San Francisco and Return

Inquire of _____

S. P. CO. AGENT AT DEPOT
For Exact Rates, Dates and Full Particulars

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

STEAMERS LEAVE BROADway wharf, San Francisco:

For Alaskan ports, 11 a. m., August 4, 9, 14, 19, 24, 29, Sept. 3, change to company's steamers at Seattle.

For B. C. and Puget Sound ports: 11 a. m. August 4, 9, 14, 19, 24, 29, Sept. 3, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka (Humboldt Bay):* 2 p. m. August 1, 6, 11, 16, 21, 26, 31, Sept. 5, and every fifth day thereafter. *Friday only.

For Newport (Los Angeles) and way ports: 9 a. m. August 3, 7, 11, 15, 19, 23, 27, 31, Sept. 4, and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford (San Luis Obispo), Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles and Redondo (Los Angeles): 11 a. m. August 1, 5, 9, 13, 17, 21, 25, 29, Sept. 2, and every fourth day thereafter.

For Mexican ports, 10 a. m. 7th of each month.

For further information obtain company's folder.

The company reserves the right to change steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing, without previous notice.

TICKET OFFICE—4 New Montgomery street (Palace Hotel).

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO., General Agents.
10 Market street, San Francisco.

TO CHICAGO IN THREE DAYS.

From San Francisco at 10 A. M.

Chicago Union Pacific and Northwestern Line.

DOUBLE DRAWING-ROOM SLEEPING CARS, Buffet, Smoking and Library Cars, with Barber, Dining-Cars; meals a la carte. Daily Tourist Car Service and Personally Conducted Excursions every week from San Francisco at 6 p. m.

THE BEST OF EVERYTHING

R. R. RITCHIE,
General Agent Pacific Coast.

617 Market Street (Palace Hotel), San Francisco, Cal.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. Australia, for HONOLULU only, Wednesday, August 22, at 2 p. m.

S. S. Mariposa for AUSTRALIA, Wednesday September 5, at 8 p. m.

Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

TICKET OFFICE, 114 MONTGOMERY ST.
FREIGHT OFFICE, 327 MARKET STREET

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO.
GENERAL AGENTS

Magazines and their Makers

Harpers'.

The August magazines are advertised as fiction numbers. They do contain a quantity of fiction, most of it poor. In Harper's there are eight stories, of which "The Lady of the Barge" is the best. It is not a distinguished effort for W. W. Jacobs, however. Miss Wilkins' story is flat. Margaret Sutton Briscoe's "His Old Love" is seriously overstrained. "In a Hansom," by Brander Matthews, is a pale sketch.

The Century.

In the Century there are several good features. "Summer Holidays in Alaskan Waters," by John Burroughs, is a brief description of "things seen" in the Harriman Expedition to Alaska last summer. The second paper of "Memories of a Musical Life," by William Mason, contains interesting stories of the great pianists of the mid-century. Mason seems to have meet and known most of the celebrated artists. He missed Chopin, of whom, however, he tells a good story. A young and robust pianist had been playing the "Polonaise Militaire" to the composer, and had broken a string. When, in confusion, he began to apologize, Chopin said to him, "Young man, if I had your strength, and could play that polonaise as it should be played, there would not be a sound string in the instrument when I got through." There are some excellent colored illustrations of the New York Aquarium. The instalment of Oliver Cromwell is, as ever, superbly illustrated. Considering the regard of the Century for dialect and psychology in its fiction it is surprising to find so frisk a tale as "The Helmet of Navarre" in its rather pedantic pages. Miss Runkle makes so admirable a beginning that she is certain of her readers to the end. As for the other tales adorning this number, their caliber may be gathered from "Hezekiah's Wives," which describes the peculiarities of a canary bird's mates. It's wildly enticing.

The Atlantic.

'Twere better had the editor of the Sunday Journal been selected to edit the Atlantic Monthly after the retirement of C. T. Page, than the excellent Professor Bliss Perry of Columbia College. The university man is doubtless a personage in literary circles but he lacks the skill or experience to make a readable magazine. The tone of the publication since he assumed control has grown pedantic. It has certainly not had a good story. There has been an overabundance of solid, stolid matter, and the poetry, with the exception of "Gramarye," in the current number, has been more rythmical than readable. However, Mrs. Spofford's poem is really a gem. The "Sunday Sup" editor would undoubtedly have lacked the extraordinary prescience of Mr. Page, who knows better than any man in America the sources of good literary material, but he could never have perpetrated such dull contents tables as Professor Perry.

McClure's.

McClure's contains three stories with life and blood in them. "Grit of Women" is one of the best Jack London has done. It has that epic quality which distinguishes his finest work. The episode and its actors are lifted to a higher level than their intrinsic importance seems to warrant. "Conductor Pat Francis" is an incident of real life, told with a fine sentimental swing. "In the Matter of His Nibs," a "true story from the under-world," commences a series which should prove excellent. The "White Sheep" is capitally told. Indeed the fiction in this number is well worth reading and shows judgment and sense in the editors

* *

Young Authors and Their Publishers.

There is immense competition these days among the publishing houses. All are on the look-out for new men and are willing to do great things for the promising young author. The McClures' set the fashion of capturing the youthful celebrity and binding him to their establishment with silvern chains. Silvern is used advisedly, because under the conditions exacted the embryo is not equipped to reside at the Waldorf-Astoria. Frank Norris was one of the first to have a New York opportunity given him in McClure's. William Allen White's reputation has been fostered in the same quarter. Booth Tarkington, whose Monsieur Beaucaire is accepted in quarters that would have none of his Gentleman from Indiana, is another. It was on the strength of the first story that the second was asked for. Yet there is nothing to suggest a capacity to get up a homely American tale such as the yarn of the editor and the whitecaps from such a charming and graceful story as Beaucaire. On the acceptance of the Indiana tale, J. T. Phillips, treasurer of the concern, staked his reputation, and his judgment was abundantly justified by the immense sale of the book

* *

Jack London's Career.

The latest acquisition to the McClure symposium is Jack London, the Californian of whose short stories a sheaf have been accepted. He is now under contract to write a novel for them. London has had more extraordinary experiences than fall to the lot of the average writer. Though quite a young man he has "tramped" it all over the continent, undergoing, like Josiah Flynt, all the hardships of the "hobo's" life for the sake of acquiring a knowledge of humanity in the rough. His career in the Klondike is but a phase of his adventures. That he posseses the seeing eye is abundantly evidenced by the expressions of miners and prospectors from the Arctic who have read The Son of the Wolf. They pronounce it a marvelous transcript of the life of the icy wilds of the Yukon.

* *

Another New Magazine.

Another new magazine is promised—The World's Work, with Doubleday, Page & Co. for publishers. Mr. Page will be its editor, which certifies in advance to the character of The World's Work. As is elsewhere said, Mr. Page is the best magazine editor in the country. A very serious publication it is designed to be—no fiction. Economics, criticism and travel. The first issue appears November 1st.

* *

Everybody's Magazine is rather a flat effect, being neither one thing nor another. The printing is poor, the make-up without any distinction, the stories lacking vitality. In Cassell's Magazine one is sure to find a good story or two and articles of some interest. The make-up also, is clumsy, however.

* *

Rudyard Kipling's New Novel.

The serial rights of Kipling's new novel go to McClure's Magazine, but Doubleday, Page & Co. publish the book. There was a serious contention, I believe, between the new firm and the old, now McClure & Phillips, as to which should retain the Kipling connection. The great author finally divided his patronage, but it is said the price exacted for the serial rights was extraordinarily high.

Rudyard Kipling's system of making poetry is original. His poems are never written down until they are to be published. He composes entirely in his head and keeps the lines there until the occasion for transcription arrives.

During the summer season cramps come upon us unexpectedly; you should be prepared for an emergency of this kind, as otherwise you will suffer agony for hours. Keep a bottle of PAIN-KILLER handy and go by directions on the wrapper, it will surprise you how quickly relief will come. Avoid substitutes, there is but one Pain-Killer, Perry Davis', Price 25 and 50 cents.

For home use, for bar use, for physicians' use, for everybody's use, Jesse Moore Whiskey is always the best and is in most general demand.

Moet and Chandon

The Largest and Oldest Champagne House in the world.

White Seal (Grand Cuvee), of exceptional bouquet and dryness.—Court Journal.

Go where you will, the best saloons sell Jesse Moore Whiskey.

Will You Have a

Club Cocktail

Before Your Dinner?

You can offer this polite attention to the guest who dines with you at your home if you have a bottle of the "Club Cocktails." They are home Cocktails. They are on the sideboards of thousands of homes.

Are they on yours? It's the proper thing to have.

The age of the "Club Cocktails," the pure liquors used, the perfect blending, make them better than you can mix; better than any cocktail served over any bar in the world. Send home a bottle of Manhattan, Martini, Whiskey, Holland or Tom Gin, Vermouth or York, to-day.

For sale by all Fancy Grocers and Dealers.

G. F. HEUBLEIN & BRO.
29 Broadway, N.Y. Hartford, Conn.

PACIFIC COAST AGENTS,
SHERWOOD & SHERWOOD,
Los Angeles San Francisco Portland

Santa Fe Trains

GO TO

Antioch	9 a m	4:10 p m	8 p m
Bakersfield	9 a m		8 p m
Chicago	9 a m
Denver	9 a m
Fresno	9 a m		8 p m
Hanford	9 a m		8 p m
Joliet	9 a m
Kansas City	9 a m
Leavenworth	9 a m
Merced	9 a m		8 p m
Newton	9 a m
Phoenix	9 a m
Stockton	9 a m	4:10 p m	8 p m
Tulare	9 a m		8 p m
Visalia	9 a m		8 p m
Williams	9 a m

Personally conducted Excursions to Kansas City, Chicago and Boston every MONDAY, THURSDAY AND SATURDAY in Pullman's Best Tourist Sleeping Cars. Try this NEW ROUTE.

Get full information and handsome folder at

628 MARKET STREET

or at Santa Fe Ticket Office

Ferry Building, Foot of Market Street

Alfred Cane Luther A. Teague Frederick Teague

TEAGUE, CANE & TEAGUE

Dentists

Claus Spreckels Building

Tel. Main 1459 Third and Market Sts., 6th Floor

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Trusts add combinations do not affect Jesse Moore Whiskey. Its fame is established; its quality is the finest and it is always the best.

Orpheum

Newzky Troupe, Lew Hawkins, Caroline Hull; Arnim and Wagner; Four Juggling Johnsons; Sam Morris and Company; Mrs. Bessie Blitz-Paxton; Macart's Dogs and Monkeys; Biograph.

Reserved Seats 25c.; Balcony 10c.; Opera Chairs and Box Seats 50c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.

Columbia Theatre

ONE WEEK, BEGINNING NEXT MONDAY

Matinee Wednesday and Saturday

Charles Frohman presents the enormous double triumph HENRY MILLER and a special company in the great romantic play

THE ONLY WAY.

Adapted by Freeman Wills from Charles Dickens' novel. A Tale of Two Cities.

Thursday Afternoon and Sunday night – Burton Holmes Lectures.

Alcazar Theatre

Fred Belasco and Mark Thall, Managers

Phone Main 254

Week of Monday, August 20th

Last week but one of

FLORENCE ROBERTS

Supported by

White Whittlesey

Beautiful Costume and Scenic Production of

SAPHO

Only matinee Saturday. Prices, 15, 25, 35 and 50c.

California THE POPULAR HOUSE

H. Friedlander & Co., Lessees and Managers

Telephone Main 1731

One week only Commencing Sunday Eve., Aug. 20. Matinees Saturday and Sunday.

LEE

and his Company

HYPNOTISTS

Silvain A. Lee is recognized as the greatest exponent of his art in the world, and is the only living Hypnotist performing the difficult feat of putting his audience to sleep from the stage.

POPULAR PRICES.

Morosco's Grand Opera House

Glorous Triumph of the new

Frawley Company

Last nights of "Trilby" with the regular cast. Week beginning Monday Aug. 20th the Rejane Version of Daudet's Immortal

SAPHO

Prices:—10, 15, 25 and 50 cents. A few front rows in orchestra, 75 cents.

Next play—"The Silver King."

TIVOLI.

Curtain rises at 8 p. m. sharp.

Tonight, "Othello," Sunday night, "Rigoletto."

Week of August 20th.

Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday nights

TANNHAUSER

Avedano, Salassa, Lichter, Schuster and Stewart

Tuesday, Thursday, Sunday nights, Saturday matinee

MIGNON

Poletini, Repetto, Russo, Graham and Nicolini.

Popular prices, 25 and 50 cents Telephone Bush 9

Seats on sale seven days ahead only.

Electric Supplies

CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIRS

California Electrical Works

409 MARKET STREET

THEATRICALS.

When Critics Differ.

Great minds, it is evident, do not run in the same channel. Take, for instance, the diverse impressions made on Alan Dale in the New York Journal and on Geraldine Bonner in the Argonaut, by Materlinck's "Pelleas and Melisande" as enacted by Mrs. Pat Campbell in London. Now Miss Bonner is one of the most intelligent and conscientious of critics. She does not mistake smartness for cleverness as Alan Dale so often does. The latter is perhaps the most popular of American critics, because of his "cute" style, his light wit, his airy and frolicksome egotism. Miss Bonner treats Mrs. Campbell with respect and "Pelleas and Melisande" as a product of genius. Alan Dale says "it was accompanied by what I can only call brown music, and might as well have been called 'Jack and Jill.'"

Mrs. Bessie Blitz Paxton

Miss Bonner says:

"It is the same story as 'Paola and Francesca' Pelleas—the brother loves the strange princess, who moves through the old palace like a silent golden shadow crowned with ebon hair. Goland suspects the love, watches, thinks that his wife is unfaithful and kills Pelleas and indirectly Melisande. The author treats the story as the Greek dramatists did."

Says Alan Dale, on the contrary

"Nobody appreciates a little bit of the artistic un-ordinary more than I do, but when it comes to wrapping up a greasy story of adultery in all the high-falutin paraphernalia of mysticism—well, I'm not taking any to-day, thanks."

Of Mrs. Campbell, Miss Bonner says:

"She is a woman of extraordinary slenderness—thin, we would call her, with long, delicate arms and long, pale hands and a long, white throat. She wore a cloth-of-gold dress that was without form from the neck to the feet, like an umbrella. * * * The last touch to this thrilling creature's beauty is a wave of amazing black hair, mysterious as midnight, seeming to be endowed with a life of its own."

Here cometh Alan Dale:

"Mrs. Pat was fittingly attired in yellow satin, made all in one, and this gave her the appearance of a neatly draped lamp-post. She was moaning. They always moan in Maeterlinck. They would sooner moan than dine. Huge strands of black hair, like unto that of the seven Northerland sisters, covered her."

Miss Mabelle Gilman

There is a balcony scene in which Melesande lets down her hair to Pelleas below. In the true Maeterlinck style he cries: "Cover me with it. Oh, it is overflowing! Oh, that beautiful flood of hair! Do you hear my kisses all down your hair?" This is how the scene appearad to Alan Dale:

"It was all so mystic! But I thought he was going to lunch on poor Melisande's tresses. It looked like it, and hair au gratin is not tempting. But Pelleas took the hair and wound it round the trunk of a tree, regardless of the fact that Melisande had to hold her head in a most uncheery position. What it meant, I don't know—I shall never know—I should loathe to know. I imagine that she would be caught by the hair, and that Goland would come in and "cop" her. But Pelleas carefully unwound the hair, and all was well."

Truly, the eye sees with what the eye brings to see, and comparisons are odious, but this is the same episode according to Miss Bonner:

"I wish I had room enough to describe the scene where Mrs. Campbell leans out of the window, combing her hair. Such midnight hair, clouds of it, with ends that curled round Pelleas' fingers like the tendrils of the sweet-pea vine. To keep her there, talking with him, he ties her by the hair to the branches of a tree. For pure beauty and romance, it was an exquisite scene, and a curious murmur, half approbation, half amaze, rose from the audience."

* *

How Hoyt Wrote His Farces.

Charles H. Hoyt, who for years made the world laugh and then became mad from grief, was a hard worker. Notwithstanding their seeming joyous spontaneity, his farces were the result of the most concentrated labor. He usually spent a year on each of his productions before bringing it to New York, devoting about half of that time to making it ready for the first performance and the rest on improvements while using it on a tour of minor towns. He did not start writing a play with a definite outline in his mind, but would merely take an incident or character that had come under his personal observation and proceed deliberately to develop this nucleus into a full-fledged farce. This process was slow and painfully laborious. He had a keen sense of the ludicrous, but was alive to the difficulty of delivering fun across the footlights. The farce, as it appeared on its first representation, was really only half evolved. The first performance was to him only the beginning of the polishing process. Every night during this period he sat in the audience to observe the effects, appearing at the rehearsal the next day with a hundred and one little alterations—interpolations, eliminations and changes in action and diction. Six months of this work usually brought the work to its perfection, and then only did Hoyt bring it before a New York audience.

* *

The Evolution of Ernest Hastings.

Ernest Hastings, who has been playing leading roles in the Alcazar stock company all the year, is engaged by Blanche Walsh for chief support during the coming season. Mr. Hastings is an actor of great versatility, probably just at the verge of a larger success, and will be well adapted to the Sardou roles which he will undertake in the Walsh productions, although his work this season showed character roles to be his forte. He has evolved rapidly in the past two or three years from a juvenile and matinee favorite to a serious actor, and has arrived at the stage where he may expect to expand to his full powers. It is interesting to note, by-the-way, that while many actresses achieve success at twenty or twenty-one, few actors come anywhere near to obtaining recognition before thirty. Most of them work for a good ten years before reaching their full

Continued on page 22.

A Mother's True Friend

"I would like to express my gratitude for the benefit received from your wonderful medicine, 'Favorite Prescription,'" writes Mrs. H. C. Anderson, of South Britain, New Haven Co., Conn., (Box 33). "During the first month of pregnancy I could not keep anything on my stomach. Was so sick that I had to go to bed and stay for weeks. I tried different doctors, but with little benefit. I read about many being helped by using your medicine so I thought I would give it a trial. I began to take your 'Favorite Prescription' in November and I had a nice little baby girl in February following. My baby weighed over eight pounds. I was only in hard labor about one hour and got along nicely during confinement; was up and dressed on the eighth day. I never had the doctor with me at all. My friends thought that I was sick a very short time. I think Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is indeed a mother's true friend, for it helped me wonderfully."

FAVORITE PRESCRIPTION MAKES WEAK WOMEN STRONG, SICK WOMEN WELL.

IF YOU WANT

The Best Coal Oil

BUY

Stylish Suits $15.50

Dressy Suits..... $20.00
Pants 4.50

My $25.00 Suits are the Best in America.

25 Per Cent Saved by getting your suit made by

JOE POHEIM

THE TAILOR

1110-1112 Market Street
201-203 Montgomery St., S.F.

SAMPLES SENT FREE

Physicians would not recommend Jesse Moore Whiskey if they did not know it to be the best in the market.

Bank of California

SAN FRANCISCO

Capital, $2,000,000. Surplus, $1,000,000
Profit and Loss Account Jan. 1st, 1900, $2,321,212

William Alvord, President; Charles R. Bishop, Vice-President; Thomas Brown, Cashier; S. Prentiss Smith, Assistant Cashier; Irving F. Moulton, Second Assistant Cashier; Allen M. Clay, Secretary.

CORRESPONDENTS

New York, Messrs. Laidlaw & Co., The Bank of New York, N. B. A.; Baltimore, The National Exchange Bank; Boston, The Tremont National Bank; Chicago, Illinois Trust and Savings Bank, Union National Bank; Philadelphia, Philadelphia National Bank; St. Louis, Boatmen's Bank; Virginia City, Nev., Agency of the Bank of California; London, Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons; Paris, Messrs. De Rothschild Freres; Berlin, Direction der Dis. conto Gesellschaft; China, Japan and East Indies; Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China-Australia and New Zealand, The Union Bank of Australia, Ltd., and Bank of New Zealand.

LETTERS OF CREDIT ISSUED AVAILABLE IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD

THE GERMAN Savings and Loan Society

526 California Street

Guaranteed Capital and Surplus $2,238,372 45
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash 1,000,000.00
Deposits, July 30, 1900 ..... 28,958,395.02

OFFICERS

President ..... B. A. Becker
First Vice-President ..... Daniel Meyer
Second Vice-President ..... H. Horstmann
Cashier ..... A. H. R. Schmidt
Assistant Cashier ..... Wm. Hermann
Secretary ..... George Tourney
Assistant Secretary ..... A. H. Muller

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann
Ign. Steinhart, Emil. Hohte, I. N. Walker,
H. B. Russ, N. Ohlandt, John Lloyd,

General Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA STREET

Deposits, July 1, 1900 ..... $26,952,875
Paid Up Capital 1,000,000
Reserve Fund 218,093
Contingent Fund 439,608

E. P. Pond, Pres.; W. C. B. de Premery, Vice-Pres.; Lovell White, Cashier; R. M. Welch, Asst. Cashier.

DIRECTORS

Henry F. Allen, Robert Watt, Thomas Magee, George C. Boardman, W. C. B. de Fremery, Daniel E. Martin, C. O. G. Miller, Jacob Barth, E. B. Pond.

Loans upon San Francisco and Gakland Real Estate and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.

Receives deposits. Country remittances may be made in checks payable in San Francisco, Postoffice or Wells, Fargo & Co's Money Orders, or coin by Express, but the responsibility of this bank commences only with the receipt of the money.

No charge is made for pass books or entrance fee.

Office Hours: 9 a. m. to 3 p. m. and Saturday evenings, for receipt of deposits only, 6:30 to 8 o'clock.

MUTUAL SAVINGS BANK OF SAN FRANCISCO

33 POST STREET
Below Kearny Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital $1,000,000
Paid Up Capital 300,000

James D. Phelan, President; S. G. Murphy, Vice-Pres.: John A. Hooper, Vice-Pres.; George A. Story, Cashier; C. B. Hobson, Asst. Cashier.

DIRECTORS:—James D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, Frank J. Sullivan, Robert McElroy, Chas. S. Neal and James McDonald.

Interest paid on deposits.

Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co. or Exchange on City Banks.

When opening accounts, send signature.

1875 CALIFORNIA 1900

Safe Deposit and Trust Co.

Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.

PHONE BUSH 165.

Safe-Deposit Boxes from $5.00 per year up. Trunks and Valuables of every Description Stored in Fire and Burglar-Proof Vaults at $1.00 per month.

Office Hours 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.

Thuringia Insurance Co.

OF ERFURT, GERMANY

Capital, $2,250,000 Assets, $10,984,248

PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT 204-208 Sansome St., S. F.

VOSS, CONRAD & CO.

General Agents.

Occultism at the Exposition.

By Etienne Marcel.

IT is one of the regrets of those Exposition visitors who have a sense of humor that the Spiritualists' Convention of the last World's Fair was not made a permanent feature. Not that we would laugh at the real and sincere spiritualists, but the crowd of astrologists, necromancers, occultists and fortune-tellers who followed in their wake, lingered about the convention and tried to get a hearing on the floor was most amusing. It was impossible this year, Flammarion having but lately recanted and the faith having broken up into many sects. Nevertheless, a swarm of fortune-tellers and of professed dabblers in the mystic arts are here—for what there is in it. What is more, they are making money. You choose according to your pocket and your station in life. If you go in for style, there is a "professor" with an Arabic name, a long robe, a jewelled wand and a mysterious, low-lighted apartment—who will throw in frills and trimmings in the shape of astrological jargon and charge you ten dollars; if you are a little less exacting, you may have your palm read or your cards interpreted by a common, ordinary "gypsy life reader," who will charge you from two to five dollars according to your gullability; further down the list, for those who do not care about appearances, are a man and woman who stand by the grand entrance, read the number of your lottery ticket blind-folded, and tell you if you will win; this costs only ten centimes and is the very peasantry of the occult.

Probably the most solemn and gilded old fake of them all is one Dr. Encasse, who travels and does business under the mystic name of Papus. He is at the head of the guild, and makes as much money as any two others. His main hold is stage effect; he understands make-up. He has the usual impressive appearance of the fashionable fortune-teller, and he heightens the effect, I have reason to believe, by dyeing his eyebrows and eyelashes in order to render his deep, black eyes the deeper. He dresses, while in his apartments, in flowing robes.. These same apartments are decorated in the height of art; no cheap display of astrological signs or blue-tinted ceiling with gilt stars, but heavy tapestries with ghostly shadows and haunting odors. He will tell you that the real occult art dwells among the poor and humble followers of the cult, that all high-priced magicians are fakes—except himself. "Papus" is the wizard who raised a teapot sensation in the world of magic by challenging Stanislaus da Guaita to a duel at the time of the last Paris Fair. The latter was another stage-effect magician, but he was more melodramatic and less subtle than Papus; his main hold was startling effect, such as placing cups of cold poison bubbling forth live serpents at a banquet of true believers. The duel never came off, because one of the seconds, himself a clairvoyant of skill, learned that the crafty Stanislaus was planning to tip his rapier with deadly ptomaines and Papus refused to fight—much as he was longing to do so—with a man who wasn't on the square.

At any rate, Papus picks six or seven little one-horse fortune-tellers on back streets as the only true followers and sure prophets of the cult. He recommends these to all people who cannot stand his prices. The amount of his "rake off" on commissions I cannot ascertain. A friend, an Englishman, tried one of these and reported that he had given wonderful results in sketching out his past. This led me to spend two dollars—one per—in comparing notes on two others among his proteges. Number one was a man, a very dirty one—stage effect again—who lurked in a cellar in the Latin Quarter. Here, reduced to its lowest terms, is what he told me: "You have had an adventurous life, full of incident. You had a sickly youth—I see a serious injury to your head at about the age of twenty. It will cause you some trouble in later years. You were made for the active life which you have led, and would make a success in any line where energy was needed. Fate, however, has intercepted your career at several points, but the baleful influence will soon be removed. You have just had a long journey. Within two years from now, you will fall heir to a great deal of money and will have a happy termination to a love affair. Thereafter, you will have uninterrupted peace and prosperity."

Number two was a woman, a Gypsy. After we had haggled over the price for awhile, I learned the following: "Your life has been a peaceful, quiet one, without striking incidents. You were made for quiet pursuits and should score a great success in scholarly and retiring occupations. Beware of any other sort of life—you were not made for it. Your greatest blessing has been uninterrupted good health, which will continue, although you may have a severe illness at about forty. I see a fickle heart line, and many affairs. Nevertheless, your love is soon to be crowned by one whom you adore, and you will soon be made happier by a large legacy from an unexpected source, after which your life-current will flow on smoothly, and you will be happy."

My future seems secure, anyway.

Probably the most bizarre of the lot is Chick Abdullah. He believes in small prices and large houses, charging only a dollar or two, but running through the "reading" with speed, so that he turns out many a hard-earned coin each day. He does business in a little cubby of a room, draped in red cloth and decorated with Oriental pottery. Unlike the run of his class, he is very light in complexion, having a deep, golden-yellow eye and a shock of blonde hair. He will take your left hand and put it palm up on a silver tray filled with sand and set on an ivory-mounted table. At regular intervals, a curious Oriental coin is embedded in the sand. He puts his thumb in the center of your hand, using it compass-wise to make a circle, and tells you the Arabic star of your birth. Then he talks rapidly through the interpreter for the .pace of about two minutes, giving you "past, present and future." You pay your coin, pass out, and the next client is ushered in at your heels.

MOORE' POISON OAK REMEDY

Cures Poison Oak and All Skin Diseases.

Sold by All Druggists.

$100 Reward $100

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreadful disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Address, F. J. CHENEY & CO., Teledo, O.
☞ Sold by Druggists, 75c.
Hall's Family Pills are the best.
The name is a guaranty of its purity—Jesse Moore Whiskey is always all right.

There is only one reason why you shouldn't drink Jesse Moore "AA" Whiskey—that's because you have signed the pledge.

All bon vivants will be pleased to learn that genial "John" Heinkee supersedes Mr. Justin Ladagnous as proprietor of the famous Maison Riche, so happily named by dainty Aimee in her golden days. Epicures the world over know the Riche. "John" will maintain the high standard that this restaurant has always held in this city.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

The original Swain's Bakery, 2[illegible] Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE. SIERRA NEVADA SILver Mining Company.—Location of principal places, business, San Francisco, Cal. Location of workof Virginia Mining District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 9th day of July, 1900, an assessment (No. 19) of Fifteen (15) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the company, Room No. 14, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 14th day of August, 1900, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before will be sold on MONDAY, the 3rd day of September, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the cost of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.

R. L. PARKER, Secretary.

Office: Room No. 14, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE. MEXICAN GOLD AND Silver Mining Company. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Storey county, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the tenth day of July, 1900, an assessment [No. 64] of fifteen [15] cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, Room 79, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the fourteenth day of August, 1900, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before will be sold on Wednesday, the 5th day of September, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.

CHAS. E. ELLIOT, Secretary.

Office—Room 79, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

NOTICE OF ASSESSMENT.—OCCIDENTAL CONsolidated Mining Company.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California; location of works, Silver Star Mining District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the fourteenth (14th) day of July, 1900, an assessment (No. 35) of five (5) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 69, Nevada block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the seventeenth (17th) day of Aug.t 1900, will be delinquent and advertised for sale a, public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Tuesday, the eleventh (11th) day of Sept., 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors,

ALFRED K. DURBROW, Secretary.

Office: Room 69, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

CHOLLAR MINING COMPANY.—LOCATION of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 3d day of August, 1900, an assessment, No. 52, of ten cents (10c) per share, was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 79, Nevada block, No: 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 6th day of September, 1900, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on THURSDAY, the 27th day of September, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors. CHAS. E. ELLIOT, Secretary.

Office—Room 79, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco California.

BEST & BELCHER MINING COMPANY.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia District, Storey county, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the third (3d) day of August, 1900, an assessment (No. 71) of fifteen (15) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 33, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpa d on the seventh (7th) day of September, 1900, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on FRIDAY, the twenty-eighth (28th) day of September, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the cost of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

M. JAFFE, Secretary.

Office—Room 33, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

GOULD & CURRY SILVER MINING COMPANY. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 6th day of August, 1900, an assessment (No. 91) of fifteen cents (15c) per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the secretary, at the office of the company, room No. 69, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 8th day of September, 1900, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on MONDAY, the 1st day of October, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors,

ALFRED K. DURBROW, Secretary.

Office, room No. 69, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Germea

THE IDEAL BREAKFAST DISH

GEO. P. SNELL, Manager.

For those who appreciate
Comfort and Attention
A Quiet Home . . . . .
Centrally Located . . .

Occidental Hotel

SAN FRANCISCO
WM. B. HOOPER, Manager

Sturtevant House

Broadway and 29th Sts., New York.
American and European Plan.
WILLIAM T. BANG, Proprietor.

Eighty-five Fine Sunny Rooms — Elevator Service
Excellent Cuisine — References Required
FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL

THE BRADBURY

J. A. FERSON, PROP.
N.W. Cor. Polk and California Sts., San Francisco
Transient trade solicited. Rates $2.00 and upwards. Reasonable by the month. Tel. Hyde 2771.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE — Tel. Main 199
DEALERS IN Paper
55, 57, 59, 61 First Stree
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
Blake, Moffitt & Towne, Los Angeles — Blake, McFall Co., Portland, Or.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

Twenty-two-inch, in all numbers; Medium, Soft and Hard; also Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks from 30 to 120 inches wide. Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks, Manufactured by Mount Vernon Co., Baltimore.
MURPHY, GRANT & CO.,
Pacific Coast Agents.

HAVE YOU EVER THOUGHT
What a Gas Range Will Do?

It will do everything any other cooking apparatus will do, but it will do it BETTER, QUICKER, EASIER and CHEAPER!

IT WILL DO AWAY WITH
Dirt, Worry and Ashes;
Your kitchen will be clean;
Your working hours shorter;
Your food will be better cooked;
Your life prolonged, and
Your happiness assured.

Stove Department,
415 Post Street, - - San Francisco

In the District Court of the United States, in and for the Northern District of California.
IN THE MATTER OF }
Minna Joerdens, et al }

Take notice that Minna Joerdens, et al, bankrupt, above named, have been duly adjudicated bankrupts under the Act of Congress of July 1, 1898, and that the first meeting of the creditors has been called to meet at the office of the undersigned at room 94 Chronicle building, San Francisco, California, on Saturday the 25th day of August, 1900, at the hour of 11 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of proving their claims against the estate of said bankrupt; and that at the same time and place all creditors whose claims have been duly proven and allowed shall appoint one or three trustees of said estate.
Dated San Francisco, August 10th, 1900.
MILTON J. GREEN, Referee in Bankruptcy.
In and for the City and County of San Francisco?

Svengali Lackaye.

I found Wilton Lackaye with his clenched hands raised to heaven, declaiming in actor dialect. That is, one hand was clenched, the other held the typewritten manuscript of his part. Just south of him Pearl Landers was practicing a soubrettish giggle. On his northwest border Mary Van Buren was arguing costumes with the imperturbable Mr. Frawley. Southwest by south, Mr. Armory was being put through a "left face" movement by the stage manager. At all the other points of the compass the remainder of the company were muttering parts to themselves. It looked like a performance of "The Actor's Madhouse," but it wasn't. It was only the second reading of "Trilby" in the gilded parlors of the Grand Opera House.

I approached through a narrow pathway from the west, and drew the star away with the help of the call-boy. "Mr. Lackaye, how did you come to enter the dramatic profession?" I began. Not that I wanted to know, but it is a part of the ethics of interviewing to begin by asking about something you don't want to know.

Mr. Lackaye fixed me with a masterful Svengali look and held me pinned to the spot.

"How did you come to enter the newspaper business?" he asked.

"I cannot say, except that I was attracted to it at first. One of my earliest recollections is seeing a newspaper. From that time, I seemed to be fascinated. I eagerly read every newspaper that came in my way. It was my life."

Wilton Lackaye as "Svengali."

"Do you consider that the newspaper business is conducive to immorality?"

"Decidedly not, as a generality. But the glitter and attraction of the life, the great salaries paid to the successful, the public adulation, the devotion of thousands—"

"Do you think that newspaper men should ever marry?"

"Not unless their wives are willing to spend their vacations with them in the hospital. Now, Mr. Lackaye, I should like to know—"

He exerted the Svengali eye again. "Do you think that great personal beauty is an indispensable qualification to succeed in the newspaper business?"

"Not an indispensable qualification, perhaps, but desirable. However I do not believe that there can be any permanent success based on mere personal charm. It may assist the beginner, but in the higher walks of the art—"

"Mr. Lackaye, wan-ted," sang out the call-boy. He turned his eye away; the spell was broken.

"Excuse me," I called frantically after him, "but I want to hold my job when I get back. Please answer me one question. How, oh how, do you pronounce your name?"

"That, young man," said the star, resuming his hypnotic gaze, "is part of my stock in trade. It keeps the public talking. Webster pronounces it to rhyme with 'black-eye' and the 'Standard' rhymes it with 'slack-day'. I rather prefer it Webster's way—but don't you dare to publish that!"

"I won't," I said humbly. And I didn't.

New Verse and Good.

A Colonial Rose.

De Rochambeau came riding down
On his prancing charger through the town;
With careworn wrinkle and weary frown
His brow was shaded;
And she, with a gesture debonair,
Threw him a rose from her powdered hair—
The fairest maid of Washington Square,
In gown brocaded.

Fled for a moment war and wile
As he caught the rose with courtly smile,
And thought of a maid of France, the while
His glance had met her—
A maid of France, of an ancient race,
A master painted her then, a face
Whose piquant charm and dainty grace
Let none forget her.

And again he saw the old chateau
Where the roses hung in garlands low
When he rode away, long years ago—
She died soon after.
Ah, roguish maid of Washington Square,
When the grey old Frenchman saw you fair,
You little knew why he lingered there
To hear your laughter!

—CHARLOTTE BECKER, in The Smart Set.

The Woman That's Good.

BY HAROLD R. VYNNE.

Ho, gentlemen! lift your glasses up—
Each gallant, each swain and lover—
A kiss to the beads that brim in the cup,
A laugh for the foam spilt over!
For the soul is atilt and the heart beats high,
And care has unloosed its tether,
"Now drink," said the sage, "for to-morow we die!"
So, let's have a toast together.
Swing the goblet aloft; to the lips let it fall;
Then bend you the knee to address her;
And drink, gentle sirs, to the Queen of us all—
To the Woman that's Good—God bless her!

Ah, Bohemia's honey was sweet to the sip,
And the song and the dance were alluring—
(The mischievous maid with the mutinous lip
Had a charm that was very enduring)—
But out from the music and smoke-wreaths and lace
Of that world of the tawdrily clever,
There floats the rare spell of the pure little face
That has chased away folly forever!
And I pledge my last toast ere I go to my rest—
O fortunate earth to possess her!—
To the dear, tender heart in the little white breast
Of the Woman that's Good—God bless her!

The Song of the Singer.

Day long upon the dreaming hills
One watched the idle hours fade by
And had no thought of other thing
Than waving grass and summer sky.

And all the wilding scents and sounds
The lavish-hearted season brought,
He made his own and prisoned them
Within the little songs he wrought.

While he was singing, in the town
His busy brethren bought and sold
And got them place and circumstance,
And all the pride and pomp of gold.

But when the night came with the stars,
And on her hills her silence laid,
He, homeward turning, bore with him
Naught save the careless songs he made.

"O Prodigal!" his brothers cried,
"And have you done no better thing?
And is it thus you spend your day—
To dream in sunshine and to sing?"

But he, remembering those still hours
The dream had made so eloquent—
The waving grass, the summer sky,
The purple hillside—smiled, content.

—ARTHUR KETCHUM, in the New Lippincott.

Buyers' Guide.

San Francisco Reliable Business Houses

City and Country Orders promptly filled. Catalogues and Price Lists sent on application. Correspondence solicited. MENTION THE WAVE.

ATTORNEYS AT LAW.

MILTON J. GREEN, Attorney at Law.—Referee in Bankruptcy in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Office, Room 94 Chronicle Bldg.

A. K. DAGGETT.—Drawing of deeds and all legal papers a specialty; Notary Public. 14 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Telephone [illegible]

BUSINESS PERSONALS.

Baldness and Dandruff positively cured. Shampooing and Bleaching. Prudential Hair Physicians. Glascow Block, 105 Ellis Street, Room 6.

DENTIST.

DR. C. W. DECKER, Dentist.—806 Market street, Phelan Building.

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.

ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.—Main office, 510 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Dealers in all kinds of Newspaper information. Advance Reports on all Contract Work. Phone, Main 1042.

RESTAURANT.

POODLE DOG RESTAURANT.—Northeast corner of Eddy and Mason streets. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone, Main 429. BLANCO & BRUN, Proprietors.

Electric and Hygienic Treatment.
Sure Cure for Chronic Diseases. Tumors, Cancers and Displacements, positively and without operations.
DR. WM. SCHMITT,
502 Taylor St., cor. Geary.
San Francisco.
CONSULTATION FREE.

A TOILET NECESSITY
Wakelee's
Cold Cream of Roses
—MADE WITH—
Pure Almond Oil and Distilled Water of Roses

STRAWBERRY COLD CREAM
A Perfect Complexion
Made from the pure fruit juice at
GREENBAUM'S,
200 Post Street, Corner Grant Ave.
Sent anywhere on receipt of 25 cents

Don't Borrow a Home!
BUY IT. Your rent payments for the borrowed home will do it through the aid of the
CONTINENTAL BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION OF CALIFORNIA.
WM. CORBIN, Secretary and General Manager.
Home Office, 222 Sansome St., San Francisco

Brushes for barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bath houses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candy-makers, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paper hangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.
BUCHANAN BROS, Brush Mfrs.,
TEL. 5610. 609 Sacramento Street.

A. O. LINDSTROM [Phone Main 5178] AL. JOHNSON
Sutter Street Hammam
TURKISH RUSSIAN BATHS
415 Sutter St., bet. Stockton and Powell
Open Day and Night for Gentlemen
For Ladies from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m.

Dr. G. S. Moore's Scientific Hair Restorer.
A Sure and Positive Cure. One bottle will convince the most skeptical. Testimonials, 498 Geary St., S.F.

THEATRES.

Continued from page 19.

power. Lackaye had an eight years' struggle; playing all summer in order to pay for his winter's costumes, before he had even fairly decent parts. Hastings, who is a tremendous worker and a hard student, is likely to do something in the next few seasons. He has considerable force, power and magnetism and intelligence of a high order. He has been handicapped all along by a rather elephantine personality, which he is gradually overcoming; awkwardness with ability is far ahead of smooth, nerveless grace anyway.

A curious difficulty which caused Hastings much extra work as a stock-company actor is his defective memory for lines. Literal memorizing is very difficult for him, and the words are likely to slip away at any time. This makes him a terror to the prompter. When not otherwise employed during an engagement, he is generally to be found poring over his cue-book trying to drum the refractory part into his head.

* *

The heading, "Another California Girl Makes a Dramatic Success Abroad," is so much in use by the San Francisco dailies that it is kept in stereotype. It must be brought out again for Mabelle Gilman, who is starring in the American Company, producing "The Casino Girl" in London. Her name will be unknown to most Californians, as she never appeared here. Nevertheless, she is a graduate of Mills Seminary, that staid, religious and sober institution which seems to send out most of our actresses. She is just past twenty, and received her first training from Augustin Daly. Manager Lederer was taken with her good looks and her voice and gave her the part in his company made vacant by the defection of Edna May. "A sincere, unaffected, and most competent little artist, all fire and nerves, an admirable actress with a lovely voice," is the way she is summed up by the London critics.

The Newsky troupe head the Orpheum's bill next week. They are Russians and in the first rank as singers and dancers. Lew Hawkins, monologuist, Caroline Hall, a choir singer, and Arnini and Wagner in an operatic travesty are the new people. Mrs. Paxton's success throughout the week has been emphatic. She has "caught on" with both sides of the house, her fresh and charming voice winning favor and applause both upstairs and down. She is certain to attain prominence in the profession.

* *

Next week, the Tivoli will abandon Verdi for Wagner and Thomas. "Tannhauser" will be sung ou Monday, Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday nights, while "Mignon" will be the bill for Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday evenings and Saturday matinee. In Tannhauser Avadano will be the "Minstrel Knight;" Salassa, "Wolfram;" Schuster, "the Landgrave;" and Anna Lichter, "Venus." In Mignon, Kia Politini will sing "Mignon;" Repetto, "Felina;" Russo, "Wilhelm Meister;" Frances Graham, "Frederick," and Nicolini' 'Lothario."

* *

Henry J. Pain's great military spectacle, "The Battle of San Juan," will be presented on a magnificent scale nightly for the two weeks beginning Saturday, September 1st, at the grounds, corner of Sixteenth and Folsom streets. The entertainment, which created a furor at Manhattan Beach last season and in which nearly 500 people take part, will be concluded each evening with a magnificent display of the Pain fireworks.

* *

At the Columbia next week the Henry Miller company play "The Only Way." It is a dramatization of Dickens' "Tale of Two Cities." The company has been reinforced for the occasion by J. H. Stoddard, Daniel H. Harkins, and Margaret Robinson. Miller will enact Sydney Carton in which he does his best work.

* *

At the Alcazar, Sapho is to be revived next week with Florence Roberts and White Whittlesey in the leading roles. The production will be exactly similar to that given some weeks ago. "The Masqueraders" is in preparation for the fall season beginning the week of September 3d.

* *

The Grand Opera House will give a rival Sapho. The original version, as played by Rejane, will be used. Miss Keith Wakeman plays the heroine, and Harrington Reynolds enacts Jean. A staircase scene on "a spiral flight of stairs rising to a height of four stories into the flies" is a feature of the production.

* *

The forthcoming song recital of Miss Clara Kalisher, contralto, which takes place at the Sherman, Clay Hall, Tuesday evening, September 4th, is a first rate musical event. Miss Kalisher will be accompanied by Dr. H. J. Stewart, pianist.

* *

At the California theatre commencing August 20th, Silvain A. Lee, said to be the smartest hypnotic entertainer before the public and gives a series of seances. His performances have many novel features and is described as being unusually amusing.

* *

The Leo Cooper School of Acting is to consolidate with the Tivoli Opera House in an operatic school. Mr. Henri Fairweather, formerly of the Diyley Carte, Sullivan Opera Company, will have charge of the singing department.

August.

De fiel' des pa'ch up brown en dry—
De tree toad, he complainin';
De sun, he sweat so in de sky
Dat some folks say hit rainin'!

De lizard th'oo' de fence rail peep—
He lef' he blanket kiver;
De 'gator on de log asleep—
He roll off in de river!

Hit des so hot in ever' spot
You see de heat a-twinklin',
Miss Mary, whar dat wat'rin pot?
Yo' roses needin' sprinklin'.

—Atlanta Constitution.

NOTICE OF ASSESSMENT—SAVAGE MINING Company. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia City, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 13th day of August, 1900, an assessment (No. 101) of ten cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, room 20-22, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 18th day of September, 1900, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Monday, the 8th day of October, 1900, at the hour of 2 o'clock, p.m., to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and the expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.

JOHN W. TWIGGS, Secretary.

Office—Room 20-22, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

PRETTY WORK

NICE PRESS COPIES

Use Smith Type-Writer

The telegraph department of the Southern Pacific Co dispensed with all other makes and now use the SMITH PREMIER EXCLUSIVELY.

Also more than 200 banks use the

SMITH PREMIER Type-Writer

We Rent New Typewriters
Art Catalogue

L. & M. ALEXANDER & CO.

110 Montgomery St., S. F.

Branches: Portland, Seattle, Los Angeles.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP Has been used for over sixty years by millions of mothers for their children while teething with perfect success. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain; cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhoea. Sold by Druggists in every part of the world. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

Statement of Assets and Liabilities

—OF THE—

Continental Building and Loan Association

For the 11th Fiscal Year Ending June 30, 1900.

ASSETS

Cash		$ 764 97
Mortgage Loans		1,425,618 43
Loans Association Stock		125,166 07
Bills and Accounts Receivable		11,656 06
Furniture and Fixtures		1,600 00
Members' Accounts Due and Payable		18,573 00
Real Estate		53,758 05
Real Estate Sold Under Contract		9,478 09
Sundry Advances Secured by Mortgage		59,072 86
		$1,705,687 53

LIABILITIES.

Dues Account Installment Stock		$ 704,388 69
"A," "B," and "E"	$362,868 54
"F"	253,922 76
"I"	87,597 39
Earnings Apportioned to Installment Shares in Force		159,735 80
General Reserve Fund		11,373 49
Insurance Reserve Fund		25,692 52
Amount Saved from Life Insurance Premiums		4,192 13
Death Loss Accumulations		390 59
Due Paid Up and Prepaid Stockholders		561,140 74
Class "D," Old	$ 8,500 00
" "C," "	1,678 00
" "B"	76,674 00
" "C"	382,608 00
" "D," Deposit	91,680 74
Advanced Payments		30,263 58
"A," "E," "G," and "I"	$ 12,594 69
"F"	17,668 89
Loans Due and Incomplete		143,284 81
Bills Payable		20,000 00
All Other Liabilities		45,225 18
Interest Due Paid Up Stockholders	$ 9,564 84
Repayment Account Mortgage Loans	22,288 05
Received on Account Real Estate Sold under Contract	1,487 30
Sundry Account Payable	7,321 83
Bank of California	4,563 16
		$1,705,687 53

Our dividends for the year have been at the rate of 5 per cent per annum on Ordinary Deposits.
6 " " " " " Term "
10 " " " " to Class "F" Stock.
12 " " " " " " "A" "

Home Office, 222 Sansome St., San Francisco, Cal.

Capt Oliver Eldridge, President — Wm. Corbin, Secretary.

Nothing more refreshing than "Jackson's NAPA SODA Lemonade"

BYRON MAUZY PIANOS

308-314 POST STREET

SOHMER PIANO AGENCY — SATISFACTORY TO THE EYE AND EAR

A Glowing Highway to Happiness is the Road that leads to . . . . DEL MONTE Added to the many pleasures afforded by its enchanting surroundings are FINE GOLF LINKS

THIS SEASON'S

HOMES OF PLEASURE

. . . THE PEERLESS CALIFORNIA RESORT . . .

MONTROSE BICYCLE SENT FREE on approval to your address WITHOUT A CENT IN ADVANCE. SEND US YOUR ORDER, state whether you wish lady's or man's wheel; give color, height of frame and gear wanted and WE WILL SHIP THE WHEEL C. O. D. on approval, allowing you to uncrate and examine it fully before you accept it. If it is not all and more than we claim for it, and a better wheel than you can get for any where near the price from any one else, refuse it and we will pay all express charges ourselves. The "MONTROSE" Bicycle at our Special Agent's sample price of $16.50 is the greatest bargain in a bicycle ever offered. We guarantee it equal to any $40 wheel on the market, and you need not accept it nor pay a cent if you do not find it as we represent. We are EXCLUSIVE BICYCLE MANUFACTURERS and take this method of quickly introducing our 1900 MODELS. This offer of a sample wheel at this low price is made to secure a RIDER AGENT in each town to represent us and take orders. Our agents make money fast.

SPECIFICATIONS. Frame, 22, 24 or 26 inch; ladies, 22 inch. Best Shelby seamless tubing with forged connections, flush joints, improved expander device to fasten seat post and handle bar; Royal Arch crown; the celebrated Mavis hubs and hanger—the easiest running known; Record "A" tires, the best and one of the most expensive tires on the market. The genuine $4 Mesinger Hygienic saddle; pedals, tools and accessories the best obtainable. Enameled in black, maroon or coach green, highly finished and ornamented; special finished nickeling on all bright parts. We thoroughly test every piece of material that goes into this machine. Our binding year's guarantee bond with each bicycle.

FREE to any one sending the $16.50 cash in full with order we will send free a genuine Burdick 10,000 mile barrel pattern cyclometer; or a high grade floor pump. Your money all back if you are not perfectly satisfied.

CHEAP WHEELS. We do not manufacture the cheap department store kind of wheels, such as many new concerns and big supply houses advertise and sell as high grade. We can furnish them, however, at $5 to $7 stripped; or $9.75 to $12.50 complete. We do not guarantee nor recommend them. BEFORE ORDERING a bicycle of any one else, no matter who or how cheap, write us and let us tell you how much we can save you on the same machine.

If you are UNABLE to BUY a wheel we can assist you to EARN A BICYCLE by distributing catalogues for us a few days. We need one person in each town for this purpose. We have several hundred SECOND HAND WHEELS taken in trade which we will close out at $8 to $10 each; also some shopworn samples and '99 models very cheap. Send for Bargain List. OUR RELIABILITY is unquestioned. We refer to any bank or business house in Chicago, or any express or railroad company. We will send you letters of reference direct from the largest banks in Chicago if you wish it.

SEND YOUR ORDER today. This low price and these special terms of shipment without deposit will be withdrawn very soon. ☞ Give name of this paper.

J. L. MEAD CYCLE COMPANY, Chicago, Ill.

MARTELL & CO.

Cognac, France,

Established 1715.

TRADE MARK.

J. & F. Martell.

The Highest Grade of Cognac Brandy.

All Martell shipments received by us bear the name of our firm on the bottles. Beware of imitations.

William Wolff & Co.

329 Market Street. Pacific Coast Agents.

We Make the Cuts in this Paper.

HIGH GRADE Half-tone & Line

CUTS

Yosemite Engraving Co.

24 Montgomery Street

San Francisco

For Catalogues Books Souvenirs Newspapers Letter-heads Etc.

Market Street Sa573-57 | R. H. PEASE, President and Manager. | 73 and 75 First St ee Portland, Ore

DR. CLYDE PAYNE

Has returned from New York and resumed the practice of Dentistry at

135 GEARY ST.

Phone Main 9 Spring Valley Building

W. C. ACHI & CO.

Real Estate Brokers

We buy or sell real estate in any part of the Group. We will also buy or sell Stocks in any corporation in Hawaiian Islands.

Office 10 W. King St HONOLULU, H. I.

MILLS College and Seminary

Seminary course accredited to College and Universities. Ideal surroundings. Thirty-fifth year. Write for catalogue to

Fall Term Opens Aug. 8, 1900

MRS. C. T. MILLS, Pres., Mills College P. O., Cal.

BAJA CALIFORNIA

Damiana Bitters

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes, and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. Send for Circular.

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE Agents
323-325 MARKET STREET, S. F.

The Sign of the Peacock

229 GEARY ST.

Theatre Suppers

Luncheon Ice Cream Breakfast

ORDERS DELIVERED

The Saturday Wave
Is Printed by
THE MYSELL-ROLLINS CO.
22 CLAY STREET, S. F.

New Stories Re-Told.

A DANGEROUS PRECEDENT. During the Brigham H. Roberts controversy there was great excitement in Missouri lest the polygamist Congressman should be admitted to membership in the House. The most prominent women in the state circulated a petition and a pretty young widow undertook to obtain the signature of Governor Dockery. The Governor smiled on the fair relict. "My dear girl," he said with a fatherly air, "If this war in the Philippines continues for a few years longer we shall lose at least a million of our able bodied men, then there won't be enough men to go round, and some of you women will be badly off. You are trying to establish a dangerous precedent. I wouldn't do anything more about it if I were you." A puzzled look spread over the little widow's face. "I hadn't thought of that," she said. "I don't think I will try to get anybody else to sign."

THE DISCONTENTED RANCHER.—A certain prosperous rancher near San Jose is noted for a discontented disposition. No matter how admirably his affairs progress he always finds cause for complaint. Returning from the city recently after disposing of his produce at good figures he said to his wife, "I am aboot tired out! Is cows in't barn?" "Yes," answered his hard-working wife—"long since." "Is t' hosses unharnessed and fed?" "Yes." "Fowls locked up?" "Yes." Wood chopped for mornin'?" "Yes." "Them ducks plucked and dressed for market?" "Yes." "Waggon wheel mended, and ready to start i't mornin'?" "Yes." "Oh, then," he said with a sigh, "let me have my supper and turn in! Farmin' is beginnin' to tell on me!"

THE RETORT COURTEOUS. A red haired boy and a companion his own age sat in a secluded corner of a ferry boat and prepared to shorten their lives by indulgence in the cigarette habit. "Please gimme a light mister," said the red haired boy to a facetious man who sat near-by. "You don't need any light" was the reply, with a significant glance at the boy's top-dressing. With a scornful toss of the head, the boy with the scenic hair promptly retorted: "Yes an' dis boat don't need no bellows nor no hot air longs' you're aboard." The facetious man sought a seat elsewhere.

WASTED ICE.—A New York barkeeper, who was spending his vacation in Maine, found himself one evening in a hotel in Portland. While he lingered a terrible storm took place. The windows of the room in which he was sitting were broken by hailstones "almost as big as eggs." The proprietor of the hotel noticed that the barkeeper turned aside to drop a tear. "Does the storm scare you?" he ventured to ask his guest. "It isn't that," replied the barkeeper, "but I can't bear to see so much cracked ice wasted on a prohibition state."

A BAD SHOT.—Porter Ashe, a lawyer of San Francisco, had a client who wanted a divorce from his spouse. He had a haggard look and a black eye. By way of cause, he complained that his wife made a practice of throwing things at his dog. "You can't get a divorce on that," explained Ashe. "The worst of it is," complained the husband, "every time se throws at the dog she hits me."

THE DUKE'S DILEMMA.—The late Duke of Argyll who was distinguished for his literary attainments, had but little company at the castle. An inkeeper of Inverary explained this: "His grace is in a verra deeficult posection whatever. His pride of intellect will no' let him associate with men of his ain birth, and his pride of birth will no let him associate with men of his ain intellect."

WRONGLY ACCUSED. The drill instructor's face turned scarlet with rage as he rated a raw Irish recruit for his awkwardness. "Now, Rafferty, you'll spoil the line with those feet. Draw them back instantly, man, and get them in line!" Rafferty's dignity was hurt. "Plaze, sargint," he drawled solemnly, "they're not mine; they're Micky Doolan's in the rear rank!"

Palace Hotel

The tourist, pleasure-seeker, and the business man will find the location of the Palace particularly desirable being in close proximity to places of amusement, wholesale and shopping districts, and with the further advantage of having street-cars to all parts of the city pass the entrance.

Operated in conjunction with the Palace is the Grand Hotel to which it is joined by a covered passageway placing under one management 1400 rooms, 900 of which have baths attached.

Famous FOR ITS Purity

SEATTLE, U. S. A.

THE

White Pass and Yukon Route

Through Freight and Passenger Service to

Dawson, Atlin, White Horse

AND OTHER POINTS.

All Rail From Skaguay, Alaska, to White Horse, Y. T.

Beginning August 1, both passenger and freight trains will be operated, Skaguay to White Horse, a distance of 112 miles. At White Horse, the ten fine river steamers of the Canadian Development Company,

Connect directly with the railway train and afford DAILY service to Dawson and all other Yukon River points. Through connections are made at BENNETT and CARIBOU with the

Irving Navigation Company's Lake Steamers

For ATLIN, TAKU, and GOLDEN GATE MINING CAMPS.
This system now affords best of facilities for handling perishable freight.

A SCENIC AND PLEASURE TRIP TO NOME.

FOR RATES AND PARTICULARS APPLY TO

S. M. IRWIN
TRAFFIC MANAGER
Skaguay, Alaska, and Seattle, Wash. [Phone Main 574]

M. P. BRASCH
COMMERCIAL AGENT
536 Market Street, S. F.

WHEN LEAVING THE CITY PLACE YOUR VALUABLES IN THE

Safe Deposit Vaults

OF THE

First National Bank

N. W Corner Bush and Sansome Sts.

EVERY POSSIBLE SAFEGUARD TO PROPERTY

REASONABLE RATES
PROMPT ATTENTION

Office Hours: 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.

REPSOLD REGISTERED BRAND SELECT VINTAGE

Repsold Select Vintage Wines

FOR YOUR HOME DINNER

This brand of Wine is served at all first-class clubs, hotels and restaurants

Office, 416 Pine St. A. REPSOLD & CO.

From Admiral George Dewey:

Mr. George Mayerle, German Expert Optician, 1071½ Market street, San Francisco—Dear Sir: I am still using with much satisfaction the glasses you sent at Manila; also, the new ones suit my eyes perfectly. Very truly yours,

GEORGE DEWEY.

A GRADUATE

George Mayerle

German Expert Optician

Consultation, Examination and advice free.

OPTICIAN HONORED

1071½ Market St.

near Seventh

Telephone Mint 257

German Eye Water 50 cents.

From General Wm. R. Shafter:

Mr. George Mayerle, San Francisco—Dear Sir: The glasses made by you received yesterday. I have never been better fitted than with this pair.

Very truly yours,

WM. R. SHAFTER.
Major-General, U. S. V.

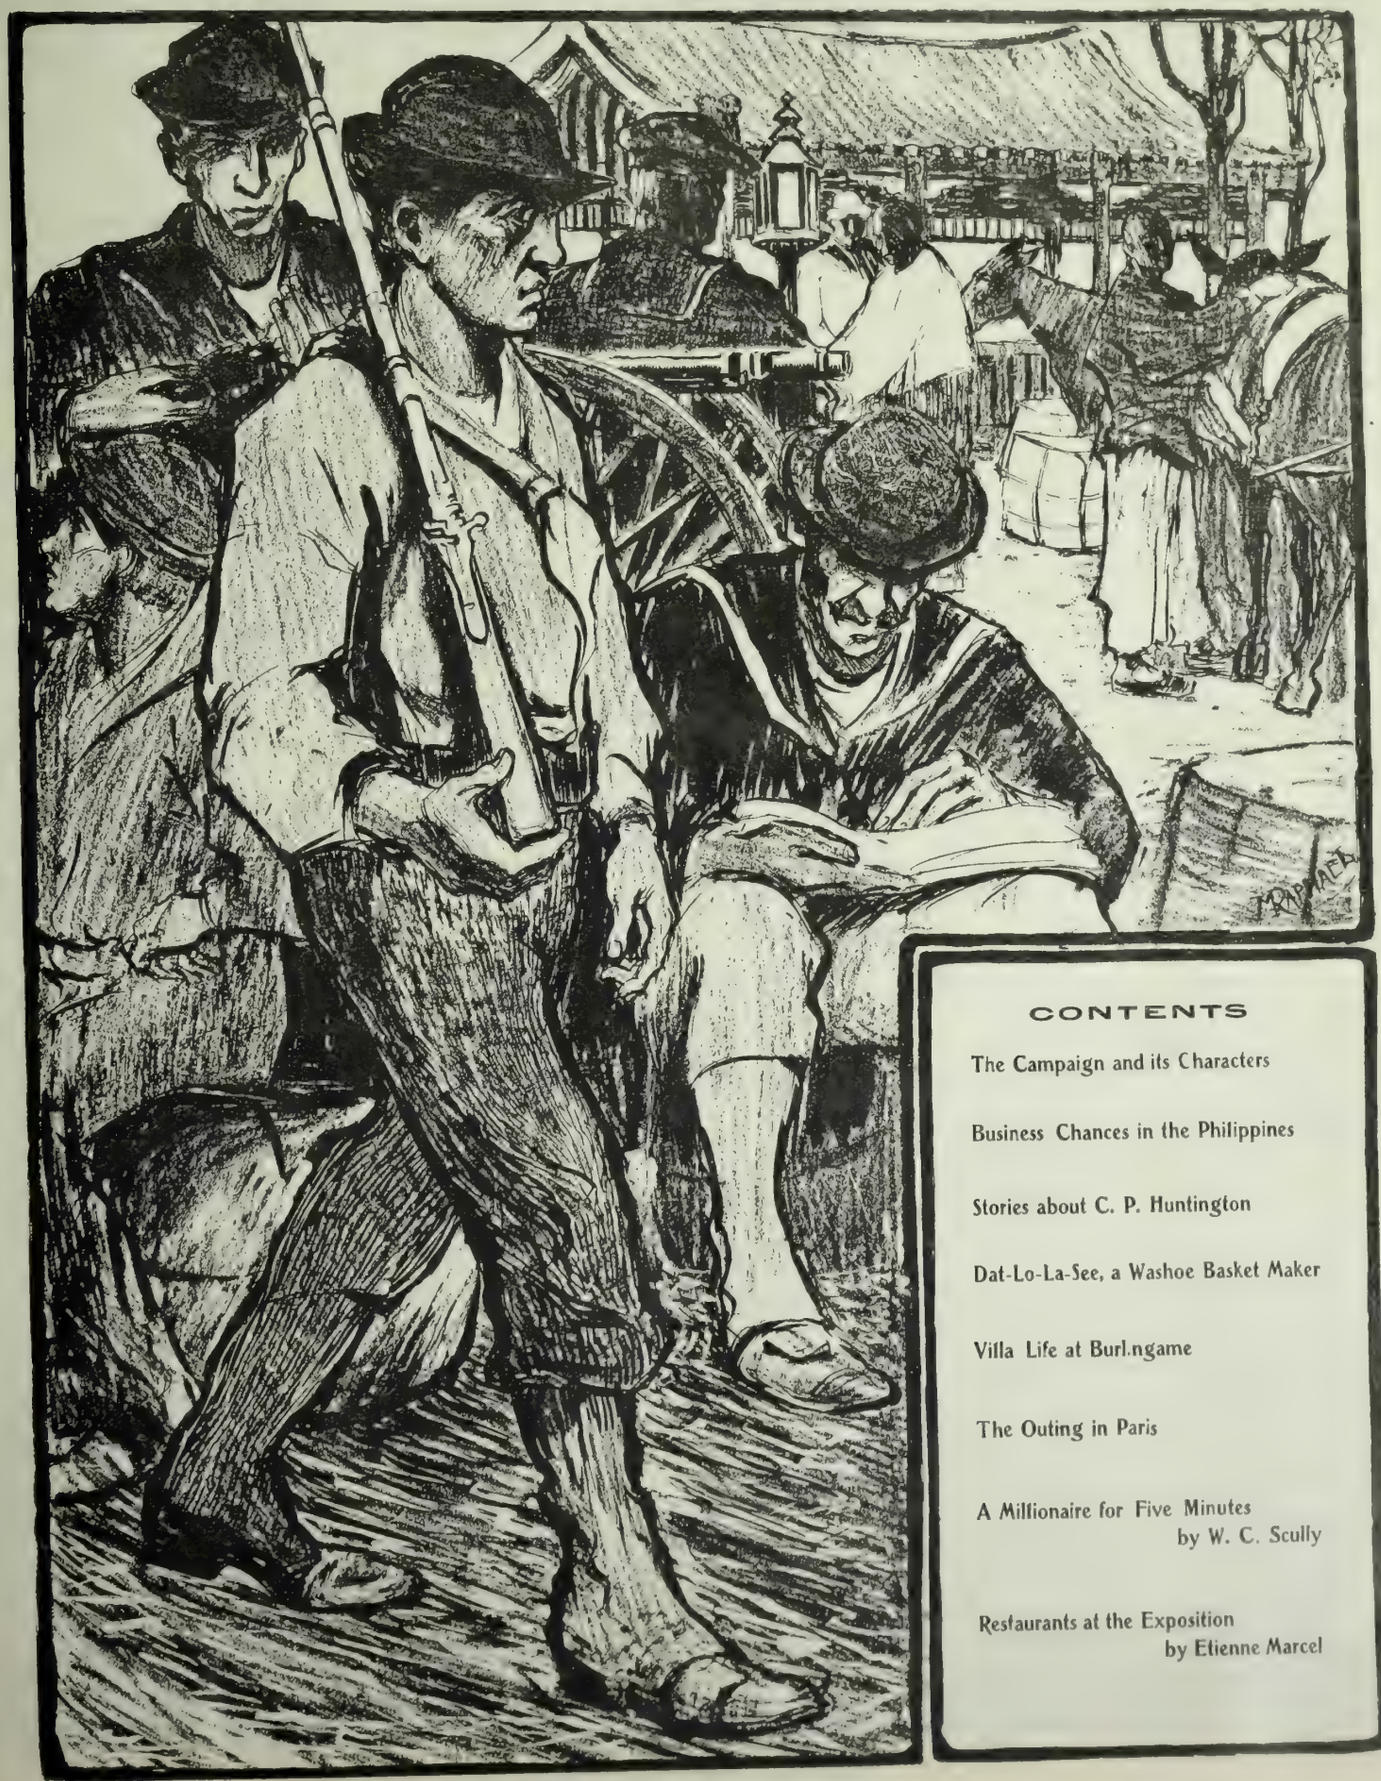
Reduced To 5 Cents a Copy.

This Paper not to be taken from the Library.

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

THE SATURDAY WAVE

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY
AND JOURNAL OF EVENTS CURRENT



CONTENTS

The Campaign and its Characters

Business Chances in the Philippines

Stories about C. P. Huntington

Dat-Lo-La-See, a Washoe Basket Maker

Villa Life at Burlingame

The Outing in Paris

A Millionaire for Five Minutes
by W. C. Scully

Restaurants at the Exposition
by Etienne Marcel

Collis P. Huntington in a Character Study

THE late C. P. Huntington never defaulted in a financial obligation. Nor did he ever order a reduction of wages.

In looking over his career for predominant facts these two stand out significantly. They represent marked traits in the character of a man, who apart from his achievements was one of the most sagacious and virile of American personalities. Not only did he build railroads and steamship lines but he was a philosopher and perhaps the shrewdest of all commentators on the conditions of life in this country. To the wealth of the world's wisdom his great contemporaries in commerce and railroading have added little. C. P. Huntington made millions and supplied the best set of rules for attaining success ever written. Jay Gould and Commodore Vanderbilt left fortunes of extraordinary magnitude but they will be recalled only as accumulators. When the story of the building of the Pacific railroads is ancient history, Huntington's apothegms will be remembered and quoted. True, others before him offered as good advice but his expression of it was better than any of his predecessors and it was pointed by his tremendous career. In thinking over such a maxim as this: "Take the work nearest you, try and do it better than any one else and live on less than you make"—the personality of the man inevitably enters into your consideration. Had he the right to say so? He also said: "If you observe the rules of honesty, integrity and economy, and fear God, you have just as good a chance as any man that may be cited." Did he really believe that? Did he live up to his own ideals? They were practical, serviceable ideals and it may truly be said that he did. "Be sure that you are right then go ahead" was the maxim that he said regulated his life.

Kindness to Subordinates.

In New York, Mr. Huntington was better understood than in California. Here, depreciation of the man was the fashion. He visited the coast at but rare intervals and then he was forced into the attitude of a mentor in the institution that he controlled. Had he lived among us for the year round he might have convinced the most rabid anti-monopolist of his sincerity of purpose, of his firmness of principle and the rare kindness of his disposition. His employees, especially those who came closest to him, invariably mention this latter characteristic. He never lost his temper, was never harsh or impatient or disturbed. He spoke his mind frankly about conditions he did not approve but he was essentially regardful of the feelings of subordinates. That is one of the secrets of his success. He drew his draft on the best of human nature and rarely was it dishonored. A prominent official, who entered Huntington's service many years ago, tells of the first experience he had with his new chief. There was occasion to rebuke the superintendent of a road for some imperfection of service. He wrote in terse, emphatic fashion reciting the delinquency and calling the offender to order. The letter was submitted to Mr. Huntington, who read it. "This is all true," he said, "every word of it, but couldn't you put it more pleasantly?"

As he himself put it "it is always best to deal on flexible lines with people." It was his rule to be pleasant in all transactions with subordinates. He might think an employee had erred in a given connection but he would take the bad with the good and would write "I am glad to know that you have done your best in the so-and-so matter. It is what you always do and what you have taught me to expect of you." It was hard for a man to be untrue to one who trusted him so freely. His attitude with his principal officers was one of unbounded confidence. He believed in conferring responsibility and letting his men work out the best results in their own way, frequently telling them, "Now you know a great dea more about this affair than I do. Go right ahead and do what you think best."

He rarely reproved. If an error had been committed Mr. Huntington might write to the offender suggesting that another course would have been wiser, but that closed the incident. The mistake was never again alluded to. At one time he had working for him as head of the purchasing department in New York, a tanner named Phillips, who had quite a reputation as a shrewd and honest man. Phillips was brusque of manner, a tall, well-built New Englander, very unconventional in his ways, with which Mr. Huntington put up most good humoredly. A requisition came in for fire extinguishers for a certain road and it was given to Phillips to execute. He returned late in the afternoon and proceeded to report to the chief what he had done. It was not as good a trade as Mr. Huntington had expected, but he looked up with a good-natured smile and said, "Why Phillips I could have done as well as that myself. I turned it over to you because I thought you could do better."

His Faculty at Trading.

That Mr. Huntington affected none of the airs and graces of great wealth is well known. He was the most democratic of millionaires. In the New York office the members of his staff constituted a family party, and their relation with their chief was almost paternal. He never failed in patience or good humor. He might be consulted at all hours of the day, no matter whom he had with him. Even in the midst of a dictation he would invariably respond cordially to a query from one of his employees. No other great railroad man was so accommodating. Tom Scott and Jay Gould secluded themselves and did business at hours appointed before hand. Mr. Huntington was always approachable, and in trading never closed a subject so there was no further recourse. He would say, "No, I do not feel like doing so-and-so to-day, but to-morrow I may feel different about it." A proposition was always so left that it might be opened again on good terms. For this reason he was an excellent man to trade with. He negotiated direct, without the intervention of others, and in this way saved millions to his properties. It has been said that Mr. Huntington invariably tried to get the best of a bargain. The men who were closest to him declare this untrue. He rarely paid more than a thing was worth, but he was never arbitrary nor did he take undue advantage of a man's need. He used to say, "No contract will stand that is not fair to both parties."

As a Railroad Constructor.

C. P. Huntington was the greatest railroad constructor America has had. He alone made the transcontinental trip from ocean to ocean over his own lines. In his life he built about 13,000 miles of railroad. Of his activities the building of the Central Pacific was only the beginning. He followed it with the Southern Pacific, which united California and New Orleans. He gridironed California and Texas with steel, and he was invariably successful in his operations. Comparison with other great railroad men is inevitable, but only one career, that of J. J. Hill, approaches his in degree of achievement and difficulties surmounted. But Mr. Hill's work began long after Huntington and his associates had introduced the transcontinental railroad idea to the world. Tom Scott, his great rival and adversary, was not a constructor—he fitted together lines and made systems of them. Jay Gould built up his system by the purchase of existing roads. Pierrpoint Morgan, the Vanderbilts and Stuyvesant Fish are all railroad financiers. C. P. Huntington was essentially a constructor and subsequently an operator and financier. He knew better where to place a line than any of his contemporaries. Therein lay his genius. He had an intuitive sense of where possibilities of development were and his roads were so directed as to accelerate this development and to take advantage of it. He never tried for immediate results but was generally ahead of his time. For the Southern Pacific he had plans laid out that will take the next twenty-five years to work out. A capacity to foresee and to wait he certainly had, together with supreme confidence in his own judgment. He used to say that "only the Catholic church could beat him at waiting."

In the direction of his railroads Mr. Huntington was most liberal. His purse was never closed for anything that was needed in the improvement of a property. He frequently doubled orders sent him for rolling stock, oftentimes to the consternation of his associates.

Railroad Theories.

With his vast experience it can be imagined Mr. Huntington had many theories about railroad building. These he distilled into letters sent his associates and connections, and connotation of them would surely make an immensely interesting book. I remember the advice he gave a man who talked of constructing some lines in the South. "Get good terminals above all things. Give me a single track road with first-class terminal facilities and I'll do more business than with a double track with limited terminals." He never failed to impress on superintendents the necessity of caring for equipment in their divisions. He used to say, "if you do not take care of the property in your charge you cannot expect those under you to do so." It was his insistence that the surplus earnings of the Southern Pacific system were constantly devoted to betterments. But when the panic of '93 came this policy stood him in good stead. His roads were in finer physical condition than those of his competitors, and the bankers who came to his assistance knew that he had denied himself for the benefit of these properties.

As a Financier.

The great success that Mr. Huntington achieved as a financier was due, undoubtedly, to the fact that he never defaulted in an obligation. His strong personality commanded the confidence of his associates in business. He early made connections with the Speyers and the relationship was mutually beneficial. They found the money for his great undertakings and he supplied them with unimpeachable and profitable securities for their clients. Nor did he ever imperil his reputation by engaging in operations outside his own field. He declared that "lots of sorrow has been caused by men meddling at a game regarding which they know nothing, with fellows who did." True, he dealt a bit in real estate with considerable profit, and built up the immense Newport News shipyard, but as a great shipper he considered the latter enterprise well within his ken. Next to the construction of the Central Pacific, the greatest achievement of Mr. Huntington's career undoubtedly was the reorganization of that corporation last year. Coming after the Union Pacific reorganization the execution of which was marked by so much fuss and noise, this big deal was put through almost without a ripple. The achievement was admiringly commented on by the great men of Wall street as the most satisfactory refunding measure in railroad history. Today the Southern Pacific of Kentucky owns every share of Central Pacific stock and the purpose of its original organization—about sixteen years ago—the unification of a great transcontinental system of railways stands accomplished. The subsequent negotiations through which the interests of the Crockers, Stanfords and Searles were purchased by Mr. Huntington and his associates represented the final triumph of his career. To him alone the preservation of the great fortunes created by the original success was due and it was fitting he should round out his career as undisputed head of the institution his genius and industry had reared. At the final meeting at which the various papers closing the deal were signed, Mr. Huntington becoming reminiscent, observed that the others might thank him for their millions. Mrs. Stanford said: "Mr. Huntington, there may be more truth in that than some of us would care to admit." That expression gave Mr. Huntington keener satisfaction than the triumph of his deal. It was a compliment from a prejudiced source.

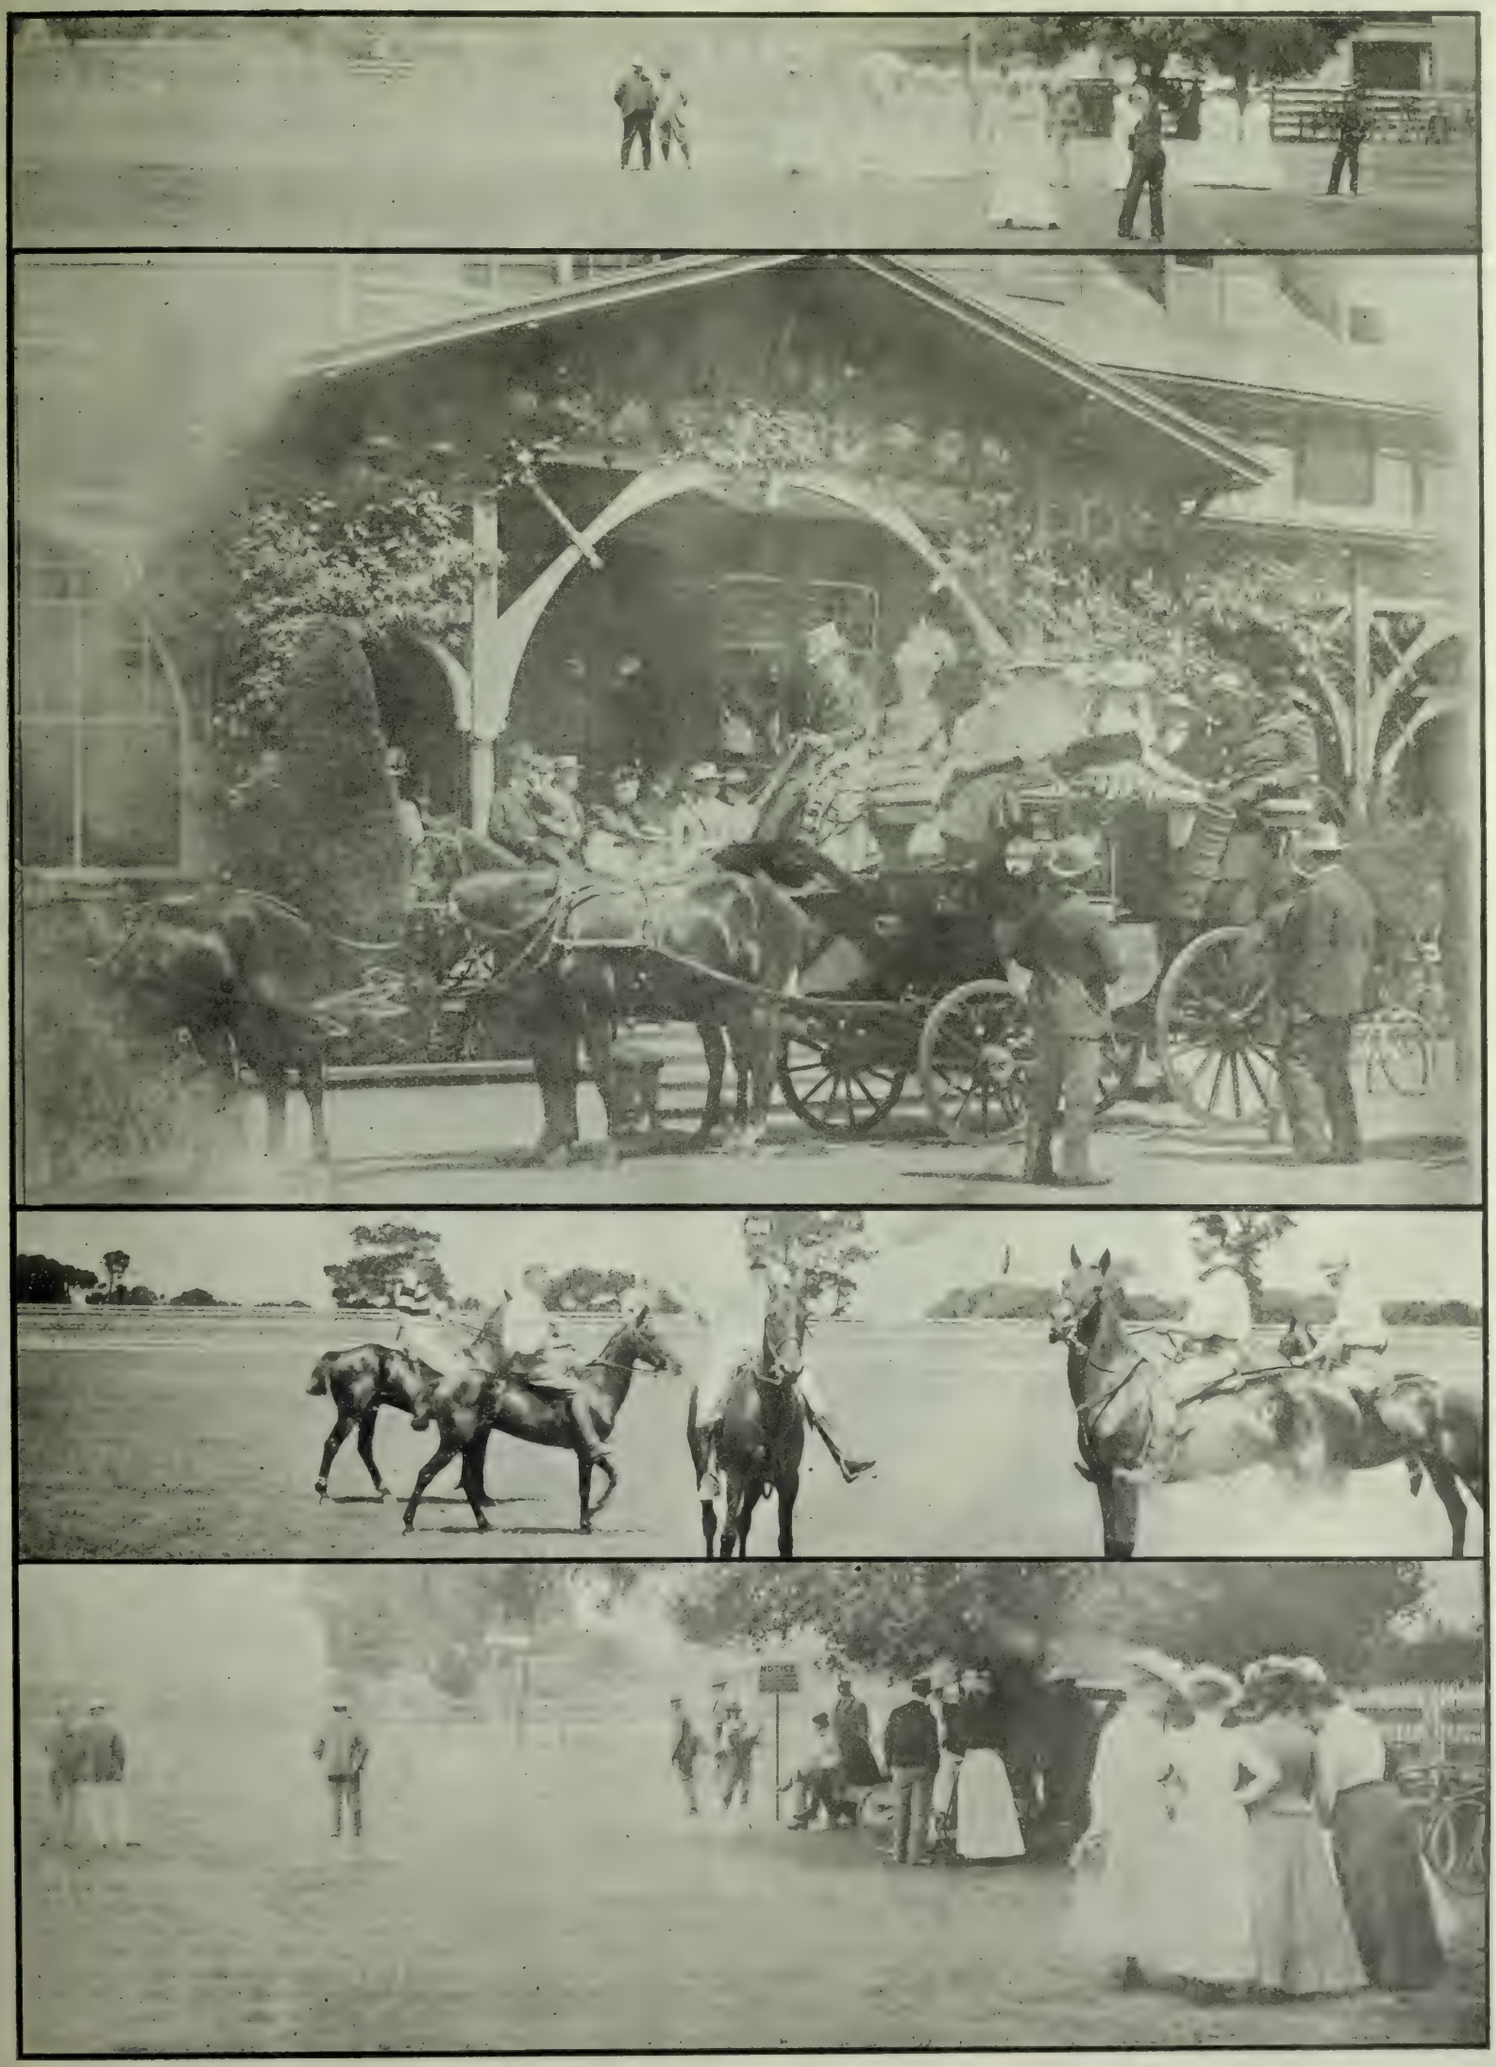
His Idea of True Philanthropy.

To those who surrounded Mr. Huntington the misapprehension of his character caused deep regret. He gave generously to all good causes but directed his charity on the theory of developing self-help. The highest opportunity of wealth, he held, was to furnish work for men to do. The great shipyard at Newport News seemed to him a finer form of philanthropy than founding educational institutions because it enabled 3000 men to earn a living. Indeed, this purpose was paramount in all his undertakings. I believe at his death he was the directing influence of an army of 30,000 employees engaged in various avocations in connection with interests, that he himself had created. Surely such a man has deserved well of humanity. Throughout all the years of his life as an employer of labor, Mr. Huntington never directed a reduction of wages. The pay of the employees of the Southern Pacific is today considerably above that of any other railroad in the country. One of his associates told me he remembered but one instance of Mr. Huntington dismissing an employee. On an inspection tour over his Chesapeake and Ohio system he noted that there had been a change of agents at one of the important stations. He inquired of the agent in charge: "Where is So-and-So?" referring to the missing man. "No longer with us, sir," was the reply. "He seemed a good man," commented the president, "and I think he had a family. Find out," he continued, turning to the vice-president of the company, who was in the car with him, "why So-and-So left us." On hearing later that the other had been displaced to make a situation for the superintendent's son, an unmarried man, who was being paid $10 more for his services, he was righteously indignant. "Dismiss that man at once," he said, turning to the vice-president, "a man who will so misuse his position cannot work for me."

Personal Characteristics.

For the power and wealth that he attained Mr. Huntington labored hard enough. In earlier days he was at his office before nine o'clock and he worked continuously until past six. Before leaving he made it a rule to "clear up his desk" and he used to reply to every note that came to him. In extenuation of this kindly habit he would say, "It does not take but two cents to answer a man's letter." His enormous correspondence is full of thought and sagacious comment on every subject of importance about which the American public has been concerned these thirty years past. It is packed with original apothegms, with quaint terms of expression and keen flashes of wit. At making literary portraits he had a gift that paralleled Carlyle's. He could give you a man in a phrase. If a book be made of these letters, which must contain a mine of the best material imaginable, I venture the prediction it will be a volume of extraordinary interest and value.

Though as busily occupied before the end of his life as at any other time, laying out work, the execution of which will require the best years of his successor's career, Mr. Huntington was a bit tired at the end. To one of his officials in New York, soon after returning from San Francisco the last time, he confided: "When life is no longer a struggle it is not worth living." He had attained the apex of his ambitions. Of his kingdom the uttermost limits had been conquered. His sway and his power were universally recognized. He was absolutely secure, and at peace with all men. Then it was he died. Surely, a life full to the brim of action and performance, of strife, defiance, and victory to a degree far beyond the measure of the average man's. J. O'H. COSGRAVE.



SCENES OF THE OUTING AT DEL MONTE.

A Millionaire for Five Minutes

By William Charles Scully

IN the Summer of 1887, I happened to travel through the sands of Namaqualand, near where the Orange River, weary after its journey across the continent, slides sleepily into the Atlantic Ocean. Just before sundown of a scorching day I outspanned close to one of those sand-choked, rocky depressions in which water may sometimes be found by digging.

To the northward the black mountain ranges quivered as they radiated the fierce heat absorbed during the day. Westward the interminable sand-dunes coiled away over the level plains extending to the sea, which was shrouded by a blood-red haze. When the air cooled down, the clucking lizards stuck their heads out of the sand and opened an ear-piercing chorus. The solemn booming of ostriches rolled over the plain; from the sky the wails of the wild-geese fell like a rain of echoes of far-off lamentations.

Whilst my two Hottentot servants were digging a pit, I mounted guard with a whip, keeping back with difficulty the mules which, maddened by the smell of the moist sand thrown up by the spades, rushed wildly round and round, trying to fling themselves into the excavation.

By the time the water had been reached, and the mules satisfied, night was falling. I returned to the wagon, which stood about a hundred yards away. To my astonishment I saw that another European had joined the camp. He was a powerfully built man of middle height, with light-colored, closely-cropped hair and beard, deep grey eyes and a thoughtful expression. I judged his age to be about forty-five.

I saw at a glance that the man was a gold-digger; he was a well-marked type of an unmistakable class. He was dressed in moleskin trousers, grey flannel shirt, slouched hat, and broad-soled boots of porpoise hide. His swag—slung, California fashion, from shoulder-straps—lay on the ground, with a tin "billy" tied to its lower end; a Winchester rifle stood against a bush next to it.

The man arose from the ground as I approached, and bade me "Good-evening."

"May I fill my canteen from your pit?" he asked.

"Certainly," I replied; "but you will find better water in the keg, which I can easily spare, as I shall reach a spring to-morrow. But why don't you camp? You're surely not going further to-night. Have supper with me."

"You are very kind," he replied, after a pause, and in an embarassed way; "but before accepting I ought to tell you that I am a discharged convict."

"Oh, that's all right," I said; "you may easily be a better man than I, for all that. Just unlash your swag and shove your rifle under the wagon, out of the dew."

"Very well, sir; I'll take you at your word. After all, it was only I. D. B."

This kindled my sympathy. "I. D. B.," or "illicit diamond buying," is a crime in which the punishment seems o be quite out of proportion to the crime. Moreover, an inherent injustice of the law lies in this—that it fails to touch the more guilty. It is the humble instrument who has succumbed to temptation—only, perhaps, for the sake of putting bread into his hungry children's mouths—that is crushed; while his employer, perhaps sitting in one of the high places of the land, reaps the lion's share of the profit and escapes scot free.

During supper my guest was silent and somewhat ill at ease. Afterwards, when we had lit our pipes, he spoke:

"It is not likely that I'll see another white man for some time. Would it bore you to hear my story?"

'On the contrary, I shall be extremely glad if you will tell it."

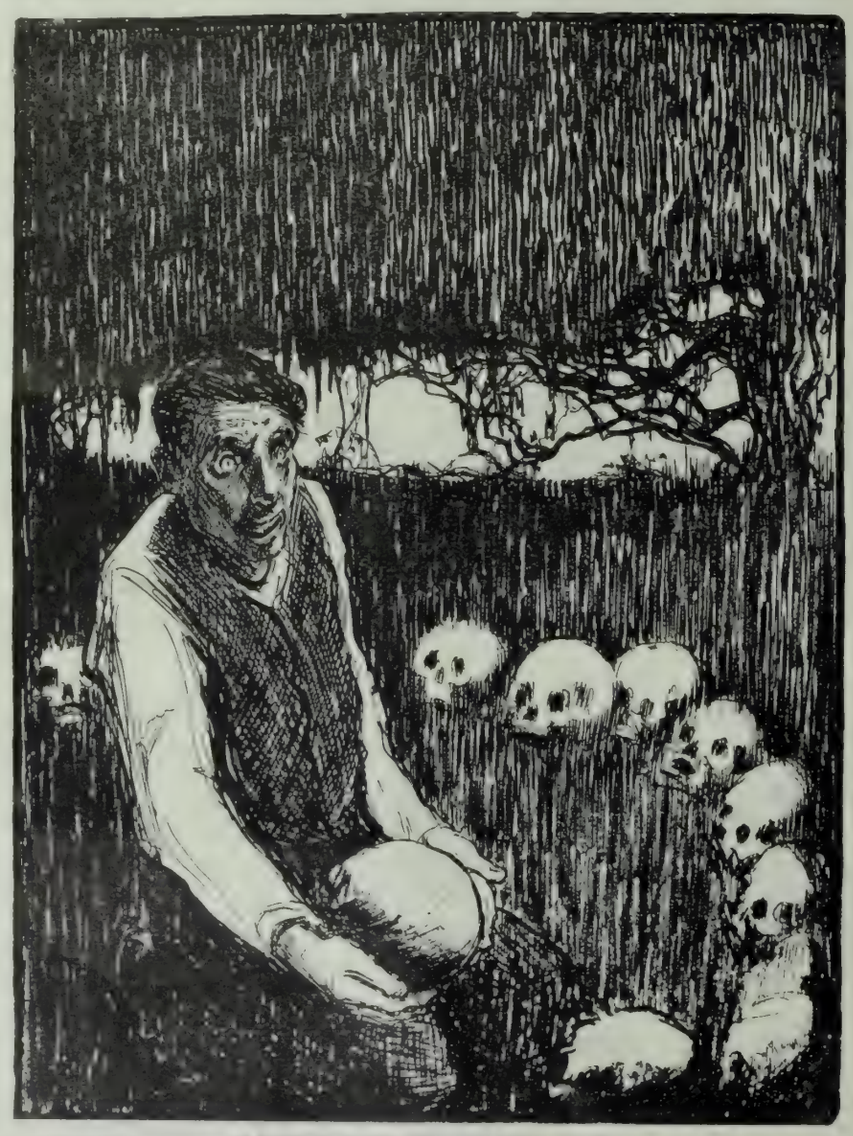
"First of all, then, I must ask you to believe that, although convicted, I was innocent. Do you take my word for this?"

"Yes, I believe you are telling the truth. 'Traps,' I suppose?"

"No, it was nobody's fault; just a piece of regular low-down bad luck—nothing else. I believe I made the biggest strike ever made outside the 'Arabian Nights,' and that I was the richest man in Africa for about five minutes; but all I got out of it was six years on the Breakwater.

"It came about in this way: I'd worked for a couple of years at 'Pilgrim's,' that you, perhaps, have heard of; but never made 'tucker.' Towards the end of 1876 I dropped working on my own account and went on wages for a spell. When I'd saved fifteen pounds, I did what I'd been wishing to do for years—started prospecting among the ranges to the northeast of what is now called the Murchison. I'd been up that way before, but got starved out. I felt dead sure that gold was to be found in a certain gorge that was crossed, near its head, by a burnt reef, and for this I made a bee-line. I'd been a gold-digger ever since I was fifteen years old, and never was, and never will be, fit for anything else.

"I had a mate, an odd sort of a chap who'd been knocking about 'Pilgrim's' ever since it was first rushed, but who had never managed to make more than a bare living. I never knew his real name, but in the creek he was called 'Billy Nuts.' He was a Roosian-Finn by birth, and had come to this country as cook of a brig that got wrecked near Delagoa Bay. Billy had lived in Japan, and had been tattooed there something wonderful. All round his body Japanese devils in red and blue were fighting and chasing one another. Sailors always say that Roosian-Finns have dealings with the devil and can work magic, and that it is unlucky to have anything to do with them. The devil-dealings of Billy never did any good to himself, at all events, whatever harm they may have done to me.



"I KNEW IT COULD NOT LAST MUCH LONGER."

"I've heard it said that every man is mad on something—some on politics, some on religion, and some on drink. Billy Nuts was mad on money; he was so fond of it that if he ever did by any chance get hold of a few coins he'd sit looking at and polishing them up for hours at a time. If ever he had to spend any, he'd just go away by himself and howl. The boys all knew Billy's weakness, and used to get fine sport out of it. Sometimes one would slide up alongside him and jingle a few half crowns in his pocket. Then Billy would laugh like an idiot and squirm like a girl being tickled. He was a low-sized, thick-set man of about forty years of age. He had reddy-brown hair and beard, a snub nose, and yellow eyes that always looked watery. He had a habit of talking to himself in Roosian-Finn.

"Billy hadn't a cent, so I paid for the whole outfit. I wanted a mate to talk to, and I did not care to waste my money paying 'boys'' wages. We took about twenty pound weight of beads and other 'trade.' I knew something of the lingo of the natives, and had no doubt of being able to get enough corn, honey, and eggs to live on. Billy borrowed an old muzzle-loading Colt's revolver from a chum; I carried a light rifle.

"Our swags were heavy, so we walked slowly. It took us about a fortnight to reach the gorge, which opened into the Letaba river. We passed through the country of Secocoeni, who was a big chief before the British were obliging enough to root him out for the benefit of the Transvaal Boers. Beyond Secocoeni's country we found no people, but plenty of game.

"Up there every gorge cuts through rough crags, which are full of caves. Having no tent, we nearly always camped just in front of a cave, so as to have shelter handy in case of rain.

"We started prospecting where the gorge opened into the Letaba, and worked up the creek for about five miles—right on to the burnt reef. 'Color' we found everywhere, but no sign of possible gold. Then our grub ran low, and feeling very down-hearted, we began to think of returning. Meat we had plenty of, for I shot game whenever I wanted to.

"One night we were lying smoking alongside the fire, which was lit on the ledge in front of the cave. All at once we heard the sound of a footstep just below us, so we quietly took our weapons and stole back into the darkness, one on each side of the fire. The step came closer, pausing now and then. All at once a native woman crept out of the scrub and came up close to the fire.

"She was quite a girl, and looked half-starved. She stood there, panting and glancing in a frightened way from side to side. When we saw she was alone we came back, and she fell on the ground at my feet and began to sob. I had shot a buck that day, so we had plenty of meat. When I offered her a piece, she snatched it from my hand and gnawed at it, raw, just like a wild animal. Then she picked up the tin 'billy,' took a big drink of water, and stepped into the cave, where she curled up to sleep behind a boulder without saying 'By your leave,' 'Thank you,' or anything else.

"Next morning, when we got up, the girl was still crouching behind the boulder. We gave her some more meat, which she cooked at a fire she lit inside the cave. Then Billy went down to the creek to wash his shirt, which he hung on a bush to dry. He came back to the cave just as he was; and when the girl saw the Japanese devils she ran away into a nook, and began to spit like a cat and swear in her own language something terrible

"She would have nothing to do with Billy after that, but with me she was all right. From what I knew of her language I was able to make out that she had run away from her home, which was away back in Secocoeni's country. It was wonderful to see how she picked up on the meat diet; in a few days she became quite sleek. When she arrived she had marks of a cruel flogging, some three or four days old. She would not tell me a word as to how or why she had got this, but she said that people were out looking for her all over the country, and that if she were caught, she would be killed. She would never leave the cave for a minute whilst there was any daylight, but at night she would go and sit outside, away from the shine of the fire, and strain her ears for sounds.

Continued on page 17.

Curious Phases in Chinese Life.

Wu Ting Sang

CHINA.

By Mary A. Woods.

TYPE of the changeless, thou; yet not of Good,
Whose high immutable is but the chime
Of waves that ceaseless throng the shores of Time,
Conquerors of fate and all vicissitude,
For thee, thy calm is of the enchanted wood
And wizard spell: a trance that—countless years—
Has sealed thy heart to love, thine eyes to tears,
And blasted so thy flower of maidenhood.

Is there no charm to rouse thee save the word
Of impotent hate, whereby thy sleep is stirred
To fevered dreams, not life? Across that sea
Whose waters, circling all, encircle thee—
The eternal Good—shall not a voice be heard—
"Ephphatha! break thy bonds! be strong and free!"

No Such Thing as China.

WHAT figures as China on the map is a number of districts often separated from each other and from the centre by immense distance, differing widely in climate, resources and configuration, inhabited by people of largely varying race, temperament, habit, religion and language. The Mohammedans, of whom there are thirty millions, regard the Buddhists as irreligious foreigners. The inhabitants of the central and northern provinces scarcely regard those of the extreme southeast districts as fellow-countrymen at all. A native of Shanghai was heard to say, "There were seven Chinamen and two Cantonese." A man from Tien Tsin and a man from Canton can no more talk to each other than a Frenchman and a Dutchman. Moreover, there exists between them a virulent race hatred. This is conspicuous where Chinese from different parts of China meet together, as, for example, in Bangkok, or on the plantations in Malaya or the Dutch Indies. Savage faction fights are of constant occurrence. Consequently it is easy to raise a force of Chinese in one place to fight Chinese in another.

It is because there is no such thing as "China" that the military caste of the Manchus, comparatively infinitesimal in numbers, have been able to impose their rule upon the enormous masses of Chinese. In the language of physics the Chinese people is a mechanical mixture and not a chemical compound, and therefore it is irresponsive to the action of any single reagent, and incapable of exhibiting any common property. There seems but the slightest possibility of the establishment by Chinese authority of a national army, or navy, or civil service. And the corruption which is the fatal curse of China is directly due to the fact that there is not and cannot be any central authority to exercise control over local officials, or, in the absence of this, to pay them.

Woman's Lot in China.

WOMAN'S influence in China is greater than is commonly supposed. Records of the Flowery Kingdom are full of examples of women famous for their learning, heroism, and high principle. Sometimes women achieve absolute power over the household, for there is a popular saying, "She eats rice with her husband," which is used to describe the rule of the female tyrant. Yet woman's lot in China is not an enviable one. She is not received into the world with joy, and gets very little education. At twelve she is banished from all companionship to become "the young girl who sits in the house," until her marriage, when she weds some one she has never seen. Then she must obey her husband and her mother-in-law; she may not come into contact with men or the outside world and, as a rule, she cannot read. She may, however, receive ladies and return their calls. The patriarchal system is so universal that the father is a despotic ruler over his family, and a married woman becomes so entirely a part of her husband's family that she has to yield her obedience to her husband's parents, who frequently treat her more as a slave than a daughter-in-law. The doctrine inculcated in the Chinese classics is that a woman has three stages of obedience: First, to her father, second, to her husband, and third, if her husband dies, to her son when he reaches manhood. The old proverb goes: "Men wish their boys to be like wolves, and fear lest they should be timid; their girls they wish to be like mice, and fear lest they should have the boldness of the tiger." The laws established 2,300 years ago are in favor to-day, and among them no rules are stricter than those for keeping the women in bondage.

No Logic in China.

THERE is no logic, as a science, in China, and very little of the ordinary, every-day logic of other civilizations. Not only do the Chinese lack the syllogism, the laws of thought and the whole system of reasoning as built up by European minds, but they show in their daily life a strange lack of the power of induction. To this may justly be ascribed the curiously undeveloped condition of their civilization. They have invented and discovered many things, but have never been able to reason from facts to a general law. The remarkable contradictions in the mental equipment of the Chinese offer a fascinating field for observation. Their very illogicality deserves study at a time like the present, when the Chinese character is truly under the microscope of our western civilization.

Sir John Davis, the Chinese authority of half a century ago, observed that the Chinese "set no value on abstract science, apart from some obvious and immediate end of utility," and he goes on to remark that the state of sciences in China is like their condition in Europe previous to the adoption of the inductive methods of investigation. This is obviously true; the Chinese civilization is the most extraordinary mixture of culture and crudity that the world has ever seen. Yet without a developed science of government the Chinese possess great administrative ability. Without a true power of invention, they were familiar centuries before Europe, with the plough, the compass, the use of gunpowder, and so on. The race which produces diplomats who baffle western statesmen, merchants who outclass our best business men, produces also men who paint eyes on their boats, saying in explanation, "No have eyes, no can see."

A Chinese boy, if asked why his sister did not come to school, will answer, "My sister did not come to school," and consider it a full reply to the question. Ask why the Chinese build pagodas thirteen stories high, and the answer will come, "The Chinese built them so." The idea of cause and effect is extremely hazy in the Celestial mind.

Chinese Easy to Learn.

CONTRARY to the general impression, Chinese is much easier to learn than any other language. There is no grammar, no tense, but the words yesterday, to-day, and to-morrow; no moods to verbs, no comparison of adjectives and adverbs, but the words more and most; no plural, no spelling. There are only roots, all of one syllable, and all Chinese. With a small working vocabulary a student can converse and pupils not unusually brilliant have learned to speak Chinese in four months. A pupil of Dr. Gardiner, of the Chinese Bureau in San Francisco, asked last autumn, "Do you think I can learn to speak Chinese in three years if I work? I intend to be a merchant in Canton." He was told to come and try, which he did. In less than three months he could converse well. It is not a year since he learned his first word in Chinese, and now he can speak, read and write enough Chinese to carry on any business. Observance of oral enunciation and varying pitch which makes a syllabic word mean any of half a dozen things to a Chinaman is indispensable. It is in this one particular pitch that Chinese is difficult for a European to learn to speak.

The errors made in this direction are amusing and embarrassing. A Salvation lassie was accustomed to dismiss her class of 30 Celestials with a sentence in Chinese. It was some time before she learned that by pitching the word for home improperly she had been telling her pupils that she was about to go to that warm place below instead of saying, "I am going home."

The language is so full of bits of human interest that it impresses itself upon the mind of the student as one goes along. For instance, the characters. They look like tracks of chickens' muddy feet till one understands them. Take the sign for "old." It is made up of the two signs "trees" and "bird"—a bird buried at the root of a tree. "Jealous" is represented by two signs, a door and a woman—a woman listening at the door. Then the Chinaman, although he may have a dozen wives, naively admits that one is easier to manage, for his word for "bad" and for "angry" is the sign for one man and two women, one on either side. "Good" and "peace" and "rest" are all represented by one woman with the sign for house over her. "Crafty" is expressed by the symbol of woman three times repeated, and "flattery" is one woman and two men.

A knowledge of other languages will help little in studying Chinese, beyond the mental fibre acquired in study. The Chinaman strings his words together in a way of his own and it is just the reverse of our way whenever our way can possibly be reversed. The wheels of his mind turn in the opposite direction from the Occidental's, whether in writing, when he begins at the end of the page, or in his religion when he prays to the devil.

Chinese Courage

THERE is no denying the courage of the Chinese. In fact, the report of Admiral Seymour's march and of the military operations at Tien Tsin read more like tales of massacres than battles. Crowds of Chinamen armed with tridents and swords and antique lances, but trusting more to their small red bag containing the Boxer sign, a red fork, and a written charm, rush with bare bosoms on the well-manned intrenchments of the foreigner and fall in hundreds before the level sheet of bullets which meets them. Yet many succeed in spite of this hail of death in reaching the trenches. A case in point is mentioned by Captain Shimamura, commander of the Suma, who guarded the highway on the south bank of the Pei-ho, connecting the concessions with the native town. On June 16 he was attacked by several hundred Boxers carrying torches. The Japanese marines, who thus had an excellent opportunity for taking aim, opened a terrific fire on them and the greater part fled, leaving their torches behind. During the isolated attacks that followed one brave fellow succeeded in reaching the trench, to which he walked with as much sang-froid as if he were invulnerable. He was shot down at last, of course, but not until he had reached to within a few yards of the muzzles of the guns. When his corpse was dragged inside the intrenchment by the Japanese and examined, it was found that he was a young man of about 25, clad entirely in silk raiment. It seems somehow fitting that the youths of the oldest Empire in the world should die in the richest attire and with their faces to the conquerors.

The Population of China.

THE Chinese Government, at irregular intervals, takes a so-called census of the nineteen provinces of China proper and bases the collection of taxes upon this enumeration. Some western students of China accept the figures thus gained as fair approximations of the truth, while others are far more critical The statistics usually printed have been those of the Chinese census modified by writers on China whose opinions are regarded as authoritative; but as these experts do not agree it happens that in the present decade, the estimated population of China, as given in various geographical works, varies from 250,000,000 to 450,000,000 souls. In the first six volumes of Die Bevolkerung der Erde, one of the most critical of statistical publications, the Chinese enumeration of 1842, with a total of 413,000,000 was accepted as worthy of credit; but the seventh volume went back to the enumeration of 1812, which gave a population of 360,000,000; and the editor explained that this was done because the mass of criticism was now opposed to the acceptance of the figures of 1842 and the known wasting of the population by wars and famine seemed to justify smaller figures. The concensus of opinion is that the country is not over populated. Much of the soil is capable of producing from two to three crops a year, and, allowing for this fact, there are 2.75 acres of arable land per head of population, an amount far greater than in most countries of Europe.

EVENTS CURRENT.

Peking Relieved at Last.

Peking is relieved; the legations are saved. The troops of the allied powers have beaten down the gates and entered the walls of the great capital. Part of the allied force has taken and occupied the Forbidden City, the heart of the town, being almost the first white men to enter that district. The city is burning in several places. The Emperor and Empress, with the flower of the Imperial guard, are in full retreat, heading, it is surmised, to the West, although their exact location is a mystery. They took with them most of the Imperial treasure.

This summarizes the Chinese news for the week. The capture of Peking was a rather easy task, in comparison with the sharp fighting that went before. On the 13th, the allied forces drew near the city. It was raining heavily, and the commanders intended to bivouac and reconnoitre. The sound of heavy firing within the walls, however, alarmed them, and they pressed on with all possible speed. Early on the morning of the 14th, the Russians and Japanese attacked the east gate, meeting with serious opposition, and a heavy battle ensued. They finally succeeded in blowing up an entrance and forcing in; the Americans and British had meantime entered on the other side, where the opposition was lighter, and were first to reach the legations. They were just it time. The supply of food was very low, the defenders were nearly exhausted. The heavy firing which the allies heard from without was one last desperate effort by the Chinese armies to annihilate the legationaries before help could arrive. The ministers added to the meager information furnished in their official dispatches a long story of Chinese treachery; they had been continually on their guard against machinations of the Foreign Office and of the Princes. The total loss of life in the siege was 67 killed and 160 wounded. All the ministers declare that the uprising is not caused by the Boxers but by the Imperial government itself. The troops pressed on toward the palaces in the city's heart. Here they met with rather stiff resistance. However, a late dispatch from Peking, via London, says that the Americans have entered the district and are holding the outer palaces. The Emperor and Dowager Empress are gone, no one knows where. They left August 13th. accompanied by their body guard and carrying the national treasure. It is surmised that as many troops as can be spared from police duty in Peking have gone on after them. Rumor, in fact, has it that a body of Japanese cavalry holds them surrounded. The whereabouts of Prince Tuan, head of the Boxer fanatics,and of Prince Ching, the friend of the foreigners, are very uncertain, but Tuan must be with the Imperial party. Fighting is still in progress between the allies and the remnant of the Chinese army left within the city.

The Powers in China.

The fall of Peking led Li Hung Chang to make a new appeal to the United States for peace negotiations. Cessation of hostilities was requested as a preliminary. Minister Conger was named as an acceptable delegate. Nothing appeared in the letter, however, as to Li's ability or inability to force the Boxers and Imperial troops into a cessation of hostilities. The proposition was promptly refused, partly because of the distrust in which Earl Li is held just now, partly because China has not complied with the conditions of our note of the 12th, which named the free entry of a relieving force into Peking as an indispensable preliminary. The fact that the appeal was made to our Government first of all would indicate that the United States will be expected to mediate in the final settlement, as being the Power least vitally interested. The desperate condition of China is shown by the last paragraph of the appeal, which requests that no indignities be offered the Emperor or Empress Dowager. This was answered by an assurance that, so far as the United States is concerned, the rulers will be humanely treated. The riffle caused by the landing of British troops in the Yang-tse Valley, which may be the first symptom of a coming international squabble over the spoils, was settled by the landing at Shanghai of 700 French troops from Tonkin and of Russian and French detachments. Further, warships of all the Powers, including our own New Orleans, are in the harbor. The Chinese Navy has a squadron in one of the estuaries of Shanghai Bay. The British ships have been blockading these vessels to keep them from preying on the transports of the allied armies. This task will now be divided among the allied squadron now in the harbor. This seems to settle the dispute for the present, but Great Britain's action, whatever its motive, has been bitterly criticised on the hostile Continent, the French in especial claiming that it gives the lie to open-door protestations. Although the United States is also committed to an open-door policy, no immediate withdrawal of our troops is expected. General Chaffee sends word that the war is not nearly over, and even though it were, the policy of the country pending a settlement will take all the international forces at present in China. No policy as to the final disposition of the Empire has yet been broached by any of the Powers.

The Week in National Politics

Both parties have now passed the stage of preliminary organization for the Presidential campaign, and have settled down to active work. Bryan is on a speech-making tour through the West, and Roosevelt is to be started out on a counter tour early in September. He is now in constant conference with the President and the National Committee regarding policy and subjects. The fear which seems to oppress the Republican managers just now is that the party may lose through overconfidence. All of Mark Hanna's recent utterances have been aimed against this tendency. On the Democratic side, Imperialism is dwarfing every other issue. Even in Nebraska, Kansas and other strongholds of silver sentiment, Bryan hardly mentions the coinage issue. The trust question is also relegated to the background.

The National League of Anti-Imperialists, in convention assembled, has endorsed Bryan and the Democratic platform by an overwhelming, though not unanimous vote. On the other hand, it seems by no means certain that the Fusion Populists will endorse Stevenson to replace Towne, their regular vice-presidential nominee. When Towne withdrew, it was in Stevenson's favor and with the understanding that his party would accept the Democratic nominee. A great part of the National Committee are, however, opposed to Stevenson on the ground of his old Cleveland allegiance, and will fight him when the committee meets for a choice.

Ex Senator J. J. Ingalls.

Ex-Senator John J. Ingalls, for twenty years one of the most prominent men in American public life, died, August 16th, of bronchitis. He had been out of politics since the rise of Populism, which overturned the Rebublican party, in Kansas, the State of his adoption. Previous to that, he had served in the Senate for nineteen consecutive years, had presided over the body for two years, and had been a power in the formation of the present Republican party. Ingalls was born in Massachusetts in 1833, of Puritan stock. After graduating from Williams college and obtaining his entrance to the bar, he emigrated to Kansas, it being then the time of the great Free Soil struggle in that section. He became prominent at once, was a member of the Constitutional Convention which laid out the laws for the new State and was president of the first State Senate. In 1862 he was defeated for Lieutenant-Governor and thereupon took up journalism, toward which he had a strong bent. Returning later to the bar, he left a lucrative practice to become Senator in 1873. In Congress, he rose to leadership almost at once. His clear grasp of public questions and a fearless if rather reckless adherence to his opinions helped him to prominence, but his stronghold was his ability as an orator. He was, without doubt, the most popular speaker of his time in the Upper House. After his retirement in 1891, he devoted his time to journalism and literature, contributing largely to the important magazines and newspapers.

Recent Archæological Discoveries.

Two remarkable archæological discoveries made within the present year promise to enlarge our knowledge of the history of the world by many centuries. The first is the unearthing by French scientists of royal Egyptian records going back to the kings of the first dynasty. As we know practically everything to be known about the daily life of the Egyptians, and as their origin, being connected with that of no other early civilization, can throw no light on the beginning of the Caucasian race, this discovery is of comparatively small importance. The other one is, on the contrary, as momentous an archæological find as has been made in the century. It is the discovery of a great library on the site of ancient Nippur, Asia Minor, by the scientists of the University of Pennsylvania. Over 17,000 books, in the form of clay tablets, were taken out; and there are yet five sections to be explored. If the remaining sections prove as rich in results as the one explored, we shall have a record of a lost civilization far more complete than our records of Egypt. Already enough is known from these 17,000 tablets to overturn about half of archæology. There is proof that, in the region of Babylonia, a civilization as high as that of the Greeks and Romans (although lower in the direction of art) reached its climax—not its beginnings—in the century 5000-6000 B.C. The excavations at Nineveh and Babylonia bring us only to the third century B.C. The race which made Nippur its capital, the Akkads, had many points in common with the modern Chinese, and the present theory is that they were the forefathers of the existing Oriental races. If so, it credits the Chinese with seventy centuries of quiescence, for the Akkads possessed most of the essential arts of the present-day Mongolians. They were canal-builders and farmed by irrigation. They had a written language, in which they educated all their children. They loved music, and had made some progress in painting and sculpture; had a banking and clearing-house system, and kept accounts, used scientific money, had a code of laws, were familiar with the sundial, levers, pulleys, spectacles, and probably telescopes. Many of these facts are revealed for the first time by the 17,000 books turned up at Nippur, and may be more fully corroborated by the records still unread. This discovery fixes dates and proves the antiquity of the Akkad civilization. The dates are corroborated by records of solar eclipses, which invariably agree with astronomical calculations.

The last few years have been remarkable for the richness of Egyptian and Asiatic archæological finds. Ten years ago it was believed that the field in this direction was pretty well worked out. This find proves the contrary, but it had already been disproved by the recent unearthing of a library of the second century in Egypt. The dried and hardened manuscripts of this find, being unwrapped and deciphered, have already revealed a lost poem of Sappho, one of the only two complete ones now extant, a curious list of the "sayings of Jesus," containing one or two sentences not attributed to Christ either in the Bible or the Apocrypha, and fragments of a scriptural work believed to be the Last Gospel heretofore regarded as a myth. This library may show other finds just as important, since the slow work of deciphering is not half done. A further possibility of the future is the upturning of the lost New Testament originals in the old mosques of Damascus, which which were once the most important Christian churches in the world and are now for the first time opened to the research of European scholars—thanks to the diplomacy of the German Emperor.

San Francisco's Place in the Census Returns.

Before the census was completed, it was thought that San Francisco would be backward in the proportionate population this year, that, in fact, several cities formerly ranked lower on the list would outrank her. The compilation is practically completed, and it turns out that San Francisco has not only held her place but has actually gained. In 1890, she stood eighth on the list; the incorporation of Brooklyn with Greater New York puts San Francisco in seventh place—practically the same position. But the city has drawn up well toward sixth place. In 1890, San Francisco had 2000 more people than Cincinnati. The excess is now 44,000. Over Buffalo, which has been annexing suburbs, the Golden Gate City still leads by 17,000. In fact, San Francisco is the only city among the leaders which has not helped its totals by the addition of outlying districts. Were Oakland, Alameda and Berkeley added on the Greater New York plan, the California metropolis would be challenging fourth place. Further, the census of June, 1900, was taken in the worst time of the worst year possible. Probably 20,000 of the regular inhabitants are away at Cape Nome, Dawson or the other northern gold camps, and many others are scattered along the mining towns of the slope. Further, the conditions of life in the city are peculiar. Most unmarried men without families in the region sleep in lodging-houses and board in restaurants. This makes the task of complete classification difficult and nearly impossible. Under these circumstances, the official figures of 369,000 may with justice be expanded to something very nearly 400,000. A peculiar feature is the fact that San Francisco is almost the only city which did not overestimate the municipal population. The city's newspapers prophesied 340,000—about 30,000 short of the mark. On the other hand, New York's guess was 200,000 in excess of the reality, and Chicago's 400,000.

A Quarrel Between Roumania and Bulgaria.

The two turbulent little border States of Roumania and Bulgaria are again at loggerheads, and a war is expected. The disturbance goes back to the continual hatred of the two countries, but has been brought to a head by an apparent interference of the Roumanian government in the internal affairs of Bulgaria. Roumania has demanded the arrest of Sarafow, president of the Bulgarian revolutionary party organ. The reason given is that the rise of a revolutionary party would be inimical to Roumanian interests. The demand as it stands is really an ultimatum, with war as an alternative. Both sides are preparing. The Bulgarian army is being mobilized on the frontier, and on the other side three army corps are being rushed to the border. The tension has been increased by sensational speeches emanating from King Charles of Bulgaria. Further, it is expected that the minister at Sofia will be recalled. The quarrel is of more than passing interest in Europe, as trouble in the buffer States usually comes as a prelude to a general European struggle of some sort.

is published every Saturday at The Wave Building, 24 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal., and Colman Building, Seattle, Wash. Entered at the Post Office as second-class matter. Subscription: Per year, $2.00; six months, $1.25; three months, 75 cents. Foreign subscription (countries in postal union) $1 per year additional. Sample copies free.

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY
PROPRIETORS

San Francisco — August 25, 1900 — Seattle

A Sentimental Valentine.

CURIOUS world, this. No man can ever tell what the whirligig of time may bring about. A few short months ago, according to the Examiner, John J. Valentine, the President of Wells, Fargo's Express, was a selfish, grasping, and an altogether unlovely person, directing the destinies of an infamous corporation that was openly and notoriously ignoring the plain letter of the law and shirking the payment of its proportion of the war taxes. But now that Mr. Valentine has announced it as his intention to support Mr. Bryan, and has declared his hostility to the "imperialistic tendencies of the administration" he has blossomed forth into the "distinguished president" of a great express company. He is now a "thoughtful man of affairs" who holds a "foremost position in the commercial world," and is gifted with "clarity of reasoning and forcefulness of argument."

Four months ago Mr. Valentine was a tax-shirker without patriotism; four years ago when he denounced free silver and Bryanism, he was a representative of "Plutocracy," was one of the "moneyed class" and was variously suspected of having some sort of privity with the "Shylocks of Wall or Lombard Streets." But now, Mr. Valentine is all right. No noon-day sun ever dispelled an August fog as quickly or as effectually as Mr. Valentine's declaration for Bryan wiped out the sin of "Plutocracy" and the wrong of "shirking the war tax."

Mr. Valentine has not modified or renounced his views on free silver. He still firmly adheres to the belief that our national honor and credit would be hopelessly involved if the policy of free silver were ever fastened upon our financial system. He has not receded the fraction of an inch from his former very pronounced stand on the silver issue. It is just as pernicious, just as dangerous, and quite as false and damnable now as it was four years ago. He still believes that free silver would drive six hundred million of gold out of circulation; he still believes that labor would suffer, enterprise languish and commerce and manufactures come to a standstill should free silver carry the day. "But," he says "there are greater questions than financial or economic ones, viz.: Human Rights!"

* * *

There is a cold, clammy suspicion going the rounds that the last Congress (which was Republican) legislated too wisely and too well. The bankers, particularly the Democratic bankers, of the country who four years ago trembled in alarm over the prospect of Bryanism, have, because of the new currency act, which they owe to the Republican party, assumed a self-satisfied sense of personal security, and a feeling of buoyancy and confidence that leads them to button up their fears, snap their fingers at free silver, and take to quibbling over the fly-speck, and, as a matter of personal economy, to sagely discussing "imperialism," "tyranny," "oppression" and indulge themselves in sentimental broodings over the "rights of the Filipinos." It is not often that the banker gives full play to the sentimental side of his nature, and perhaps he ought to be encouraged in it.

The friends of Mr. Bryan are industriously at work attempting to lull just such men as Mr. Valentine to sleep. It is of vital importance to that candidate to secure the support of the men who voted against him because of his free silver tendencies, and it is hoped to persuade them that even with their support Bryan cannot be elected; and if elected, the Senate being Republican, will kill any free silver measure that may come up. As has been happily said "They hope to win for Mr. Bryan some votes from the ungrateful and weak-minded, who inspired by a morbid sentimentality, or a keen sense of economy are willing to risk the overthrow of the gold standard in order to administer a rebuke, as they call it, to the present adminstration for its treatment of the Philippine banditti."

* * *

The gold man—and Mr. Valentine is most radical in his views on the currency question—should not delude himself into believing himself out of the woods, or be moved by the sentiment that runs "I'm all right, to h—l with the other fellow." The election of Mr. Bryan would certainly mean the election of a Democratic majority in the House. If anything is certain in politics, that is. We have said before, the first act of such a majority would undoubtedly be to pass a free silver bill. Then would follow a struggle that would bring Mr. Valentine down on his knees. The powerful influence of the Bryan administration would, with all of its political force, be brought to bear upon the Senate to secure a concurrence with the House. We would like to have some banker like Mr. Valentine tell us how long that Senate would resist this pressure. Suppose, for instance, Mr. Valentine, that a great majority of the people of this state should be afflicted with the same "fears" and "dark forebodings" that possess you, in respect to this bug-a-boo of Imperialism. Suppose, in consequence of this "irresistible sympathy and patriotic fear," this state should cast its electoral vote for Mr. Bryan, anti-imperialism and free silver. Suppose, too, it should send Democrats to Congress in place of the Republicans now there. These Congressmen would come fresh from the people, they would represent the immediate wishes and desires of a majority of the voters of this state, and we would like to ask you whether Senator Perkins and Senator Bard would be justified in refusing to heed this plainly expressed wish of their constituents? Senators Perkins and Bard represent the state not the Republican party. You, Mr. Valentine, and we of this journal would try to urge upon them that free silver had nothing to do with the result in California. But to say the least the other fellow would have a most plausible argument to persuade them to represent the people whom they were elected to represent—and this, backed by the pressure of the administration, would be likely to give the banker with a "sentiment" a chance to think about "financial or economic ones."

* * *

Even without a silver bill, Mr. Bryan's power to play the devil with our currency is almost unlimited. If Mr. Valentine or any other banker with a "sentiment" believes the gold standard is "firmly fixed for six years, at least" as has been hastily and erroneously declared, let him come forward and tell us what is to prevent President Bryan's suspending gold payments, and bringing the currency of the nation below the gold standard. Matthew Marshall in the New York Sun says:

"While, too, the act provides for the redemption in gold of government notes, it makes no such provision for the redemption of silver dollars or of the certificates representing them. For does it define 'coin' used in the government bonds issued previously, as meaning gold coin only."

* * *

The result is, as Mr. Marshall points out, that some $600,000,000 of silver, $36,000,000 of national bank notes assumed by the government, the principal and interest of $600,000,000 of government bonds, and the ordinary expenses of the government, are all unaffected by the new act, so that the Secretary of the Treasury may, without violating it, offer to the public creditors in payment of more than two-thirds of their claims, money not convertible into gold at par on demand. No penalty is attached for a failure of the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain the currency on a parity with gold and there is nothing to prevent him from ignoring a currency act which all of Mr. Bryan's supporters disapprove, and which all of them denounce as "the culmination of a long series of conspiracies to deprive the people of their constitutional rights over the money of the nation and relegate to a gigantic money trust the control of the finances and hence of the people."

Lovely company Mr. Valentine is in. Let's hope for his own sake and for the country's sake that his beautiful sentiments respecting the Filipinos and his dreadful fears and elaborate constitutional theories may not operate to render him or the nation less prosperous or less happy.

Our Duty in China.

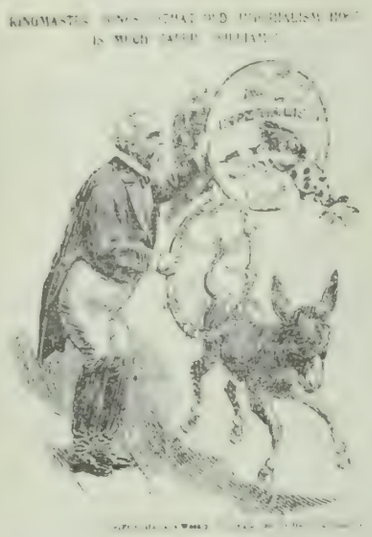
IT will probably make very little difference to the Bryanistic follower what the attitude of the administration may be with respect to China. If our troops are withdrawn, it will be cowardice; if they are directed to assist in restoring order, it will be Imperialism. Whatever may be the course of the administration, it will be wrong in the sight of these men who hold "politics" above everything else. Probably every fair-minded man will admit that to withdraw our troops, now that Minister Conger is safe, would be despicable. To say to the allied forces, "We are going to quit," and calmly shift upon their shoulders the burden of restoring order and government in China—from which we will take benefits as great as any other nation—would be rank cowardice and utterly inexcusable as matters stand to-day. Yet a condition may arise—and a few days may uncover it—when this country would be perfectly justified in refusing to proceed further. The United States was first interested—in common with all the world—in succoring her legationers, and securing protection to her citizens. No one, of any sense, has ever questioned the course of the administration in this particular connection. We joined forces with the allied armies in a just and common cause which has been partially accomplished. The United States is now interested in restoring order in China, in securing the re-establishment of a responsible government that will guarantee adequate indemnity for the outrages of the past, and insure protection to our representatives and our citizens against similar uprisings in the future. Further than this we are interested in maintaining an open door—and no further. We have no hunger for Chinese territory, and under the guise of re-establishing order and government we should no contribute to the greed of any other nation.

So long as our legation was besieged and our minister exposed to the attacks of a fanatical mob, the administration was justified in proceeding without delay to put in motion every arm and every power of the government to secure their safety and release. There was no time to stop for international agreement as to the future. With a unanimous and complete understanding among the powers that the limit of their endeavors shall be peace, government, protection to citizens and indemnity, we are justified in continuing our operation with the armies of the civilized world. Indeed, it is our duty. But if the powers refuse to come to such an agreement, if even one of them insists on demanding a slice of territory, President McKinley would be justified in withdrawing our troops from all participation in Chinese affairs upon the ground that there no longer exists a complete community of interests, and that we are not justified in contributing toward the dismemberment of China or the aggrandizement of another nation.

Alaska has been for 23 years a colony of the United States. It was purchased without the consent of the natives; it is large in extent, it is far distant, it has nearly two and one half times more sea coast than all of the balance of the United States; its inhabitants do not and cannot vote, they never had representation of any kind, or an election of any kind; it is governed by Congress, and still we are not half empire, half republic.

It is a little difficult to understand the claim of a Republican party manager that there is "no fight" on the silver question in this campaign. How, under such circumstances, can you blame the gold Democrat for returning to his party. Silver is an issue, and the Republicans who have accepted Bryan's dictum that it is not an issue may regret permitting their enemy to dictate what are and what are not the issues involved.

A brief notice of the proposed sale of the Sutro Library serves to remind one that the ex-Mayor obtained a great deal of credit for a philanthropy he promised, but failed to put in practice.



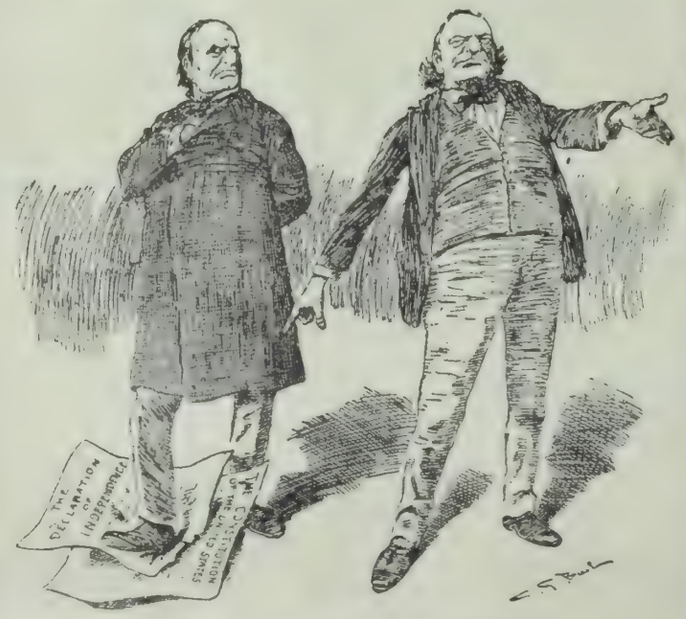
The Bryan notification meeting (from telegraphic description)
—From the Minneapolis Tribune

TO THE WEATHER MAN.

Smoke up again if this is the best you can do. Note—If this doesn't a cool wave all precedents are worthless

DESERTED

MISS DEMOCRACY—GRACIOUS ME! HOW I HAVE CHANGED SINCE I'VE BEEN KEEPING COMPANY WITH THIS MAN BRYAN



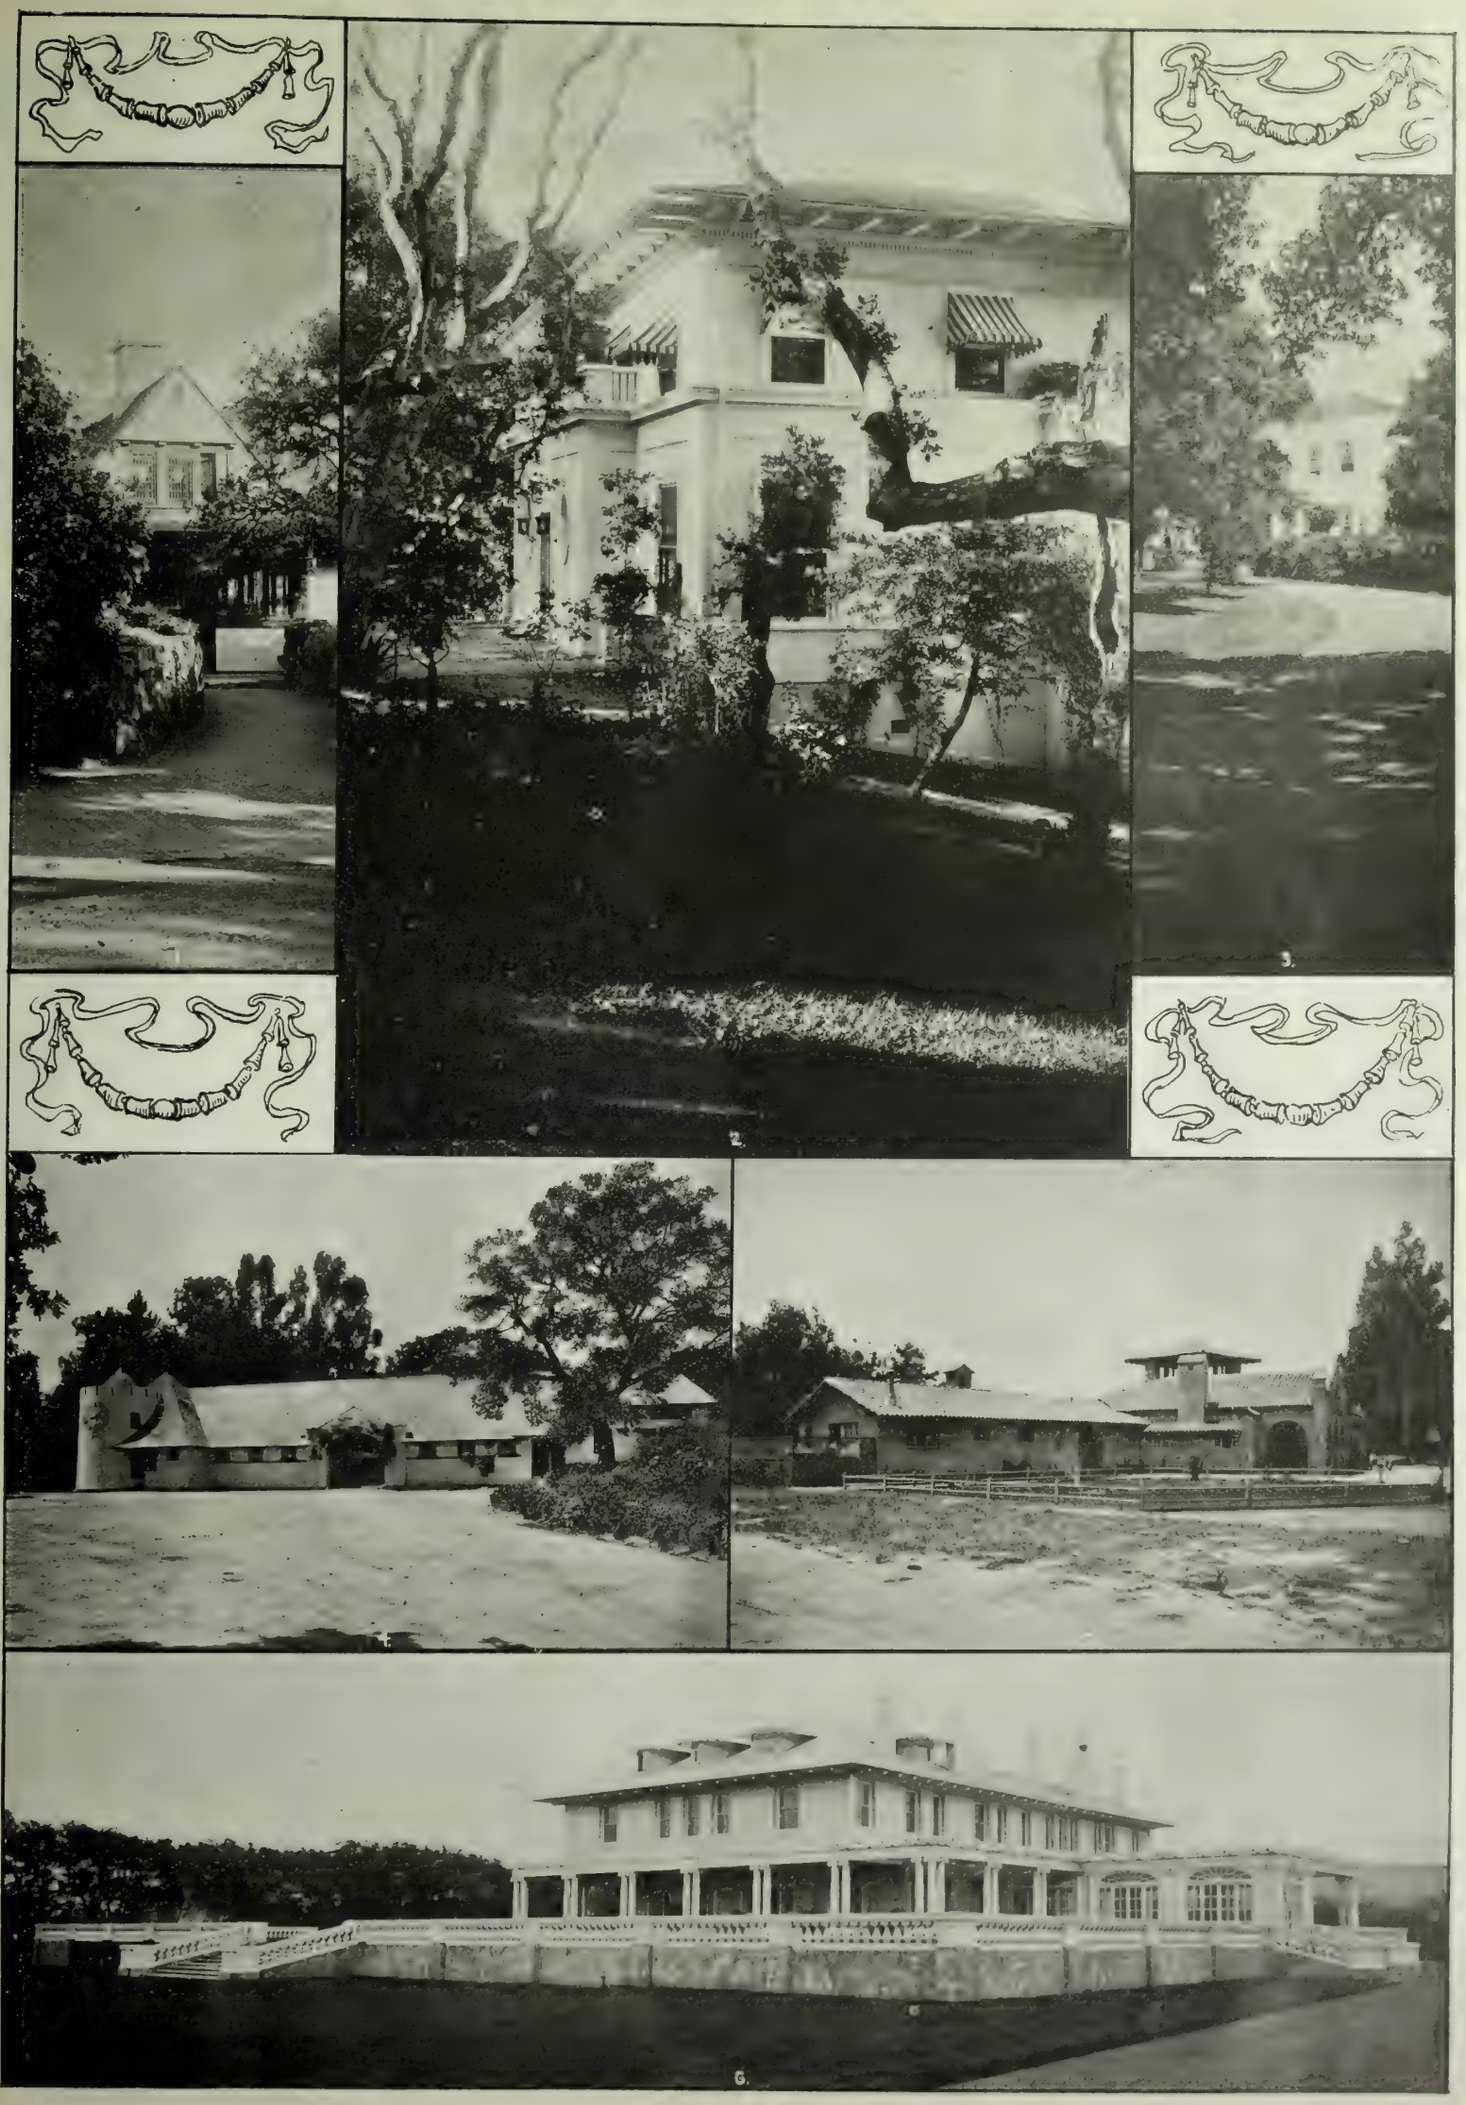
"THE PARAMOUNT ISSUE!"

THE MAN WHO MUST REMAIN IN TOWN FINDS PLENTY TO KEEP HIM INTERESTED.

Nelson in New York Herald.
Lynch in New York World.

Carter in Minneapolis Times.
Kemble in New York Herald.
Outcault in New York Herald.

POLITICAL ISSUES CARTOONED.



The Campaign and Its Leaders

NOTHING proves so thoroughly the extent to which political interest dominates this country as the elaborate organization of the national party campaigns. Senator Hanna on the Republican side and Senator Jones on the Democratic are generals of a great army, with brigades, regiments, companies and squads, a huge machine which works with the least possible friction toward a definite end. Considered on the financial side alone, it is a great undertaking. The election of a president in 1900 will cost all of $25,000,000. About one-fifth of this sum is to be distributed by the two national committees; the rest will pass through the local committees of the various states. The hire and keep of orators, the distribution of literature and devices, the organization of parades will take most of the money. After that, comes a great mass of miscellany—including the taking of a voter's canvass, the operation of phonographs and stereopticons, the hire of carriages at the polls, the salaries of writers of campaign literature. The organization was begun long before the formal opening of national headquarters in July; in fact, it is a survival of former campaigns, since the machine is not taken to pieces between elections, but only remains idle. The real work of Hanna, Jones and their counselors during the month of July lay in putting on the finishing touches.

and merchants are in receipt of private appeals of the same tenor. The party managers insist that no other means will be employed, that the party relies solely on the generosity of its supporters and that funds will be forthcoming when they are thoroughly awakened.

Chicago as a Political Center.

The watchword of the Republican party, "The Enemy's Country," is carried out in the present double arrangement of national headquarters. Chicago and New York being the "main offices," the western city will be the scene of the most active work. Hanna is organizing things in New York, but he will go to the western metropolis later and will make it his real headquarters. This idea of double centers for a campaign was Blaine's in the beginning, but was not adopted until four years ago, when it was proved to work well.

Chicago is still the center of all things for the Democrats. They intend to open a branch in New York before long, but it is evident that they will guard the West, their own particular region, most jealously. It happens, therefore, that Chicago is to be the storm-center this year. Jones, indeed, has been haunting the East, but his object has been to harmonize the jarring Hill-Croker factions in New York. This done, he is likely to return and put in most of his energy at force, seems to be doing the most, but the patient, steady, systematic toil of Mark Hanna is undoubtedly far more productive.

Cranks and Enthusiasts.

One of the terrors of life at the campaign headquarters is the crank with a patent device or a new idea. Their name is legion, their wiles are innumerable. One man with a faculty of writing jingle has made life a horror for the campaign managers since the conventions. He has haunted Republican and Democratic headquarters alike, and both sides have just bought a bunch of his wares in order to get rid of them. The man who has made most trouble for Hanna had a scheme for forming Rough Rider Clubs in every state, who should dress in khaki and be a feature of the parades. Unfortunately for Hanna, who was down on the idea from the first, this crank raised something of a following in the committee. However, he was finally sat down on, the chief announcing that the head of the ticket was McKinley and not Roosevelt, and that he would never consent to letting the tail wag the dog in that fashion. A few devices of the sort have been adopted. For example, both parties are going to buy and use phonographs to disseminate the speeches of their leaders. This plan was laughed at in the beginning, but is now proving agreat help to the spectacular side of the election.

Cornelius N. Bliss. Senator M. A. Hanna. Senator Nathan B. Scott. Frederick S. Gibbs. Joseph H. Manley.

A SESSION OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

Copyright by C. C. Johnson.

Republicans Overconfident.

The great fear which oppresses the managers of the Republican national campaign is that the party may lose through overconfidence. Throughout the East and, to a lesser extent, throughout the entire country, there is an impression that the Republicans are sure of a victory. The campaign fund collectors found this from the outset. Firms and individuals that had been accustomed to give heavily in previous years were indifferent and shy. Consequently, the party's financiers found themselves in the anomalous position of bankers to a party which is assailed by its opponents because of the wealth which it represents and because of its alleged truckling to the "money power," and is yet very much cramped for funds. This overconfidence is the chief worry of Mark Hanna's life. He works at his office early and late, whether there be anything to do or not, in order to dispel the illusion that the national committee, believing success a foregone conclusion, is resting on its oars. Some of the party organs in New York and Pennsylvania have been publishing strong letters appealing to the supporters of moderate means to contribute up to the top of their ability in order to meet the "extraordinarily strong efforts of the Democratic party." It is understood that the big manufacturers

Chicago. By the way, the superstitious among the Democrats are predicting victory for their party on the ground that their opponents are occupying this year the "hoodooed" quarters used by the Democratic committee in 1896, while they have the lucky Republican headquarters.

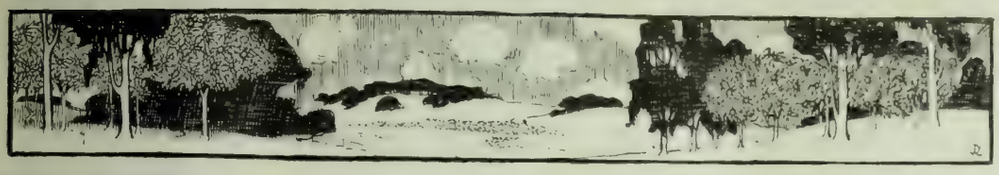
The Rival Managers.

The personal ways and methods of Jones and Hanna are widely different. The much-cartooned Senator from Ohio is given to a great, reflective calm, and manages affairs with the easy assurance of a man certain in his power and position. He works with the air of a business man, saying little but meaning much when he speaks, and seeing as few men as possible in order to allow himself precious time for office work. Jones seems to have taken his cue from his leader; he mixes with men a great deal, seeing as many personally as he can, and talks volubly. His main subjects of conversation just now are prediction of certain victory next fall and explanation of the income tax plank at Kansas City—a mistake, as events have proved. But both the men work tremendously as a man must do when he has the responsibility of years crowded into three months. Jones, owing to his apparent

THE LATEST IN SHOES.—The young New Yorker who wore white silk socks at a Newport dance is not likely to have many followers in a year marked by the flamboyant colors that men have permitted themselves to wear in this detail of dress this season. Riotous tints have been the rule, and the chaste simplicity of white silk socks is a violent contrast to the prevailing taste. The demand for highly colored hosiery is believed to be largely the result of the low black shoes, which have this season taken the place of the light-colored leather and seem to demand some contrast as a tribute to the customary lightness of summer dress.

RELIGIOUS BOOKS DECLINE IN SALE.—"There has been a very noticeable decline in the sale of religious books," said a publisher who once printed many of them, "and I do not know how to account for it. The churches are growing in wealth and numbers all the time, according to their own figures, but the interest in religious books has declined to such an extent that we now publish very few of them. Old publishing houses that years ago relied on such works for their profits have turned their attention to fiction in response to the public demand. That has been my experience and I give it to you without comment."

Personalities of the Day.



Germany's Foreign Minister.

COUNT BERNHARDT VON BUELOW, German Minister of Foreign Affairs, political heir of Bismarck, and Emperor William's right-hand man is only forty-five years old. He belongs to a family which, although only of the minor Prussian nobility,is autocratically of the highest rank on account of its antiquity. His diplomatic career began shortly after the Franco-Prussian war—during which he won his epaulets in the Hussars—and his advancement has been rapid. His father was a great friend of Bismarck, and the present minister of foreign affairs follows closely the methods of the man of blood and iron.

Von Buelow has yet much of the impetuosity of youth. Two years ago, while secretary of embassy at Dresden, he ran away with his superior—Count Denhoeff's—wife. The countess loved music; the count hated it; Buelow adored it. Wagner was a constant source of discord between the Count and the Countess; a source of ecstatic and mutual enchantment to the Countess and Buelow. The Wagnerian duettos ended in an elopement. The Count secured a divorce; and Buelow a wife. There was some scandal, but finally Bismarck's influence at court smoothed over the ruffled diplomatic feathers.

Count Bernhardt Von Bulow,
German Minister of Foreign Affairs.

He is said now to be range. His conduct of affairs abroad has thoroughly pleased his Imperial master. In diplomatic fencing, he has few rivals worthy of the name. He is a somewhat weak orator, one who relies very much on his manuscript yet he has the precious gift of being able to convince his opponents without losing his friends. People who know say that the Chancellorship is within his grasp.

"Ten per Cent" Dowie. Divine Healer

QUITE the most remarkable "divine healer" of the century has relieved Chicago of his presence. His name is John Alexander Dowie, his formal title is Overseer of the Christian Catholic Church of Zion, and his claim to special distinction is the fact that, unlike others of his kidney, he is frank in his acknowledgment that he makes money out of it. He left Chicago and property worth two millions to journey to the Holy Land in fulfilment of a vow—so he says. There are grovelling scoffers, however, who claim that he left Chicago because people were getting knowledge of his methods—because the game was playing out, and even the financial and diplomatic genius of Dowie could not keep it going full blast much longer. So glad was Chicago to see the last of the "healer" that the Michigan Central railroad gave him a private palace car for himself and his long retinue of family and retainers. This meek mild follower of the faith rode to the depot in his own carriage, attended by a valet and a private secretary, put up at the best hotels en route, and was driven in state to the Hamburg-American wharf.

Dowie's "church" was run on business principles. He claimed a following of 50,000 adults. His followers were required to observe the Scriptural injunction by giving ten per cent. of their incomes to the Church. They managed to save the makings of this sum by denying themselves worldly amusements, alcohol and tobacco; they also contributed by doing their banking business with the Church, and by subscribing for Dowie's three papers—a weekly, Leaves of Healing; a fortnightly, The Coming City; and a monthly, The Voice of Zion. Dowie was the whole Church, pope, bishop, priesthood, and financial manager. He had no advisers; he stood alone. It seems incredible that so many people would leave their affairs so completely in the hands of one man, but they did so with childlike faith. His enterprise included, beside the bank and the printing plant, a lace manufactory and a and company.

The "sect" was not without its "persecutions." It was customary to treat sick members by laying on of hands in the Tabernacle. This, of course, raised a howl among legitimate practitioners, who had an ordinance passed declaring the institution a hospital, and requiring a license, a thing which the City Council refused to grant. As a result, Dowie has been arrested about a hundred times in the last five years. He finally beat the ordinance with the help of his lawyers; the doctors renewed the attack on another line recently, and the healer remembered, at just about that time, his vow to see the new century dawn in Jerusalem. Dowie has done all this in ten years. He was born in Scotland and emigrated to West Australia. He declares that he was a great man in the colony, having been offered a Cabinet position as a reward for curing a fever epidemic. He came to San Francisco in 1888, and struggled with the scoffers of the coast for two years. Then, believing that Chicago held the greatest opportunities for fighting the devil, he founded his church there. He says that he intends to be back by next February. The Windy City lives in hopes that, if he really does return, which is doubted, his absence will cure his followers of their infatuation.

Count De Witte.

THERE is perhaps no man hated more cordially than Surgius Zulegevitch De Witte, Russia's financial minister, the most powerful figure in the Muscovite Empire after the Great White Czar. Since his advent as Minister of Finance, he has scattered to the four winds the coterie of shameless peculators, corrupt officials, juggling financiers that made the finances of Russia the most forlorn, crooked, wildcat muddle that ever taxed the cleansing abilities of a financial Hercules. He has re-established Russian credit,redeemed its paper currency, accumulated a gold reserve of 800,000,000 roubles in the Imperial coffers, negotiated commercial treaties that swelled Russia's trade prodigiously, and steered through to successful completion the gigantic operation of the Trans-Siberian railway. He is hated by the old corrupt officialdom who find the financial department guarded from their dubious operations and by the capitalists who, on account of his liberal and far-seeing statesmanship, find the interest-bearing power of their roubles to have fallen from forty per cent, to twenty and, in the near future, probably as low as ten. The present Czar, however, entertains a high opinion of the minister's honesty and ability, as did also his father, Alexander III. It was the latter who conferred upon De Witte the title of Count, in Russia a higher distinction than that of Prince.

De Witte rose to his present high place from comparative obscurity. At the beginning of the Turkish war, when the Russian troops were being mobilized, he was stationmaster pro tem—his chief was absent—of an unimportant town. Imperial troops were being hurried by rail to Bulgaria. The transportation plans evolved at headquarters did not please the young stationmaster and he deliberately disregarded them. In autocratic Russia, such disobedience was a monstrous offense. There was a great hullabulloo; the station-master's insubordination was investigated by high personages in resplendent uniforms; Siberia yawned before him.

Count de Witte,
Russia's Minister of Finance.

To the surprise of the investigating commission, however, it soon appeared that obedience to orders not only would have resulted in an awful catastrophe, but that the young stationmaster had forwarded the troops according to a splendidly conceived and executed scheme of transportation which, in anticipation of the approaching war, he had planned down to minute details—thus doing what his superiors had failed to do.

Instead of going to Siberia, De Witte was made director of the Imperial railways, from which position, by his extraordinary executive ability and indefatigable labor, he soon rose to the high place he now occupies.

An Irish-American Schoolmaster.

DURING the Washington Centennial of 1889, the "George Washington yell"—there is no other name for it—was a feature of the celebration in New York. It ran like this: "Who was George Washington? First in war, first in peace, first in the hearts of his countrymen!" It was then ended by a series of stamps like the end of a breakdown—"tap, tap-a-tap, tap-a-tap, tap, tap." The prank overspread the country, and still lingers in the colleges. It owes its origin to the queerest schoolmaster who ever taught in New York. This was Prof. McElvoy of the old Baxter-street school No. 6. An Irishman by birth, manner, and accent, and a man of great learning, he may be said to have taught in jig-time. He had the trick of weaving classical myths, Latin rules and historical facts into rhymes, which he rendered himself in a gentle soft roll, and taught to his classes—mostly Irish boys from the region of Baxter street. His teaching was a running fire of quaint, witty remarks. In his hands, this style was effective. It kept up the interest of the boys and made them learn in spite of themselves. Father Prout has described a geography lesson as he gave it:

"Now, Dennis Mahoney, shtand up and bound Ireland."

"Ireland is an island. It is bounded on the west by the Atlantic Ocean, on the—"

"Shtop, Dennis. Ye'll never get around. Say that Ireland sits in the chops of the English Channel like a huge oyster in the mouth of an epicure—too big to swally and too good to let go."

At every turn he kept the country of their ancestry before the boys. For example—

"Tell me about Lake Shuperior," he would say.

"Lake Superior is 360 miles long"—

"Ah gwan wid yer figgers. Say that Lake Shuperior is so big that ye cud drown all Ireland in it and save Father Matthew a dale of throuble."

He originated the Washington trick as a method of inculcating patriotism. Every twenty-first of February he would call the school to order and ask:

"Who was George Washington?"

The answer would come back in concert:

"First in war, first in peace, first in the hearts of his countrymen—tap, tap-a-tap, tap-a-tap, tap, tap." The boys used to practice this breakdown for days before, so as to insure good team work.

"That's right," Prof. McElvoy would say, "An' now take a holiday, ivry wan of ye."

John Wanamaker.

THERE is perhaps no character more distinctly nineteenth-century American than that of John Wanamaker, the pious merchant king. With his materialism and his religiosity; his zeal at gain, his charity in giving; his determination to be rich on earth and chosen in heaven, he is indeed the new product of a new civilization.

At four years of age John Wanamaker was already making money—seven cents a day turning brick for his father. At twelve he was earning one dollar and twenty-five cents a week in the book store of Barclay Lippincott, Market street, Philadelphia. An offer of a "raise" of twenty-five cents a week caused him to abandon the book store for the clothing salesroom of Colonel Joseph Bennett. He already showed at that age the peculiar blending of worldliness and other-worldliness that is his marked characteristic. While keenly alive to the advantages of an extra quarter he was spending all of his spare time in attending religious services and perusing pious books. At eighteen he was earning six dollars a week and founding temperance societies. For the next seven years he used all of his energy in the pious position of secreary of the Philadelphia Y. M. C. A., the religious side of his nature—aided by the worldly encouragement of a salary of one thousand a year—seemingly predominating during that period. Then the secular element took its innings, and, in 1861, in partnership with Nathan Brown, his brother-in-law, he started a modest clothing and furnishing store in the Quaker capital. The firm's assets were three thousand dollars. A two-wheeled cart pushed by John himself served as delivery wagon. The profit of the first day's business was thirty-six dollars, which amount was forthwith expended for an advertisement in the Philadelphia Inquirer.

In ten years from that time John Wanamaker had absorbed forty-five rival firms and was the leading merchant of his native city. Four years later he had purchased for $450,000 the freight depot of the Pennsylvania Railroad where his present store is located. To-day his two Philadelphia establishments alone do a business of between thirty and forty millions annually. Mr. Wanamaker ascribes his business successes to his religious training and his actual practice of religion. There are many who might be willing to be religious at that price.

SLIPPED THROUGH THE STRAITS.—During the recent French naval manœuvres the squadron under Admiral Gervais succeeded in slipping through the Straits of Gibraltar at night without being noticed by the British observers on the Rock. So at least the French newspapers assert.

1. Miners Journeying to Dawson from Bennett. 2. The Sports on Front Street. 3. A Balloon Ascent. 4. Scows Landing at Dawson from up and down the River.
CELEBRATING THE FOURTH OF JULY AT DAWSON CITY.

Dat-So-La-Lee, a Washoe Basket Maker

By Herbert Alden French

Dat-So-La-Lee's No. 22, Value $800.

Dat-So-La-Lee—The Greatest of the Weavers.

Dat-So-La-Lee's No. 23, Value $800.

ONE of the most interesting fads that has been taken up by people with money to afford it, is the collection of rare and valuable specimens of Indian basket work. People have recently come to appreciate that there is a certain class of Indian basket work displaying a truly marvelous skill and taste on the part of the makers but that the art is rapidly dying out, until it is only a question of a few years when it will be numbered among the lost. In fact, there are to-day very few of the Indians who are really versed in basket-making in its finest forms. These are almost altogether squaws of an advanced age and the craft is practically not being taught at all to the younger generation.

The reason for this failure to keep up this knowledge is that it involves an exceeding slow process, requiring great patience, and the younger members of the tribe have been able to find more lucrative employment in other channels. Even when there has been an attempt to teach the craft, the influence of civilization has been toward hurrying the process and has been fatal to the highest accomplishment. The best work now brings almost fabulous prices, but when the time of production is considered, the compensation does not seem extravagant. Perhaps the most skilful basket maker in the country has turned out twenty-three baskets in three years. The best of these is valued at $800 but the younger generation is absolutely incapable of obtaining the results, for their basketry does not bring a tenth of that price. As soon as the baskets are turned out rapidly enough to make the work remunerative at the high prices, the quality is so cheapened that all that has been gained by speed is lost in value.

A Famous Collection.

In view of the fact that the art is rapidly dying out, an influential movement has been started to get the government to make an appropriation for the collection and preservation of specimens which shall represent the work of the North American tribes in this line. Probably the best work that is done in the country is by the Washoe, Piute, and Shoshone tribes. The Washoe Indians are credited with the highest class of work in the collections that have thus far been got together. The most famous collection of the Washoe work is at Carson, Nevada, and arrangements have been made by the State Board of Agriculture to have it exhibited at the State Fair at Sacramento in September together with the most noted of the Washoe basket-makers

Work of Shoshone Weavers.

The history of this basket-maker and of the Carson collection is exceedingly interesting. A few years ago specimens of Indian skill were kicking about Carson and would not have been purchased at twenty-five cents each by the whites. A few people, however, began to realize that the baskets represented a rare art, that some of them had marks of exquisite beauty and that the skill which created them was rapidly being lost. Then they started the collection. They found that the "queen of the basket-makers" was Dat-So-La-Lee, or as she was known to the whites, Louisa Keyser, an old squaw about sixty years old.

Dat-So-La-Lee's No. 24, Her Latest Work. No Price Set.

It is not often that whites are allowed to see this old squaw and she is isolated as much as possible from the younger members of her own race. Every effort is made to preserve her art pure, a task that experience has taught the Indians and the collectors is very difficult. From contact with our race the makers seem to get into shoddy methods, the most alarming of which is the tendency to increase the speed of manufacture in the desire to make the business more lucrative. Even when the older makers are allowed to associate freely with the young members of the tribe they are inclined to pick up swiftness at the expense of care and the habit so formed inevitably results in the degredation of the skilful maker into a lower class for all time. But the process is so slow that the squaws are abandoning it. They show no inclination to teach it to their children They find that they can make more money by washing or almost any other employment. An idea of the degree of patience required and the slowness of the work, may be obtained from the fact that for a skilful weaver, one round of a large basket or two of a small one is a day's work. The fibres are so compactly woven that the best baskets are perfectly water tight. The quality depends largely upon the fineness of the weaving. Six stitches to the inch is regarded as coarse weaving, twelve stitches as fair, and sixteen to thirty stitches as extra fine. During the past three years Dat-So-La-Lee has turned out sixteen baskets running sixteen stitches to the inch, three baskets twenty stitches to the inch, and four baskets of thirty stitches to the inch.

Queen of Basket-makers.

Dat-So-La-Lee is herself a fat, coarse-featured Washoe, with long, straight, black hair falling over and nearly concealing her eyes, and is certainly not possessed of any marks of beauty, either in form or feature. She is shrewd and cunning, bland in appearance, but an inveterate liar, with an ever-ready tear-fount when she is desirous of gaining something from a visitor Her hands, however, are true objects of beauty They are perfectly symmetrical; the fingers are plump and tapering, and she has a delicacy of touch that seems marvellous to one whose general appearance is so gross and apparently clumsy. She is vain to a degree and chuckles derisively at the mere mention of a squaw who can compete with her artistic creations.

Of Dat-So-La-Lee's work there are qut 24 known specimens, and these are numbered and the record of them carefully kept. Mrs. William Tevis, of San Francisco, has two specimens, numbered 6 and 11; H. E. Huntington has two, numbered 8 and 13; W. J. McNulty, of Fresno, Cal., has one; Henry Siegal, of Siegal, Cooper & Co., of New York, has one; Mrs. Hamilton, of Seattle, Wash., has three; former Superintendent Mead, of the Carson Indian Training School, has one; and the R. Stenzel Fur Company, of Salt Lake, Utah, has one. The remainder are in the Carson collection.

The most valuable of these baskets are not more than ten or eleven inches in diameter in their widest part, and some are even smaller. Of the three latest productions, No. 22 is valued at $800, No. 23 at $800, and No. 24 has no price set. No two baskets are ever made alike. The designs in the decorating, primitive though they seem, always have some significance. One recently sold to Mrs. Hamilton is called "Light ascending," and No. 20, valued at $500, in the Carson collection is termed "Sunrise." Others are intended to represent events historical, mythological, or ancestral. Some are used in tribal rites and in religious ceremonies. Others of the rare and ancient specimens are regarded by the tribe with a sort of sacred reverence, and it is rare that a white is allowed to view them. The baskets are also woven in to various shapes for water bottles, cradles, gourds and a variety of utensils. The materials used in the manufacture of the best

Continued on page 9.

Work of Washoe Weavers.

THINGS AND PEOPLE

The Yellow Journals Beaten.

IS it not rather a joke on the yellow editors that their news service has not achieved the great things in the recent Chinese fracas. The Sun's service has scored time and again over the Associated Press and the specials of both the Journal and World. The first news of the safety of the envoys in Pekin was had by the conservative Tribune, not by any of the scare-head progeny. The first correspondent's letter from Pekin came to the London Times and not to any of the new sensational English dailies such as the Mail and the Express. All this is notable. Great professions of enterprise do not always mean precedence in news gathering. The average man who takes but one paper, however, is apt to assume it the most progressive sheet in the world, if it tells him so with sufficient emphasis. One is apt to imagine that a telegram in big letters is a much more significant announcement than the same fact in small type. Comparing the Examiner, Call and Chronicle of San Francisco, I have frequently found a minor item in the latter decorating in giant display style the front page of the former. But these are the tricks of the trade. It was Managing Editor Chamberlain of the Hearst organs who spoke of himself as a "literary window dresser."

***

The Triumph of Bad Taste.

AS everyone in California knows, the Admission Day celebration of this year is to derive particular pomp and glory from the fact that it is the fiftieth anniversary of the State. I had hoped that this great event would be commemorated in a fitting manner by a festival less shocking to good taste than those which have preceded it. This is the very home of awkward, tawdry, gaudy celebrations. Whenever we see fit to make merry, we do so with the help of slovenly arches, meretricious decorations, monstrosity floats, and parades composed of fraternal organizations, commercial associations and labor unions—a hopelessly inartistic crowd, which streams through the streets like a muddy torrent. In all our public occasions I have never seen one which was not spoiled for a critical eye by abominations without number. The fault does not lie in the intention; it lies in the knowledge and character of the men who run them—excellent men, no doubt, and generally honest and efficient, but men whose ideas of art are bounded by chromos. If it takes an artist to plan and conduct a scheme of decoration for one single room, is it not absurd to entrust the decoration of an entire city to persons who make no claim to artistic insight? It is like giving the embellishing of a palace to a sign painter. And so I had hoped that the organization which has such celebrations in its control would forget politics for once and place the matter in the hands of the city's artists. The hope proved vain; we will have to wait. Wherefore we may expect to see, in early September, a town decorated in lumps with ugly and inharmonious hangings, with gaudy and misplaced colored lights strung like clothes-lines from the telegraph poles; we may expect a parade like the awful one which made the volunteers wish that they had remained in Manila. And all this pomp of vulgarity will be planned and carried out by men who are working with the best intentions in the world. Therein lies the hopelessness of it.

***

Expansion at the Universities.

IT will not be long before the two California universities will be crowded up to the limits of their capacity both as regards buildings and departments. The University of California, already pretty well packed, begins the year with a freshman class larger by two hundred than last term's. The total registration in all departments, including the affiliated colleges, will be nearly 3000. Stanford has not yet opened, but I hear that an equal increase is expected there. Last year, the registration at Palo Alto was 1300 and it may pass the 1500 mark before the spring of 1901. Like Berkeley, Stanford is crowded, but the new buildings to be erected in the course of two years should make ample room for all comers. I hear that directly after the completion of this outer quadrangle the part of the income now going to contractors and masons will be devoted to strengthening of all departments and to the purchase of a big library, a point where Stanford is not very strong just now. A medical department may also be added, probably with headquarters in San Francisco, and the law school, founded last year, will receive substantial additions. Neither California nor Stanford has a theological school, and there is none of any size or endowment on the coast, the few denominational institutions being cramped for funds and limited in scope. The State University, being strictly public, could hardly undertake to add courses in theology. Stanford could, however, institute an undenominational theological school after the fashion of the one at the University of Chicago. It would meet a general demand for more thorough ministerial training on the Pacific Coast.

***

Co-eds Streaming to Berkeley.

AN amusing result of this overcrowding of the Universities is the undisguised concern among Berkeley men at the co-ed restriction at Stanford. Of course, it is not so much the effect of the edict on the Palo Alto Institution, which bothers them, but the repercussion on their own college, Berkeley, has its share of the plague (I am speaking solely from the anti-coed-college-man's standpoint) woman. The co-ed element is increasing steadily and in the last class reached the 45 per cent mark. The men are finding themselves crowded out. Some departments, in fact, are monopolized entirely by the bas-bleu element. The unfortunate male who studies English, for instance, is simply not "in it." He finds himself relegated to a dark corner of the class room, shut off from professional communion by a murmuring barrier of skirts, sunk in obscurity by the self-asserting display of learning of his sisters in education. On the whole, the college man likes to see woman educated, but cares not to have her co-educated. He claims, with some reason, that in a college where the proportion of femininity is too great, the professors unconsciously alter their courses to meet feminine needs, and that he suffers from the fact. But his main reason of discontent is not that at all. It is from the infinitely superior athletic standpoint that co-education is most deplorable. The athletic worth of a college is in proportion to the spirit, the concentration of energy of its members. Now, co-education acts as a diluting agent. The women are so many neutral, inert atoms in the great college organism which, to be strong, must be composed of strongly coherent parts. They are the insulators of the currents of college-spirit which are striving to unite in one great stream. They are draw-backs.

* * *

That is why the University of California man sees with infinite consternation the latest Stanford move, which he does not hesitate to declare diabolical. By its charters the Berkeley institution cannot make any provision restricting the number of its women-students. Hence the California man throws up his hands in helpless horror as he sees the diverted-from-Stanford stream of femininity rolling into his own college. Beneath the avalanche of skirts he can only bend his back and cuss impotently.

***

Walter Fong, Instructor in Cantonese.

WALTER FONG, who will instruct in Chinese at the State University during the present year, is a wise selection. Few native-born Chinese are so thoroughly in touch with both peoples as to be able to render the Oriental ideas in terms of Occidental understanding. He was born in the Canton district, and was a mission-school boy in his early childhood. Coming to this country, he prepared for college in our common schools, entering Stanford University, where he graduated in economics with the class of 1896. He married a white woman, a college mate, and gained some newspaper notoriety by suing a San Francisco weekly which published a humorous jingle on the event. He was travelling man for a local Chinese firm for several years, and was active in the Society for the Advancement of China before the Boxer disturbance quelled that organization. He speaks and writes English with native ease, and his Cantonese is said to be of the purest. Fong is a Christian and dresses in European fashion.

***

Decline of the Mourning Habit.

A DECLINE of the mourning habit is made the subject of scathing comment in the New York society journals. The dead seem to be forgotten with an ease and celerity which augurs a lightness of mind and character unpleasant to contemplate. We all know there is a deal of false sentiment expended in grieving for the departed, but there is also a happy medium. Not the most apathetic of us but shrinks from the thought of friends and relations indifferent to our memory. Cornelius Vanderbilt has not been dead a year, and already the Vanderbilt family, except the widow, are practically out of mourning. Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, his daughter, is beginning to entertain, and the others have been going everywhere for quite a time. It is just a year since Robert Goelet's demise, and Mrs. "Bob" is on the Nahma, at Cowes, with a large party, and has been entertaining right and left. Since the death of her husband, the multi-millionaire New Yorker, Mrs. Goelet has lost two sisters, one of whom died only three weeks ago. The death of George Work took place in February, quite long enough to allow his sister, Mrs. Peter Cooper Hewitt, to give an entertainment, this last week, at Newport. Cora, Countess of Strafford, who was Mrs. Colgate of New York has been laid up with nervous prostration, on account of the many gayeties she has been attending in London during the first year of her widowhood. The Duke of Manchester was dancing a cotillion hardly two months after the dramatic death of his only sister, and his mother, the Duchess of Manchester began to go out in London just at the close of the season. I know of some sentimentalists who shake their heads sadly when, on visiting Trinity cemetery, they see the neglected state of the tomb of Mrs. William Waldorf-Astor. The only leading family in which strict regard for mourning still exists is the Belmont. Anyone who goes to the cemetery at Newport or the churchyard in Long Island, where Mrs. August Belmont, the wife of the present head of the banking houses, lies, will note the contrast.

***

The Coolness of C ptain Reilly.

A CERTAIN military prisoner in the East will not soon forget Captain Henry J. Reilly, said to have been killed in the attack on Peking. The man was a deserter, who tried to escape just before the battle of Santiago, was captured and held under arrest while the fight was going on. He happened to be a good gunner, however, and when Reilly's battery started for the scene of action they discovered that they were one gunner short. The captain thought of the prisoner, took him out and put him in his usual place. "I'll keep my eye on you," he said, "now's your chance to show yourself." All through the day the prisoner staid by his gun, making good practice, and Reilly staid by him with his hand on his revolver. The folly of the gunner seems unbelievable, for his gallant conduct would probably have saved him from court-martial had he lasted the day out, but toward night he took advantage of a moment when the men of the battery were cheering Lawton's famous charge and tried to escape again by crawling through the underbrush. Reilly alone, with his eye ever on his business, saw the move. He whipped out his revolver and sent a shot after the fugitive, which, although it missed him, stopped his flight. Covering him with the weapon, Captain Reilly brought him back and held him under arrest again. In the subsequent court-martial, only Reilly's influence saved the fellow from the heavy penalty given for "desertion in the face of the enemy."

***

Senator Bard's Oil Deal.

BEING elected to the United States Senate seems to be like seeing the moon over your right shoulder or having a black cat follow you—it is a mascot. The proof whereof is that, since he went into office, Senator Bard's oil lands have made him another fortune. He has just sold his interests in Ventura for $300,000 and a one-third interest in the purchasing company. The transaction is not all luck, however. Senator Bard bought the land for next to nothing many years ago, and held it against several advantageous offers in the firm belief that it contained oil. Development work all around proved the Bard land to be prospectively rich; yet, still the Senator held on. Now he sells out, before he has spent a dollar in development, for a good-sized fortune.

BOSWELL, JR.

PUBLIC SCHOOL-BOYS AT THE FRONT.—A list of English public-school graduates serving in South Africa has been made. Eton leads with 1000 besides 496 serving in the volunteers; then follow Wellington, 500; Harrow, 400; Marlborough, 340; Cheltenham, 300; Charterhouse, 280; Winchester and Haileybury, 250 each, and Rugby 160. Sixty schools have about 5200 "old boys" at the front, besides over 3300 in the volunteer service.

H O R R O R

By Guy de Maupassant

